All law enforcement officials are prohibited from carrying out, instigating, participating in, acquiescing in, tolerating or tolerating acts of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and the fact that an official acted on orders from their superiors is in no way a justification for torture or other ill-treatment or punishment; all are obliged under international law to disobey such orders [1920].

Law enforcement officials are also required to report any case of torture or ill-treatment that occurs or is about to occur [1921].

The prohibition on torture and other ill-treatment or punishment includes acts that cause mental or physical suffering [1922].

Typically, persons deprived of their liberty are at greater risk of torture or ill-treatment, including before and during interrogation and any information obtained through such methods should be excluded from evidence in trials

The State's duty to ensure freedom from torture and other forms of ill-treatment means that it must take due care to protect the detained person from inter-prisoner violence [1923].

10-11-1 Sexual Abuse

Within the framework of international covenants

The right to be free from torture and other ill-treatment in the place of detention or imprisonment includes the right not to be subjected to rape or any other form of sexual violence or abuse by any person Any non-consensual sexual contact, of any kind, amounts to sexual violence

States must take the necessary measures to prevent sexual violence, including by separating men and women in places of detention and prisons, and detaining women under the authority of female officials where rape committed by, or with the consent or acquiescence of, a public official constitutes torture. Rape includes sexual intercourse without consent by the aggressor penetrating anything or any part of their body into the mouth, vagina or anus of the victim [1924].

State authorities must take due care to protect detainees and prisoners from sexual violence that can be committed by other inmates [1925].

Employees in places of detention must not use their position to commit acts of sexual violence, including rape or the threat of rape, shameless body searches, "virginity tests" or even other forms of verbal abuse such as insults and insults of a sexual nature [1926].

See [1919]article 2(2) of the Convention against Torture, article 5 of the American Convention against Torture, principle 6 of the Body of Principles, article 5 of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, article 3 of the Declaration against Torture, and guidelines 9-10 of the Robben Island Guidelines.

See General Comment 20 of the Human Rights Committee, §3; Committee Against Torture: General Comment §5 ,2, Israel, 44/2001) UN Doc. A/57) §53 (i) and§14 (2009) CAT/C/ISR/CO/4. See also Grand Chamber of the European Court: Gloux v. Germany: (54810) / 00), 99 § (2006), Gavgen v. Germany, §87 (2010) ,(05/22978), F. v. United Kingdom (24888) / 94), (1999) §69, Ramirez Sánchez v. France (59450) / 00), 116 § (2006), Chahal v. United Kingdom (22414) / 93), (80- § §76 (1996), Saadi v. Italy § §127 (2008) ,(60/37201) and 137..

See [1920]Article 2(3) of the Convention against Torture, Articles 3 and 4 of the American Convention against Torture, and Article 5 of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials; see also Guideline 11 of the Robben Island Guidelines.

([1921]) Article 8 of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials..

([1922]) Article 1 of the Convention against Torture; see Article 2 of the American Convention against Torture.

([1923]) See Principle 23 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas.

General Comment 31 of the Human Rights Committee, §8; see Velázquez Rodríguez v. Honduras, Inter-American Court 172 § (1988); European Court: Mahmut Kaya v. Turkey (22535/ 93), 115 § (2000, a. UK §22 (1998) ,(94/25599)..

([1924]) Special Rapporteur on Torture: 15/1986/ UN Doc. E/CN. 4 UN Doc. ‹24- §15 (1995) UN Doc. E/CN. 4/1995/34, §119 (1986) 36- §34(2008)A/HRC/7/3; Raquel Martí de Mejía v. Peru (10). 970), American Commission (1996); Aydin v. Turkey (2317) / 94), Grand Chamber of the European Court 86 § (1997).

([1925]) General Comment 2 of the Committee against Torture, §18; General Comment 31 of the Human Rights Committee, §8.

It is initially assumed that sexual contact between detainees or prisoners and officials or employees is coercive in nature, due to the coercive nature of the confinement environment [1927].

The US court ruled that watching a male guard pointing their gun at inmates while they are using the toilet while naked and only pawning a curtain of cloth is considered to be subject to sexual violence[1928].

10-11-2 Use of Force

within the framework of Egyptian law

The Constitution, within the framework of its principles and provisions, regulates the rights, freedoms and duties of individuals under the legal state. At the highest level of the rights and personal freedoms of individuals is the human right to life as one of the natural rights that are inherent to the human person. Therefore, the Constitution prohibits violating them - without the right - even if the freedom of the person is restricted by judicial rulings and requires the treatment of the prisoner that preserves their dignity and the payment of material and moral harm. There is no doubt that these constitutional guarantees are consistent at the top of their goal with international conventions and penal legislation that are based on the philosophy of rehabilitating the prisoners with the aim of reforming their behavior while at the same time preserving the integrity of their body in a way that preserves the individual, even if he violates the law by committing a crime of loyalty to the homeland and a sense of legal security on their rights and safety[1929].

Article 55 of the Constitution guarantees the safety of the body in the face of criminal proceedings, stipulating that: "Anyone who is arrested, imprisoned, or whose freedom is restricted must be treated in a manner that preserves their dignity. He may not be tortured, intimidated, coerced, or physically or morally harmed. their detention or imprisonment shall only be in places designated for that purpose as humanly appropriate and healthy. The State is obligated to provide means of access to persons with disabilities.

The violation of any of this is a crime punishable in accordance with the law

The accused has the right to silence and any statement that proves that it was made by a detainee under the weight of any of the foregoing, or the threat of any of it, is wasted and unreliable. "This right presupposes that the accused may not be tortured [1930].

The convict may not be subjected to inhumane and degrading punishments, which depends on a number of factors, including the nature of the punishment, its content, and how it is carried out. This has been confirmed by Article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in its stipulation that a person may not be subjected to cruel, inhuman, or degrading punishments. These harsh punishments are also defective in that they lose the requirement of necessity and proportionality in an exaggerated and obvious manner, which makes them unconstitutional[1931].

In light of the supremacy of human rights, many international declarations have been issued to guarantee those rights, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights issued in 1948, which prohibited the torture of the accused in its article 5, and this is confirmed by the ([1926]) Special Rapporteur on Torture, 3/2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/7) § §34 and 42; see Miguel Castro-Castro Prison v. Peru, Inter-American Court 312 § (2006).

---

([1927]) Special Rapporteur on Torture, 3/2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/7) §42; Prosecutor v. Kunarac et al.,IT-96-23 & IT-96-23/1-A Appellate Judgment of the ICTY (2002) . 133- § §131.

([1928]) Miguel Castro - Castro Prison v. Peru, Inter-American Court §259 (2006) (h) and 306.

([1929]) See the ruling of the Administrative Court No. 4884 of 62 BC issued at the session of 13/1/2009, page No. 316.

([1930]) Article 55 of the amended Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt for the year 2014.

([1931]) For example: Supreme Constitutionalism on January 4, 1997 in Case No. 2 of 15 Judicial Constitutional, Official Gazette No. 3 on January 16, 1997, and see in this sense the French Constitutional Council on May 30, 2000 Resolution No. 433..

International Convention on Civil and Political Rights in its article 7 and stipulated in many constitutions, including the Egyptian Constitution in its article 52, which stipulates that: " Torture in all its forms and manifestations is a crime that does not fall under the statute of limitations"[1932].

Article 54 also stipulates that: " Anyone who is arrested, imprisoned, or whose freedom is restricted must be treated in a manner that preserves their dignity. He may not be tortured, intimidated, coerced, or physically or morally harmed. their detention or confinement shall only be in places designated for this purpose as humanly appropriate and healthy. The State shall provide the means available to persons with disabilities.

Violation of any of this is a crime, the perpetrator of which shall be punished in accordance with the law "[1933].

The Court of Cassation also ruled that: [A confession must not be relied upon, even if it is true, when it is the result of coercion, whatever its destiny may be, and the origin is that the court must examine the link between the confession of the defendants and the injuries said to have been obtained to coerce them and the denial of its justifiable inference if it deems it to rely on the evidence derived from it, and the contested judgment had raised the plea of invalidity of the confession as mentioned above in a way that does not justify responding to it, because the failure of the investigating prosecutor to notice the existence of visible injuries to the defendants does not negate the existence of injuries to them, and the presence of lawyers with the defendants in an investigation conducted by the Public Prosecution does not negate the occurrence of torture][1934] .

It ruled that: [It is decided pursuant to the meaning of Article 42 of the Constitution and the last paragraph of Article 302 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that a reliable confession must be optional, and it is not considered so even if it is true. If it is issued under the weight of coercion or threat of coercion, whatever its fate and the principle is that the court if it deems it necessary to rely on the evidence derived from the confession, to examine the link between it and the coercion said to have taken place and to deny the existence of this coercion in a reasonable inference. The statement of the contested judgment was a justification for its reliance on the evidence derived from the appellants' confession to the investigation of the Public Prosecution, which would not lead to the waste of the appellant's nullity of this confession because it was issued under duress because of its confiscation of the appellants' defense before it was resolved. It is not correct in the logic of reason and intuition to reject the judgment on the nullity of the confession before a body of investigations because it was the result of duress by reassuring him of this confession because it was obtained before that body and because of the failure to mention whoever attributed the confession before it that it was forced on him as long as he disputed the validity of that confession before that body.] [1935].

It also ruled that: [It is established that the law did not define physical torture and did not require it to have a certain degree of gravity and does not need to lead to injury to the victim and it is up to the discretion of the trial court to deduce it from the circumstances of the case][1936] .

([1932]) Article 52 of the amended Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt of 2014.
([1933]) Article 54 of the amended Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt for the year 2014.
([1934]) Appeal No. 758 of 50 S issued at the hearing of October 15, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page No. 890 rule No. 172.
([1935]) Appeal No. 23449 of 71 S issued at the session of February 5, 2002 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 53 page No. 224 rule No. 41.
([1936]) Appeal No. 15220 of 75 S issued on December 28, 2005 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 56 page No. 844 rule No. 114.

It also ruled that: [The law did not know the meaning of physical torture and did not require a certain degree of gravity, and it is up to the discretion of the trial court to deduce it from the circumstances of the case][1937] .

It also ruled: [The law did not require that the elements of the crime of torture be available to a defendant to force him to confess stipulated in Article 126 of the Penal Code, that the torture had led to the injury of the victim, just to put their hands behind their back and hang him in a pinnacle with their head down, which was proven by the judgment against the appellant from the statements of the victim's wife, is considered torture, even if it did not result in injuries][1938] .

It also ruled that: [Since the causal relationship in the criminal articles is a material relationship that begins with the act committed by the perpetrator and is morally related to what he must expect from the usual results of their act if he deliberately comes to it, and this relationship is an objective issue that the trial judge is unique to assess and when he decides on it as evidence or denial, there is no control for the Court of Cassation over him as long as he has based their judiciary in this on reasons leading to what he concluded, and if The judgment has proven against the appellant that there is a causal relationship between the acts of torture committed by him and the result of these acts, which is the death of the victim in saying: "Since the court considers that there is a causal relationship between the act of torture committed by the accused against the victim and the result of this torture, which is the death of the victim by drowning, the provision of the second paragraph of Article 126 of the Penal Code is based and applies to the facts of the case, as the act of torture committed by the accused against the victim since the beginning of the incidents of torture by beating and dropping into contaminated water with the threat of being thrown into the sea and what led to it with The continuation of the assault in that form on a small boy and pushing him to the edge of the water pavement in an attempt to lower him again. The victim was previously harmed by the previous one, all of which entails that the victim tries to get rid of the grip of the accused to attract him. It also entails the accused pushing him in an attempt to lower the victim into the water or even threatening him while he is unsure of the victim's proficiency to swim. All of this took place in a spot on the side of the pavement that was narrowed by the presence of oil pipes extending along it. This sequence, which ended in the victim falling into the seawater and is related to the belt of the accused and then drowning and death, is considered normal and familiar in life and current with the usual turn of things and did not involve an abnormal factor unlike the cosmic year and therefore does not accept and does not hear from the accused that he did not expect that the last result, which is the death of the victim by drowning," which is a palatable pamphlet that leads to the outcome of the judgment and agrees with the correct law, what the appellant complains about in this regard is not correct, as well as the absence of his interest in this immunity because the penalty imposed by the sentence is imprisonment for five years Years falling within the scope of the penalty prescribed for the crime of torturing a defendant to force him to confess to the death of the victim stipulated in the first paragraph of Article 126 of the Penal Code][1939].

Article 126 of the Penal Code punishes every public official or employee who ordered the torture of an accused person or did so himself to get him to confess. He shall be punished by rigorous imprisonment or imprisonment from three to ten years.

([1937]) Appeal No. 1314 of 36 S issued on November 28, 1966 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 17 page No. 1161 rule No. 219.
([1938]) Appeal No. 3351 of 56 S issued at the session of November 5, 1986 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 37 page No. 827 rule No. 160.
([1939]) Appeal No. 2460 of 49 S issued at the session of November 13, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page No. 979 rule No. 190.

If the victim dies, he shall be sentenced to the penalty prescribed for intentional killing[1940].

Every public official and every person entrusted with a public service who orders the punishment of the convict or punishes them with a punishment more severe than the penalty imposed on them by law or a penalty for which they have not been sentenced shall also be punished by imprisonment. [1941].

Within the framework of international covenants

Force may be used against detainees or prisoners only when it is necessary to maintain security and order within the institution, in cases of attempted escape, when there is resistance to a legal order, or when personal safety is threatened. In any case, it may only be used if non-violent means and methods prove ineffective, and as a last option and the least necessary force must be used to address the situation [1942].

Firearms may be used only for the purpose of defense against an imminent threat of death or serious injury, to prevent the occurrence of a crime involving a grave threat to life, or to arrest a person posing such a danger or to prevent their escape, and only when the use of any other less harmful means is insufficient to remedy the situation and the deliberate use of firearms for the purpose of killing is permitted only when it is unavoidable to protect life[1943].

This principle was confirmed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948, which prohibited the torture of the accused (Article 5). This right represents one of the basic values in a democratic society, and it stems from the duty to respect human dignity "dignité humaine". Three results stem from this right, namely: the inadmissibility of subjecting the accused to torture, the inadmissibility of inhuman treatment, and the inadmissibility of subjecting him to inhuman punishments. These results were supported on the international scale as follows:

The use of force by officials must be limited to the minimum limits, and the unnecessary and excessive use of physical force that is not required by the behavior of the detainee or prisoner, and is not commensurate with this behavior, can amount to torture or other forms of ill-treatment[1944].

(a) It is established that the accused shall not be subjected to torture by the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984.

Staff should be trained in methods that enable them to safely and minimally use force, in accordance with international standards. In general, they should not carry firearms or other lethal weapons except in situations of operational emergency. Other law enforcement agencies should generally not be involved in dealing with prisoners inside prisons [1945].

The torture of the accused is subject to multiple forms, some of which are considered material coercion, and some of which are considered moral coercion, and the intercourse between them

---

([1940]) Article 126 of the Law Promulgating the Penal Code.

([1941]) Article 127 of the Penal Code.

([1942]) Rule 54 of the Standard Minimum Rules, Principles 4, 5 and 15 of the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, Article 3 of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, Principle 23 (2) of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and Rule 64 of the European Prison Rules.

([1943]) Principles 9 and 16 of the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials.

([1944]) European Court: Artyomov v. Russia (14146/ 02), (2010) 173- §164, Kucherok v. Ukraine (2570) / 04), (133- §128 (2007), Omar Karateb v. Turkey (20502/ 05), (2010) (French only) 65- §54; see Special Rapporteur on Torture, 56 / 2004 / §44 (2003) UN Doc. E/CN. 4..

([1945]) Principle 23 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and Rules 64-67 and 69 of the European Prison Rules.

is the pain or physical, psychological or mental suffering inflicted on the accused as a result of the use of one of the means of torture.

Pepper spray and tear gas should not be used indoors and should never be used against any controlled person [1946].

Torture is achieved by deliberately inhumane treatment that leads to severe pain to obtain confessions, statements or information [1947].

Electroshock weapons (Tasers) should only be used by security personnel specially trained for this purpose and as a last resort in extremely dangerous circumstances, and in the face of an immediate threat to life, where it is not possible to resort to any other method that does not lead to a greater risk of causing injury or death [1948].

This right is based on the assertion of the freedom of the accused to express their statements away from coercion that affects the integrity of their body. This research raises the problem of using modern scientific means in order to coerce the accused to tell the truth. The face we are looking at is related to the legality of using them in interrogating the accused, which affects the right of the accused to express their statements freely, which affects their right to defense. Jurisprudence and the judiciary in most countries of the world have settled on refusing to use scientific means to obtain the accused[1949]'s confession.

When using force against any individual in the place of detention, the authorities should document such use of force [1950].

(b) A person shall not be treated inhumanely or dehumanizingly during the trial. This is confirmed by Article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights ICCPR)[1951].

This individual's right to prompt medical examination and, if necessary, treatment should be respected[1952].

If they are injured, their relatives or close friends should be notified [1953].

Prompt, independent and impartial investigations should be initiated into all allegations of excessive use of force in places of detention and prisons[1954].

([1946]) CPT: Czech Republic, 8) §46 ,CPT/Inf2009, Portugal 13) §92 ,CPT/Inf2009.

([1947]) See the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights of 18 January 1978, CED11, 18 Janvier 1978, Irlande c. Royaume Unie، Droit pénal européen CJ. Pradel et G. Corslens، p. 305..

([1948]) General Report 20 of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 28) §65- §84 ,CPT/Inf2010.

([1949]) Merle et Vitu، Traité de droit criminal T. II (procédure pénale)، 1979، p. 164 et 165.

Garven ; Le probléme des nouvelles techniques d'investigation au procés pénale، Rev، Sc. Crim. ، 1950، p. 313 et S.

If it is true to resort to these means for therapeutic purposes, it is not permissible to use them to reveal the truth in criminal litigation. Conscience does not care because it treats man as if he were the subject of experimentation in a laboratory and revives the meaning of torture by robbing man of his feeling and destroying his conscious will.

([1950]) Committee for the Prevention of Torture: Portugal, 4) §14 ,CPT/Inf2013.

([1951]) The European Court of Human Rights has defined inhuman treatment as behavior that causes organic or mental pain of a certain gravity without reaching the degree of severity of torture, for example, the use of the means used by the British army in interrogation in Northern Ireland, namely prolonged standing, head covering, continuous whistling inside the cell, sun deprivation, and deprivation or severe reduction of food and drink for several days.

See:

Cugges Lebreton، Libertés publiques et draits de l'homme. ، 1995، p. 276..

([1952]) The Second General Report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 3) §53 ,CPT/Inf92.

([1953]) Principle 5(c) - (d) of the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials..

Concluding [1954]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Honduras,. UN Doc §8 (2006) CCPR/C/HND/CO/1, Paraguay, UN Doc. CCPR/C/pry/CO/2 §11 (2005); see Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Greece, §9 (2005) UN Doc. CCPR/CO/83/GRC, Moldova, / UN Doc. CCPR/C § §9 (2009) MDA/CO/2 and 11.

10-11-3 Instruments and Methods of Restriction

within the framework of Egyptian law

The Director of the Correction and Rehabilitation Center may order the handcuffing of the inmate with iron if he commits an agitation or severe infringement, and he must immediately refer the matter to the Assistant Minister for the Community Protection Sector, and the period of handcuffing may not exceed 72 hours [1955].

In military reform centers, the director of the reform center may order the handcuffing of the inmate with iron for a period not exceeding 72 hours, with proof of this in the daily record of the incidents of the reform center, stating the reasons and notifying the director of the Correction and Rehabilitation Centers Authority for the centers under his administration and the competent security director for the centers of the security directorates [1956].

The Egyptian legislator also authorized the director of the reform center to order the shackling of the pretrial detainee and the inmate with iron legs in the event of an attempt to escape or if he is afraid to escape and this fear has reasonable grounds. He must immediately report this to the Public Prosecution or the investigating judge, as the case may be, if he is a pretrial detainee, and inform the Assistant Minister of Interior of the Prisons Authority Sector if he is an inmate, provided that each order to shackle iron is recorded in the daily record of the incidents of the reform center with a statement of its reasons, and the security director is notified immediately of this to obtain his approval of this procedure.

The Public Prosecution or the investigating judge may order the lifting of the iron handcuffs if he does not deem it necessary [1957].

It is not permitted to place the iron restriction on the feet of the convict detained in the reform center inside or outside the reform centers except in the event that he is feared to escape on reasonable grounds by an order issued by the Assistant Minister for the Community Protection Sector or the competent Director of Security, as the case may be, or whoever is authorized to do so [1958].

Within the framework of international covenants

While the use of restraining devices and methods can sometimes be necessary, if other methods of control are not found, these remain susceptible to abuse and unjustified use or abuse can amount to torture or other ill-treatment, and can result in death or serious injury

International standards prohibit the use of metal chains or restraints and regulate the use of other means of restraint, such as hand restraints and control vests [1959].

Restraints should never be used against women during labor or childbirth or immediately thereafter[1960].

([1955]) Article 89 of the Law Regulating Correction and Rehabilitation Centers, as amended by Law No. 106 of 2015, and Article 53 of the Internal Regulations of Geographical Reform Centers.

([1956]) Article 43 of the bylaws of the military reform and rehabilitation centers.

([1957]) Articles 90 and 91 of the Law Regulating Correction and Rehabilitation Centers, and Article 54 of the Internal Regulations of Geographical Correction and Rehabilitation Centers.

([1958]) Article 2 of the Law on the Organization of Correction and Community Rehabilitation Centers.

[1959]See Special Rapporteur on Torture, 56/2004 / UN Doc. E/CN. 4. §45 (2003)

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Republic of Korea,. UN Doc §13 (2006) CCPR/C/KOR/CO/6; CAT Concluding Observations: Japan: §15 (2007) CAT/C/JPN/CO/1 (g); see CAT Concluding Observations: United States of America,. UN Doc §179 (2000) A/55/44 (e).

Rule 33 of the Standard Minimum Rules, and rule 68 of the European Prison Rules..

([1960]) Rule 24 of the Bangkok Rules.

Permitted instruments and methods of restraint may be used only when necessary and proportionate; they shall be continued only as strictly necessary and shall never be used to inflict punishment on a detained person [1961].

The use of some instruments and methods of restraint inherently involves cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, and therefore physical electrocution belts should never be used [1962].

The use of blindfolds should also be explicitly prohibited [1963].

Amnesty International calls for the prohibition of dangerous restraints, including holding diphtheria, pressing on neck arteries or vessels, and handcuffing feet[1964].

The use of restraints such as handcuffs during the process of legal arrest of a person usually does not amount to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment if it is necessary (for example to prevent an individual from fleeing or from causing harm or damage), and if it does not involve the unreasonable use of force or exposure of the person in public[1965].

But if restrictions are used without justification or necessity or used in a way that causes pain and suffering, this amounts to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment [1966].

Restrictions must be removed at the time of the person's appearance before the court [1967].

The European Court ruled that unnecessarily handcuffing the accused or placing him in a metal cage during the course of the trial amounts to degrading treatment [1968].

Cases of restraint of the individual should be recorded, and the person restrained should be kept under continuous supervision [1969].

10-11-4 Self-inspection

within the framework of Egyptian law

The principle under Egyptian law requires that every inmate is searched upon being admitted to a correctional facility. Any prohibited items, money, or valuables in their possession are confiscated and recorded in a logbook for inmate belongings and deposits, with sufficient descriptions provided.

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: United States of America, §33 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/USA/CO/3/Rev/1; CPT General Report 10, 13) §27 ,CPT/Inf2000; CAT Concluding Observations: USA, / UN Doc. CAT/C/USA §33 (2006) CO/ 2; see Special Rapporteur on Torture,. UN Doc. §41 (2008) A/HRC/7/3.

([1961]) Principle 5 of the Principles of Medical Ethics, Rules 33-34 of the Standard Minimum Rules, Rules 60/6 and 68/3 of the European Prison Rules, and Guideline 120 of the ICC Guidelines..

([1962]) Committee for the Prevention of Torture: General Report 20, 15) §74 ,CPT/Inf2010, Hungary, 16) §120 ,CPT/Inf2010.

([1963]) General Report 12 of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 15) §83 ,CPT/Inf2002; Special Rapporteur on Torture: 156 / §93 (2001) ,UN Doc. A. 56 (f), §26 (2002) ,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2003/68 (g); Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Liechtenstein, §23 (2010) ,UN Doc. CAT/C/LIE/CO/3..

([1964]) Among other documents, Amnesty International, USA: “Less than deadly”? U.S. Use of Stun Weapons in Law Enforcement, Document No.: 2008/010/ AMR 51, p. 54 ,. Rec. 8.

([1965]) See, e.g., European Court: Harutyuanian v. Armenia (34334/ 04), § 124- §129 (2010); Ocalan v. Turkey (46221/ 99), Grand Chamber (2005) 185- §184; see also Cabal and Bertrand v. Australia, Human Rights Commission, . 1/ §8 (2003) UN Doc. CCPR/C/78/D/1020/2001.

([1966]) European Court: Yagiz v. Turkey (27473) / 02), (48- § §46 (2007), Kashavilov v. Bulgaria (891) / 05), (40- § §38 (2011)); Kucherok v. Ukraine (2570) / 04), (145- §139 (2007), Stratije et al. v. Moldova §55- §59 (2007) , (8721/05 et al), Okhrimenko v. Ukraine (53896) / 07) §93- §98 (2009), Hanaf v. France (65436) / 01), (60- § §47 (2003)..

([1967]) Rule 33 of the Standard Minimum Rules, and rule 68 (2) (a) of the European Prison Rules.

([1968]) European Court: Harutyuanyan v. Armenia (34334) / 04), (2010) 129- §124; Ramishvili and Kokhridze v. Georgia (1704) / 06), (- §98 (2009) 102, Gorodnichev v. Russia (52058) / 99), (109- §105 (2007).

([1969]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: New Zealand,. UN Doc §9 ,CAT/C/NZL/CO/5; Second General Report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, CPT/Inf §53 ,(92)3.

If the inmate owes financial obligations to the government as stipulated by a court sentence, these obligations are settled from the money found in their possession. If the money is insufficient to cover the debt and the inmate does not fulfill these obligations after being notified, valuable items in their possession are sold by the Public Prosecution to cover the outstanding amount. The sale process halts once a sufficient amount is raised to fulfill the government's claim.

Should the collected funds, including proceeds from the sale, fall short of the financial obligations, the inmate retains an amount no less than one Egyptian pound, which is recorded under their account in deposits. The remaining balance is credited to the government.

If any surplus remains after settling the obligations, it is recorded in the inmate's deposit account for personal use when needed, unless the inmate requests that the remaining balance be handed over to a designated individual or their legal guardian[1970].

Any item concealed by the inmate, refused to be surrendered, or secretly delivered to them by others inside the correctional facility may be confiscated[1971].

Within the framework of international covenants

Self-searches of detainees and prisoners must be necessary, reasonable and proportionate, must be organized under the provisions of national law and must be conducted in a manner consistent with the personal dignity of the inspected human being, and by trained staff of the same sex [1972].

When a transgender person is searched, their request to be searched by a person of either sex should be respected Subjective inspections of sensitive parts of the body should be exceptional and should only be carried out by appropriately trained personnel, or by a general practitioner, if requested by the detainee or prisoner. The general practitioner should normally not be the same person who provides medical care to the prisoner [1973].

The Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas state that vaginal or anal searches must be prohibited by[1974] law.

Strip searches as well as subjective searches of sensitive parts of the body in a humiliating manner can constitute torture or other ill-treatment [1975].

Alternative inspection methods should be developed to remove clothing with the intention of self-inspection or manual inspection, such as scanning devices [1976].

([1970]) Article 9 of the Law Regulating Correction and Rehabilitation Centers, Article 5 of Presidential Decree No. 82 of 1984, Articles 5, 6, 8, 9 of the Internal Regulations of Geographical Reform Centers, Articles 5, 6, 7 of the Internal Regulations of Military Reform Centers, and Article 1045 of the written, financial, and administrative instructions of the Public Prosecution.

([1971]) Article 12 of the Law on the Organization of Correction and Community Rehabilitation Centers.

([1972]) Rules 19-21 of the Bangkok Rules, Principle 21 of the Principles for Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and Rule 54 of the European Prison Rules.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 16, §8; CPT General Report 10, 13) §23 ,CPT/Inf2000; see Concluding Observations of the Committee against Torture: France, 6- §28 (2010) UN Doc. CAT/C/FRA/CO/4, Hong Kong, §10 (2008) UN Doc. CAT/C/HKG/CO/4..

Third [1973]General Report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 12) §73 ,CPT/Inf93; World Medical Association, Statement on Body Searches of Prisoners; Concluding Observations of the Committee against Torture: Hong Kong, / UN Doc. CAT/C §10 (2008) ‹HKG/CO/4..

([1974]) Principle 21 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas..

Bodo [1975]v. Trinidad and Tobago, Commission on Human Rights, / UN Doc. CCPR 5/ §6 (2002) C/74/D/721/1996 & 6/7; López Álvarez v. Honduras, Inter-American Court § §54 (2006) (12) & 107.

([1976]) Rule 20 of the Bangkok Rules, Principle 21 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas.

The European Court found that the use of a tool to search the body of a suspect for the purpose of obtaining evidence of guilt in a drug-related crime - without being necessary, and in a manner that posed a risk to their health, while alternative, less humiliating methods of obtaining evidence could have been resorted to - constituted inhuman and degrading treatment of them [1977].

10.12 Duty to Investigate Torture and Right to Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Torture

Within the framework of international covenants

Individuals subjected to torture and other forms of ill-treatment must have access to accessible and effective remedies. In particular, States must ensure that allegations of torture are promptly, impartially, independently and thoroughly investigated, that victims have access to effective remedies and reparations, and that those responsible are brought to justice [1978].

States must provide complaint mechanisms consistent with the right to an effective remedy[1979].

Even without an explicit complaint from the victim, an investigation should be opened where there are reasonable grounds to believe that an act of torture or other ill-treatment has occurred[1980].

The failure of the State to open an investigation into allegations of torture or other ill-treatment constitutes a violation of the right to an effective remedy and the right not to be subjected to torture or other ill-treatment [1981].

Victims and their lawyers must have access to all relevant information, attend any hearings concerning their complaints and have the right to present evidence. Victims and witnesses must be protected from any reprisals or intimidation, including counter complaints, as a result of their complaints [1982].

Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Hong Kong,. UN Doc §10 (2008) ,CAT/C/HKG/CO/4, France, 6- ,UN Doc. CAT/C/FRA/CO/4. §28 (2010).

([1977]) Glouh v. Germany (54810/ 00), Grand Chamber of the European Court. 83- § §67 (2006).

([1978]) Article 8 of the Universal Declaration, articles 2 and 7 of the International Covenant, articles 12-14 of the Convention against Torture, articles 5 and 7 of the African Charter, articles 5 and 25 of the American Convention, articles 8-9 of the American Convention against Torture, article 23 of the Arab Charter, articles 3 and 13 of the European Convention, articles 8-11 of the Declaration against Torture, guidelines 19-16, 40 and 49-50 of the Robben Island Guidelines, sections C(a) and M7 (g) - (j) of the principles of fair trial in Africa, article 18 of the American Declaration, and principle 5 of the principles relating to persons deprived of their liberty in the Americas.

General Comment 31 of the Human Rights Committee, 16- § §51; 14 Report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 28 (36- §31),CPT/Inf 2004.

General [1979]Comment 3 of the Committee against Torture, §23; see Concluding Observations of the Committee against Torture: Tunisia, 44 / §102 (1998) UN Doc. A/54..

([1980]) Article 12 of the Convention against Torture and Principle 2 of the Istanbul Protocol.

CAT General Comment 3, §27, Concluding Observations: Peru, 44 / § §169 (2001) ,UN Doc. A/56 and 172; see, e.g., Committee against Torture: Latif v. Tunisia, 2001/2003) UN Doc. CAT/C/31/D/89) 8/10-6/ §10, Blanco Abad v. Spain, 1996 / UN Doc. CAT/C/20/D/59 . 8/8-2/ §8 (1998).

[1981]See, e.g., Avadanov v. Azerbaijan, Commission on Human Rights, 5/9-3/ §9 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/100/D/1633/2007; Aydin v. Turkey (94/23178), Grand Chamber of the European Court 103 § (1997)..

([1982]) General Comment 3 of the Committee against Torture, 31- § §30; General Report 14 of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 28 39 § ,CPT/Inf 2004.

Article 13 of the Convention against Torture, and Guideline 7 of the Council of Europe Guidelines for the Eradication of Impunity; see Articles 12 and 18 (2) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearances.

Principle 3(b) of the Principles for the Investigation of Torture..

Any person suspected of involvement in acts of torture and other ill-treatment must be removed from any position that allows them to control or exercise any authority over complaints, witnesses and investigators [1983].

State representatives suspected of having committed torture or other ill-treatment should be suspended from their duties during the investigation [1984].

The investigation should include a medical examination of the victim of torture; where the medical examination shows that the person is suffering from injuries that were not present at the time of his arrest, he should be presumed to have been ill-treated while in detention [1985].

A person who has been tortured or otherwise ill-treated is entitled to obtain redress for the harm suffered, regardless of whether the persons responsible for the torture have been identified and brought to justice [1986].

Reparation should include financial compensation and rehabilitation, including medical and psychological care, social and legal services, satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition[1987].

The compensation provided by the State to the victim must be sufficient to redress it; while the forms of reparation should be commensurate with the violations suffered [1988].

It is not possible that the State has fulfilled the right of victims to a remedy and reparation by simply providing them with financial compensation, as the State must ensure that the investigation is able to identify the persons responsible and bring them to justice, so that they can be punished commensurate with the gravity of the violation they committed [1989].

The State shall also not relieve offenders of their responsibility in such ways as pardoning them, paying compensation to the victim, immunities, or other similar measures [1990].

([1983]) Principle 3(b) of the Istanbul Protocol..

([1984]) Gavgen v. Germany (22978) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §125 (2010); Special Rapporteur on Torture,. UN Doc §26 (2002) E/CN. 4/2003/68 (k); Committee against Torture, e.g. El Salvador, §12 (2009) UN Doc. CAT/C/SLV/CO/2 (b); Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee, e.g. Brazil, UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 66. §20 (1996).

([1985]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Cyprus,. UN Doc §4 (2002) ,CAT/C/CR/29/1 (a); European Court: Aksoy v. Turkey §61 (1996) ,(93/21987); Salmouni v. France (25804/ 94), (1999). §87.

Principle [1986]9 of the Basic Principles on Reparation for Injuries, and Section 2(5) of the Council of Europe Guidelines on the Eradication of Impunity.

General Comment 3 of the Committee against Torture, § §3 and 26.

The [1987]Basic Principles on Reparation (in particular Principles 15-23), and Principle 16 of the Council of Europe Guidelines on the Eradication of Impunity.

General Comment 3 of the Committee against Torture, 17- § §15.

([1988]) See, e.g., Siurab v. Moldova (No. 2) (7481) / 06), European Court (25- §24 (2010); Raxcaco-Reyes v. Guatemala, Inter-American Court (116- §114 (2005)).

([1989]) General Comment 31 of the Human Rights Committee, § §15 and 18; General Comment 3 of the Committee against Torture, § §9 and 17, Guridi v. Spain, Committee against Torture, 2002/8/6-6/ §6 (2005) ,UN Doc. CAT/C/34/D/212; European Court: Gavgen v. Germany (22978) / 05), Grand Chamber 119 § (2010); Okali v. Turkey (52067) / 99), (78- §71 (2006); CPT General Report 14,) 28 § §31 ,CPT/Inf 2004 and 40 - 41.

([1990]) General Comment 31 of the Human Rights Committee, §18; General Comment 2 of the Committee against Torture, §5; General Comment 3 of the Committee against Torture, 42- §40; Principles 19, 22 and 31-35 of the Updated Principles on Impunity.

Part Two: Rights During Trial

Chapter Eleven: The Right to Trial Before a Competent, Independent, and Impartial Court Established by Law

It is a fundamental principle and condition of a fair trial that the court responsible for hearing and adjudicating the case shall be legally constituted, competent, independent and impartial.

11.1 Right to be Tried by A Competent, Independent and Impartial Tribunal

11-1-1 Within the framework of Egyptian law

The judge's duty in applying the law requires knowing the legislator's will correctly, which can only be achieved if he has complete freedom to derive this will, not influenced by a particular idea and not subject to interference from these two authorities. This independence does not mean control or tyranny in opinion or judgment, but it means not being subject in extracting the word of the law and applying it to anything other than the judge's conscience and his free and sound conviction .[1991]

Therefore, Article 94 of the Egyptian Constitution stipulates that: "..." The independence, immunity and impartiality of the judiciary are basic guarantees for the protection of rights and freedoms.

The basic guarantee of judicial independence is the irremovability of its members.

The immunity of judges is one of the most important guarantees of judicial independence. This immunity means that the judge enjoys two types of protection:

Protection against his arbitrary removal from the judicial position, whether through dismissal, referral to retirement, suspension from work, or transfer to another position.

Protection from being moved to another place.

Thus, immunity is of two types:

Functional immunity, protects a judge from being removed from his position.

And spatial immunity, which protects the judge from being removed from his position.

In fact, a judge who fears for his position does not rule fairly. This does not mean that the judge has become the owner of his position, or that no matter how much a judge makes a mistake or does wrong, he will continue in his position. Rather, immunity is considered to secure the judge from the risk of being abused and his future being lost, without prejudice to referring him to disciplinary trial for any mistakes he commits.

The Egyptian Constitution has guaranteed the immunity of judges, stipulating that they cannot be dismissed. Article 186 states that: "Judges are independent and cannot be dismissed. There is no authority over them in their work other than the law. They are equal in rights and duties. The law determines the conditions and procedures for their appointment, secondment, and retirement, and regulates their disciplinary accountability. They may not be assigned, in whole or in part, except to the bodies and in the work specified by the law. All of this is in a manner that preserves the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and judges and prevents conflicts of interest." The law specifies the rights, duties and guarantees granted to them.

---

([1991]) See on the subject: Muhammad Asfour, Independence of the Judiciary, Judges' Magazine, 1998, p. 209 and following; Counselor Muhammad Wagdi Abd al-Samad: Excusing Ignorance of the Law, Alam al-Kutub, 1973, p. 718 and following. Muhammad Kamil Obaid, Judicial Independence, PhD Thesis, 1991.

This was confirmed by the Judicial Authority Law issued in 1972, which stipulated that judges cannot be dismissed except through disciplinary means. Article 67 thereof stipulated that: "Judicial and public prosecution officers - except for assistant prosecutors - cannot be dismissed, and judges of the Court of Cassation may not be transferred to the courts of appeal or the public prosecution except with their consent."

The judiciary is tried disciplinary before a special disciplinary board consisting of the most senior presidents of the Courts of Appeal who are not members of the Supreme Judicial Council as president, and the two most senior judges of the Court of Cassation and the two most senior vice presidents of the Court of Appeal as members.[1992].

The judge's immunity is not limited to the position he holds, but extends to the court in which he works and protects him from being transferred to another court except with his consent, since the guarantee that judges cannot be dismissed is not sufficient alone to guarantee the judges' reassurance in their work, because courts of various degrees are spread throughout the republic and in cities that vary in terms of environment and living conditions, and there are multiple circuits within the primary court or the court of appeal, and the transfer order can be a means of spite against some by transferring them to remote places, or by attracting others by keeping them in the capital or nearby cities, or by distancing them from the case they are hearing by redistributing the work to them in another circuit.

The prohibition on transferring a judge is a result of his inability to be removed, and therefore it has the same constitutional value as the immunity of the judge from removal as stipulated in the constitution. Therefore, what is meant by removal does not apply to the judicial function as a whole, but also applies to the case that he is examining.

The Judicial Authority Law confirmed this, stating in Article 52 that: "Judges may not be transferred, assigned or loaned except in the cases and in the manner specified by law."

Articles 53 and the following specify the provisions for the transfer of judges.[1993]

Articles 55 and beyond also regulate the controls for their secondment, making the period temporary and requiring the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council.[1994].

Since the immunity of the judiciary derives its value from the Constitution, it follows that its value may not be diminished by a decision issued by one of the bodies responsible for administering justice affairs that includes the removal of a judge from examining a case that falls within his jurisdiction if this is not based on objective, abstract reasons regulated by law, in a manner that does not involve any suspicion of infringing on the immunity of the judiciary.

The Supreme Constitutional Court ruled that: [The current constitution has adopted, pursuant to the text of Article (4) thereof, the principle of justice, as it is, along with the principles of equality and equal opportunities, a basis for building society and preserving its national unity. For this reason, the constitution was keen in Article (96) thereof to make it a regulator of a fair and just legal trial, which guarantees the accused the guarantees of defending himself. Criminal justice,

---

([1992] Article No. 98 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([1993]) See Articles 53, 54, and 59 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([1994]) See Articles Nos. 55, 56, 57, 58, 62, 64 of the Judicial Authority Law.

in its essence - according to the rulings of this court - is what must be guaranteed through precisely and fairly defined rules, in the light of which it is determined whether the accused is convicted or innocent. This assumes a balance between the interest of the group in the stability of its security, and the interest of the accused in not imposing a penalty on him that has no connection to an act he committed, or for which this connection lacks evidence. Therefore, criminal justice may not be separated from its components, which guarantee each accused a minimum of rights that may not be waived or neglected, nor may it compromise the necessity for criminalization to remain linked to the ultimate purposes of penal laws.][1995] .

11-1-2 Within the framework of international conventions

Everyone facing a criminal trial has the right to be tried by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law.[1996]

The independence of the judiciary is a fundamental pillar of the principle of legitimacy in general and a guarantee of the rule of law (legitimacy).

That is why the Seventh and Eighth United Nations Congresses on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in Milan in 1985 and in Cuba in 1990, affirmed that the principle of the independence of the judiciary is the basis of legitimacy and equality before the law.

Judicial independence means that its authority is free from any interference by the legislative and executive authorities, and that judges are not subject to anything other than the law. Judicial independence is an important element in the honor and prestige of the judiciary. Without it, the judiciary loses its value and usefulness in protecting freedoms.[1997]

This right requires States to establish and maintain independent and impartial courts. States must ensure that sufficient human and financial resources are available for the judicial system to function effectively throughout the country. They must also ensure the continuity of legal education for judges, prosecutors and other judicial personnel, and address any corruption or discrimination in the administration of justice.[1998]

The right to have one's case heard by an independent, impartial and legally constituted tribunal is an absolute right, without exception, and is a general principle of customary international law,

---

([1995]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 217 of 31 Q issued in the session of January 4, 2020, date of publication January 13, 2020, page No. 17.

([1996]) Article 10 of the Universal Declaration, Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 40(2)(b)(iii) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18(1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Articles 7(1) and 26 of the African Charter, Articles 8(1) and 27(2) of the American Convention, Articles 12 and 13 of the African Charter, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, Section A(1) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Article 26 of the American Declaration.

([1997] General de Gaulle expressed the importance of judicial independence by saying: “The proper guarantee of the adequacy, honor, and neutrality of the state depends on ensuring the independence of the judiciary and its continued preservation of the freedom of each individual” (his speech in the Place de la République in Paris on September 4, 1908, cited in: Notes and Etudes documentaires, l'organisation judiciaire en France, 14 February). 1972, p. 75.

([1998]) Article 26 of the African Charter, and Principles 6 and 7 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary; see Article 13 of the Arab Charter.

Principles 4(14)-(15) and 5 and 6(3)-(4) of the Bangalore Principles; Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Bosnia and Herzegovina, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/BIH §13 (2006) CO/1; Central African Republic, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/CAF §16 binding on all States (including those that have not ratified international treaties) at all times, even during states of emergency and armed conflict.[1999]

(2006) CO/2, Democratic Republic of the Congo, / UN Doc. CCPR/C §21 (2006) COD/CO/3; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 26/§18-§24 (2010) UN Docs. A/HRC/14 and 99(e), . 58- § §56

(2011) A/HRC/17/30.

The Human Rights Committee has made it clear that no one may be tried for a criminal offence except by a court established by law. Any criminal conviction issued by a body other than an independent and impartial court established by law does not meet the requirements of Article 14 of the International Covenant.[2000]

The right to a trial before a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law requires "not only that justice be done, but also that it be seen to have been done."

In determining whether there is a legitimate reason to fear that a particular court lacks independence or impartiality, the decisive factor remains whether the doubts raised are objectively justified.[2001]

Fair trial guarantees, including the right to be tried by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal, apply to all courts: whether ordinary or military, courts established according to customary law or religious courts, recognized by the State in its legal system.[2002]

The Human Rights Committee has stressed that judgments issued under customary law and religious courts should only be binding in the following cases:

When the proceedings relate to secondary civil or criminal matters;

When the proceedings meet the basic requirements of a fair trial and other relevant human rights guarantees enshrined in the International Covenant;

When the State courts verify them in the light of the guarantees enshrined in the International Covenant ;[2003] .

When the judgments can be appealed by the disputing parties in a procedure that meets the requirements of Article 14 of the International Covenant [2004]

Fair trial principles in Africa require that such courts respect international fair trial standards, but allow for appeals of judgments to a higher traditional court, an administrative authority or a judicial tribunal.[2005]

The Universal Declaration on the Independence of Judges, Montreal, 1983, guaranteed that the retirement age of those currently in office may not be changed without their consent.[2006]

([1999]) Article 4 of the Arab Charter; see Article 27(2) of the American Convention.
Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §19 and General Comment 29, §16; UN General Assembly Resolution 67/166, Preamble §11 and Resolution 213/65, Preamble §9; Civil Liberties Organization, Legal Center for Defense and Defense and Aid Project
Legal v. Nigeria (218)/98), African Commission §27 (2011); González del Río v. Peru, Human Rights Committee,. UN Doc 1/ §5 (1992) CCPR/C/46/D/263/1987; Reveron Trujillo v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court 68 §
(2009); see the advisory opinions of the Inter-American Court: 87/§29-§30 (1987) OC-8, and 87/§20 (1987) OC-9; ICRC Study on Customary International Humanitarian Law, Vol. 1, Rule 100, p. 352 -
365. ?.

([2000]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §18.

([2001]) See European Court: Incal v. Turkey (22678)/93), (1998) § 71, Borgers v. Belgium (12005)/86), (29- § § 24 (1991), Kress v. France (39594)/98), Grand Chamber (87- § § 81 (2001); Delcourt v. Belgium § 31 (1970), (65/2689).

([2002]) See Section F of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2003]) See M. Nowak, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: A Commentary on the Provisions of the Covenant, Second Revised Edition, Engel, 2005, pp. 319-356.

([2004]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §24.

([2005]) Section F of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa..

([2006] Principle 22. 2 of the Universal Declaration on the Independence of Judges.

Principle 11 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary states that: "The term of office, independence, security, adequate remuneration, conditions of service, pension and age of retirement of judges shall be adequately guaranteed by law. "[2007]

The tenth principle of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, issued in 1985, requires that those selected for judicial positions must be competent and have appropriate training and qualifications in law, stating that: "Those selected for judicial positions must be individuals of integrity and competence, and have appropriate training or qualifications in law. Any method of selecting judges must include: On guarantees against appointment to judicial positions for improper motives. In the selection of judges, no person shall be subject to discrimination on the grounds of race, color, sex, religion, political or other opinions, national or social origin, property, birth or status, provided that it shall not be considered discrimination to require that a candidate for a judicial position be a national of the country concerned.

11-2 The right to a trial before a court established by law

11-2-1 Within the framework of Egyptian law

Article 184 of the Constitution states that: "The judicial authority is independent and is exercised by the courts of all types and levels. They issue their rulings per the law, and the law defines their powers. Interference in the affairs of justice or cases is a crime that does not lapse by prescription "[2008] The Supreme Constitutional Court ruled that: [The Constitution, in Article (96), meant to guarantee the right to a fair trial, as it stipulated that the accused is innocent until proven guilty in a fair legal trial that guarantees him the right to defend himself. This is a right stipulated in Articles 10 and 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the first of which states that every person has a full and equal right to a fair and public trial by an independent and impartial court, which shall decide his civil rights and obligations or the criminal charge against him. The second of them reiterates in its first paragraph the right of every person charged with a criminal offence to be presumed innocent until proven guilty in a public trial at which he has been provided with the necessary guarantees for his defense. This paragraph reiterates a rule that has been established in democratic countries, and within its framework lies a group of basic guarantees that, when integrated, ensure a concept of justice that is generally consistent with contemporary standards in force in civilised countries. It thus relates to the formation of the court and the rules of its organisation, the nature of the procedural rules in force before it, and how they are applied in practice. It is also considered, within the scope of the criminal accusation, to be closely related to personal freedom, which the Constitution stipulated in Article (54) as one of the natural rights that may not be infringed upon, violated or restricted in violation of its provisions. Therefore, this rule cannot be interpreted narrowly, as it is a basic guarantee to repel aggression against the citizen's rights and basic freedoms. It is what guarantees his enjoyment of it within a framework of equal opportunities. Although its scope is not limited to criminal accusations, but extends to every lawsuit, even if the rights raised therein are civil, a fair trial is considered more necessary in a criminal lawsuit, regardless of the nature of the crime and regardless of its degree of seriousness. The reason for this is that convicting the accused of a crime exposes him to the most serious restrictions on his personal freedom, and the most threatening to his right to life. These are risks that can only be avoided in light of actual guarantees that balance the individual's right to freedom on the one hand, and the group's right to defend its basic interests on the other. This is achieved whenever the criminal accusation is known by the charge, stating its nature, detailing its evidence and all the elements associated with it, and taking into account that the decision on this accusation is made by an independent and impartial court established by law, and that the trial is conducted in public - and within a reasonable period - and that the court bases its decision of conviction - if it reaches it - on an objective investigation conducted by itself, and on an impartial presentation of the facts; and on a fair assessment of the conflicting interests, and fairly weighing the conflicting evidence; and all of these are essential guarantees without which a fair trial cannot be established. Hence, the Constitution guaranteed it in Article (96) and linked it to two guarantees that are considered its components and fall under its concept, namely the presumption of innocence on the one hand; and the right to defense to refute the criminal accusation on the other hand, which is a right reinforced by Article (98) of the Constitution by stating that the right to defense in person or by proxy is guaranteed. Whereas this was the case, and the Constitution had taken a broader step in establishing the values of rights and freedoms, by stipulating in Articles (5, 51, 92) respect for human rights, dignity and freedoms, and protecting the rights and freedoms inherent in the person of the citizen, by stipulating an additional guarantee that they are not subject to reduction or suspension, denying the legislator the possibility of including them] [2009].

---

([2007]) Adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Milan from 26 August to 6 September 1985, and endorsed by United Nations General Assembly resolutions 40/32 of 29 November 1985 and 40/164 of 13 December 1985.

([2008] Article No. 184 of the Constitution.

First: Criminal Court

Article No. 366 of the Criminal Procedure Code stipulates that: “One or more courts shall be formed in every Court of Appeal to consider criminal cases, and each shall be composed of three of its judges, headed by at least one of the Vice-Presidents of the Court of Appeal.”

One or more circuits of the Criminal Court, each of which shall have the rank of President of the Court of Appeal, shall be designated to consider the felonies stipulated in Chapters One, Two, Two Repeated, Three and Four of Book Two of the Penal Code, and the crimes related to those felonies. These cases shall be adjudicated expeditiously.” Article Six of the Judicial Authority Law stipulates that: “The headquarters of the Courts of Appeal shall be in Cairo, Alexandria, Tanta, Mansoura, Ismailia, Beni Suef, Assiut and Qena. Each shall consist of a president and a sufficient number of presidents, deputies, heads of circuits and judges. Judgments shall be issued by three judges. The Court of Appeal may convene in any other place within its jurisdiction or outside this jurisdiction when necessary - by a decision issued by the Minister of Justice based on a request from the President of the Court of Appeal. An exceptional circuit may also be formed on a permanent basis in one of the centers of the primary courts by a decision issued by the Minister of Justice after taking the opinion of the General Assembly of the Court of Appeal.”

Article 7 of the Judicial Authority Law stipulates that: “One or more courts shall be formed in each Court of Appeal to consider criminal cases, and each shall be composed of three judges from the Court of Appeal. The Criminal Court shall be headed by the President of the Court, one of his deputies, or one of the heads of the departments, and when necessary, one of the judges may head it.”

The General Assembly of each Court of Appeal shall appoint, each year, upon the request of its President, one of its judges to be entrusted with judging the criminal courts. If an impediment occurs to one of the judges appointed for a session of the criminal court, he shall be replaced by another judge delegated by the President of the Court of Appeal.

([2009]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 202 of 32 Q issued in the session of November 3, 2018, date of publication November 13, 2018, page No. 3.

In urgent cases, the president of the primary court located in the area where the criminal court is held or its representative may sit in his place. In this case, no more than one person other than the judges may participate in the ruling.[2010].

Accordingly, the Court of Cassation ruled that the issuance of a ruling by a panel of four advisors results in its nullity, and the Court of Cassation may overturn the ruling for this reason on its initiative in the interest of the accused.[2011]

The Court of Cassation also ruled that the issuance of a ruling by a criminal court composed of two judges results in its nullity, which reduces it to the point of nullity.[2012]

However, on the other hand, the distribution of work among the departments of the Court of Appeal and the appointment of judges entrusted with the judiciary in the Criminal Court is an administrative organization among the departments of the court, so nullity does not result from the issuance of a ruling by a department of the Court of Appeal that is originally competent in civil matters, as that distribution does not create a type of jurisdiction that is exclusive to one department without another department, which does not result in nullity if it is violated.[2013]

Second: The Criminal Court of Appeal

In each Court of Appeal, one or more courts shall be formed to which appeals shall be made against judgments issued by the first-degree criminal chambers. Each court shall consist of three of its judges, at least one of whom shall hold the rank of President of the Court of Appeal and the presidency of the court shall be the most senior of them.[2014] .

Article (368):

The General Assembly of each Court of Appeal shall appoint, each year, upon the request of its President, any of its judges to work in the criminal courts of both levels.

If an impediment occurs to one of the judges appointed for a session of the Criminal Court in its two degrees, he shall be replaced by another judge appointed by the President of the Court of Appeal of the same degree. [2015]

Third: Misdemeanor Court

As for misdemeanor courts, partial courts are established within the jurisdiction of each primary court, and their establishment, location and jurisdiction are determined by a decision of the Minister of Justice. Within the jurisdiction of each center or section, there is a partial court formed of one judge from the judges of the primary court to which the partial court is affiliated, and judgments in partial courts are issued by one judge.

The District Court may convene in any other place within its jurisdiction or outside this jurisdiction when necessary - by a decision of the Minister of Justice based on a request from the President of the Court. [2016]

([2010] Article No. 367 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2011]) Appeal No. 119 of 83 Q issued in the session of May 12, 2013 and published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page No. 620, Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 9870 of 80 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2011 and published in Technical Office Book No. 62, page No. 19, Rule No. 4.

([2012] Appeal No. 21424 of year 63 Q issued in the session of September 27, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 970, rule No. 149.

([2013]) Appeal No. 1734 of 50 Q issued in the session of January 26, 1981 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 79, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 250 of 40 Q issued in the session of March 22, 1970 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 431, Rule No. 106.

([2014] Article No. 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code, amended by Article 2 of Law No. 1 of 2024 amending some provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([2015] Article No. 368 of the Criminal Procedure Code, amended by Article 2 of Law No. 1 of 2024 amending some provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Fourth: Misdemeanor Appeal Court

A division of the Court of First Instance is competent to consider appeals filed against rulings issued by partial courts in violations and misdemeanors in the criminal or civil lawsuit attached thereto. It is held in the capital of each governorate .[2017] .

Fifth: Child Court

The establishment of specialized courts to consider crimes against children is justified by the special nature of child crime, both in terms of its causes and methods of treatment, which requires that some judges specialize in considering it, to gain experience in it, and have enough time to study such cases. The establishment of such courts is also justified by the necessity of following special procedures in trying children, to protect their psychology and future, and these procedures are difficult to follow before ordinary courts that apply procedures of a different kind.

One or more courts for children shall be formed in the headquarters of each governorate, consisting of three judges. The court shall be assisted by two experts, at least one of whom shall be a woman. Their attendance at the trial proceedings shall be mandatory. The two experts shall submit their report to the court after examining the child's circumstances from all aspects before the court issues its ruling. Appeals of rulings issued by the child's court shall be before an appellate court formed in each primary court of three judges, at least two of whom shall be at the rank of court president, and they shall be assisted by two experts from the specialists as detailed above.[2018] .

Sixth: Military Courts

Military courts were established to deal with military crimes. A military crime is an act committed by a person subject to the Military Judiciary Law in violation of the military order imposed by this law. This means that a military crime is distinguished by the person who commits it, as he must be subject to the Military Judiciary Law, and the basic principle is that he must be a military man. It is also distinguished by the type of act he commits, as it is assumed that it involves a violation of the military order and is therefore subject to criminalization by the Military Judiciary Law.

Military courts have four levels:

The Supreme Court of Military Appeals, composed of the President of the Military Judiciary Authority and a sufficient number of his deputies and military judges with the rank of colonel or more. It consists of several circuits headed by the President of the Court or one of his deputies with the rank of brigadier or more. Judgments are issued by five military judges..[2019]

The Military Criminal Court, which consists of several circuits, and each circuit is composed of three military judges headed by the most senior of them, whose rank is no less than colonel, and in the presence of a representative of the military prosecution.[2020]

The Military Court of Appeal for Misdemeanors, which consists of several circuits, and each circuit is composed of three military judges headed by the most senior of them, whose rank is not less than that of lieutenant colonel, and in the presence of a representative of the military prosecution.[2021]

([2016] Articles Nos. 11 and 14 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2017] Article No. 9 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2018] Articles Nos. 120 and 121 of the Child Law.
([2019] Articles No. 43 and 43 bis of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2020] Article No. 44 of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2021] Article No. 45 of the Military Judiciary Law.

The Military Court for Misdemeanors, which consists of several circuits, each circuit consisting of one judge whose rank is not less than major, and in the presence of a representative of the military prosecution.[2022]

A military trial may be held anywhere, regardless of where the crime was committed.[2023]

Seventh: State Security Courts

State Security Courts (Emergency Court) are of two types:

Partial State Security Courts, each part of the State Security Circuits of the Court of First Instance shall be composed of one of the judges of the court.

The Supreme State Security Courts, which are formed by the Court of Appeal, are composed of three judges.

The case is initiated before the State Security Courts by a member of the Public Prosecution.

The President of the Republic may, as an exception, order the formation of a partial State Security Chamber consisting of a judge and two officers of the armed forces with the rank of captain or equivalent at least, and the formation of a Supreme State Security Chamber consisting of three advisors and two commanding officers.[2024]

In areas subject to a special judicial system or for specific cases, the President of the Republic may order the formation of State Security Departments from officers. In this case, the court shall apply the procedures stipulated by the President of the Republic in the order for its formation.

In this case, the Supreme State Security Department is formed of three commanding officers, and one of the officers or one of the members of the Public Prosecution performs the function of the Public Prosecution.[2025]

Eighth: Economic Courts

A court called the "Economic Court" shall be established within the jurisdiction of each Court of Appeal. A president of the Court of Appeal shall be appointed to preside over it for a period of one year, renewable by a decision of the Minister of Justice after the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council. Its judges shall be from among the judges of the courts of first instance and the courts of appeal. A decision shall be issued by the Supreme Judicial Council to select them.

The Economic Court consists of primary and appellate circuits, and the locations of these circuits are appointed by a decision issued by the Minister of Justice after obtaining the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Council.

The primary and appellate circuits shall convene at the headquarters of the economic courts, and may convene, when necessary, in any other place, by decision of the Minister of Justice based on the request of the President of the Economic Court.[2026]

Each economic primary circuit is composed of three presidents of the primary courts.

Each of the appellate circuits shall consist of three judges of the Courts of Appeal, at least one of whom shall hold the rank of President of the Court of Appeal.[2027]

([2022] Article No. 46 of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2023] Article No. 53 of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2024] Article No. 7 of the State of Emergency Law.
([2025] Article No. 8 of the State of Emergency Law.
([2026] Article No. 1 of the Law on the Establishment of Economic Courts.
([2027] Article No. 2 of the Law on the Establishment of Economic Courts.

11-2-2 Within the framework of international conventions

The court hearing any case must be constituted in accordance with the law.[2028]

To meet this requirement, the court may have been constituted under the Constitution or other legislation passed by an authority empowered to make laws, or under common law.

The purpose of this requirement in criminal cases is to ensure that trials are not conducted by special courts that do not follow established procedures in accordance with the due principles to replace the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts, or by courts established to decide a single case in particular.[2029]

The European Court explained that a court constituted by law requires those who decide the case to meet existing legal requirements. The European Court ruled that the court was not "constituted by law" in the case where two non-representative judges were hearing a case and had exceeded the number of days of service allowed by law, there was no evidence that they had been appointed non-representative judges and the authorities could not provide any legal basis for their participation.[2030]

11-3 The Right to Have the Case Heard by a Competent Court

11-3-1 Within the framework of Egyptian law

The rules relating to the jurisdiction of criminal courts in criminal matters - including the rules of territorial jurisdiction - are all part of the public order, given that the legislator has based his determination of them on general considerations relating to the proper conduct of social justice.[2031]

First: Specific specialization

The courts have jurisdiction to adjudicate all disputes and crimes, except those excluded by a special text.[2032]

The point in appointing the competent authority to consider the criminal case is to determine the correct legal classification of the incident subject to criminalization.[2033]

The criterion for determining the type of crime is the amount of punishment prescribed by the Sharia for it.[2034]

The distribution of jurisdiction between criminal courts and partial courts is based on the type of punishment that threatens the offender, starting with the charge brought against him, according to whether it is a felony, misdemeanor, or contravention, regardless of the punishment actually

---

(2028) Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 8(1) of the American Convention, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Section A(4)(b) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, and Article 26 of the American Declaration.

(2029) See Principle 5 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, Abitz Barbera et al. v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court (2008) §50.

(2030) Possokhov v. Russia (63486)/00), European Court (2003) §37-§42.

(2031) Appeal No. 762 of 67 Q issued in the session of June 4, 2007 and published in Technical Office Book No. 58, page No. 431, Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 2360 of 61 Q issued in the session of September 23, 1998 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 928, Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 12068 of 59 Q issued in the session of May 3, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 681, Rule No. 117.

(2032 Article No. 15 of the Judicial Authority Law.

(2033) The Supreme Constitutional Court (Dispute), Case No. 3 of 22 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2003 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1224, Rule No. 4, Case No. 12 of 21 Q issued in the session of November 3, 2001 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1208, Rule No. 2.

(2034 Appeal No. 6637 of 82 Q issued in the session of January 5, 2013 (unpublished).

imposed on him for the crime proven against him. Therefore, what is relied upon in determining the type of jurisdiction is the legal description of the incident as the case was filed.[2035]

Misdemeanor Court

The Misdemeanor Court has jurisdiction to try persons accused of the following crimes:

Violations;

Misdemeanors, except for those committed by newspapers or other means of publication against non-individuals, and except for those committed by juveniles, in which case the Juvenile Court has jurisdiction .[2036] .

Criminal Court

The Criminal Court shall rule on every act that is considered a felony under the law, and on misdemeanors committed through newspapers or other means of publication, except for misdemeanors that harm individuals and other crimes for which the law stipulates its jurisdiction. The Criminal Court shall convene in every city in which there is a primary court, and its jurisdiction shall include what the jurisdiction of the primary court includes.

It may be held in any other place within its jurisdiction or outside this jurisdiction when necessary - by a decision issued by the Minister of Justice based on a request from the President of the Court of Appeal.[2037]

The legislator has defined the territorial jurisdiction of the criminal court as including what is included in the jurisdiction of the primary court, and this jurisdiction relates to public order.[2038]

However, it is not necessary for the criminal court to convene in the same building in which the sessions of the primary court are held.[2039]

One or more circuits of the Criminal Court - each of which shall have the same rank as the President of the Courts of Appeal - shall be designated to consider the felonies stipulated in Chapters One, Two, Two Repeats, Three and Four of Book Two of the Penal Code, and the crimes associated with those felonies. These cases shall be adjudicated expeditiously.[2040]

Also, allocating a department in the Court of Appeal to consider felonies is merely an administrative organization for distributing work among the various departments in the court, and this distribution does not create a type of jurisdiction that is exclusive to one department over another.[2041]

([2035]) Appeal No. 11099 of 79 Q issued in the session of November 25, 2010 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 61, page No. 656, rule No. 85, Appeal No. 29741 of 59 Q issued in the session of April 10, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 449, rule No. 66, Appeal No. 20942 of 64 Q issued in the session of October 10, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 987, rule No. 140, Appeal No. 1877 of 59 Q issued in the session of October 19, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 792, rule No. 132, Appeal No. 3906 of 58 Q issued in the session of November 3, 2017 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 1016, rule No. 154, appeal No. 45 of year 39 Q issued in the session of April 21, 1969 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 539, rule No. 112.

([2036] Article No. 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2037] Article No. 216 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and Article No. 8 of the Judicial Authority Law.

([2038] Appeal No. 11796 of 72 Q issued in the session of December 16, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, Page No. 1143, Rule No. 192.

([2039]) Appeal No. 23147 of 85 Q issued in the session of December 26, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 945, Rule No. 118, Appeal No. 2470 of 85 Q issued in the session of March 9, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 302, Rule No. 38.

([2040] Article No. 366 bis of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2041]) Appeal No. 44270 of 85 Q issued in the session of October 22, 2016 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 67, page No. 735, rule No. 94, Appeal No. 34946 of 84 Q issued in the session of May 8, 2016 and published in the Technical

State Security Courts (Emergency)

State Security Courts are exceptional courts whose jurisdiction is limited to two types of crimes:

The first type: crimes that occur in violation of the provisions of the orders issued by the President of the Republic or his representative.[2042]

The second type: These are crimes of public law that the President of the Republic, or his representative, refers to the State Security Courts.[2043]

Partial State Security Departments are responsible for crimes punishable by imprisonment, a fine, or both.

Office's letter No. 67, page No. 495, rule No. 57, Appeal No. 2470 of 85 Q issued in the session of March 9, 2016 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 67, page No. 302, rule No. 38, Appeal No. 11182 of 84 Q issued in the session of December 22, 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 994, rule No. 134, Appeal No. 14845 of 70 Q issued in the session of September 26, 2000 and published in the Office's letter Technical No. 51, Page No. 558, Rule No. 109.

([2042]) Article 7 of the Emergency Law: Appeal No. 6597 of Judicial Year 81, issued on January 26, 2012, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 63, Page No. 142, Rule No. 18; Appeal No. 11578 of Judicial Year 67, issued on January 10, 2007, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 58, Page No. 23, Rule No. 5; Appeal No. 15230 of Judicial Year 67, issued on November 2, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1898 of Judicial Year 67, issued on June 1, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 30759, 30760, 30761, and 30763 of Judicial Year 67, all issued on October 20, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 30776 of Judicial Year 67, issued on July 21, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 28765, 28766, and 28767 of Judicial Year 67, all issued on May 19, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 30784 of Judicial Year 67, issued on July 26, 2005, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 56, Page No. 428, Rule No. 63; Appeal Nos. 1142 and 1141 of Judicial Year 68, issued on May 24, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1139 and 1140 of Judicial Year 68, issued on May 10, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1135, 1136, 1137, and 1138 of Judicial Year 68, issued on March 8, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1128, 1132, 1133, and 1134 of Judicial Year 68, issued on February 23, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1125, 1123, 1372, 1124, 1126, and 1127 of Judicial Year 68, issued on February 9, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1120, 1121, and 1122 of Judicial Year 68, issued on January 26, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1116 and 1118 of Judicial Year 68, issued on January 12, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 934 and 20819 of Judicial Year 64, issued on January 12, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1117 of Judicial Year 68, issued on January 12, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 38328 of Judicial Year 73, issued on April 1, 2004, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 55, Page No. 287, Rule No. 42; Appeal No. 1376 of Judicial Year 68, issued on October 27, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 41 of Judicial Year 60, issued on February 19, 1991, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, Page No. 362, Rule No. 49; Appeal No. 38 of Judicial Year 60, issued on January 13, 1991, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, Page No. 59, Rule No. 11; Appeal No. 29288 of Judicial Year 59, issued on October 11, 1990, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, Page No. 903, Rule No. 158; Appeal No. 28440 of Judicial Year 59, issued on May 17, 1990, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, Page No. 738, Rule No. 129; Appeal No. 2555 of Judicial Year 59, issued on October 4, 1989, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, Page No. 733, Rule No. 123; Appeal No. 702 of Judicial Year 58, issued on May 12, 1988, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, Page No. 712, Rule No. 106; Appeal No. 5919 of Judicial Year 56, issued on March 16, 1987, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, Page No. 447, Rule No. 69; Appeal No. 3844 of Judicial Year 56, issued on November 23, 1986, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, Page No. 960, Rule No. 181; Appeal No. 3274 of Judicial Year 56, issued on October 12, 1986, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, Page No. 740, Rule No. 141; Appeal No. 7042 of Judicial Year 55, issued on March 6, 1986, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, Page No. 349, Rule No. 72; Appeal No. 2267 of Judicial Year 55, issued on December 10, 1985, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, Page No. 1088, Rule No. 200; Appeal No. 1493 of Judicial Year 54, issued on November 21, 1984, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, Page No. 795, Rule No. 179; Appeal No. 4423 of Judicial Year 51, issued on February 8, 1982, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, Page No. 165, Rule No. 33; Appeal No. 2734 of Judicial Year 51, issued on January 27, 1982, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, Page No. 103, Rule No. 19; Appeal No. 1470 of Judicial Year 51, issued on November 24, 1981, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, Page No. 969, Rule No. 169; Appeal No. 1151 of Judicial Year 49, issued on February 27, 1980, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, Page No. 290, Rule No. 56; Appeal No. 216 of Judicial Year 46, issued on May 24, 1976, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page No. 538, Rule No. 119; Appeal No. 1920 of Judicial Year 45, issued on April 12, 1976, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page No. 422, Rule No. 91; and Appeal No. 39 of Judicial Year 46, issued on April 11, 1976, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page No. 409, Rule No. 89.

([2043] Article No. 9 of the State of Emergency Law.

The Supreme State Security Departments are competent to deal with crimes punishable by criminal punishment, as well as crimes designated by the President of the Republic or his representative, regardless of the penalty prescribed for them.[2044]

The jurisdiction granted to the State Security Courts (Emergency Courts) in both types does not negate the original jurisdiction granted to the ordinary courts, because the legislator did not deprive the courts with general jurisdiction of any of their original jurisdiction, and the State of Emergency Law did not include a text specifying that the State Security Courts (Emergency Courts) shall be given exclusive jurisdiction to adjudicate - alone and without others - any type of crime. This is because if the legislator had intended to assign the State Security Courts (Emergency Courts) to adjudicate alone and without others in any type of crime, he would have explicitly disclosed this, similar to his approach in similar cases. The implication of this is that if a lawsuit is brought regarding a crime for which the State of Emergency Law has granted jurisdiction to the State Security Courts before the ordinary courts, they shall have jurisdiction over it, and no obstacle from the law shall prevent the ordinary courts from having jurisdiction to adjudicate this crime, and it shall be shared between the ordinary courts and the State Security Courts formed per the Emergency Law, and neither of them shall be prevented from considering the other unless the force of res judicata prevents that.[2045]

([2044] Article No. 7 of the State of Emergency Law.

([2045]) Refer to: Supreme Constitutional Court ruling (Conflict), Case No. 4 of Judicial Year 13, issued on May 16, 1992, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, Page No. 467, Rule No. 14; Appeal No. 6597 of Judicial Year 81, issued on January 26, 2012, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 63, Page No. 142, Rule No. 18; Appeal No. 11578 of Judicial Year 67, issued on January 10, 2007, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 58, Page No. 23, Rule No. 5; Appeal No. 15230 of Judicial Year 67, issued on November 2, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1898 of Judicial Year 67, issued on June 1, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 30759, 30760, 30761, and 30763 of Judicial Year 67, all issued on October 20, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 30776 of Judicial Year 67, issued on July 21, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 28765, 28766, and 28767 of Judicial Year 67, all issued on May 19, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 30784 of Judicial Year 67, issued on July 26, 2005, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 56, Page No. 428, Rule No. 63; Appeal Nos. 1142 and 1141 of Judicial Year 68, issued on May 24, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1139 and 1140 of Judicial Year 68, issued on May 10, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1135, 1136, 1137, and 1138 of Judicial Year 68, issued on March 8, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1128, 1132, 1133, and 1134 of Judicial Year 68, issued on February 23, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1125, 1123, 1372, 1124, 1126, and 1127 of Judicial Year 68, issued on February 9, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1120, 1121, and 1122 of Judicial Year 68, issued on January 26, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 1116 and 1118 of Judicial Year 68, issued on January 12, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal Nos. 934 and 20819 of Judicial Year 64, issued on January 12, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1117 of Judicial Year 68, issued on January 12, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 38328 of Judicial Year 73, issued on April 1, 2004, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 55, Page No. 287, Rule No. 42; Appeal No. 1376 of Judicial Year 68, issued on October 27, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 41 of Judicial Year 60, issued on February 19, 1991, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, Page No. 362, Rule No. 49; Appeal No. 38 of Judicial Year 60, issued on January 13, 1991, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, Page No. 59, Rule No. 11; Appeal No. 29288 of Judicial Year 59, issued on October 11, 1990, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, Page No. 903, Rule No. 158; Appeal No. 28440 of Judicial Year 59, issued on May 17, 1990, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, Page No. 738, Rule No. 129; Appeal No. 2555 of Judicial Year 59, issued on October 4, 1989, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, Page No. 733, Rule No. 123; Appeal No. 702 of Judicial Year 58, issued on May 12, 1988, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, Page No. 712, Rule No. 106; Appeal No. 5919 of Judicial Year 56, issued on March 16, 1987, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, Page No. 447, Rule No. 69; Appeal No. 3844 of Judicial Year 56, issued on November 23, 1986, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, Page No. 960, Rule No. 181; Appeal No. 3274 of Judicial Year 56, issued on October 12, 1986, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, Page No. 740, Rule No. 141; Appeal No. 7042 of Judicial Year 55, issued on March 6, 1986, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, Page No. 349, Rule No. 72; Appeal No. 2267 of Judicial Year 55, issued on December 10, 1985, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, Page No. 1088, Rule No. 200; Appeal No. 1493 of Judicial Year 54, issued on November 21, 1984, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, Page No. 795, Rule No. 179; Appeal No. 4423 of Judicial Year 51, issued on February 8, 1982, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, Page No. 165, Rule No.

In related crimes, the ordinary courts have jurisdiction over the lesser crime that falls within the jurisdiction of the Supreme State Security Courts (Emergency) if the ordinary courts have jurisdiction over the more serious crime associated with it, in application of the general rules stipulated in Article 32 of the Penal Code. This means that if the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts to consider the more serious crime is proven, they will have jurisdiction over the lesser crime associated with it, which the legislator has granted jurisdiction over to the Emergency State Security Courts, i.e. the ordinary courts have jurisdiction over both crimes .[2046] .

Economic Courts

The primary circuits of the economic courts are competent to consider misdemeanor cases stipulated in the following laws, and their appeal shall be before the appellate circuits of the economic courts, provided that the deadlines, procedures, and provisions of immediate enforcement stipulated in the Criminal Procedures Law shall apply to appeals against judgments issued by the primary circuits of the economic courts in misdemeanor cases.

The appellate circuits of the economic courts are competent to initially consider criminal cases in the following laws. The economic courts, with their primary and appellate circuits, are exclusively competent, in type and location, to consider criminal cases arising from crimes stipulated in the following laws:

The Penal Code regarding crimes of counterfeit coins and forgeries;

Insurance Supervision and Control Law in Egypt;

The law of joint stock companies, limited partnerships, limited liability companies and one-person companies;

Capital Market Law;

Law regulating the activities of financial leasing and factoring;

Central Depository and Registration Law for Securities;

33; Appeal No. 2734 of Judicial Year 51, issued on January 27, 1982, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, Page No. 103, Rule No. 19; Appeal No. 1470 of Judicial Year 51, issued on November 24, 1981, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, Page No. 969, Rule No. 169; Appeal No. 1151 of Judicial Year 49, issued on February 27, 1980, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, Page No. 290, Rule No. 56; Appeal No. 216 of Judicial Year 46, issued on May 24, 1976, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page No. 538, Rule No. 119; Appeal No. 1920 of Judicial Year 45, issued on April 12, 1976, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page No. 422, Rule No. 91; and Appeal No. 39 of Judicial Year 46, issued on April 11, 1976, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page No. 409, Rule No. 89.

([2046]) Appeal No. 6597 of 81 Q issued in the session of January 26, 2012 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 142, rule No. 18, Appeal No. 28440 of 59 Q issued in the session of May 17, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 738, rule No. 129, Appeal No. 2555 of 59 Q issued in the session of October 4, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 733, rule No. 123, Appeal No. 1465 of 57 Q issued in the session of November 18, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 998, rule No. 181, Appeal No. 5919 of 56 Q issued in the session of March 16, 1989 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 447, Rule No. 69, Appeal No. 3844 for the year 56 Q issued in the session of November 23, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 960, Rule No. 181, Appeal No. 3839 for the year 56 Q issued in the session of November 20, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 916, Rule No. 175, Appeal No. 3274 for the year 56 Q issued in the session of October 12, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 740, Rule No. 141, Article 32 of Law No. 58 of 1937 regarding the issuance of the Penal Code, Appeal No. 7042 for the year 55 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1986 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 349, rule No. 72, appeal No. 5569 of year 55 Q issued in the session of February 26, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 316, rule No. 65, appeal No. 2267 of year 55 Q issued in the session of December 10, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 1088, rule No. 200, appeal No. 1493 of year 54 Q issued in the session of November 21, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 795, rule No. 179.

Real Estate Finance Law;

Intellectual Property Rights Protection Law;

Central Bank, Banking and Monetary System Law;

Law of companies operating in the field of receiving funds for investment;

Law regulating restructuring, protective settlement and bankruptcy;

Law on the Protection of the National Economy from the Effects of Harmful Practices in International Trade;

Law on the Protection of Competition and the Prevention of Monopolistic Practices;

Consumer Protection Law;

Telecommunications Regulatory Law;

Law regulating electronic signatures and establishing the Information Technology Industry Development Agency;

Anti-Money Laundering Law;

Law regulating movable guarantees;

Law regulating microfinance activity;

Investment Law;

Anti - Information Technology Crimes Law[2047] .

Second: Territorial jurisdiction

Jurisdiction is determined by the place where the crime occurred, or where the accused resides, or where he is arrested. It is clear from this that the legislator did not limit the territorial jurisdiction of the crime to one court, but rather included three courts in it:

The court in whose territorial jurisdiction the crime was committed;

The court in whose jurisdiction the accused resides;

The court in whose jurisdiction the accused is arrested.

These places are equal in law and there is no distinction between them. Any of the aforementioned courts to which the suit is brought has jurisdiction over it. Therefore, the criterion for distinction between them is temporal precedence. The court to which the suit is brought first has jurisdiction, and this makes the investigation into the jurisdiction of the other two courts irrelevant. The result of this is that the claimant is the one who determines the competent court, as he is the one who chooses the court to which he brings the suit .[2048] .

([2047] Articles Nos. 4 and 5 of the Law on the Establishment of Economic Courts.

([2048]) Article No. 217 of the Criminal Procedure Code, see: Appeal No. 774 of 81 Q issued in the session of March 21, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6329 of 79 Q issued in the session of March 24, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 69368 of 74 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6123 of 78 Q issued in the session of March 10, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21602 of 84 Q issued in the session of March 22, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 319, Rule No. 45, Appeal No. 11099 of 79 Q issued in the session of November 25, 2010 and published in Technical Office Book No. 61, page No. 656, Rule No. 85, Appeal No. 52083 of 72 Q issued in the session of October 18, 2003 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 993, rule No. 134, Appeal No. 30075 of 70 Q issued in the session of March 18, 2003 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 429, rule No. 47, Appeal No. 50161 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 12, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 1171, rule No. 168, Appeal No. 5207 of 62 Q issued in the session of February 15, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 267, rule No. 40, Appeal No. 22320 of 60 Q issued in the session of September

It is clear from this that the legislator did not limit the territorial jurisdiction of the crime to one court, but rather included three courts in it:

The court in whose territorial jurisdiction the crime was committed;

The court in whose jurisdiction the accused resides;

The court in whose jurisdiction the accused is arrested.

The point of reference in spatial jurisdiction is the reality of the situation, even if its appearance is delayed until the time of the trial.[2049]

The place where the crime was committed is the place where its material element or part of this element is realized, which is based on three elements: the act, the result, and the causal relationship between them. The crime is considered to have been committed in the place where the material act occurred, in the place where the result occurred, and in every place where the direct effects of the act were realized, which consist of the causal links that link the act and the result .[2050] .

There is no difficulty if all the elements of the material element are fulfilled within the jurisdiction of one court, since that court has jurisdiction. However, if the elements of this element are divided between the jurisdictions of several courts, as if the act was committed within the jurisdiction of one court and the result was achieved within the jurisdiction of another court, then both courts have jurisdiction over the crime. Also, if some of the links of causation are fulfilled within the jurisdiction of a third court, then this court is also competent. If the crime consists of a set of acts and each act is committed within the jurisdiction of a specific court, or if the single act

---

15, 2003 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 43, page No. 714, rule No. 108, appeal No. 60643 for the year 59 Q issued in the session of January 21, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, page No. 140, rule No. 16, appeal No. 12068 for the year 59 Q issued in the session of May 3, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 681, rule No. 117, appeal No. 3786 for the year 59 Q issued in the session of November 22, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1031, rule No. 166, appeal No. 4053 for the year 56 Q issued in the session of March 30, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 510 Rule No. 83, Appeal No. 3505 of 56 Q issued in the session of February 26, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 334, Rule No. 50, Appeal No. 6208 of 54 Q issued in the session of April 10, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 474, Rule No. 96, Appeal No. 564 of 53 Q issued in the session of June 13, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page No. 759, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 6523 of 52 Q issued in the session of March 23, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page No. 420, Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 1241 of 50 Q issued in the session of November 17, 1983 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 921, rule No. 158, appeal No. 1525 for year 50 Q issued in the session of November 17, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 1012, rule No. 196, appeal No. 625 for year 49 Q issued in the session of November 18, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page No. 805, rule No. 172, appeal No. 248 for year 44 Q issued in the session of March 10, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 25, page No. 242, rule No. 55, appeal No. 630 for year 41 Q issued in the session of February 14, 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 142, rule No. 37, Appeal No. 759 of 40 Q issued in the session of June 29, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 935, Rule No. 220, Appeal No. 533 of 40 Q issued in the session of May 11, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 707, Rule No. 167, Appeal No. 1947 of 39 Q issued in the session of April 6, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 532, Rule No. 128, Appeal No. 781 of 39 Q issued in the session of October 6, 1969 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 1008, Rule No. 196, Appeal No. 398 of 36 Q issued in the session of May 9, 1966 And published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 17, page No. 578, rule No. 103.

([2049] Appeal No. 52083 of 72 Q issued in the session of October 18, 2003 and published in Technical Office Book No. 54, Page No. 993, Rule No. 134.

([2050]) Appeal No. 23201 of 63 Q issued in the session of October 3, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 1055, rule No. 156, Appeal No. 49048 of 59 Q issued in the session of June 7, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 726, rule No. 110, Appeal No. 109 of 57 Q issued in the session of April 1, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 530, rule No. 88.

that it is committed was committed within the jurisdictions of several courts, then all of these courts have jurisdiction to consider the case.[2051]

However, even if the jurisdiction of the criminal court to consider the case from the point of view of the place where the crime occurred is related to public order, the plea of its absence before the Court of Cassation is conditional on it being based on facts proven by the contested ruling and does not require an objective investigation.[2052]

In the event of an attempt, the crime is considered to have occurred in every place where an act of beginning execution has occurred.

In ongoing crimes, the crime scene is considered to be any place where the continuity occurs. The ongoing crime is considered to have been committed in all places where the crime has spread.

In successive crimes, the place of the crime is considered to be any place where one of the acts included in it occurs. The assumption here is that the crime is committed by a number of acts, and each act individually constitutes a crime in itself. If the accused were satisfied with it, he would be punished for it. Therefore, each act in itself has an inherent criminal character. Based on that, the crime is considered to have been committed in any place where one of these acts was committed, and the courts to which these places belong are competent to deal with it.

If the crime is a simple negative crime, i.e. it consists of mere abstention, then it is considered to have been committed in the place where the obligation imposed by law must be implemented and the positive act required by law must be performed to protect an interest it protects, since in this place this interest was wasted, and therefore it is the responsibility of the court to which this place belongs. However, if it is a negative crime with a result, i.e. it consists of abstention followed by a criminal result, then it is the responsibility of the court of the place where the positive act should have been performed or the court of the place where this criminal result was achieved.[2053]

The legislator also stipulated that the court in whose jurisdiction the accused resides shall also have jurisdiction to consider his crime. The legislator stipulated that the court of the place of residence shall have jurisdiction, not the court of domicile. There is a difference in the legal meaning of the two expressions. The place of residence means the place where the accused resides, while domicile means the place where the accused intended to reside regularly and stably, and he may not reside in it. Usually, the two places are the same. If they differ, the place of residence shall be the criterion, not the domicile.

If the accused has multiple places of residence, all the courts to which these places are subject shall have jurisdiction over the crime. If the accused changes his place of residence during the period between committing the crime and the initiation of criminal proceedings against him, then his last place of residence shall be taken into account.[2054]

([2051] The Court of Cassation ruled: [It is established that if the acts of theft attributed to the accused occurred in the jurisdiction of more than one court, then jurisdiction in this case is vested in each court in which part of the punishable acts of theft occurred], Appeal No. 225 of Year 36 Q issued in the session of June 20, 1966 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 17, page No. 827, Rule No. 156.

([2052] Appeal No. 1947 of year 39 Q issued in the session of April 6, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 532, rule No. 128.

([2053]) Article No. 218 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and see: Appeal No. 33 of Year 43 Q issued in the session of March 11, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 310, Rule No. 67, Appeal No. 1452 of Year 36 Q issued in the session of February 27, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 270, Rule No. 52.

([2054] In this regard, the Court of Cassation ruled that: [Jurisdiction in criminal matters is determined either by the place where the crime occurred or by the place where the accused resides. If a public lawsuit is brought for a crime that occurred in a place

The court of the place where the accused is arrested has jurisdiction to hear the case. This court has jurisdiction if the place where the crime was committed is not specified and the accused's place of residence is unknown.

If a crime that is subject to the provisions of Egyptian law occurs abroad and the perpetrator has no place of residence in Egypt and has not been arrested there, a felony case will be brought against him before the Cairo Criminal Court and a misdemeanor case will be brought before the Abdeen Partial Court. The assumption here is that the crime was committed outside Egyptian territory, and therefore the Egyptian court with jurisdiction over it cannot be determined based on the place where the crime was committed. In addition to that, the accused has no place of residence in Egypt, or his place of residence is unknown, and he has not been arrested in Egypt.[2055]

An exception to this is if the crime was committed on board a ship or aircraft in a situation subject to Egyptian law if the ship had docked or the aircraft had landed after the crime in an Egyptian port or airport, as the crime is considered to have occurred in the place of docking or landing, and therefore the court of that place has jurisdiction over it in the application of the general rules. However, this text applies if the ship docked or the aircraft landed after the crime in a foreign port or airport.

Third: Personal jurisdiction

The principle is that all persons who have committed a crime of a certain type are subject to the same judiciary, so there is no discrimination between people according to their nationalities or social status in terms of subjection to a certain judiciary. This principle is an inevitable result of the principle of equality between people before the law, and the principle thus decides the elimination of all judicial privileges, and decides to deny the defense of lack of jurisdiction due to the accused's status, but some considerations dictated to the legislator to take into account the accused's status in determining the judiciary competent to try him, and those cases are: children, military personnel, and ministers.

Special criminal courts are courts that specialize in trying types of criminals, each type of which is distinguished by certain criminal characteristics, in terms of the factors of their criminality and the requirements of appropriate punitive treatment for them, which necessarily requires distinguishing their trial procedures with special rules that aim to achieve compatibility between the formation of the court and the trial procedures on the one hand, and between doing justice to the factors of this criminality among categories of criminals with certain characteristics.

1- Child Court

The Juvenile Court alone has jurisdiction to consider the case of a child accused of a crime or exposed to delinquency, while the Criminal Court or the Supreme State Security Court, as the case may be, has jurisdiction to consider criminal cases in which a child over the age of fifteen years at the time of committing the crime is accused, provided that a non-child contributed to the crime and it is necessary to file a criminal case against him along with the child. In this case, the court must, before issuing its ruling, examine the circumstances of the child from all aspects, and it may seek the assistance of any experts it deems appropriate in this regard.[2056]

---

within the jurisdiction of a certain court to another court within whose jurisdiction the place where the accused against whom the lawsuit is filed resides resides, the jurisdiction of this court shall not be affected by the fact that this accused is an accomplice in the crime to a principal perpetrator who cannot legally be tried before it as long as the lawsuit was brought only against him] Appeal No. 657 of year 9 Q issued in the session of March 20, 1939 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules No. 4, page No. 496, rule No. 362.

([2055] Article No. 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2056] Article No. 122 of the Child Law.

A child is defined as someone who has not yet reached the age of eighteen years at the time of committing the crime or when he is in a situation of exposure to danger, and the age is proven by a birth certificate, national ID card, or any other official document.

If the official document does not exist, the age shall be estimated by one of the bodies whose determination shall be issued by a decision issued by the Minister of Justice in agreement with the Minister of Health.[2057]

Since the criterion for determining the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court is the age of the child at the time he committed his crime or at the time he was exposed to delinquency, and not his age at the time he was brought to trial, it follows that the accused must be tried before the Juvenile Court even if he was over eighteen years old at the time of his trial, if he committed his crime while under this age.

Before ruling on the case, the court must discuss with the examiners the reports submitted by the specialists what is included in them, and it may order additional examinations. This is an essential procedure intended by the legislator for the benefit of the accused child, as it seeks to inform the court of the subject matter of the social and environmental circumstances and factors that led the child to commit the crime or led him to deviance and to identify the means of reforming him, so that it is aware of those factors and their impact on determining the punishment, and in choosing the appropriate criminal measure for the child with the aim of reforming him, and that failure to listen to the social observer constitutes a failure to carry out this essential procedure that results in nullity .[2058] .

The court must also determine the child's age accurately and must refer in its ruling to the document or official paper on which it relied in determining his age, otherwise its ruling will be flawed. The principle is that estimating the age is a matter related to the subject of the lawsuit, and the Court of Cassation may not address it, unless the subject court has addressed the issue of age through research and estimation and allowed the accused and the Public Prosecution to express their observations regarding it.[2059]

The ID card is considered evidence of the accuracy of the data contained therein and is considered an official document that is relied upon to estimate the child's age.[2060]

The jurisdiction of the Child Court is determined by location; by the place where the crime occurred or where one of the cases of exposure to delinquency occurred, or by the place where the child was arrested or where he or his guardian, trustee or mother resides, as the case may be. This means that the legislator has set three controls for the jurisdiction of the Child Court locally, those controls are: the place where the crime was committed or where the case of exposure to delinquency occurred; the place where the child was arrested; and the place where he or his guardian resides. This text has applied the general rules of local jurisdiction stipulated

---

([2057] Articles 2 and 95 of the Child Law.

([2058]) Article No. 127 of the Child Law, and see: Appeal No. 25243 of the 67th year of the Q issued in the session of May 18, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 731, Rule No. 95.

([2059]) Appeal No. 15321 of 85 Q issued in the session of February 3, 2016 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 67, page No. 153, rule No. 21, Appeal No. 16992 of 85 Q issued in the session of December 9, 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66, page No. 833, rule No. 124, Appeal No. 22781 of 84 Q issued in the session of May 9, 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66, page No. 447, rule No. 63, Appeal No. 47766 of 75 Q issued in the session of November 22, 2012 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 63, page No. 763, rule No. 136, Appeal No. 38004 of 75 Q issued in the session of October 2, 2005 and published in the Office's letter Technical No. 56, Page No. 452, Rule No. 67.

([2060]) Article No. 50 of Law No. 143 of 1994 regarding civil status, and see: Appeal No. 5322 of 71 Q issued in the session of October 28, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 1018, Rule No. 170.

in Article 217 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Child Court may, when necessary, be held in one of the social care institutions for children in which the child is placed.[2061]

2- Military courts

We explained previously that military courts have four levels, and their jurisdiction is determined as follows:

The Supreme Court of Military Appeals, this court alone has jurisdiction to consider appeals submitted by the military prosecution or by the convicted person against the final judgments issued by all military courts in crimes of general law against military personnel or civilians. The rules and procedures for appeals in cassation in criminal cases stipulated in Law No. 57 of 1959 regarding cases and procedures for appeals before the Court of Cassation shall apply to these appeals in a manner that does not conflict with the provisions of the Military Judiciary Law, and its judgments shall be final without the need for any procedure.

This court alone has jurisdiction to consider requests for reconsideration submitted against military court rulings issued in general law crimes, per the rules and procedures for requests for reconsideration stipulated in the Code of Criminal Procedure. [2062]

Military Criminal Court, which is competent to hear criminal cases.[2063]

The Military Court of Misdemeanours Appeals, which has jurisdiction to consider appeals submitted by the military prosecution or by those convicted against final rulings issued by the Military Court of Misdemeanours .[2064]

Military Court for Misdemeanors, which is competent to hear misdemeanor and contravention cases.[2065]

The jurisdiction of the military judiciary is determined by three criteria: a personal criterion, a spatial criterion, and an objective criterion, as stated in the Military Judiciary Law, as follows:

A- Personal standard

Its content is that the provisions of the Military Judiciary Law apply to persons subject to it, whether they were committed by them or against them, and whether they were adults or minors, provided that the crime was committed while they were performing their job duties, and that they were enjoying military status at the time of committing the crime. These persons are :[2066] .

Armed Forces officers;

Non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the armed forces;

Students of schools, vocational training centers, institutes and military colleges;

Prisoners of war;

Any military forces formed by order of the President of the Republic to perform a public, special or temporary service;

Military personnel of the allied forces or those attached to them if their residence in Egypt is in the absence of treaties stipulating otherwise;

([2061] Article No. 123 of the Child Law.
([2062] Articles No. 43 and 43 bis of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2063] Article No. 44 of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2064] Article No. 45 of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2065] Article No. 46 of the Military Judiciary Law.
([2066] Article No. 7 of the Military Judiciary Law.

Military attachés during field service, who are every civilian working in the Ministry of Defense or in the service of the armed forces in any way;

General Intelligence personnel;

Civilian employees of the Ministry of Defense or one of its agencies, companies or factories.[2067]

b- Spatial criterion

According to this standard, the military judiciary has jurisdiction if the crime occurred in the places specified by law, regardless of the status of the perpetrator, whether military or civilian. These places are:

Crimes that occur in camps, barracks, institutions, factories, ships, aircraft, vehicles, places or shops occupied by military personnel for the benefit of the armed forces, wherever they are located;

Crimes that occur in areas adjacent to the borders of the Republic. A decision shall be issued by the President of the Republic to determine these areas and the rules regulating them.[2068]

C- Qualitative or objective criterion

The jurisdiction of the military judiciary is determined according to this standard according to the subject of the crimes committed. The military judiciary has jurisdiction to consider them, whether the perpetrator is a military person or a civilian, as stated in the explanatory memorandum to the Military Judiciary Law. These crimes are:

Crimes committed in camps, barracks, institutions, factories, ships, aircraft, vehicles, places or shops occupied by military personnel for the benefit of the armed forces, wherever they are located;

Crimes against the equipment, missions, weapons, ammunition, documents, secrets of the armed forces and all their belongings;

Crimes that occur in areas adjacent to the borders of the Republic. A decision by the President of the Republic shall be issued to determine these areas and the rules regulating them.

Crimes that harm the security of the government from the outside, and felonies and misdemeanors that harm the government from the inside, crimes of bribery, crimes of embezzlement of public funds, aggression against them and treachery, crimes of employees exceeding the limits of their duties, as well as the crime of using force, violence or threats against a public employee or a person charged with a public service to force him unjustly to perform a job of his job or to refrain from doing so if it is committed by one of the workers in the military factories or committed against him.

As well as all crimes committed against the facilities, machines, equipment, or supplies of military factories, or against their funds, or the raw materials they use, or their documents, secrets, or anything else related to them.[2069]

As well as the crimes stipulated in Law No. 62 of 1975 regarding illicit gains committed by officers of the armed forces, even if the investigation into them does not begin until after their retirement.[2070]

([2067] Articles 4 and 8 of the Military Judiciary Law.

([2068] Article No. 5 of the Military Judiciary Law.

([2069] Article No. 5 of the Military Judiciary Law, amended by Law No. 5 of 1968, Law No. 82 of 1968, and Law No. 138 of 2010.

([2070] Article No. 8 bis (a) of the Military Judiciary Law, added by Law No. 45 of 2011.

Accordingly, a civilian person is liable to appear before the military judiciary for investigation and trial, in one of the following cases, for example:

If a dispute occurs between them and a person of military status (officers, non-commissioned officers or individuals) and this results in a crime committed by or against the soldier, whenever it occurs due to his performance of his duties.

If he is a worker in the armed forces or one of its agencies, companies or factories, during field service.

If he commits a crime related to recruitment (evasion, failure to serve, ...) etc).

If he commits a crime that constitutes a direct assault on the armed forces or on their members while performing their duties, or on their facilities, factories, missions, vehicles, equipment, weapons, papers, documents, secrets, or on the borders of the state subject to its authority.

If he commits a crime against public and vital facilities of the state, including electricity stations and networks, towers, gas lines, oil fields, railway lines, road networks, bridges, and other facilities, installations, public property, and what falls under their jurisdiction.

If he is a student in one of the colleges, institutes, schools or training centers of the Armed Forces.

11-3-2 Within the framework of international conventions

The right to have a case heard before a competent court requires that the court have jurisdiction to hear the case before it.

What is meant by jurisdiction here is that the law grants it the authority to consider the intended lawsuit, i.e. that it has jurisdiction over the subject of the lawsuit and the person against whom it is filed, provided that the trial is conducted within the time limits stipulated in the law.[2071]

The question of whether a court has jurisdiction over a case must be decided by a judicial body, in accordance with the law.[2072]

The Inter-American Court ruled that the transfer of jurisdiction over civilians accused of treason from civilian to military courts constituted a violation of the right to a trial before a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law. She stressed that states should not establish courts that do not adhere to the established procedures in order to seize jurisdiction from ordinary courts.[2073]

Fair trial rights apply in all courts, including special, specialized or military courts. The jurisdiction of military courts should be limited to trying members of the armed forces for violations of military discipline; they should not try crimes over which civilian courts have jurisdiction, human rights violations or crimes under international law.

First: The right to a fair trial before all courts.

In many countries, special or exceptional courts have been established to try special cases or specific crimes, such as crimes against the state, terrorism-related crimes or drug crimes. The guarantees of a fair trial provided by the procedures followed in special courts are often less than those in ordinary courts.

([2071]) Zimbabwe Lawyers for Human Rights and Zimbabwean Press Association v. Republic of Zimbabwe (284)/2003), African Commission §172; Barreto Leiva v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court §67 (2009).

([2072]) Section A(4)(b)-(d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2073]) Castillo Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-American Court (1999) §§119 and 128-129; see Opinion 39/2005 of the Working Group on Enforced Disappearances (Cambodia), §§21-24 (2005) UN Doc. A/HRC/4/40/Add. 1.

Specialized courts are courts or judicial bodies formed to try persons with special legal status, such as juveniles or members of the armed forces; or to consider special categories of legal disputes, such as labor cases or those related to the law of the sea or personal status.

However, military courts should be used exclusively to try members of the armed forces for breaches of military discipline, and any human rights violations or crimes under international law should be excluded from such trials.[2074]

However, some states have used military courts to try civilians, including for crimes against the state and terrorism-related crimes, and to try military personnel accused of ordinary crimes, human rights violations, and crimes under international law.

While the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and regional human rights treaties do not explicitly prohibit the establishment of special or specialized courts, they do require all courts to be competent, independent and impartial.

In addition, the rights to a fair trial enshrined in international standards apply to criminal proceedings in all courts.[2075]

The standards that apply to proceedings in these courts may depend, to some extent, on whether a state of emergency has been declared or martial law is in effect.

Additional criteria apply to issues relating to children in this context.

Everyone has the right to be tried by ordinary courts using established legal procedures. Special courts that do not use legally approved procedures should not be established to assume the legal jurisdiction of ordinary courts.[2076]

The Human Rights Committee, the African Commission and the Inter-American Court have concluded that fair trial rights have been violated in criminal proceedings in special and military courts around the world, and that many of these violations have been committed in trials involving terrorism- or drug-related crimes.

In "masked judges' courts," judges remain anonymous, undermining the court's independence and impartiality. These courts often exclude the public. While it has consistently violated the rights of the defense and the principle of equality of opportunity for defense and prosecution by restricting or preventing the accused from contacting a lawyer of his choice during detention, and by preventing the accused and his lawyer from questioning or summoning witnesses or presenting additional evidence.[2077]

([2074] Amnesty International uses the term "crimes under international law" to refer to a category of crimes that includes genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes, torture, enforced disappearance and extrajudicial execution. These crimes are illegal under international law; they must be criminalized and investigated by States, and individuals suspected of having committed such crimes must be brought to trial before civil or international courts.

([2075]) Article 10 of the Universal Declaration, Article 14 of the International Covenant, Article 40 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Articles 7 and 26 of the African Charter, Article 8 of the American Convention, Principle 23(b) of the Basic Principles on Reparation, and Sections A(1), A(4)(a) and F(a) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §22; principles 1, 2, 3 and 15 of the draft principles governing the administration of justice through military tribunals, . UN Doc. E/CN4. /2006/58.

([2076]) Principle 5 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and sections A(4)(e) and L(a)-(c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

Decision 2005/30 of the Commission on Human Rights, §3; Castillo Petruzzi and Others v. Peru, Inter-American Court §129 (1999); Centre for Freedom of Speech v. Nigeria (206)/97), African Commission, 13th Annual Report (1999). §12- §14.

([2077]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §23.

Examining trials before such courts in Colombia and Peru, the Human Rights Committee concluded that these trials violated the right to a fair trial.[2078]

The Special Rapporteur on Human Rights and Counter-terrorism called on States to avoid resorting to special or specialized courts to adjudicate terrorism cases.[2079] .

Human rights bodies have raised concerns about the procedures adopted by such courts that are inconsistent with fair trial rights, including the right to be heard by an independent and impartial tribunal, the exclusion of evidence obtained under torture or other ill-treatment, and the right to appeal to a higher tribunal.[2080] .

Likewise, customary (also called traditional) courts must respect international standards. Concerns have been raised that criminal trials conducted by some traditional courts do not guarantee fair trial rights, including the right to counsel, the right to the services of an interpreter, and the prohibition of discrimination.[2081]

The Human Rights Committee has made it clear that, to be consistent with the provisions of the International Covenant:

The criminal jurisdiction of such courts should be limited to crimes committed by minors;

The procedures of these courts must be consistent with the guarantees of fair trial established in the International Covenant;

The judgments issued by it must be subject to ratification by the courts of the State in the light of such guarantees;

The accused must have the right to appeal the judgments issued by these courts in accordance with procedures that meet the requirements of the International Covenant.[2082]

Fair trial principles in Africa also require that such courts respect international fair trial standards, but allow for appeal to a higher traditional court, an administrative authority or a court under judicial authority.[2083]

Second: Special Courts

The authorities sometimes resort to establishing special courts to apply exceptional measures that often do not comply with fair trial standards.[2084]

However, special courts may not be created to deprive ordinary courts of their judicial jurisdiction.[2085]

([2078]) Human Rights Committee: Becerra Barney v. Colombia, UN Doc. 2/ §7 §(2006) CCPR/C/87/D/1298/2004 and 8, Guerra de la Asprilla v. Colombia, 2007/3/9-2/ §9 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/98/D/1623, Bolai Campos v. Peru, 1994/8/ §8 (1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/61/D/577.

([2079]) Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, §45 (2008) UN Doc. A/63/223 (b).

([2080]) Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, §24 (2008) UN Doc. A/63/223, 27 and 32, Egypt, UN Doc §35-§32 (2009) A/HRC/13/37/Add. 2, Spain, /3/ UN Doc. A/HRC//10 §17- §16 (2008) Add. 2, Tunisia, 2010) UN Doc. A/HRC/16/51/Add. 2) §35-36; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee, France, UN Doc §23 (1997) CCPR/C/79/Add. 80: See also U.S. Commission, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights (2002), section 3(d)(1)(B) §230.

([2081]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Botswana, UN Doc §21 (2008) CCPR/C/BWA/CO/1 and 12, Madagascar: / UN Doc. CCPR/C. §16 (2007) MDG/CO/3.

([2082]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §24.

([2083]) Section F of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2084]) See, for example, the concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Syria, §11 (2010) UN Doc. CAT/C/SYR/CO/1; Opinion 23/2008 of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (Rastanawi v. Syria), /30/UN Doc. A/HRC/13 . §17- §15 (2008) Add. 1.

([2085]) Principle 5 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and Sections A(4)(e) and L(c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

Castillo Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-American Court (1999). §129.

Crimes that fall within the jurisdiction of ordinary courts should not be tried. Such courts must be independent and impartial, and respect fair trial standards.[2086]

The right to equality before the courts means that similar cases must be heard according to similar procedures. If exceptional criminal procedures or courts specially established to hear a particular category of cases are used, it must be shown that there is a reasonable objective basis justifying this distinction.[2087]

The jurisdiction of special courts - like all courts - must be based on the provisions of the law .[2088] .

Analysis of the fairness of proceedings in an extraordinary court typically focuses on whether the court is: constituted by law; whether its jurisdiction ensures non-discrimination and equality; whether its judges are independent of the executive and other authorities; whether its judges are competent and impartial; and whether its proceedings are consistent with international standards for a fair trial, including the right to appeal.[2089]

The Human Rights Committee concluded that a trial before a special court in Libya - the People's Court - violated fair trial rights. Among other things, the trial was not public; the accused was not, at any time, given access to the case file and the charges against him; and the accused was not given any opportunity to be represented by counsel of his own choosing.[2090]

Although this court was replaced by the State Security Court in 2005, it was not clear that there was any difference between the new court and the People's Court that preceded it.[2091]

The African Commission found that a number of special courts had violated the right to be tried before an independent and impartial court. For example, it held that the special courts established under the Civil Disturbances Act in Nigeria were not impartial because their composition was subject to the discretion of the executive.[2092]

It also concluded that the transfer of criminal cases from ordinary courts in Mauritania to a section of a special court headed by a senior army officer, assisted by two officers of the armed forces, violated fair trial guarantees.[2093]

Examining trials of civilians before the National Security Court in Turkey on national security charges, the European Court found that there were legitimate grounds to doubt the independence and impartiality of the court. One of the three judges on each trial panel was a military officer working in the army's legal apparatus. Although military judges enjoyed many constitutional guarantees of independence and underwent the same training as civilian judges,

---

([2086]) Resolution 2005/30 of the Commission on Human Rights.

([2087]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment 32 §14, Kavanagh v. Ireland, 3/10-2/ §10 §(2001) UN Doc. CCPR/C/71/D/819/1998 and 12; see the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Ireland, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/IRL. §20 (2008) CO/3.

([2088]) Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 8 of the American Convention, Article 13 of the Arab Charter, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, and Article 26 of the American Declaration.

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Iraq, UN Doc. §15 (1997) CCPR/C/79/Add. 84.

([2089]) See Report of the United States Commission on Terrorism and Human Rights (2002), section 3(d)(1)(B) §230.

([2090]) Abu Sadra v. Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Human Rights Committee, . 8/ §7 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/100/D/1751/2008.

([2091]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, §22 (2007) UN Doc. CCPR/C/LBY/CO/4; see the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Syrian Arab Republic, / UN Doc. CCPR. §10 (2005) CO/84/SYR.

([2092]) PEN International, Constitutional Rights Project, Rights International on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr. and Civil Liberties Organization v. Nigeria (137/94, 139/94, 154/96, 161/97) (1998), African Commission, Annual Report 12 §86 (1998).

([2093]) Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania (54/91, 61/91, 98/93, 164/97 to 196/97 and 210/98), African Commission, Annual Report 13 §98-§100 (2000).

they were military personnel and therefore subject to military discipline and military evaluations, while their term of service in court remained temporary and subject to renewal.[2094]

Third: Specialized Courts

No specialized criminal courts shall be established to try persons on the grounds of their race, color, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. Such courts would violate the principle of equality before the courts and the prohibition of discrimination.[2095]

However, the establishment of specialized courts to try certain categories of persons may be permissible if justified by reasonable objective grounds on the ground.[2096]

For example, juvenile courts should be established to handle criminal proceedings against persons who were under 18 at the time of their alleged offence, and specialized criminal courts with specially trained prosecutors and judges may be established to try those accused of gender-based violence, as an interim measure to address barriers to redress for victims of such violence.[2097]

Military courts should only consider cases involving members of the armed forces who commit violations of military discipline.

Such courts must be established under the provisions of the law, be competent, independent and impartial, and ensure respect for fair trial rights.

Fourth: Military Courts

In many countries, authorities have established military courts to try members of the armed forces for violations of military discipline. But it is worrying that some states have expanded the jurisdiction of these courts to include civilians, or to try military personnel for “ordinary criminal offences”, or violations or crimes under international law.

Human rights law has set limits on the jurisdiction of military courts in relation to the specific purpose of such courts, consistent with the right to a fair trial by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal, and with the duty of States to ensure accountability and prevent impunity for human rights violations and crimes under international law.

The Inter-American Court ruled that: “When a military court assumes jurisdiction over a matter that should be heard by ordinary courts, the individual’s right to have his case heard by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal constituted in advance by law, and a fortiori his right to due process, is violated. ”[2098]

The African Commission concluded that the trial of journalists before military courts violated Article 7 of the African Charter and contravened the provisions of Principle 5 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary. In addition, the accused were denied access to counsel and the right to be represented by lawyers of their choice.[2099]

([2094]) Incal v. Turkey (22678)/93, European Court §65-§73 (1998); see Öcalan v. Turkey (46221)/99, Grand Chamber of the European Court (2005) §112-§118.

([2095]) Articles 2, 7 and 10 of the Universal Declaration, Articles 2, 14 and 26 of the International Covenant, Articles 2 and 3 of the African Charter, Article 1 of the American Convention, Articles 11 and 12 of the Arab Charter, and Article 14 of the European Convention.

([2096]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment 32 §14, Manzano et al. v. Colombia, 2007/5/6 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/98/D/1616.

([2097]) Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, UN Doc. §58 (2011). A/66/289 and 97.

([2098]) Inter-American Court: Castillo Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, (1999) §128, Radilla-Pacheco v. Mexico, §273 (2009); see Lacantuta v. Peru, §138-§143 (2006).

([2099]) Centre for Freedom of Speech v. Nigeria (206)/97), African Commission, Annual Report 13 §12-§14 (1999).

When individuals are tried before military courts, fair trial standards must be respected.[2100]

This includes measures taken against members of the armed forces who commit violations of military discipline that, given the nature of the offence or the seriousness of the potential penalty, constitute a "criminal" offence under international human rights law.[2101]

The analysis of whether a criminal proceeding by a military court is fair should include: whether the jurisdiction of the court is consistent with national law and international standards; whether the court is not subject to interference from higher military ranks or outside influence; whether the court has the judicial competence to administer justice properly; whether the judges are, and can be seen to be, competent, independent and impartial; and whether the accused has at least the minimum guarantees provided for by international fair trial standards.

1- The jurisdiction, independence and impartiality of military courts

In assessing the independence of a military court, questions should address whether the judges, who are often members of the armed forces, have received appropriate training and qualifications in law; whether their appointment procedures, conditions of service and guarantees of job security ensure their independence; whether, in the exercise of their duties as judges, they are independent of their superiors; and whether there is any hierarchical relationship between the prosecution and the members of the military court's judiciary.

Military courts, like ordinary courts, must be, and be seen to be, independent and impartial.

A number of human rights mechanisms have expressed concerns about the military commissions established to try persons detained by the United States at Guantanamo Bay. Their concerns included: the appointment of judges by the United States Department of Defense, and ultimately by the President; the power of the executive appointee to remove judges from their committee positions; and the monopoly of decision-making authority by the executive appointee over disputed jurisdiction over the judiciary.[2102]

Accordingly, in 2009, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions declared that the legal basis on which the trials of persons held at Guantanamo Bay were based constituted a flagrant violation of the right to a fair trial and that the execution of any person under such a trial would constitute a violation of international law.[2103]

The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, along with a number of UN experts, called on the United States to ensure that ordinary courts hear the cases of those it detains in Guantanamo Bay.[2104]

The African Commission found that the African Charter had been violated in cases in which civilians and military personnel, in Mauritania, Nigeria and Sudan, were convicted by military courts that lacked independence and impartiality. For example, the judicial body of a military ([2100]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §22; Civil Liberties Organization and Others v. Nigeria (218)/98), African Commission, Annual Report 14 §44 (2000-2001).

---

([2101]) Recommendation 4 CM/Rec (2010) of the Council of Europe on the human rights of members of the armed forces, Annex §28; European Court: Engel and Others v. The Netherlands (5102) - 5100/71 and 5354/72 and 5370/72), §82 (1976), Campbell and Veale v. the United Kingdom, (7189)/77 and 7878/77), §68 (1984).

([2102]) Joint report of the United Nations mechanisms on Guantanamo Bay detainees, 120/2006/(2006) UN Doc. E/CN. 4 §30 - §34.

([2103]) Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, United States of America, UN Doc. A/HRC/11/2/Add. 5 (2009) §41- §38.

([2104]) Annual Report of the High Commission for Human Rights for the year 2010. United States of America, UN Doc. A/HRC/11/2/Add. 4.

court that tried 26 civilians in Sudan was composed of active army officers who were on duty and subject to military orders.[2105]

In Nigeria, members of the armed forces and a civilian were tried for their alleged involvement in a military coup plot before a special military court. The court did not pass the independence test because its president was an active member of the country's ruling Transitional Council.[2106]

Human rights mechanisms have stated unequivocally that military courts should not be empowered to impose death sentences.

2- Trial of military personnel before military courts

Trials of members of the armed forces before military courts for violations of military discipline are not considered to be in violation of international human rights standards as long as these courts are independent and impartial, and as long as the alleged violations do not fall under the category of "ordinary crimes," human rights violations, or crimes under international law. If the offence is of a "criminal" nature under human rights law, fair trial rights must be respected.[2107]

The jurisdiction of military courts to hear criminal cases should be limited to trying military personnel in the army for violating military regulations.[2108]

The Human Rights Committee, the Committee against Torture and the Inter-American Court have all declared, in almost identical language, that the jurisdiction of military courts should be limited to trying members of the armed forces for criminal violations of military discipline, as determined by law.[2109]

A number of human rights organizations called for members of the armed forces accused of ordinary criminal offences to be tried before an ordinary (civilian) court, rather than before a military court.

The Human Rights Committee expressed concern about the lack of fair trial guarantees in military court proceedings in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and called on the authorities to abolish the jurisdiction of military courts over ordinary crimes.[2110]

The African Commission concluded that the trial of military and civilian personnel accused of a civilian crime (theft) before a military court constituted a violation of African regional standards and "good governance." [2111]

([2105]) African Commission: Legal Office of Ghazi Suleiman v. Sudan (98/222 and 229/99), Annual Report 16 §63-§67 (2003); see Amnesty International and Others v. Sudan (48/90, 50/91, 52/91 and 89/93), Annual Report 13 §67-§70 (1999).

([2106]) Civil Liberties Organization and Others v. Nigeria, (218)/98, African Commission, 14th Annual Report (2000) (2001) §24-§27 and §32-§34 and §43-§44.

([2107]) Dakar Declaration on the Right to a Fair Trial in Africa, §3; Wich Okondo Koso and Others v. Democratic Republic of the Congo (2003/281), African Commission, Annual Report 26 §84 (2008); Las Palmeras v. Colombia, Inter-American Court §51-52 (2001); Inter-American Commission, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights (2002), section 3(d)(1)(b) §232; European Court: Morris v. United Kingdom (38784)/97, §59 (2002), Engel and others v. Netherlands (5100)/71 - 5102/71 and 5354/72 and 5370/72), §82 (1976), Campbell and Veal v. United Kingdom (7189)/77 and 7878/77), §68 (1984).

([2108] See Section A of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

Principle 29 of the Updated Principles on Impunity.

([2109]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Chile, UN Doc §12 (2007) CCPR/C/CHL/CO/5; Uzbekistan: / UN Doc. CCPR/CO/71. §15 (2001) UZB

Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Guatemala, UN Doc. §14 (2006) CAT/C/GTM/CO/4

See, for example, Durand and Ugarte v. Peru, Inter-American Court §117 (2000); Wich Okunda Koso and Others v. Democratic Republic of the Congo (281)/2003), African Commission, Annual Report 26 (2008) §84-§88.

Resolution 1999/19 of the Commission on Human Rights (Equatorial Guinea), §8 (a).

([2110]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Democratic Republic of the Congo, §21 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/COD/CO/3.

([2111]) Wich Okunda Koso and Others v. Democratic Republic of the Congo (2003/281), African Commission, Annual Report 26 §85-§87 (2008).

The European Commission does not rule out the possibility of members of the armed forces being tried on criminal charges before military courts. However, the Council of Europe Guidelines on the Human Rights of Members of the Armed Forces, which largely summarise the jurisprudence of the European Court, provide that the guarantees of fair trial apply to all proceedings against military personnel who are criminals under the European Convention, regardless of their classification under national law. These guidelines stress the importance of: the independence of the court at every stage of the proceedings; a clear separation of prosecuting and decision-making powers; the right to a public trial; respect for the rights of the defense; and the right to appeal to an independent, impartial and competent higher tribunal.[2112]

3- Trials for human rights violations and crimes under international law before military courts.

There is growing acceptance of the idea that military courts should not have jurisdiction to try members of the military and security forces for human rights violations.[2113]

Or other crimes covered by international law. Since the judicial bodies of most military courts are composed of military personnel, respect for the right to a trial before an independent and impartial court remains, in fact and in appearance, under threat.

Similarly, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions has expressed concern about "the trial of members of the security forces before military courts, which allegedly allows them to enjoy impunity due to the misconception of the concept of comradeship in arms." He cited the names of countries such as Colombia, Indonesia and Peru as well-known examples of this.[2114] .

The Inter-American Court has made it clear that military courts cannot exercise jurisdiction over human rights cases involving crimes committed against civilians.[2115]

The Human Rights Committee and the Committee against Torture have called on States, including Lebanon, Brazil, Mexico and Colombia, to transfer jurisdiction from military courts to ordinary (civilian) courts for all cases involving human rights violations by military personnel, including members of the military police.[2116]

International standards prohibit the trial of members of the security forces or other public officials accused of participating in enforced disappearances before military or special courts.[2117]

The Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur on Torture have made it clear that individuals accused of torture should not be tried before military courts.[2118]

([2112]) Annex to Recommendation 4) Cm/Rec(2010) of the Council of Europe, §28-§34.

([2113]) Principle 29 of the Updated Principles on Impunity; see Principles 5, 8 and 9 of the Draft Principles Governing the Administration of Justice through Military Tribunals, UN Doc. 58/2006. E/CN. 4; Special Rapporteur on torture, 156/§39 (2001) UN Doc. A/56 (j); Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Peru, §16 (2006) UN Doc. CAT/C/PER/CO/4 (a); Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances: Ecuador, /40/. UN Doc. A/HRC/CN4 §101 (2006) Add. 2 (e).

([2114]) Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. §125 (1996) UN Doc. A/51/457.

([2115]) Radilla-Pacheco v. Mexico, Inter-American Court (2009) §274; see Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights: Colombia (2011) Chapter 4, §31, p. 349.

([2116]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Lebanon, UN Doc §14 (1997) CCPR/C/79/Add. 78, Brazil, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/BRA §9 (2005) CO/2, Mexico, 2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/MEX/CO/5) §11 and §18, Colombia, §14 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/COL/CO/6; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Mexico, / UN Doc. CAT/C §14 (2006) MEX/CO/4; see 2010 Annual Report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (Mexico), p. 28; OHCHR, UN Doc E/CN. 4/2001/167 (Colombia), pp. 361-366.

([2117]) Article 16(2) of the Declaration on Enforced Disappearance, and Article 9 of the American Convention on Enforced Disappearance.

Radilla-Pacheco v. Mexico, Inter-American Court (2009) §277 and §290-§314.

Amnesty International calls for perpetrators of human rights violations and crimes under international law to be tried before civilian - rather than military - courts, given the lack of independence of military courts and concerns about impunity for perpetrators.[2119]

4- Trials of civilians before military courts

In some countries, military courts have jurisdiction to try civilians accused of crimes against military property or against state security.

There is growing acceptance of the principle that military courts do not have jurisdiction to try civilians, given the nature of these courts and concerns about their independence and impartiality.

Fair trial principles in Africa prohibit the use of military courts to try civilians.[2120]

The Inter-American Court has declared that military jurisdiction should be limited to trying military personnel for crimes that are, by their nature, harmful to military order and that civilians should in no case be tried before military courts. The court also made clear that retired military personnel should be considered civilians who should be tried for their civilian crimes by civilian, not military, courts.[2121]

In addition, the draft principles governing the administration of justice through military courts affirmed the principle that military courts should not have jurisdiction to try civilians.[2122]

While the Human Rights Committee and the European Court have not yet ruled out a complete ban on trials of civilians before military courts, they have said that they should be exceptional and that courts should be independent, impartial and specialized, and should respect minimum guarantees of justice.[2123]

In addition, States that allow such trials must demonstrate that they are necessary and justified, that ordinary civilian courts are unable to conduct such trials, or that they are permissible before military courts under international humanitarian law. The European Court requires that justification be provided for the trial of any civilian before a military court in each individual case. It ruled that laws that restrict certain categories of crimes to military courts are not sufficient justification for such action .[2124] .

([2118]) Special Rapporteur on torture: 156/2001) UN Doc. A/56) §39 (j); Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Peru, UN Doc §16 (2006) CAT/C/PER/CO/4 (a).

([2119]) For example, Amnesty International: Democratic Republic of the Congo: A new strategy is needed in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Document No.: 2001/006/AFR 62, p. 21, Tunisia: One step forward, two steps back? One year after landmark elections in Tunisia, Document No.: 2012/010/MDE 30, p. 8, Amnesty International Statement to the 22nd Session of the UN Human Rights Council: Accountability needed for the Gaza/Israel conflict, Document No.: MDE 02/001/2013, p. 2.

([2120] Section C of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2121]) Inter-American Court: Palamara-Iribarne v. Chile (2005) §124, §139 and §269 (14); Sisti-Hurtado v. Peru, §151 (1999).

([2122]) Principle 5 of the Draft Principles Governing the Administration of Justice through Military Tribunals, UN Doc. 58/2006. E/CN. 4, Quoted by the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers in 41/UN Doc. A/HRC/11 §36 (2009) and in Ergin v. Turkey (No. 6), European Court §45 (2006).

([2123]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §22; Ergin v. Turkey (No. 6) (47533/99), European Court §45 (2006).

([2124]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §22; Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, §65 (2008) 4/UN Doc. A/HRC/7 66; Ergin v. Turkey (No. 6) (47533)/99), European Court (2006) §47; see Human Rights Committee: Kurbanova v. Tajikistan, UN Doc 6/ §7 (2003) CCPR/C/79/D/1096/2002, Madani v. Algeria, UN Doc 7/ §8 (2007) CCPR/C/89/D/1172/2003, Al-Abani v. Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 2007/8/ §7 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/99/D/1640.

However, in its concluding observations, the Human Rights Committee has called on the governments of several countries, including Slovakia, for example, to prohibit the trial of civilians before military courts.[2125]

The Committee also called on Israel to refrain from holding criminal trials of Palestinian children in its military courts.[2126]

Trials of civilians before military courts have raised a number of fair trial issues, including: the lack of independence, impartiality and jurisdiction of such courts; the violation of the right to equality before the courts; and the violation of a wide range of guarantees, including the right of the accused to be assisted by counsel of his or her choice and the right to appeal.[2127]

For example, the European Court, after examining two sets of criminal procedures adopted by military courts, found that the concerns expressed by the accused regarding the independence and impartiality of the court were objectively justified. In a case heard by a military court in the United Kingdom, the tribunal consisted of two civilians and six serving military officers, one of whom - the highest ranking - acted as convener, while an assistant civilian advisory judge advised the tribunal. In the case of a journalist who was tried before a Turkish military court on charges relating to the publication of a newspaper article, the European Court noted that the military court was composed only of military officers, and that the accused's fears that the court might be influenced by considerations of one party were legitimate and justified. [2128]

The Inter-American Court and the African Commission have found in several cases that trials of civilians before military courts have violated fair trial rights.[2129]

While the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention called on States in transition that allow civilians to be tried before military courts to establish a procedure enabling civilians to challenge the jurisdiction of a military court before an independent civilian judiciary.[2130]

11-4 The right to have the case heard by an independent court

11-4-1 Within the framework of Egyptian law

The political system in Egypt is based on political and partisan pluralism, the peaceful transfer of power, the separation and balance of powers, the correlation of responsibility with power, and respect for human rights and freedoms, as outlined in the Constitution.[2131]

([2125]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Slovakia, UN Doc §20 (1997) CCPR/C/79/Add. 79; See the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Lebanon, §18 (1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 78, Chile, §12 (2007) UN Doc. CCPR/C/CHL/CO/5, Tajikistan, / UN Doc. CCPR §18 (2004) CO/84/TJK, Ecuador, 2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/ECU/CO/5). §5.

([2126]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Israel, UN Doc §22 (2010) CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3; see Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Israel, §27 (2009) UN Doc. CAT/C/ISR/CO/4.

([2127]) Ergin v. Türkiye (No. 6) (47533)/99), European Court (2006). §50- §54

Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §14 and §22.

([2128]) Martin v. United Kingdom (40426)/98, European Court (2006), Ergin v. Turkey (No. 6) (47533)/99, European Court (2006).

([2129]) See, for example, Castello Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-American Court §128(1999).

See, for example, African Commission: Legal Office of Ghazi Suleiman v. Sudan (222)/98 and 229/99), Annual Report 16 §67-63 (2003); Civil Liberties Organization and Others v. Nigeria (218)/98), Annual Report 14 (2000) §43-44 (2001; Kevin Mgwanga Gumi and Others v. Cameroon (266)/03), Annual Report 26 §127-128 (2009).

See the report of the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 2006 (UN Doc. A/61/384) Chapter 4.

([2130]) Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, 4/ UN Doc. A/HRC/7 §28 (2008) (c).

([2131] Article No. 5 of the Constitution.

First: Separation of powers

The Constitution was keen to confirm the principle of separation of powers as the ruler of the balanced relationship between the public authorities in the state, including the legislative and judicial authorities.[2132]

The judiciary is independent and is exercised by courts of all types and degrees. They issue their rulings in accordance with the law, and the law defines their powers. Interference in the affairs of justice or cases is a crime that does not lapse by prescription. Judges are independent and cannot be dismissed. There is no authority over them in their work except the law. They are equal in rights and duties. The law determines the conditions and procedures for their appointment, secondment, and retirement, and regulates their disciplinary accountability. They may not be assigned, in whole or in part, except to the entities and in the work specified by the law. All of this is in a manner that preserves the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and judges and prevents conflicts of interest.[2133]

The independence of the judiciary is essential to ensure compliance with the law. The Constitution has guaranteed the independence of the judiciary and made this independence a protection from interference in its work or influence on its course, considering that the final decision regarding the rights, duties and freedoms of individuals is in the hands of its members. The independence of the judiciary is based in its content on the judiciary deciding the lawsuits presented to it with complete objectivity, in light of the facts presented to it, and in accordance with the applicable legal rules, without restrictions imposed on it by any party, or interference on its part in the affairs of justice in a way that affects its requirements, so that its judges have the final say in every matter of a judicial nature, and issue their rulings by procedural rules that are fair in themselves, and in a way that ensures full protection of the rights of litigants .[2134]

The organization and effective administration of justice is a matter closely related to freedom and the preservation of rights of all kinds. The Constitution has guaranteed the independence of the judiciary; and made this independence a protection from interference in its work, influence, distortion, or disruption of its components, considering that the final decision regarding the rights and freedoms of litigants is up to it, and it repels aggression from them, and provides those who seek its refuge with the judicial satisfaction guaranteed by the Constitution or the law or both. No one can dissuade it from doing so, and no party, whatever its status, can distract it from its duties or obstruct it, so that its duty remains bound at all times to adjudicate the various forms of disputes presented to it according to objective standards that are not tainted by falsehood or slander, and in light of the facts that it finds to be true and in accordance with the applicable legal rules, and in a manner that prevents any interference in its affairs, whether by promise or threat, by enticement, encouragement or intimidation, directly or indirectly, so that the word of each judge is decisive in what he is competent to do and to ensure that all judicial rulings are issued according to procedural rules that are fair in themselves, and that guarantee the full protection of the rights of litigants.

les magistrats règlent les affaires dont ils sont saisis impartialement d'après les faits et conformément à la loi، sans restriction et sans être l'objet d'influences، incitations، pressions،

([2132]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 96 of 27 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2020, date of publication March 16, 2020, page No. 3.

([2133] Articles Nos. 184 and 186 of the Constitution.

([2134]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 139 of 21 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2004, date of publication March 18, 2004, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 405, rule No. 65, and the ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 5 of 37 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2019, date of publication May 12, 2019, page No. 52.

menaces ou interventions indues، directes ou indirectes، de la part de qui que ce soit ou pour quelque raison que ce soit.

(Principes fondamentaux relatifs à l'indépendance de la magistrature adoptés par le septième congrès des Nations Unies pour la prévention du crime et le traitement des délinquants qui s'est tenu a Milan du 26 août au 6 septembre 1985 et confirmés par l'Assemblée Générale dans ses résolutions 40/32 du 29 novembre 1985 et 40/146 du 13 décembre 1985). [2135]

The meaning of the independence of the judiciary is that each judge's assessment of the facts of the dispute, and his understanding of the rule of law regarding them, should be free from any restriction, influence, temptation, threat, interference or pressure of any kind, extent or source. What strengthens and confirms this guarantee is the independence of the judiciary from the legislative and executive authorities, and that its jurisdiction extends over every matter of a judicial nature.[2136]

This means that no authority or person in the state may issue instructions or directives to the judge regarding a case brought before him that determine the method of examining it or the type or content of the ruling he issues in it. Rather, this must be left to the judge's conscience, drawing inspiration from the law in its various sources. The judge's independence means his freedom in his judicial work within the scope of the law.

The independence of the judge has many aspects:

The judge is independent of the legislative authority, the executive authority, and other judicial bodies. The judge is also independent of litigants and public opinion.

The legislative authority's jurisdiction to enact laws, according to the text of Article 101 of the Constitution, does not authorize it to interfere in the work that the Constitution has assigned to the judicial authority and is restricted to it. Otherwise, this would be an infringement on its jurisdiction and a violation of the principle of separation of powers.[2137]

The courts' commitment to the objective rules that the legislator has deemed appropriate, per his discretionary authority in regulating rights, when deciding on the disputes presented to them, is not considered an infringement on their independence or a diminution thereof, since this independence aims to ensure that judicial work is not the product of a personal, non-impartial tendency, so that those who resort to the judiciary obtain fair judicial satisfaction in the event of an attack on their rights and freedoms .[2138] .

On the other hand, the independence of the judiciary is not absolute independence from the yoke of every restriction, but rather it is an independence that is regulated by the boundaries determined by the constitution. The judiciary exercises its authority in accordance with the legislation issued by the legislative authority. The judge may not, when exercising his judicial authority, deviate from the requirements of that legislation.[2139]

([2135]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 14 of 17 Q issued in the session of September 2, 1995, date of publication September 14, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 176, rule No. 9.

([2136]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 26 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2008, date of publication January 27, 2008, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 809, rule No. 81.

([2137]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 96 of 27 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2020, date of publication March 16, 2020, page No. 3, Case No. 202 of 32 Q issued in the session of November 3, 2018, date of publication November 13, 2018, page No. 3, Case No. 25 of 16 Q issued in the session of July 3, 1995, date of publication July 20, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 45, Rule No. 2.

([2138]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 5 of 37 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2019, date of publication May 12, 2019, page No. 52.

([2139]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 166 of 37 Q issued in the session of February 2, 2019, date of publication February 11, 2019, page No. 32.

The legislator has decided on the independence of the judiciary from the executive authority by stipulating the jurisdiction of the Supreme Judicial Council, which is composed entirely of senior judges themselves, to have control over the affairs of judges and public prosecutors, including appointment, promotion, transfer, secondment, and other matters, because one of the most important pillars of judicial independence is that the judiciary itself is responsible for the affairs of its men without participation or interference from another authority. Consequently, the judiciary has become unique in managing the affairs of its men in a manner that achieves complete independence for the judicial authority.[2140]

The text states that they cannot be dismissed, as members of the judiciary, according to the constitution, are not employees of the government apparatus and its branches. However, this does not mean that judges are not above accountability. Rather, the constitution and the law have determined the rules for their accountability in order to ensure the independence and immunity of the judiciary and to confront maliciousness and the risk of arbitrariness or control, which undermines the principle of judicial independence and empties judicial immunity of its content.[2141]

The legislator also criminalized the act of any employee who mediates with a judge or court in favor of one of the parties or to his detriment by way of an order, request, request, or recommendation.[2142]

The legislator also decided on the independence of the judge in relation to other judicial bodies. The Public Prosecution may not issue an order to him, and what he expresses verbally or in writing are merely requests, which he has the authority to accept or reject. The higher-ranking judiciary may not issue instructions to a lower-ranking judiciary, and the head of the court may not issue instructions to the judges of his court.

The judge is also independent with the parties to the lawsuit and public opinion. None of the parties to the lawsuit may direct an order to him, but rather he may present a request or present a defense. If he is not satisfied with the judge's ruling, he has no choice but to appeal it through the legally prescribed methods. The legislator has also criminalized the violation of a judge's position, prestige, or authority in connection with a lawsuit.[2143]

The law does not require that the crime of undermining the judge's position, dignity or authority occur during a trial session. All it requires is that the undermining be in connection with an ongoing civil or criminal lawsuit. The intent of Article 186 of the Penal Code is to punish the mere undermining of the dignity or authority of the courts. It is not required in this crime that the acts and expressions used include slander, insult or attribution of a specific matter. Rather, it is sufficient that they carry the meaning of insult, harm to feelings or diminish dignity. It is sufficient for the criminal intent to be present in it to intentionally direct acts or words that in themselves carry the meaning of insult to the judge, whether during the performance of the job or because of it, regardless of the motive for directing them. When the court establishes the occurrence of insulting acts or words, it does not need to explicitly indicate in its ruling that the perpetrator intended to insult or offend.[2144]

([2140]) Article No. 77 bis 2 of the Judicial Authority Law, and see Appeal No. 268 of 84 Q issued in the session of January 26, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 417 of 84 Q issued in the session of July 28, 2015 (unpublished).

([2141] Article No. 168 of the Constitution, Article No. 67 of the Judicial Authority Law, Appeal No. 8792 of 72 Q issued in the session of September 25, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, Page No. 876, Rule No. 147.

([2142] Article No. 120 of the Penal Code.

([2143] Article No. 186 of the Penal Code.

([2144] Appeal No. 26692 of the 4th year of the Q issued in the session of April 19, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page No. 394, Rule No. 52

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [If the fact established by the ruling is that the accused, after the ruling in his case, said, "This is bias," addressing the court in its session and the person of the judge who issued the ruling, then this fact contains all

The legislator also criminalized attempts to influence the judge by the media, in order to guarantee his independence from them.[2145]

Second: Appointment, Transfer, Delegation, and Secondment of Judges and the Conditions Required for Them

As we have explained previously, the legislator granted the Supreme Judicial Council, which is composed entirely of senior judges themselves, complete control over the affairs of judges and public prosecutors, including appointment, promotion, transfer, secondment, and other matters, because one of the most important pillars of judicial independence is that the judiciary itself is responsible for the affairs of its men without participation or interference from any other authority.[2146]

The following conditions must be met by those appointed to the judiciary:

To be a citizen of the Arab Republic of Egypt and have full civil capacity;

He shall not be less than thirty years of age if the appointment is to the courts of first instance, thirty-eight years of age if the appointment is to the courts of appeal, and forty-one years of age if the appointment is to the Court of Cassation;

He must have a law degree from one of the law faculties of the universities of the Arab Republic of Egypt or an equivalent foreign degree, and in the latter case he must pass the equivalency exam in accordance with the relevant laws and regulations;

He must not have been convicted by courts or disciplinary boards of a dishonorable matter, even if his reputation has been restored;

To be of good conduct and reputation.[2147]

In cases other than emergency, appointments, promotions and transfers among judges shall be made once a year, during the judicial vacation.[2148]

The seniority of judges shall be determined according to the date of the presidential decree issued appointing or promoting them unless this decree specifies another date with the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council. If two or more judges are appointed or promoted in one the elements that constitute the crimes of contempt of court and breach of the judge's dignity stipulated in Articles 133/2, 171, and 186 of the Penal Code. If this can be considered a confusion in the ruling of Article 89 of the Code of Civil and Commercial Procedure, this does not prevent punishment for it in those articles as long as it is at the same time the two crimes stipulated therein] Appeal No. 1144 of the 13th year of the Q issued in the session of May 10, 1943 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules No. 6, page No. 251, rule No. 182

---

It also ruled that: [If the fact established by the ruling is that the accused, after leaving the chamber of the judge who rejected the objection submitted by him to the order of his detention, said in the courtroom and within the hearing of the judge, "For the sake of (so-and-so), they are detaining us. This is unjust. These are thoughts," and the court concluded from that that he intended to insult the court that issued the decision to continue his detention, and applied Article 184 of the Penal Code to him, then it is not mistaken. The accused is not allowed to appeal this to the Court of Cassation, because the statement he made leads to the conclusion reached by the court, with its objective authority. It is also not acceptable for him to say that Article 184, which was applied to him, only protects the bodies that he spoke of as being legal bodies independent of the persons of whom they are composed. It does not apply to the defect in a particular court due to a particular lawsuit, a case which has another ruling stipulated in Article 186, because insulting judges in their capacity as judges affects the court body of which they are composed, and this is what falls within the text of Article 184 of the Penal Code. As for Article 186 of the Penal Code, its purpose is to punish the mere violation of the dignity or authority of the courts] Appeal No. 162 of the 12th year of the Q issued in the session of December 1, 1941 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules No. 5, page No. 592, rule No. 315.

([2145] Article No. 187 of the Penal Code.

([2146]) Article No. 77 bis 2 of the Judicial Authority Law, and see Appeal No. 268 of 84 Q issued in the session of January 26, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 417 of 84 Q issued in the session of July 28, 2015 (unpublished).

([2147] Article No. 38 of the Judicial Authority Law.

([2148] Article No. 48 of the Judicial Authority Law.

decree, their seniority shall be according to their order in the decree. If one of the public prosecutors is appointed as a judge, his seniority among the judges shall be from the date of his appointment to the position of public prosecutor. The seniority of judges who are returned to their positions shall be considered from the date of the decree issued appointing them for the first time. The seniority of members of the Public Prosecution, when they are appointed to positions of judges similar to their grades, shall be considered from the date of their appointment to these grades. If the first public prosecutor is returned to the judiciary, his seniority among his colleagues shall be determined according to the seniority he had on the day of his appointment as first public prosecutor.[2149]

Judges may not be transferred, assigned or seconded except in the cases and in the manner specified in the Judicial Authority Law. The transfer of presidents and judges of primary courts shall be by a decision of the President of the Republic after the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council, specifying the courts to which they shall be attached. The date of transfer shall be considered the date of notification of the decision. The presidents and judges of the Cairo Court of Appeal circuits may not be transferred to another court except with their consent and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council. As for the judges of other appeal courts, their transfer to the Cairo Court of Appeal shall be according to the seniority of the appointment, taking into account that the transfer shall be from the Qena Court of Appeal to the Assiut Court of Appeal, then to Beni Suef, then to Ismailia, then to Mansoura, then to Tanta, then to Alexandria. However, the head of the circuit or the judge may remain in the court in which he works based on his request and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council.

The judge or president of the court shall be transferred if he has spent five years in the courts of Cairo, Alexandria, Giza and Benha, four years in the courts of Beni Suef, Fayoum, Minya and the rest of the courts of Lower Egypt, and two years in the courts of Assiut, Sohag, Qena and Aswan.

It is permissible, based on the request of the judge or the president of the court and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council, not to transfer him to the courts of the first region and to remain in the second or third region, or not to transfer him to the courts of the second region and to remain in the third region.

Judges and presidents of the courts who obtained the last evaluation of their competence as competent are exempted from the term limit for the Cairo and Alexandria courts, provided that their previous evaluation was above average.

If a lawyer is appointed to a judgeship or prosecution position, his place of work may not be in the district of the primary court in which his place of work was located, except after at least three years have passed from the date of his appointment.[2150]

The Minister of Justice may, when necessary, temporarily delegate to work at the Court of Cassation one of the judges of the Courts of Appeal who meets the conditions for appointment to the position of judge at the Court of Cassation for a period of six months, renewable for another period, after obtaining the opinion of the General Assembly of the court to which he belongs and the General Assembly of the Court of Cassation and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council.[2151]

The Minister of Justice may also, when necessary, delegate one of the judges of the Courts of Appeal to work in an appeal court other than the court to which he belongs for a period not

---

([2149] Article No. 50 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2150] Articles Nos. 52, 53, 54 and 59 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2151] Article No. 55 of the Judicial Authority Law.

exceeding six months, renewable for another period, after obtaining the opinion of the General Assembly of the court to which he belongs and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council.[2152]

The Minister of Justice may temporarily assign one of the judges of the Courts of Appeal to work in the Public Prosecution for a period not exceeding six months, renewable for another period, after obtaining the opinion of the General Assembly of the court to which he belongs and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council.[2153]

The Minister of Justice may, when necessary, assign presidents and judges of primary courts to courts other than their courts for a period not exceeding six months, renewable for another period after the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council.[2154]

A judge may be temporarily assigned for a period not exceeding three consecutive years to perform judicial or legal work other than his work or in addition to his work, by a decision of the Minister of Justice after taking the opinion of the General Assembly to which he belongs and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council, provided that the aforementioned Council alone determines the remuneration that the judge is entitled to for this work after its completion.[2155]

Judges may be loaned to foreign governments or international bodies by a decision of the President of the Republic, after taking the opinion of the General Assembly of the court to which the judge or the Public Prosecutor belongs, as the case may be, and the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council. The loan period may not exceed four consecutive years.

However, the period may be extended beyond this amount if the national interest so requires, as determined by the President of the Republic.[2156]

Third: Distribution of cases among the court's departments

The Court of Cassation and every court of appeal or court of first instance shall meet as a general assembly to consider the following:

Arranging and composing departments and forming bodies;

Distribution of cases to different departments;

Determining the number of sessions and the days and hours of their convening;

Assigning judges of the Courts of Appeal to work in criminal courts and judges of the Courts of First Instance to work in district courts;

All other matters relating to the system of courts and their internal affairs;

Other matters stipulated by law.

General assemblies may delegate some of the matters within their jurisdiction to court presidents.[2157]

The General Assembly of the Court's distribution of cases to the various circuits does not create a type of jurisdiction that is exclusive to one circuit over another, and the decision of the General Assembly to establish these organizational rules does not result in the deprivation of the jurisdiction of one of the Court's circuits if the distribution of cases is changed to another circuit.

([2152] Article No. 56 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2153] Article No. 57 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2154] Article No. 58 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2155] Articles Nos. 62 and 64 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2156] Article No. 65 of the Judicial Authority Law.
([2157] Article No. 30 of the Judicial Authority Law.

This distribution does not create a type of jurisdiction that is exclusive to one circuit over another circuit, which does not result in nullity if it is violated.[2158]

The assignment of cases to judges and their distribution among them must always be a purely internal act. No foreign authority, whatever its weight, may be directed at them. Nor may they be disciplined - within the framework of this independence - except in light of their professional conduct, nor may they be dismissed except if there is clear evidence of their lack of competence, nor may their term of service be reduced while they hold their positions, nor may they be appointed for short periods during which their work is temporary, nor may they be selected on non-objective grounds based on merit and entitlement. In particular, the State must provide its judicial authority - in all its branches - with sufficient financial resources to enable it to administer itself a conscious and capable justice, otherwise its independence would be an illusion.[2159]

11-4-2 Within the framework of international conventions

The independence of the court is an essential element necessary for a fair trial, and a prerequisite for the rule of law.[2160]

Courts as institutions, and each judge, should be independent. Decision-makers in any case must be free to decide the matters before them independently and impartially, on the basis of the facts and in accordance with the law, without any interference, pressure or undue influence from any branch of government, or from any other party .[2161]

It also means that the first criterion in selecting people who hold judicial positions is their legal experience and integrity.[2162]

The Human Rights Committee, as well as the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, the African Commission, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, and the European and Inter-American Courts have identified factors affecting the independence of the judiciary. These are elaborated, to some extent, in non-treaty standards, including the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, the Bangalore Principles, and the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.[2163]

([2158]) Appeal No. 44270 of 85 Q issued in the session of October 22, 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 735, rule No. 94, Appeal No. 34946 of 84 Q issued in the session of May 8, 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 495, rule No. 57, Appeal No. 2470 of 85 Q issued in the session of March 9, 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 302, rule No. 38, Appeal No. 645 of 85 Q issued in the session of December 14, 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66, page No. 868, rule No. 129, Appeal No. 11182 of 84 Q issued in the session of December 22, 2014 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 65 Page No. 994 Rule No. 134, Appeal No. 14845 of 70 Q issued in the session of September 26, 2000 and published in Technical Office Book No. 51 Page No. 558 Rule No. 109, Appeal No. 18327 of 62 Q issued in the session of May 27, 1997 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48 Page No. 663 Rule No. 99, Appeal No. 8070 of 54 Q issued in the session of March 25, 1985 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36 Page No. 450 Rule No. 76, Appeal No. 1800 of 48 Q issued in the session of February 25, 1979 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 30 Page No. 300 Rule No. 60.

([2159]) The ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court in Case No. 34 of 16 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 763, rule No. 49.

([2160]) Principle 1 of the Bangalore Principles.

([2161]) Principles 3-4 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, Section A(4)(c) and (f) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Principle 1 of the Bangalore Principles: Reverón Trojelo v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court 146 § (2009).

([2162]) Principle 10 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and Section A(4)(1) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2163] Other relevant standards (not mentioned in this guide) include: the Commonwealth Principles on Accountability between and the Relationship between the Three Branches of Government, adopted by the Heads of Government of Commonwealth member states; the Minimum Standards for Judicial Independence, adopted by the International Bar Association; and the

These include the principle of separation of powers, which protects the judiciary from undue external influence or interference, and practical guarantees of the independence of judges such as security of tenure and adequate salaries.[2164]

These requirements and guarantees protect the accused's right to a fair trial and the integrity of the judicial system itself.[2165]

First: Separation of powers

Courts derive their independence from the principle of separation of powers applied in democratic societies. This means that each state agency has specific responsibilities that are exclusively its own. According to the African Commission, "The main justification for the principle of separation of powers is to ensure that one branch of government does not become so powerful as to encroach upon the other and exceed the limits of its authority." The separation of the three powers of government - executive, legislative and judicial - ensures the existence of controls and balancing mechanisms that prevent any of them from encroaching upon the others."[2166]

Judges, as a body and as individuals, should not be subject to any interference, whether by the state or by private persons.[2167]

The state must guarantee and ensure this independence by stipulating it in its laws, and by having all government institutions respect it. States should ensure that there are structural and functional safeguards against any political or other interference in the administration of justice.[2168]

The judiciary, as an institution and as individuals, must have absolute authority to adjudicate cases referred to it.[2169]

This means that judicial rulings may not be changed by a non-judicial authority in a way that harms one of the parties except in matters relating to mitigation or modification of sentences and in cases of pardon.[2170]

The independence of the judiciary requires that employees charged with judicial duties enjoy complete independence from those responsible for public prosecution duties .[2171]

Concerns have been raised about direct interference with the independence of the judiciary as an institution, and with the independence of individual judges.

The African Commission decided that two decrees issued by the Nigerian government violated the African Charter by removing the jurisdiction of the courts over appeals against government decrees and actions. "An attack of this kind on the jurisdiction of the courts is particularly

---

Beijing Declaration on Principles for the Independence of the Judiciary in the LAWASIA Region, adopted by 19 Chief Justices of the Asia-Pacific region.

([2164]) Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and Section A(4) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2165]) See Recommendation 12 (2010) CM/Rec of the Council of Europe, preamble §6.

([2166]) Lawyers for Human Rights v. Swaziland (251)/2002), African Commission (2005) §56.

([2167]) See Abitz Barbera et al. v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court §55 (2008).

([2168]) Principle 1 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and Section A(4)(a) and (f)-(g) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Recommendation 12 CM/Rec (2010) of the Council of Europe, preamble §7 and §13.

([2169]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 19; Abitz Barbera and Others v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court § 55 (2008).

([2170]) Principles 3 and 4 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and Section A(4)(f) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Recommendation 12 CM/Rec (2010) of the Council of Europe, preamble §§16-§17.

([2171]) Principle 10 of the Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors, and Section 1 (f) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

repugnant, since it leaves room for the violation of other rights to go unaddressed, not to mention being, in itself, a violation of human rights," the Committee said.[2172]

The Inter-American Court concluded that the mere possibility that a decision by a military court in Mexico could be "reviewed" by federal authorities meant that the courts did not meet the requirement of judicial independence.[2173]

The Committee against Torture raised concerns about the power of the Attorney General to influence judicial decisions in Burundi and his decision to annul a Supreme Court order to release on bail seven people detained for alleged involvement in an attempted military coup .[2174]
.

The African Commission concluded that the trial of Ken Saro-Wiwa and his co-accused before a special court whose members of the judiciary were selected by the executive constituted a violation of the independence of the courts, regardless of the individual qualifications of the judges selected.[2175]

The Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers criticised the arrest of a Venezuelan judge who had ordered the conditional release of a detainee. The detainee had spent more than two years in pre-trial detention, while the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention declared his detention arbitrary.[2176]

The failure of judges to take action in cases of alleged human rights violations and their issuance of acquittals or low rates of acquittals in criminal cases may be evidence of the judges' lack of independence.[2177]

In some countries, the composition of the judiciary does not meet the requirement of separation of powers.[2178]

A number of UN special rapporteurs have expressed concern that the US military commissions working on Guantanamo Bay detainees were not sufficiently independent of the executive branch. Among other things, the United States Department of Defense, and ultimately the President, has authority over the body responsible for appointing judges, who can be removed by the body that appointed them.[2179]

In its deliberations on whether a court is independent, the European Court examined the question of whether its decision-makers are subject to orders from branches of the executive.

The European Court considered that the State Security Court in Türkiye, which included military judges in each trial chamber, was not independent, in the context of criminal proceedings

([2172]) Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (129)/94, African Commission §14 (1995); see Lawyers for Human Rights v. Swaziland (2002/251), African Commission (58- §53 (2005).
([2173]) Radilla-Pacheco v. Mexico, Inter-American Court § 281 (2009).
([2174]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Burundi: UN Doc §12 (2006), CAT/C/BDI/CO/1.
([2175]) African Commission: PEN International, Constitutional Rights Project, Rights International on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr. and Civil Liberties Organization v. Nigeria (137/94, 139/94, 154/96, 161/97) §§86, (1998) §§94-95; see Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224/98, (2000) §66; see also Ghazi Suleiman Legal Office v. Sudan (222/98, 229/99), African Commission (66-§§63 (2003).
([2176]) Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc A/HRC/14/16 (2010), footnote 35 and §68; see also the concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Ethiopia: §22 (2010), UN Doc CAT/C/ETH/CO/1.
([2177]) See the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Brazil, UN Doc §7 (2006) CCPR/C/BRA/CO/2; Russian Federation, UN Doc CCPR/C/RUS §21 (2009) CO/6; the concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Guatemala: §72 (2000), UN Doc A/56/44 (c); the Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism: Tunisia, §34 (2010) UN Doc A/HRC/16/51/Add2.
([2178]) Palamara-Iribarne v. Chile, Inter-American Court 155 § (2005).
([2179]) Joint report of the United Nations mechanisms on detainees at Guantanamo Bay, 120/2006/§30-§33 (2006) UN Doc E/CN4; see Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 60/2005/UN Doc E/CN4 §17-§19 (2005); see also the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Jordan, §12 (2010) UN Doc CCPR/C/JOR/CO/4.

against a civilian. Military judges received the same professional training as civilian judges and enjoyed many of the same constitutional guarantees of their independence.

However, they remained active members of the military and were therefore subject to the orders of the executive authority and to considerations of disciplinary procedures and military evaluations, and they were appointed by the military and administrative authorities for fixed terms of four years, renewable.[2180]

Concerns were also raised about the independence of prosecutors. These concerns included: police officers acting as prosecutors;[2181]

Supervision by prosecutors of detainees in the pre-trial phase, during investigations and in the course of trials; and laws that empower prosecutors to prevent the implementation of court decisions or to remove judges from cases they are hearing.[2182]

Second: Appointing judges and the conditions that must be met by them

To maintain the independence of the judiciary and ensure that judges are of high quality, international standards require that persons appointed to the judiciary be selected based on their legal training, experience and integrity.[2183]

Likewise, decisions to promote judges should be based on objective factors, in particular ability, experience and integrity.[2184]

To combat discrimination, steps should be taken to ensure that qualified women and qualified persons from minorities are appointed to the judiciary.[2185]

The body responsible for appointing, promoting and disciplining judges should be independent of the executive authority, both in its composition and in its method of operation.[2186]

It should be pluralistic and balanced, with the judiciary constituting the majority of its members. Selection and appointment procedures should be transparent.[2187]

([2180]) Incal v. Turkey (22678)/93, European Court (73- § 65 (1998); see Öcalan v. Turkey (46221)/99, Grand Chamber of the European Court (2005) 118- § 112.
([2181]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Zambia, UN Doc §9 (2008), CAT/C/ZMB/CO/2.
([2182]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Kazakhstan, UN Doc §128 (2001) A/56/44 (c); Ukraine, UN Doc CAT/C/UKR/CO/5 (2007) §10; Tajikistan, UN Doc CAT/C/TJK/CO/1 (2006); Benin, UN Doc CAT/C/BEN/CO/2 (2008); Working Group on Enforced Disappearances: China, §33-§34 (2004) UN Doc E/CN4/2005/6/Add4; see also Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc (2012) A/HRC/20/19, §40 and §100.
([2183]) Principle 10 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, Section A(4)(i)-(k) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 12 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 13 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Council of Europe, Recommendation 12 (§44-§45), CM/Rec) 2010; Inter-American Court: Reverón Trubjello v. Venezuela (2009) §71-§74, Abitz Barbera and Others v. Venezuela §143 (2008).
([2184]) Principle 13 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and Section A(4)(o) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.
([2185]) Article 8 of the Protocol to the African Charter on the Rights of Women.
Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc §22-§33 (2011) A/66/289 and 92; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: United Kingdom, §15 (2001) UN Doc. CCPR/CO/73/UK; France, §26 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/FRA/CO/4; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Bahrain, 2005) UN Doc. CAT/C/CR/34/BHR) §7 (h), Sudan, §21 (1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 85; General Recommendation 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination §§1(g) and 5(d); see Concluding Observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Guatemala, §8 (2010) UN Doc. CERD/C/GTM/CO/12-13, Colombia, UN Doc. §13 (1999) CERD/C/304/Add. 76.
([2186]) Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc- §34 - §23 (2009) A/HRC/11/41 and 97; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Azerbaijan, §12 (2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/AZE/CO/3, Honduras, §16 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/HND/CO/1; see also the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Kosovo (Serbia), UN Doc. CCPR/C/UNK/CO/1 §20 (2006); Council of Europe Recommendation 12 §46-§48, CM/Rec (2010); Galstyan v. Armenia (26986/03) ECtHR §61-§62 (2008).

The African Commission has deemed the body responsible for the appointment, promotion, transfer and discipline of judges in Cameroon, which is headed by the President of the Republic and the Vice-President is the Minister of Justice, to be in violation of the principle of separation of powers. It considered that the presence of members of the legislative authority and the judiciary, as well as the presence of an "independent personality", in the membership of the committee, was not sufficient to guarantee the independence of the courts in accordance with Article 26 of the African Charter.[2188] .

Where judges are elected rather than appointed based on their merits, concerns have been raised about the independence and impartiality of judges and the potential for politicization. For example, the Human Rights Committee, together with the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, have expressed concerns about the impact that the election of judges in some US states may have on fair trial rights, including in death penalty cases. The Human Rights Committee recommended a system for appointing judges based on their personal merits by an independent body. She also expressed concern that the judiciary in many rural areas of the United States is supervised by unqualified and untrained persons. "[2189]

International standards on the conditions of appointment of judges require States to provide sufficient resources to ensure that they receive adequate salaries and pensions. The law must also guarantee that they will serve the terms stipulated for their employment, and specify the terms of service, end-of-service bonuses, and retirement age.[2190]

The Human Rights Committee expressed concern that the main consideration in the selection of many judges was not their legal qualifications. She also expressed concern that few judicial positions were held by non-Muslims or women, and that judges were subject to pressure from a government-dominated oversight body.[2191]

To ensure the independence of the judiciary, judges should be protected from impeachment, and no judge should have any fear of being removed from office because of any political reaction to his rulings. Whether the judge is appointed or elected, he must ensure that he continues to hold his position until he reaches the mandatory retirement age, or until the end of the period prescribed for holding the position he occupies, if he holds a position that is temporary for a specific period.[2192]

([2187]) Section A(4)(h) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2188]) Kevin Mgwanga Ghenmi and Others v. Cameroon (266)/03), African Commission §209-§212 (2009); see Concluding Observations of the African Commission: Democratic Republic of the Congo, (2003) §20 and §26.

([2189]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: United States of America, § § 288 (1995) A/50/40)CCPR/C/79/Add. 50(301); Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions: United States of America, §10-§12 (2009) A/HRC/11/2/Add. 5 and 74; see the concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Serbia, §8 (2008) UN Doc. CAT/C/SRB/CO/1; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 41/UN Doc. A/HRC/11. §25 (2009).

([2190]) Principles 7 and 11-13 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and sections A(4)(l)-(m) and B(a)-(c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa; see Article 12 of the Arab Charter.

General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §19; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 41/§§73 (2009) UN Doc. A/HRC/11 and 76, §40-§68 (2010) A/HRC/14/26; Council of Europe Recommendation 12 (CM/Rec) 2010 §55-§49; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Georgia, UN Doc §14 (2007) CCPR/C/GEO/CO/1, Kenya, / UN Doc. CCPR/CO/83/KEN §20 (2005); Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Yemen, UN Doc §17 (2010), CAT/C/YEM/CO/2/Rev. 1; Inter-American Court: Abitz Barbera et al. v. Venezuela § 43 (2008); Shukron Shukron v. Venezuela. §98 (2011).

([2191]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Sudan, UN Doc. §21 (1997) CCPR/C/79/Add. 85.

([2192]) Council of Europe Recommendation 12 (§49-§52, CM/Rec) 2010; Inter-American Court: Abitz Barbera and Others v. Venezuela §§84 (2008) and 43, Shukron Shukron v. Venezuela §99 (2011).

A judge may not be suspended from work or removed from his position unless he becomes unable to perform his duties, or if he engages in behaviour that is unbecoming of the position he holds .[2193] .

The Human Rights Committee and the Committee against Torture have expressed concern about the appointment of judges for fixed, renewable terms based on review by the executive. In Moldova, for example, judges were initially appointed for a five-year term, and in Uzbekistan, the executive branch reviewed judges' appointments every five years .[2194]

Judges may be subject to disciplinary measures and sanctions, including suspension or removal, for misconduct. Complaints against judges, in their judicial capacity, should be dealt with promptly and impartially in hearings conducted by independent and impartial bodies whose decisions are subject to independent judicial review; the results of disciplinary measures should be made public.[2195]

Judges should enjoy personal immunity from civil suits against improper acts or omissions in the exercise of their judicial functions, although the State may be required to pay compensation for such acts.[2196]

The Human Rights Committee has expressed concern that the President of the Republic may dismiss judges of the Constitutional Court and the Supreme Courts of Belarus without any safeguards against abuse of this power. She pointed out that there were allegations that the President of the Republic had dismissed two judges because they had failed to implement an order issued by the executive authority and collect a fine imposed by it.[2197]

Third: Distribution of cases to court judges

The Judicial Administration shall distribute case files to judges in any court in which they practice their work based on objective criteria.[2198]

Where a single case may be subject to the jurisdiction of more than one court, the judicial authority should determine which court will hear it, basing its decision on objective factors.

11-5 The Right to Have the Case Heard by An Impartial Court

11-5-1 Within the framework of Egyptian law

The Constitutional Court has ruled that the impartiality of the judiciary is a complementary element to its independence and is considered a human right and a fundamental principle of the law because it confirms confidence in the judiciary. The Public Prosecution, while exercising its (2193) Principles 11, 12 and 18 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and Section A(4)(l)-(p) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

(2194) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Moldova, UN Doc §24 (2009) CCPR/C/MDA/CO/2, Uzbekistan, / UN Doc. CCPR/C §16 (2010) UZB/CO/3; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Kyrgyzstan, 44/§74 (2000), UN Doc. A/55 (d), Azerbaijan, UN Doc (2000) A/55/44 (d) §68 and §69 (d).

(2195) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §20; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 41/§57-§63 (2009) UN Doc. A/HRC/11 and 98; Council of Europe Recommendation 12 (§61), CM/Rec) 2010; Inter-American Court: Abitz Barbera and Others v. Venezuela §44 (2008), Shukron Shukron v. Venezuela (2011) §104-§105 and §120.

(2196) Principles 16, 17, 19 and 20 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and sections A(4)(n) and (p)-(r) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Concluding Observations of the Committee against Torture: Armenia, UN Doc §37 (2001), A/56/44 (c).

(2197) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Belarus, §13 (1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 86.

(2198) Principle 14 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, Council of Europe Recommendation CM/Rec(2010)12, §24; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 2009 (41) / UN Doc. A/HRC/11 §46، A/HRC/11/41/Add. 2 (Russia) § 61 (2009); Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Kazakhstan, / UN Doc. CERD/C/65. §18 CO/3-(2004).

powers through its handling of the criminal case, also enjoys the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, that the public interest is the essence of its work, and that this is done objectively.[2199]

Providing judicial guarantees, the most important of which are impartiality and independence, is a must in every judicial dispute. These are two guarantees that are interconnected and equal in the field of exercising justice and achieving its effectiveness. Each of them has the same constitutional value, so one does not rise above the other or obligate it. Rather, they complement each other and are equal in value.[2200]

The independence of the judiciary means that it works away from forms of external influence that weaken the resolve of its men, causing them to deviate from the truth, whether by temptation or coercion, enticement or intimidation. If their refusal to enforce the right is due to their bias against one of the opponents and their bias towards another - for personal interests or other internal factors that arouse the instincts of appeasing one party over another - then that is from them, giving priority to the whims of the soul; contradicting the guarantee of impartiality when deciding the judicial dispute; and the fact that judicial work should not raise dark shadows about its impartiality, so that litigants who have doubts about it cannot be reassured by it, after it has become distant from the high values of the judicial function.[2201]

The judge's impartiality prevents judicial work from being the product of a personal, non-impartial tendency, which often happens if the judge decides a dispute in which he has previously expressed an opinion. Thus, the judge's impartiality is a necessary constitutional condition to ensure that he is not subject in his work to anything other than the authority of the law.[2202]

The guarantee of a fair trial guaranteed by the Constitution means that every legal dispute should have its judge - even if the rights raised therein are of a civil nature - and that it should be decided by an independent and neutral court established by law, within which the opponent can clarify his claim, present its opinions and respond to the statements or arguments of his opponents that oppose it in light of opportunities in which they are all equal so that its formation, rules of organization, the nature of the systems in force before it and how to apply it are a specific act of justice, a progressive concept that is consistent with the contemporary standards of civilized countries..[2203]

([2199] Appeal No. 30639 of 72 Q issued in the session of April 23, 2003 and published in Technical Office Book No. 54, Page No. 583, Rule No. 74.

([2200]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 163 of 26 Q issued in the session of December 2, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 749, rule No. 74, Case No. 151 of 21 Q issued in the session of September 9, 2000, date of publication September 21, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 744, rule No. 88, Case No. 38 of 16 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 169, rule No. 12.

([2201]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 148 of 28 Q issued in the session of July 6, 2008, date of publication July 26, 2008, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 1154, rule No. 118, Case No. 26 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2008, date of publication January 27, 2008, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 809, rule No. 81, Case No. 133 of 19 Q issued in the session of April 3, 1999, date of publication April 15, 1999, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 237, rule No. 30, Case No. 83 of 20 Q issued in the session of December 5, 1998, date of publication December 10, 1998, published in the first part From the Technical Office Book No. 9, Page No. 109, Rule No. 15, Case No. 162 of 19 Q issued in the session of March 7, 1998, date of publication March 19, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, Page No. 1103, Rule No. 133.

([2202]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 26 of 27 Q, issued in the session of January 13, 2008, date of publication January 27, 2008, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 809, rule No. 81.

([2203]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 26 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2008, date of publication January 27, 2008, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 809, rule No. 81, Case No. 152 of

The impartiality of the judiciary is distinguished from its independence, as they are two meanings that do not overlap. The independence of the judiciary means that it works away from forms of external influence that weaken the resolve of its men, causing them to deviate from the truth through temptation or coercion, enticement or intimidation. If their refusal to enforce the right is due to their bias against one of the opponents, and their bias towards another, for personal interests or other internal factors that arouse the instincts of appeasing one party over another, then this is from them giving priority to the whims of the soul, contradicting the guarantee of impartiality when deciding the judicial dispute, which compromises their neutrality. It is not permissible for judicial work to cast dark shadows around its neutrality so that litigants who have doubts about it cannot be reassured by it, after it has become distant from the high values of the judicial function.[2204]

The principle of the judge's impartiality is based on a fundamental rule based on the necessity of the litigant's confidence in his judge, and that his judgment is issued only based on truth alone, without bias or whims. While the set of legislative provisions regulating judicial affairs have been keen to support and provide this impartiality, at the same time they have not neglected the right of the litigant, if he has reasons that call for the suspicion of influencing this impartiality, to find a way to prevent the person against whom this suspicion has arisen from the judiciary in his case. Hence, the right to reject the judge from considering a particular dispute has been established as one of the basic rights that is linked to the right of the judge himself, provided that each right may be exposed to the phenomenon of its misuse spreading in it by excessive use and using it as a means of malice in the dispute and obstinacy in it, and prolonging the period of adjudication in cases without taking into account what this leads to in terms of harm to the judges in their reputation, position and feelings.

Disqualification and Recusal of Judges from Adjudication

The judge is prohibited from participating in the consideration of the case:

If the crime was committed against him personally;

If he has performed the work of a judicial police officer in the case, or the function of the public prosecution, or the defense of one of the opponents, or gave testimony in it, or carried out a work of experts, and the basis for the judge's obligation to refrain from considering the case in those cases is that he has performed an act that gives him an opinion in the case or personal information that conflicts with what is required of the judge in terms of being free of the subject of the case, so that he can weigh the arguments of the opponents with an abstract weight, otherwise he loses his competence to consider it, for fear that he will adhere to his opinion that is revealed by his previous work, taking into account that expressing an opinion may call for its adherence.[2205]

---

20 Q issued in the session of June 3, 2000, date of publication June 17, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 627, rule No. 74.

([2204]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 38 of 16 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 169, rule No. 12, Case No. 34 of 16 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 763, rule No. 49.

([2205]) Article No. 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 536 of 79 Q issued in the session of June 10, 2009 and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page No. 298, Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 17633 of 75 Q issued in the session of July 21, 2005 and published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page No. 412, Rule No. 62, Appeal No. 13948 of 65 Q issued in the session of March 17, 2004 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page No. 246, Rule No. 32, Appeal No. 23606 of 61 Q issued in the session of October 10, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 710, Rule No. 133, Appeal No. 2127 of 61 Q issued in the session of December 7, 2004 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 627, rule No. 141, appeal No. 18245 for the year 63 Q issued in the session of January 10, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 76, rule No. 9, appeal No. 5874 for the year 63 Q issued in the session of October 30, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 1166,

However, if the judge's role is limited to carrying out a procedure or issuing a ruling that is not related to the subject of the lawsuit and does not indicate that he has an opinion on it, then this does not prevent him from considering the subject of the lawsuit at a later stage.[2206]

The judge is prohibited from participating in the ruling if he has carried out an investigation or referral in the case. The principle is that whoever carries out an investigation in a criminal case is prohibited from participating in examining the case or ruling on it, considering that this is a principle of trials. The wisdom behind this is to ensure the impartiality of the judge who sits in the ruling council between the accused and the prosecution authority, and so that his ruling is not interpreted according to a belief he had previously formed about the charge that is the subject of the trial, while he exercises the jurisdiction of the investigation or assumes the prosecution authority or participates in the referral decision or in examining the case at a previous stage. There is a rule in conscience dictated by optimal justice and does not need a text to decide it, which is that whoever sits in the judicial council must not have written, listened or spoken on the subject presented, so that his soul is clear of everything from which his opinion on the accused could be inferred, which would reveal to the latter his fate in advance and shake his confidence in him or destroy his reassurance with him..[2207]

What is meant by investigation as a reason for the judge to refrain from ruling in the case is what the judge conducts or issues within the scope of the criminal case, whether in his capacity as an investigating or ruling authority.[2208]

The fact that a member of the court that issued the ruling applied the legal description and registration to the incident and ordered the accused to appear before the court of first instance during his work as a deputy to the public prosecutor before his appointment as a judge contradicts what is required of the judge in terms of being free of the subject matter so that he can weigh the arguments of the opponents in an abstract manner. .[2209]

The judge's participation in the panel that considered the appeal against the Public Prosecution's decision that there was no basis for filing a criminal case against the accused and rule No. 175, appeal No. 18232 for the year 60 Q issued in the session of February 4, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 150, rule No. 22, appeal No. 63033 for the year 59 Q issued in the session of May 21, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 880, rule No. 132, Appeal No. 8132 of 62 Q issued in the session of March 15, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 548, rule No. 79, Appeal No. 14628 of 61 Q issued in the session of June 8, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 734, rule No. 112, Appeal No. 1604 of 57 Q issued in the session of January 12, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 68, rule No. 7, Appeal No. 2 of 56 Q issued in the session of March 31, 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 516, rule No. 76, Appeal No. 470 of 51 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1981 and published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 1021, rule No. 178, appeal No. 1321 of year 48 Q issued in the session of December 10, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 907, rule No. 188, appeal No. 529 of year 42 Q issued in the session of June 12, 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 914, rule No. 205.

---

([2206] Appeal No. 22440 of year 60 Q issued in the session of December 5, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 1090, rule No. 170.

([2207]) Article No. 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 123 of Year 42 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 334, Rule No. 76, Appeal No. 786 of Year 39 Q issued in the session of October 20, 1969 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 1074, Rule No. 211.

([2208]) Appeal No. 7475 of 56 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 1057, rule No. 192, Appeal No. 529 of 42 Q issued in the session of June 12, 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 914, rule No. 205, Appeal No. 786 of 39 Q issued in the session of October 20, 1969 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 1074, rule No. 211.

([2209]) Appeal No. 357 of 69 Q issued in the session of February 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 593 of 51 Q issued in the session of December 31, 1981 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 1236, Rule No. 222.

decided to cancel the order, which is an act of referral, is a reason for the judge to refrain from participating in the ruling on the case filed against the accused.[2210]

If the body that issued the criminal court's ruling to uphold the order to prevent the accused, his wife and his two children from disposing of their money is the same body that issued the conviction ruling against the accused, then this conflicts with the requirement that the judge be free of the subject of the case, and as a result the ruling is considered to have been issued by a body that has lost its authority to consider the case and rule on it .[2211] .

The judge is also prohibited from participating in the ruling on the appeal if the ruling being appealed was issued by him/her.[2212]

However, if the judge had considered the case in one of the sessions of the court of first instance and his work was limited to hearing the testimony of the injured party without expressing an opinion or issuing a ruling, this is not considered a reason for the invalidity of his subsequent participation in the body that issued the ruling in the appeal.[2213]

The judge's action or ruling in the aforementioned cases is void, even if it was done with the agreement of the parties. In such cases, the judge must refrain from ruling on the case of his own accord, even if none of the parties requests his dismissal. Otherwise, his ruling is void by law, because it relates to a principle of the trial established to ensure the distribution of justice by separating the investigation and judicial work.

If this invalidity occurs in a ruling issued by the Court of Cassation, the opponent may request that it cancel the ruling and reconsider the appeal before another circuit.[2214]

The reasons for incompetence leading to the invalidity of judgments are specific matters that the legislator has chosen individually and specifically from among various cases that would allow the judge to step down to avoid embarrassment or allow the opponents to reject him to reassure them. The legislator has considered in his choice the characteristics of incompetence in terms of a specification that allows for the exclusion of the discretionary power, and its publicity that makes it known in most cases to the judge and opponents, and its ability to be proven with conclusive evidence. He has arranged for the existence of these reasons to make the judge incompetent to consider the case and invalidate his work by force of law even if justice is achieved or is based on the agreement of the opponents. The matter is not subject to the discretionary power of the courts to which the challenge is brought against this work, nor to the judge's conscience as its source, nor to the will of the opponents and what they feel of reassurance or suspicion, in order to enable public confidence in the judiciary, and to be careful not to attach any doubt to its rulings regarding the persons of the judges, which necessarily means that the judge's competence to consider the case, and the validity or invalidity of his

---

([2210] Appeal No. 2225 of 38 Q issued in the session of March 17, 1969 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 331, Rule No. 72.

([2211]) Appeal No. 536 of 79 Q issued in the session of June 10, 2009 and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page No. 298, Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 74835 of 75 Q issued in the session of March 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 74835 of 75 Q issued in the session of March 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2127 of 61 Q issued in the session of December 7, 1999 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 627, Rule No. 141.

([2212]) Article No. 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 1488 of Year 45 Q issued in the session of January 5, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, page No. 46, Rule No. 7, Appeal No. 2081 of Year 36 Q issued in the session of February 27, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 284, Rule No. 55.

([2213] Appeal No. 666 of 41 Q issued in the session of December 6, 1971 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 22, Page No. 713, Rule No. 173.

([2214]) Article No. 147 of the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law, Appeal No. 8282 of 58 Q issued in the session of May 31, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 799, Rule No. 138, Appeal No. 529 of 42 Q issued in the session of June 12, 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 914, Rule No. 205.

work, revolve around quality. And provided that a specific case is available from the cases mentioned by the legislator in the Criminal Procedures Law, the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law, and the Judicial Authority Law, to name a few.[2215]

And since the reasons for the incompetence were mentioned in an exhaustive manner and do not include the accused's feeling of a desire to convict or the knowledge of the court body issuing the judgment for the victim, this is because the state of anger and hostility is an internal matter that exists in the judge's soul and relates to his person and conscience, and the legislator left the matter of determining it to the judge's discretion and what his soul is reassured by and his conscience is comfortable with, and all of this does not prevent him from considering the case as long as he has seen that this desire did not exist in his soul, and he did not feel such embarrassment in considering it. [2216]

The judge's ruling in another case against the accused does not bind him in any way while he is in the process of ruling in another case against the same accused, and it is not considered among the reasons for incompetence.[2217]

The judge's ruling on another previous lawsuit between the family of the accused and the victim is not considered a reason for the judge's incompetence.[2218]

The mere fact that the head of the body that issued the ruling on the accused is a brother of the Public Prosecutor does not constitute a reason for his incompetence to participate in examining the case, as long as the Public Prosecutor did not personally represent the prosecution in the case itself.[2219]

The opponents have the right to reject the judges' ruling in the cases mentioned above, and the judge is not competent to consider the case and is prohibited from hearing it even if none of the opponents rejects him in the following cases:

If he is a relative or in-law of one of the opponents up to the fourth degree;

([2215] Appeal No. 7481 of 63 Q issued in the session of June 5, 1995 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 846, rule No. 165.

([2216]) Appeal No. 61 of 88 Q, issued in the session of November 25, 2018 (unpublished). It is noted that the victim in that appeal was the former Attorney General.

See: Appeal No. 32900 of 84 Q issued in the session of November 13, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page 797, rule No. 98, Appeal No. 35317 of 85 Q issued in the session of October 17, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page 719, rule No. 91, Appeal No. 33679 of 84 Q issued in the session of September 1, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page 588, rule No. 83, Appeal No. 21602 of 84 Q issued in the session of March 22, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page 319, rule No. 45, Appeal No. 11182 of 84 Q issued in the session of December 22, 2014 and published In the Technical Office Book No. 65, Page No. 994, Rule No. 134, Appeal No. 24701 for the year 83 Q issued in the session of May 13, 2014, Appeal No. 10517 for the year 80 Q issued in the session of October 20, 2011 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 62, Page No. 318, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 699 for the year 75 Q issued in the session of December 13, 2010 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 61, Page No. 698, Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 10664 for the year 79 Q issued in the session of March 4, 2010 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 61, Page No. 215, Rule No. 27, Appeal No. 41754 for the year 72 Q issued in the session of November 9, 2003 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, Page No. 1063 Rule No. 145, Appeal No. 14845 of 70 Q issued in the session of September 26, 2000 and published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page No. 558, Rule No. 109, Appeal No. 25649 of 64 Q issued in the session of December 17, 1996 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 1362, Rule No. 196, Appeal No. 20735 of 64 Q issued in the session of October 23, 1996 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 1091, Rule No. 157.

([2217]) Appeal No. 28911 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 10, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 1078, rule No. 196, Appeal No. 2048 of 29 Q issued in the session of May 17, 1960 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 477, rule No. 91.

([2218] Appeal No. 41754 of 72 Q issued in the session of November 9, 2003 and published in Technical Office Book No. 54, Page No. 1063, Rule No. 145.

([2219] Appeal No. 562 of 37 Q issued in the session of May 15, 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 655, Rule No. 128.

If he or his wife has an existing dispute with one of the parties to the lawsuit and with his wife;

If he is an agent for one of the parties in his private business, or his guardian, trustee, or suspected heir, or if he has a kinship or marriage relationship up to the fourth degree with the guardian of one of the parties, or his trustee, or with one of the members of the board of directors of the company in dispute, or with one of its managers, and this member or manager has a personal interest in the lawsuit;

If he, his wife, one of his relatives or in-laws on the line of descent, or the person for whom he is an agent, guardian or trustee has an interest in the pending lawsuit;

If he had issued a fatwa or pleaded on behalf of one of the parties in the case, or written about it, even if that was before he became a judge, or if he had previously considered it as a judge, expert, or arbitrator, or if he had given testimony about it .[2220] .

The judge may be dismissed for any of the following reasons:

If he or his wife has a case similar to the case he is considering, or if one of them has a dispute with one of the opponents, or with his wife after the case brought before the judge has been brought, unless this case was brought with the intention of disqualifying him from considering the case brought before him;

If his divorced wife, from whom he has a child, or one of his relatives or in-laws on the line of descent, has a dispute pending before the court with one of the parties to the case or with his wife, unless this dispute was brought after the case brought before the judge with the intention of dismissing him;

If one of the opponents is his servant, or if he is accustomed to eating with or living with one of the opponents, or if he received a gift from him before or after filing the lawsuit;

If there is enmity or affection between him and one of the opponents, which makes it likely that he will not be able to rule without bias .[2221] .

It is not permissible for judges who are related or related by marriage up to the fourth degree to sit in one circuit, including the purpose.[2222]

It is not necessary for the establishment of affection between a judge and one of the opponents in the case he is examining, that the evidence indicates its strength and solidity, nor that the enmity has reached a depth that confirms its intensity and wildness. Rather, it is sufficient for either of them to be realized that it is personal and connected to the judge himself, and that its effect is to deviate from the scale of truth, even if the enmity does not reach the level of dispute, nor the affection to the level of eating with one of the opponents or living with him or accepting gifts from him before or after filing the case, but rather its motive and motivation is separate from a marital relationship or kinship or marriage. The reasons for rejection are directed to all cases in which a suspicion arises that has its basis around a type of personal feelings that the judge has, and with it the ruling in the case from which it is sought to be rejected does not prevail without an inclination that is stormy with the truth, or influential in its course.[2223]

The representative of the prosecution, the representative of one of the parties, or his advocate may not be among those who have the aforementioned relationship with one of the judges who ([2220] Article No. 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and Article No. 146 of the Civil and Commercial Procedure Code, Appeal No. 17052 of the 60th year of the Q issued in the session of November 16, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 1287, Rule No. 182.

([2221] Article No. 148 of the Civil and Commercial Procedures Code.

([2222] Article No. 75 of the Judicial Authority Law.

([2223]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 38 of 16 Q, issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 169, rule No. 12.

are hearing the case. The representation of a lawyer who has the aforementioned relationship with the judge shall not be considered if the representation is subsequent to the judge hearing the case. The reason for the lack of competence only arises if the representation of the lawyer - the advocate of one of the parties - precedes or is contemporaneous with the judge hearing the case. What is meant by the representation in this regard in the context of criminal cases is attendance with the accused and not merely the issuance of a representation from him to his lawyer as is the case in civil and criminal matters in which the law does not require the presence of the accused. If the representation is subsequent to the judge hearing the case, it does not entail lack of competence, but rather the representation itself shall not be considered. The implication of this text is clear, which is to avoid the evasion of the parties by deliberately appointing a lawyer who has the aforementioned relationship with one of the judges in order to prevent him from hearing the case.[2224]

The right to dismiss a particular judge from hearing a specific dispute is closely related to the right to litigate, as its outcome for every dispute - in the end - is a fair solution that represents the judicial satisfaction required to repel the aggression against the claimed rights. This satisfaction assumes that its content is in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, and it is not so if its determination is attributed to a party or body that lacks its independence or impartiality, or both, as these two guarantees - imposed by the Constitution on the above - are considered a restriction on the discretionary power that the legislator possesses in the field of regulating rights, and therefore nullity is attached to any legislative regulation of the judicial dispute that is contrary to them. .[2225]

It is established that the legislator's regulation of the conditions for the rejection of judges has taken into consideration a fundamental rule based on the fact that every litigant must be assured that the ruling of his judge is issued only on the basis of truth alone, without any influence from the inner workings of the human soul, its desires and biases. The legislator has balanced - in the texts with which he has regulated the rejection of judges - between two matters:

The first: that the case, whatever its subject matter, should not be decided by judges who have a suspicion that they are colluding with one of the parties and thus affecting their impartiality. Therefore, the legislator permitted their rejection according to reasons he specified in order to prevent them from continuing to consider the case on the basis of which the reason for their rejection arose.

Second: The rejection of judges should not be an introduction to defaming them without right, or to preventing them from considering the cases themselves in order to avoid ruling on them maliciously and maliciously.[2226]

If the judge has a reason for recusal, he must declare it to the court so that it may decide on his recusal in the consultation chamber. The district judge must refer the matter to the president of the court.

([2224]) Article No. 75 of the Judicial Authority Law, Appeal No. 39618 of 72 Q issued in the session of January 16, 2003 and published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 112, Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 657 of 55 Q issued in the session of May 16, 1985 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 668, Rule No. 119.

([2225]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 84 of 19 Q issued in the session of November 6, 1999, date of publication November 18, 1999, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 385, rule No. 48, Case No. 38 of 16 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 169, rule No. 12.

([2226]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 152 of 20 Q, issued in the session of June 3, 2000, date of publication June 17, 2000, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 627, rule No. 74.

Except for the cases of recusal stipulated by law, if the judge has reasons that make him feel embarrassed to consider the case, he may submit the matter of his recusal to the court, or to the president of the court, as the case may be, for a decision on it.[2227]

11-5-2 Within the framework of international conventions

The court must be impartial. The duty of impartiality, which is an essential element of the proper exercise of judicial functions, requires that all decision-makers in a criminal case, whether they are judges, judicial officers or jurors, be and are seen to be impartial.[2228]

True integrity is required in both substance and substance as a prerequisite for maintaining respect for the justice system.[2229]

The right to a fair trial requires that judges and jurors have no vested interest in, or preconceived notions about, the case before them, and that they not act in a manner that favors one of the parties to the case.[2230]

A judge or juror should not hear a case if he or she is unable to decide it impartially, or if he or she may appear to be impartial. For example, if the judge has personal knowledge of a controversial fact in the case, or is a lawyer or witness regarding a matter of the case, or has an interest in the outcome of the case or bias towards one of the parties, the judge should usually recuse himself from hearing the case.[2231]

It is also the duty of the courts to ensure the impartiality of jurors in jury trials.[2232]

Judges are required to ensure that the proceedings are conducted fairly, respecting the rights of all parties, without discrimination. [2233]

Several human rights bodies have recommended that judges, prosecutors and lawyers be trained and sensitized on the rights of women and minorities so that they are able to challenge discriminatory stereotypes and ensure respect for the right to equality before the law and the courts. Human rights bodies have recommended that state officials, including law enforcement officers, active members of the armed forces, judges and prosecutors, be excluded from jury membership, in order to preserve the independence and impartiality of judicial proceedings.[2234]

([2227] Article No. 249 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2228]) Human Rights Committee: Kartunen v. Finland, / UN Doc. CCPR 3/7-2/ §7 (1992) C/46/D/387/1989, Collins v. Jamaica, / UN Doc. CCPR 4/ §8 (1991) C/43/D/240/1987; Council of Europe Recommendation 12, CM/Rec)2010 §60; European Court: Piersac v. Belgium (8692)/79), §30 (1982); Kyprianou v. Cyprus, (73797)/01) Grand Chamber (2005) §118-§121.

([2229]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 21; European Court: Piersac v. Belgium (8692)/79), (32-§ § 30 (1982, Sander v. United Kingdom (34129)/96) § 22 (2000, Galstyan v. Armenia (26986)/03) European Court § 79 (2007); : Abitz Barbera and Others v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court, § 56 (2008); Prosecutor v. Anto Forundjia IT-95-17/1-A)) Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (July § 189-§ 190 (2000).

([2230]) Principle 2 of the Bangalore Principles; Karttunen v. Finland, Human Rights Committee, 1989/2/ §7 (1992) UN Doc. CCPR/C/46/D/387..

([2231]) Section A(5)(d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 15 of the Rwanda Rules, Article 15 of the Yugoslavia Rules, Principles 2/5 and 4/4 of the Bangalore Principles; Council of Europe Recommendation §59-§60, CM/Rec(2010)12; Palamara-Iribarne v. Chile, Inter-American Court (2005) §145-§147 and §158-§161.

([2232] Andrews v. United States (11). 139), American Commission (1996) §147-§172, §183 and §187; Hanif and Khan v. United Kingdom (52999)/08 and 61779/08) European Court (2011) §138.

([2233]) Principle 6 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, Principle 5 of the Bangalore Principles; see Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers, §17/289 (2011) UN Doc. A/66..

([2234]) Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers: Russian Federation, §98 (2009) UN Doc. A/HRC/11/41/Add. 2; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Russian Federation, / UN Doc. CAT/C/RUS . 13 § (2006) CO/4.

Decisions on facts must be made impartially and based solely on evidence and circumstantial evidence, and the facts must be based on applicable laws. No party may interfere in the case, impose restrictions or pressures on it, or resort to enticement or threats in its context.[2235]

Judges should act in a manner that preserves the impartiality and independence of the judiciary and protects the dignity of their office.[2236]

Judges should not make any comments that could reasonably be expected to affect the outcome of the proceedings.

Challenge the impartiality of the court

The right to challenge the independence and impartiality of a court, judge or jury is essential to ensuring respect for the right to appear before an independent and impartial tribunal. States must ensure that there is a mechanism for receiving such appeals. .[2237]

The Inter-American Court has indicated that challenging the impartiality of a judge should not be seen as questioning his moral integrity, but rather as a mechanism for building credibility and confidence in the judicial system.[2238]

There are two forms of test for the impartiality of courts, one of which is objective, and examines whether the judge has provided sufficient procedural guarantees to exclude any legitimate doubt about his integrity. The second is subjective, and tests whether the judge has any personal biases. It is clear from this that the impartiality factor is as important as its essence, but it is generally assumed that judges (or members of the jury) have no personal preferences that affect the impartiality of their decision, unless a party presents evidence to the contrary, and usually in the context of procedures provided for by national law.[2239]

When considering challenges to the impartiality of judges in criminal cases, the opinion of the accused, despite its importance, remains inconclusive; what is decisive in this regard is whether there is an objective basis justifying doubts about this impartiality.[2240]

In this context, the Human Rights Committee stated that national courts should examine the grounds on which a judge may be dismissed for incompetence, where provided for by law, and replace any judge who meets the criteria specified in this regard.[2241]

Challenges to the impartiality of the Court have been raised in various contexts, including in cases where judges have participated in other parts of the proceedings in another capacity, cases where the identity of judges has been kept confidential, and others where judges appear to have a personal interest in the proceedings or some form of relationship with one of the parties. The African Commission decided that the establishment of a special court composed of one judge and four members from among the officers of the armed forces, and giving it absolute power to try, adjudicate and sentence those accused of inciting civil unrest, constituted a violation of Article 7 (d) of the African Charter. The committee said, "Regardless of the character

---

([2235]) Principle 2 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and sections A(2)(h) and 5(a) and (e) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, see Council of Europe Recommendation 12 CM/Rec (2010) §5, §14 and §22-§23.

([2236] Principle 8 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.

([2237]) See Section A(5)(b) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Abitz Barbera and Others v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court, (2008) §63-§67.

([2238]) Abitz Barbera et al. v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court, (2008) §63.

([2239]) Barreto Leyva v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court § 98 (2009); European Court: Piersac v. Belgium (8692)/79), § 30 (1982); Sander v. United Kingdom (34129)/96 (25-24 (2000) and 27 and 34, Kyprianou v. Cyprus, (73797)/01) Grand Chamber § 118-§ 121 (2005); Prosecutor v. Anto Forundjija (IT-95-17/1-A) Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia July (2000) § 189-§ 191 and § 196-§ 197.

([2240]) Hauschildt v. Denmark (10486)/83, European Court (1989) §48-§49.

([2241]) Kartunen v. Finland, Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR . 2/ §7 (1992) C/46/D/387/1989.

of the members of these courts, their very composition suggests, if not embodies, impartiality."[2242]

The US court concluded that the "faceless judges" system constitutes a violation of the right to a trial before an independent, impartial and competent court. Among the reasons given by the Committee is the fact that keeping the identity of the judges secret prevents the accused from knowing whether there is a basis on which they are seeking the removal of the judge on the basis of lack of impartiality or jurisdiction.[2243]

The European Court also found that the right to a trial before an independent and impartial tribunal was violated when a court failed to consider allegations that a juror had made a racist remark in public before the trial of a man of Algerian origin in France.[2244]

The European Court did not find that there was anything that undermined the impartiality of the court, even though one of the court judges had participated in the pre-trial proceedings and in the decision to detain the accused pending trial, and the presiding judge had decided that there was prima facie evidence in the court file that justified bringing the case before the court. [2245]

However, the European Court found in the following cases a lack of impartiality:

Whereas the investigating judge had ordered the accused to be detained before their trial and had interrogated them on a number of occasions during the investigation, and had subsequently been appointed a judge in the court, and in this capacity had been charged with trying the accused in the same case;[2246]

Whereas a judge who had ordered the extension of the detention of one of the accused confirmed the jury's decision and issued the verdict against the accused after presiding over the court to try him criminally;[2247]

Whereas the judge in a criminal case for defamation had previously presided over the court in a criminal case relating to the same matter;[2248] .

Whereas a police officer participated in the jury despite knowing that he had worked with another police officer who was a witness in the case and provided testimony about an incident about which opinions differed during the trial [2249] .

([2242]) Constitutional Rights Project (in relation to Zamani Lakoot and 6 others) v. Nigeria (87)/93), African Commission (1994) - §14(5).

([2243]) Castillo Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-American Court (1999) § 134-§ 132; see Report of the Inter-American Commission on Terrorism and Human Rights (2002) section 3(d)(1)(B) § 233; Carranza v. Peru, / UN Doc. CCPR 3/ § § 6 (2005) C/85/D/1126/2002 and 7/5, Becerra v. Colombia, UN Doc 2/ § § 5 (2006) CCPR/C/87/D/1298/2004 and 7/2, see also concluding observations: Tunisia: § 15 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/TUN/CO/5..

([2244]) Ramli v. France (16839)/90), European Court (48-§ 46 (1996); see also European Court: Sander v. United Kingdom (34129)/96) § 34 (2000), Gregory v. United Kingdom (22299)/93), (1997) § 45-§ 48; Andrews v. United States, (11). 139) US Commission, Report 57/96 147 - §187(1996).

([2245]) European Court: Nortier v. The Netherlands (13924)/88, (1993) §31-§35; see also Saraiva de Carvalho v. Portugal (15651)/89, (1994) §30-§40.

([2246]) De Capper v. Belgium (9186)/80, European Court (1984) §30.

([2247]) Ekeberg and Others v. Norway (11106) / et al 04), European Court §34-§44 (2007); see Hauschildt v. Denmark (10486) / 83), European Court (1989) §43-§53.

([2248]) Fatahlaev v. Azerbaijan (40984)/07, European Court (2010) §136-§139.

([2249]) Hanif and Khan v. United Kingdom (52999)/08 and 61779/08), European Court (2011) §138-§150.

Chapter Twelve: The Right to Equality Before the Law and Courts

12-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

12-1-1 The right to equality before the law

All Egyptian constitutions, starting from the 1923 Constitution and ending with the current Constitution, have all reiterated equality before the law and guaranteed its application to all citizens as the basis of justice, freedom and social peace.[2250]

Since citizens are equal before the law and are equal in rights, freedoms and public duties, there is no discrimination between them on the basis of religion, belief, gender, origin, race, color, language, disability, social status, political or geographical affiliation, or for any other reason. [2251]

The principle of equality before the law aims to protect the rights and freedoms of citizens in the face of forms of discrimination that infringe on these rights or restrict the exercise of those freedoms. The equal legal protection imposed by this principle is not limited to the rights and freedoms stipulated in the Constitution, but its scope of implementation also extends to the rights that the legislator guarantees to citizens within the limits of his discretionary authority and in light of the legislative policy that he deems to achieve the public interest.[2252]

(2250) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 56 of 24 Q issued in the session of May 11, 2003, date of publication May 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1062, rule No. 155, Case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 124, rule No. 8, Case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 124, rule No. 8, Case No. 33 of 15 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7 Page No. 297 Rule No. 17, Case No. 14 of 17 Q issued in the session of September 2, 1995, date of publication September 14, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7 Page No. 176 Rule No. 9, Case No. 11 of 16 Q issued in the session of July 3, 1995, date of publication July 20, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7 Page No. 19 Rule No. 1, Case No. 23 of 16 Q issued in the session of March 18, 1995, date of publication April 6, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6 Page No. 567 Rule No. 38, Case No. 39 of 15 Q issued in the session of February 4, 1995, date of publication March 6, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6 Page No. 511 Rule No. 35, Case No. 30 of 15 Q issued in the session of December 3, 1994, date of publication December 22, 1994, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 386, Case No. 34 of 13 Q issued in the session of June 20, 1994, date of publication July 7, 1994, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 302 Rule No. 27, Case No. 43 of 13 Q issued in the session of December 6, 1993, date of publication December 23, 1993, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 80.

(2251) The first paragraph of Article No. 53 of the Constitution.

(2252) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 51 of 22 Q issued in the session of May 11, 2003, date of publication May 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1054, rule No. 154, Case No. 56 of 24 Q issued in the session of May 11, 2003, date of publication May 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1062, rule No. 155, Case No. 77 of 23 Q issued in the session of May 11, 2003, date of publication May 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1071, rule No. 156, Case No. 56 of 22 Q issued in the session of June 9, 2002, date of publication June 20, 2002 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 393, Rule No. 61, Case No. 33 of 15 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 297, Rule No. 17, Case No. 14 of 17 Q issued in the session of September 2, 1995, date of publication September 14, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 176, Rule No. 9, Case No. 39 of 15 Q issued in the session of February 4, 1995, date of publication March 6, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 511, Rule No. 35, Case No. 17 of 14 Q issued in the session of January 14, 1995, date of publication February 9, 1995 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 440, Case No. 30 of the 15th Q issued in the session of December 3, 1994, date of publication December 22, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 386, Case

Although the Constitution has prohibited discrimination between citizens on the basis of religion, belief, gender, origin, race, color, language, disability, social status, political or geographic affiliation, or for any other reason, this does not mean at all the confinement of the cases in which discrimination is prohibited, but rather it was mentioned as the most common in work and the most prevalent in practical life, and saying otherwise leads to permitting discrimination in cases other than those, such as preferring some over others based on their birth, or the extent of their wealth, or their tribal fanaticism, or their ethnic tendencies, or their social status, or their class affiliation, or on the basis of their inclinations and opinions, or their partisan inclinations, or their position on public authority, or their aversion to its organizations, or their adoption of specific actions, or other forms of discrimination that lack in their structure objective foundations that justify them, which contradicts the essence of the principle of equality and prevents it from achieving its goal and exposes freedoms, rights and public duties to the risk of discrimination between citizens on non-foundations. Objectivity justifies it. [2253]

The forms of discrimination that contradict the principle of equality before the law, although it is impossible to limit them, are based on any distinction, restriction, preference or exclusion that arbitrarily infringes on the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the constitution or the law, whether by denying the very existence of them, or by suspending or diminishing their effects, in a way that prevents them from being exercised on a footing of complete equality among those qualified to benefit from them, especially at the level of political, social, economic, cultural and other aspects of public life.[2254]

No. 43 of the 13th Q issued in the session of December 6, 1993, date of publication December 23, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 80.

([2253]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 155 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1999, date of publication March 18, 1999, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page 214, rule No. 28, Case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page 124, rule No. 8, Case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page 124, rule No. 8, Case No. 33 of 15 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 297 Rule No. 17, Case No. 14 of 17 Q issued in the session of September 2, 1995, date of publication September 14, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 176, Rule No. 9, Case No. 40 of 16 Q issued in the session of September 2, 1995, date of publication September 14, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 194, Rule No. 10, Case No. 6 of 15 Q issued in the session of April 15, 1995, date of publication April 27, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 637, Rule No. 41, Case No. 23 of 16 Q issued in the session of March 18, 1995, date of publication April 6, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6 Page No. 567 Rule No. 38, Case No. 39 of 15 Q issued in the session of February 4, 1995, date of publication March 6, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 511 Rule No. 35, Case No. 30 of 15 Q issued in the session of December 3, 1994, date of publication December 22, 1994, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 386.

([2254]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 109 of 27 Q issued in the session of June 10, 2007, date of publication June 17, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 507, rule No. 48, Case No. 85 of 28 Q issued in the session of June 10, 2007, date of publication June 17, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 530, rule No. 50, Case No. 124 of 24 Q issued in the session of April 9, 2006, date of publication May 6, 2006 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 2385, rule No. 380, Case No. 56 of 24 Q issued in the session of May 11, 2003, date of publication May 29, 2003 and published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1062, rule No. 155, case No. 180 of 20 Q issued in the session of January 1, 2000, date of publication January 13, 2000, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 448, rule No. 55, case No. 155 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1999, date of publication March 18, 1999, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 214, rule No. 28, case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 124, rule No. 8, case No. 38 of 17 Q issued in the session of May 18, 1996, date of publication May 30, 1996 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 637, Rule No. 40, Case No. 30 for the year 16 Q issued in the session of April 6, 1996, date of publication April 18, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 551, Rule No. 33, Case No. 33 for the year 15 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 297, Rule No. 17, Case No. 14 for the year 17 Q issued in the session of September 2, 1995, date of publication September 14, 1995 and published in the first part of

The principle of equality before the law, which the Constitution established as a fundamental guarantee for achieving justice, freedom and social peace, is not limited to the scope of its application to the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution, but also extends to those of them that have been decided by law - or by a lower legislative instrument - and it is not permissible after that to restrict them in a way that impedes them or detracts from their exercise, but rather they must be regulated by unified foundations in which there is no discrimination between those addressed by their provisions who are legally qualified to benefit from them.[2255]

The principle of equality before the law, which the Constitution guarantees to all citizens, as the basis of justice, freedom and social peace, means that neither the legislative nor the executive authority may exercise its legislative powers entrusted to it by the Constitution in a manner that violates the equal protection it guarantees for all rights, and taking into account that the equal protection before the law, which the Constitution has adopted, does not address the law in an abstract sense, but rather because the law is an expression of a specific policy created by situations with their problems, and that it seeks, through the texts it contains, to achieve purposes in themselves through the means it has specified.[2256]

This means that the principle of equality before the law means that the legislative authority shall not approve or the executive authority shall not issue legislation that violates the equal legal protection of all rights, whether those stipulated in the constitution or those guaranteed by the legislator..[2257]

The legislative or executive authorities, in exercising their powers stipulated in the Constitution, may not violate the equal legal protection of all rights, whether those stipulated in the Constitution or those specified by law. Hence, this principle protects against legal texts in which the legislator establishes unjustified discrimination that conflicts with legal positions whose elements are similar, so that the unity of its structure is not an entry point for the unity of its organization, but rather the legal rule that governs it is either exceeding in its breadth the conditions of these positions or falling short in its scope of comprehending them.[2258]

---

the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 176, Rule No. 9, Case No. 23 for the year 16 Q issued in the session of March 18, 1995, date of publication April 6 For the year 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 567, rule No. 38, case No. 39 for the year 15 Q issued in the session of February 4, 1995, date of publication March 6, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 511, rule No. 35, case No. 30 for the year 15 Q issued in the session of December 3, 1994, date of publication December 22, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 386.

([2255]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 177 of 26 Q issued in the session of January 14, 2007, date of publication January 28, 2007, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 225, rule No. 23, Case No. 227 of 21 Q issued in the session of December 2, 2000, date of publication December 14, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 796, rule No. 96, Case No. 87 of 20 Q issued in the session of May 6, 2000, date of publication May 18, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 534, rule No. 65, Case No. 17 of 18 Q issued in the session of May 3, 1997, date of publication May 15, 1997, published in the first part of the Office Book Technician No. 8 Page No. 591 Rule No. 40.

([2256]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 259 of 25 Q issued in the session of June 12, 2005, date of publication June 23, 2005, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1885, rule No. 312, Case No. 24 of 21 Q issued in the session of June 2, 2001, date of publication June 14, 2001, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 957, rule No. 115, Case No. 35 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1999, date of publication March 18, 1999, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 182, rule No. 23, Case No. 132 of 18 Q issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, published in the first part From the Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 1065, Rule No. 74.

([2257]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 217 of 24 Q, issued in the session of February 13, 2005, date of publication March 10, 2005, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1398, rule No. 232.

([2258]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 122 of 22 Q issued in the session of February 13, 2005, date of publication March 10, 2005, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1381, rule No. 230, Case No. 81 of 25 Q issued in the session of February 13, 2005, date of publication March 10, 2005, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1429, rule No. 237.

The principle of equality is not a rigid, indoctrinated principle that contradicts practical necessity, nor is it an iron rule that rejects all forms of discrimination, nor does it guarantee the mathematical precision required by the scales of absolute justice among things. If the legislative authority is permitted to take whatever measures it deems appropriate to regulate a specific, defined subject or to prevent an evil that it deems necessary to repel, and if its prevention of greater harm with lesser harm is necessary, its application of the principle of equality must not be a revelation of its whims, nor an indication of its adoption of permissible situations that arouse grudges or hatreds that break the controls of its behavior, nor an aggression expressing the might of its authority. Rather, its position must be moderate in the area of its dealings with citizens, and it must not differentiate between them by imposition or oppression.

It is therefore permissible for the legislative authority to differentiate - according to logical standards - between centers whose data are not the same, or whose foundations differ from one another. In order to preserve the principle of equality, it must establish, through this organization, a legislative division in which the legal texts it includes are linked to the legitimate purposes it seeks, provided that the differences between those centers are real, not artificial or imaginary. This is because what preserves the principle of equality, and does not contradict its content, is that organization that establishes a legislative division in which the secondary texts it includes are linked to the legitimate purposes it seeks. If evidence is provided that these texts are separate from their objectives, then discrimination is a failure that cannot be seen. Likewise, if the connection between the means and the ends is weak, then the discrimination is considered to be based on facts that cannot be applied to it, and thus it is not constitutionally permissible.[2259]

The legal positions to which the principle of equality relates are those that are united in the elements that constitute each of them, not as realistic elements that the legislator did not take into account, but rather as elements that the legislator took into account, imposing a legal effect on them. Their connection is only the creation of that legal position that includes them.[2260]

This legal status does not arise except through its solidarity after its existence has become linked to it. It does not arise at all through its establishment, and it is not conceivable after its realization and the legal status is generated from it that it would be a restriction on it, nor that the legislator would diminish the advantages that he linked to its existence, since they are latent in it and it is not permissible to revoke them.[2261]

This means that the principle of equality before the law does not mean treating all citizens according to uniform rules, as the legislative organization may involve division, classification or discrimination, whether through the burdens it imposes on some or through the advantages it grants to one group over another. However, the basis for the constitutionality of this organization is that its texts, by which the legislator organizes a specific topic, are not separated from its

---

([2259]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 259 of 25 Q issued in the session of June 12, 2005, date of publication June 23, 2005, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1885, rule No. 312, Case No. 47 of 17 Q issued in the session of January 4, 1997, date of publication January 16, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 223, rule No. 16, Case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 124, rule No. 8, Case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, published in the first part of the Office Book Technician No. 8 Page No. 124 Rule No. 8.

([2260]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 259 of 25 Q issued in the session of June 12, 2005, date of publication June 23, 2005, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1885, rule No. 312, Case No. 276 of 24 Q issued in the session of March 13, 2005, date of publication April 7, 2005, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1583, rule No. 261, Case No. 9 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 22, 1997, date of publication April 3, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 522, rule No. 33.

([2261]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 227 of 21 Q, issued in the session of December 2, 2000, date of publication December 14, 2000, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 796, rule No. 96.

objectives, so that the connection of the purposes that it seeks to achieve with the means it resorted to is logical and not weak, feeble or fabricated, in a way that violates the foundations on which constitutionally justified discrimination is based. Therefore, if there is similarity in the legal positions that organize some categories of citizens, and their equality in the elements that compose them, this necessitates the unity of the legal rule that should be applied to them. If the legislator deviates from that, he falls into the mud of constitutional violation, whether this deviance was intentional or occurred accidentally.[2262]

Whenever the law is different between situations, positions, or persons that are not actually the same, and its assessment of that is based on objective foundations, inspired by goals whose legitimacy is not disputed, and guarantees the legal rule alone regarding persons whose circumstances are similar to what does not exceed its requirements, the law falls within the framework of the discretionary authority possessed by the legislator, and is therefore not considered a suspicious law, but rather includes justified discrimination that does not detract from its constitutional legitimacy if the equality it sought and sought is mathematically far from perfection, nor if its application is an act that has violated it.[2263]

Although the principle of the authority possessed by the legislator in the field of regulating rights is its absoluteness, the restrictions that the constitution may impose to protect these rights from possible forms of aggression against them are what determine the boundaries of the circle in which legislative regulation may not enter, destroying the rights guaranteed by the constitution, or affecting their content in a way that undermines them. Hence, this circle represents a vital area through which the right can only breathe, and the organization of the right is not possible from a constitutional perspective except beyond its external borders, so that invading it is contrary to its organization, and an aggression against it that leads to its confiscation or restriction. Likewise, the legal texts in which the legislator has organized a specific topic may not be separated from its objectives. Rather, these texts must be an introduction to it and a basis for satisfying a public interest that has its consideration, appropriate means to justifiable ends.

This is because every legislative regulation does not come out of a vacuum and is not considered intended for its own sake, but rather its goal is to implement specific objectives that it seeks, and its legitimacy reflects a framework for the public interest on which the legislator established this regulation as a tool for achieving it and a way to reach it.[2264]

The origin of the legislator's authority in the field of regulating rights is that it is discretionary authority unless the constitution restricts its exercise with controls that limit its absoluteness, and it is considered a boundary for it that may not be invaded or crossed. Since the constitution entrusts the legislative authority with regulating a specific subject, the legal rules it approves in this area may not infringe upon the rights whose origin is guaranteed by the constitution, whether by revoking them or diminishing them from their sides, since wasting or destroying

---

([2262]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 14 of 23 Q issued in the session of April 4, 2004, date of publication April 15, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 580, rule No. 95, Case No. 32 of 16 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 240, rule No. 14.

([2263]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 132 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1065, rule No. 74.

([2264]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 180 of 20 Q issued in the session of January 1, 2000, date of publication January 13, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 448, rule No. 55, Case No. 155 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1999, date of publication March 18, 1999, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 214, rule No. 28, Case No. 52 of 18 Q issued in the session of June 7, 1997, date of publication June 19, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 653, rule No. 43, Case No. 30 of 16 Q issued in the session of April 6, 1996, date of publication April 18, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7 Page No. 551 Rule No. 33, Case No. 9 of 16 Q issued in the session of August 5, 1995, date of publication August 17, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, Page No. 106 Rule No. 7.

these rights is an aggression against their vital areas that they breathe only through. Therefore, the regulation of these rights must not be an intrusion into their content, but must be fair and justified.[2265]

The violation of the principle of equality before the law occurs through any action that undermines equal legal protection taken by the state, whether through its legislative authority or its executive authority, which means that neither of these two authorities may impose a difference in treatment unless it is justified by logical differences that can be rationally linked to the purposes sought by the legislative action issued by them.

It is not correct to say that every legislative section is considered a classification that contradicts the principle of equality. Rather, legal texts must always be viewed as means determined by the legislator to achieve certain goals that he seeks. The principle of equality before the law cannot be applied except in light of its legitimacy and the logical connection of these means to it. It is therefore inconceivable that the evaluation of the legislative division be separate from the goals sought by the legislator. Rather, the permissibility of this division is linked to the restrictions imposed by the constitution on these goals and to the existence of a minimum level of compatibility between them and the methods of achieving them. It is therefore impossible for the objective assessment of the reasonableness of the legislative division to be completely separate from the ultimate goals of the legislation.

The effect of the equality of those who are similar in legal protection is that it includes all of them, so its scope is not limited to some of them, nor does it extend to categories other than theirs. Consequently, this protection may not be generalized beyond its natural scope, nor may the legislator reduce its scope by withholding it from a group of those who deserve it.

The legislator may intend, through the legal texts he formulates, to conduct a discrimination that is contrary to the constitution, and the effects that the discrimination produces may, in terms of its extent, undermine the purposes that the constitution intended to establish. Discrimination is considered unforgivable in both of these cases, and perhaps the discrimination is more dangerous in the second case, in which the challenged legislative text appears neutral in its appearance but contrary to the constitution in its effect.[2266]

12-1-2 The Right of Individuals to Access Courts on an Equal Basis with Others - The Right to Litigation

Litigation is a right that is protected and guaranteed to all. The state is committed to bringing the litigation bodies closer together and works to expedite the settlement of cases. It is prohibited to protect any administrative action or decision from judicial oversight, and no person shall be tried except before his natural judge, and exceptional courts are prohibited.[2267]

The importance of the right to resort to the judiciary is particularly evident in criminal proceedings, where personal freedom and related rights and freedoms are at risk. Through judicial intervention, it is possible to be assured of achieving a balance between the public interest and the protection of personal freedom and other rights and freedoms. Thus, the Criminal Procedure Code ensures achieving a balance between the public interest and the

---

([2265]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 62 of 18 Q, issued in the session of March 15, 1997, date of publication March 27, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 488, rule No. 31.

([2266]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 87 of 20 Q issued in the session of May 6, 2000, date of publication May 18, 2000, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 534, rule No. 65, Case No. 17 of 18 Q issued in the session of May 3, 1997, date of publication May 15, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 591, rule No. 40.

([2267] Article No. 97 of the Constitution.

protection of rights and freedoms, by conducting a fair trial in which all guarantees are respected, most importantly the right to defense.

The principle is that in the preliminary investigation stage, the judge must provide oversight over the course of the investigation, authorize procedures that affect personal freedom, and order the accused to be referred to trial if there is sufficient evidence against him. In the trial stage, it is necessary for another judge to decide on the proof of the charge and to issue a sentence upon conviction. In the execution stage, another judge must supervise the execution of the sentences.

Judicial guarantee is a necessary presumption to reach a fair and just trial, and a right expressed by the right to litigate. The right to litigate assumes, from the outset and obviously, enabling every litigant to access it easily, without being burdened by financial burdens or hindered by procedural obstacles. This access - which means the right of every person, whether national or foreign, to resort to the judiciary, and that its doors are not closed in the face of those who resort to it, and that the path to it is paved by law - is nothing more than a link in the chain of litigation, completed by two other links, without which this right cannot be valid, and its existence is not complete in the absence of either of them. This is because the establishment of the right to access the judiciary is completed by the middle link in the right to litigate, which is the one that reflects the impartiality and independence of the court, the immunity of its members, and the objective foundations of its practical guarantees. Thus, it guarantees, through its integration, the contemporary standards that provide every person with a complete and equal right to a fair and public trial, based on an independent and impartial court established by law, which decides - within a reasonable period - his civil rights and obligations. Or in the criminal charge against him and within its framework he is able to present his claim and achieve his defense and confront his opponent’s evidence in response and comment within a framework of equal opportunities and taking into account that the formation of the court and the foundations of its organization and the nature of the substantive and procedural rules in force within its scope and how to apply them in practice are what determine the main features of that middle link whenever the above is the case and the right to litigation is not complete unless the state provides the dispute at the end of its journey with a fair solution that represents the settlement that the person requesting it seeks to obtain as the judicial satisfaction that he seeks to confront the violation of the rights that he claims and this satisfaction - assuming its legitimacy and consistency with the provisions of the constitution - is integrated into the right to litigation as the last link in it and its connection to the final purpose intended by it with a close link since the judicial dispute is not established to defend a theoretical interest from which no practical benefit is derived, but rather its purpose is to require a benefit approved by the law and in light of which the truth of the disputed issue between its parties and the rule of law regarding it are determined, and with it the aspects of the judicial dispute are achieved The process does not operate in a vacuum, and the integration of this satisfaction into the right to litigation means that it is considered one of its components, and there is no way to separate it from it, otherwise this right will lose its meaning and become a mirage.[2268]

([2268]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 81 of 19 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1999, date of publication February 18, 1999, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 165, rule No. 21, Case No. 15 of 14 Q issued in the session of May 15, 1993, date of publication June 10, 1993, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 315, rule No. 27, Case No. 2 of 14 Q issued in the session of April 3, 1993, date of publication April 15, 1993, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 241, rule No. 21, Case No. 69 of 22 Q issued in the session of February 13, 2005, date of publication March 10, 2005, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11 Page No. 1355 Rule No. 228, Case No. 129 of 22 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2003, date of publication January 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 887 Rule No. 129, Case No. 55 of 20 Q issued in the session of March 4, 2000, date of publication March 20, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 470 Rule No. 57, Case No. 180 of 19 Q issued in the session of June 6, 1998, date

Every person has the right to resort to his natural judge, and this indicates that this right, in the origin of his law, is a right for all people, and they do not differ from one another in the field of resorting to it, but rather their legal positions are equal in their efforts to repel aggression against their rights in defense of their personal interests. The Constitution has been keen to guarantee the implementation of this right in its constitutionally established content, such that it is not permissible to limit its exercise to one group rather than another, or to permit it in a specific case rather than another, or to burden it with obstacles that are contrary to its nature, to guarantee that access to it is a right for everyone who resorts to it, not restricted in that except by the restrictions required by its organization, which may not in any case reach the extent of confiscating it. Thus, the Constitution has guaranteed the right to sue for every citizen, and has strengthened this right with its guarantees that prevent any infringement of it, and has established it as a basis for defending their interests and protecting them from aggression, and has made citizens equal in relying on it.[2269]

The constitution has established the right to litigation for all people as an authentic constitutional principle and has not restricted it to Egyptians alone but has also guaranteed this right to foreigners. This text has reiterated what previous constitutions have implicitly established regarding guaranteeing the right to litigation for individuals, both nationals and foreigners, when it granted them rights that do not exist and do not bear fruit except through the establishment of this right, as it is the means that guarantees their protection, enjoyment, and repelling aggression against them.[2270]

People are not distinguished from one another in the field of their right to access their natural judge, nor in the scope of the procedural and substantive rules that govern similar judicial disputes, nor in the effectiveness of the guarantee of the right to defense that the constitution or the legislator guarantees for the rights they claim, nor in their collection according to uniform standards when the conditions for requesting them are met, nor in the methods of appeal that regulate them. Rather, the rights themselves must have specific rules, whether in the field of litigation regarding them or defending them, or appealing them or appealing the rulings related to them. And a single dispute must always have uniform rules, whether in the field of its collection, defense, or appeal of the rulings issued in it.[2271]

---

of publication June 18, 1998, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1401 Rule No. 107, Case No. 129 of 18 Q issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 2003 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1077, rule No. 75, case No. 5 for the year 15 Q issued in the session of December 17, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 918, rule No. 19, case No. 2 for the year 14 Q issued in the session of April 3, 1993, date of publication April 15, 1993 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 241, rule No. 21, case No. 57 for the year 4 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1993, date of publication February 18, 1993 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 150, rule No. 13.

([2269]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 15 of 14 Q issued in the session of May 15, 1993, date of publication June 10, 1993, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 315, rule No. 27, Case No. 101 of 26 Q issued in the session of February 1, 2009, date of publication February 15, 2009, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 1274, rule No. 129, Case No. 26 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2008, date of publication January 27, 2008, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 809, rule No. 81, Case No. 106 of 19 Q issued in the session of January 1, 2000, date of publication January 13, 2000, published in the part The first of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 437, rule No. 54, case No. 153 of 19 Q issued in the session of June 5, 1999, date of publication June 17, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 284, rule No. 35, case No. 145 of 19 Q issued in the session of June 6, 1998, date of publication June 18, 1998 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1423, rule No. 109.

([2270]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 99 of the 4th year of the Q issued in the session of June 4, 1988, date of publication June 23, 1988, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 119, rule No. 18.

([2271]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 198 of 20 Q issued in the session of April 14, 2002, date of publication April 27, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 296, rule No. 50, Case No. 92 of 21 Q issued in the session of January 6, 2001, date of publication January 18, 2001, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 843, rule No. 101, Case No. 92 of 21 Q issued in the session of January 6, 2001, date of

The right to litigation must not be regulated by legal texts that burden the path to it, make litigation a risk whose consequences cannot be guaranteed, include a cost that lacks its cause, be far from what is considered fairness in the field of delivering rights to their owners, or lack the logical controls that surround the requirement of the right.[2272]

All people do not differ from one another in the field of their efforts to repel aggression against the rights they claim, but rather they possess the same means in the matter of demanding and obtaining the same rights.[2273]

The right to litigate is a right granted to both the natural person and the legal person. They do not differ at all in their enjoyment of the same constitutional right, but they may differ in the legal organization for exercising this right, a difference due to the unity of the will of the natural person and the multiplicity of wills that make up the legal person, which makes the matter regarding the legal organization that regulates the exercise of the right to litigate by the natural person governed by its being based on the will of this person alone and not making his right to litigate dependent on the interference of other wills with his individual will. This makes this intervention a waste of his individual will, and thus undermines his right to litigation.[2274]

The Constitution guaranteed a fair trial, meaning that every legal dispute should have its judge, and that it should be decided by an independent and impartial court established by law, within which the opponent can clarify his claim, present his opinions, and respond to the statements or arguments of his opponents that oppose it, in light of equal opportunities for all of them, so that its formation, rules of organization, the nature of the systems in force before it, and how to apply it are a specific act of justice, a progressive concept that is consistent with the contemporary standards of civilized countries.[2275] publication January 18, 2001, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 843, rule No. 101, Case No. 181 of 19 Q issued in the session of March 4, 2000, date of publication March 20, 2000, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 9, Page No. 512, Rule No. 62, Case No. 81 of 18 Q issued in the session of April 4, 1998, Publication Date April 16, 1998, and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 1273, Rule No. 96, Case No. 64 of 17 Q issued in the session of February 7, 1998, Publication Date February 19, 1998, and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 1108, Rule No. 78, Case No. 129 of 18 Q issued in the session of January 3, 1998, Publication Date January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 1077, Rule No. 75, Case No. 79 of 18 Q issued in the session of December 6, 1997, Publication Date December 18, 1997 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1022, rule No. 70, case No. 9 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 22, 1997, date of publication April 3, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 522, rule No. 33, case No. 62 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 15, 1997, date of publication March 27, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 488, rule No. 31, case No. 74 of 17 Q issued in the session of March 1, 1997, date of publication March 13, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 437, rule No. 28, case No. 22 of 17 Q issued in the session of February 3, 1996, date of publication February 17, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 446, rule No. 26, case No. 15 of year 17 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 316, rule No. 18, case No. 39 of year 15 Q issued in the session of February 4, 1995, date of publication March 6, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 511, rule No. 35.

---

([2272]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 129 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1077, rule No. 75.

([2273]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 231 of 20 Q, issued in the session of March 7, 2004, date of publication March 18, 2004, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 371, rule No. 60.

([2274]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 98 of 20 Q issued in the session of December 15, 2002, date of publication December 26, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 786, rule No. 113, Case No. 193 of 23 Q issued in the session of December 15, 2002, date of publication December 26, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 810, rule No. 118, Case No. 6 of 24 Q issued in the session of September 22, 2002, date of publication October 24, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 607, rule No. 88.

([2275]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 26 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2008, date of publication January 27, 2008, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 809, rule No. 81, Case No. 8 of 8 Q

The Constitution requires that every judicial dispute have its judge and places an obligation on the State to provide every individual - whether national or foreign - with easy access to its courts, ensuring the basic guarantees necessary for the effective administration of justice in accordance with its levels in civilized countries.

The rights that derive their existence from legal texts necessarily require - and in order to require - a request for protection that the constitution or the legislator guarantees for them, considering that mere access to the judiciary is not considered sufficient to guarantee them, but rather this access must always be coupled with the removal of obstacles that prevent the settlement of situations arising from aggression against them, especially those that take the form of complex procedural forms, so that the state provides the dispute at the end of its journey with a fair solution based on the impartiality and independence of the court, and ensures that the judicial organization is not used as a tool for discrimination against a specific group or for prejudice against it. This settlement is what the opponent seeks to obtain as the judicial satisfaction that he requests to confront the violation of the rights that he claims. This satisfaction - assuming its legitimacy and consistency with the provisions of the constitution - is integrated into the right to litigation and is considered one of its complements.[2276]

The legislator may not reduce the role of judicial litigation, in which guaranteeing the right to it and access to it is considered the only way to exercise the right to litigation, nor may he strip this litigation of judicial satisfaction, the waste or belittling of which is considered a violation of the protection that the constitution guarantees for all rights.[2277]

The legislator's authority in regulating the right to litigation is discretionary, unless the constitution restricts it with certain controls that are considered a limit to it and prevent its release. Its essence is the comparison that he makes between the various alternatives related to the subject of the regulation to choose the most appropriate for its content, the most deserving of achieving the purposes that he seeks, and the most likely to fulfill the most weighty interests, giving preference to what he sees as the most appropriate for the interests of the group, and the closest to guaranteeing the most weighty of these interests. There is no restriction on the legislator's exercise of this authority except that the constitution itself has imposed specific controls regarding its exercise that are considered boundaries that must be adhered to.[2278] issued in the session of March 7, 1992, date of publication April 2, 1992, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 224, rule No. 26.

---

([2276]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 152 of 20 Q issued in the session of June 3, 2000, date of publication June 17, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 627, rule No. 74, Case No. 34 of 16 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 763, rule No. 49, Case No. 98 of 4 Q issued in the session of March 5, 1994, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 198, rule No. 19.

([2277]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 81 of 18 Q, issued in the session of April 4, 1998, date of publication April 16, 1998, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1273, rule No. 96.

([2278]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 36 of 19 Q issued in the session of December 13, 2014, date of publication December 22, 2014, Case No. 10 of 22 Q issued in the session of June 11, 2006, date of publication June 13, 2006, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 2625, rule No. 418, Case No. 46 of 20 Q issued in the session of April 4, 2004, date of publication April 15, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 531, rule No. 88, Case No. 64 of 21 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2004, date of publication March 18, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 390, rule No. 63, Case No. 123 of 22 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2003, date of publication January 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 868, rule No. 127, Case No. 161 of 22 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 868, rule No. 127, Case No. 47 of 17 Q issued in the session of January 4, 1997, date of publication January 16, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 223, rule No. 16, Case No. 38 of 16 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 169, rule No. 12.

The right to litigation is one of the constitutional rights that the legislator may intervene in, within the scope of his discretionary authority, by organizing it in a manner that ensures the achievement of its purpose, which is to achieve justice and return rights to their owners, without this organization exceeding the limits of its purpose, turning into a restriction that undermines the constitutional right in its original content or the essence of its existence.[2279]

The legislative organization of the right to litigation is not bound by rigid forms that the legislator does not deviate from, and whose molds are emptied into a deaf image that cannot be changed. Rather, the legislator may vary between them by deciding for each case what is appropriate for it, in light of the advanced concepts required by the situations in which this right is exercised, and in a manner that does not reach the point of wasting it, so that this organization remains flexible and meets the requirements of judicial litigation, so that it is not an excess that releases judicial litigation from its shackles, deviating from its objectives, nor a neglect that is contrary to its requirements. Rather, between these two matters there is a basis, in commitment to its purposes, considering it a form of judicial protection of the right in its most moderate form.[2280]

The legislator may choose from the procedural forms for enforcing the right to resort to the judiciary what, in his objective assessment, is most consistent with the nature of the dispute that is entrusted to be decided by a court or body with judicial jurisdiction, without prejudice to its main guarantees that ensure that rights are delivered to their owners according to specific rules that are fair in themselves.[2281]

The legislator is not bound by specific procedural forms that extend to all disputes, even if their subject matter differs, since the procedural organization of the judicial dispute cannot reflect rigid, uniform patterns for the framework for its adjudication, otherwise it would be drowning in formalism, even if its sterility is apparent. Rather, the legislator must always differentiate

---

([2279]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 11 of 24 Q issued in the session of May 9, 2004, date of publication June 10, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 757, rule No. 127, Case No. 98 of 20 Q issued in the session of December 15, 2002, date of publication December 26, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 786, rule No. 113, Case No. 193 of 23 Q issued in the session of December 15, 2002, date of publication December 26, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 810, rule No. 118, Case No. 6 of 24 Q issued in the session of September 22, 2002, date of publication October 24, 2002, published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 607, rule No. 88.

([2280]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 163 of 26 Q issued in the session of December 2, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 749, rule No. 74, Case No. 17 of 26 Q issued in the session of April 15, 2007, date of publication April 19, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 328, rule No. 35, Case No. 167 of 27 Q issued in the session of April 15, 2007, date of publication April 19, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 369, rule No. 37, Case No. 10 of 22 Q issued in the session of June 11, 2006, date of publication June 13, 2006 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 2625 Rule No. 418, Case No. 69 of 22 Q issued in the session of February 13, 2005, date of publication March 10, 2005, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1355, Rule No. 228, Case No. 15 of 24 Q issued in the session of May 9, 2004, date of publication June 10, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 764, Rule No. 128, Case No. 64 of 21 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2004, date of publication March 18, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 390, Rule No. 63, Case No. 129 of 22 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2003, date of publication January 29, 2003 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 887, rule No. 129, case No. 65 of 17 Q issued in the session of February 1, 1997, date of publication February 13, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 368, rule No. 24, case No. 47 of 17 Q issued in the session of January 4, 1997, date of publication January 16, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 223, rule No. 16, case No. 38 of 16 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 169, rule No. 12, case No. 32 of 16 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1997 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 240, rule No. 14.

([2281]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Cases No. 185, 186 of 25 Q issued in the session of June 11, 2006, date of publication June 13, 2006, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 2656, rule No. 421, Case No. 101 of 22 Q issued in the session of April 13, 2003, date of publication April 24, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1016, rule No. 147, Case No. 102 of 12 Q issued in the session of June 19, 1993, date of publication July 8, 1993, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 343, rule No. 29.

between the form of this organization, to choose from it what is appropriate to the characteristics of the disputes to which it relates, and their procedural requirements, so that the forms required to enforce the right to litigation are multiple, without prejudice to its dimensions guaranteed by the Constitution, especially from the perspective of its main guarantees that represent a vital framework for preserving rights of all kinds.[2282]

The meaning of the right to litigation is that every dispute - in the end - has a fair solution, which represents the judicial satisfaction required to repel the aggression against the claimed rights.[2283]

The right to litigation has an ultimate goal that it seeks, represented by the judicial satisfaction that litigants struggle to obtain in order to compensate for the damages that have befallen them as a result of the aggression against the rights they seek. If the legislator burdens it with restrictions that make it difficult to obtain, or prevent it, this is a breach of the protection that the constitution has guaranteed for this right, and a denial of the facts of justice in the essence of its features. Without coupling judicial satisfaction with the means of implementing it and compelling those obligated to it to submit to it, this satisfaction becomes scattered in vain, and loses its value from a practical perspective.[2284]

There is no contradiction between the right to litigation as an authentic constitutional right and its legislative regulation, provided that the legislator does not use this regulation as a means to prohibit or waste this right.[2285]

([2282]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 47 of 22 Q, issued in the session of February 10, 2002, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 157, Rule No. 29.

([2283]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 148 of 28 Q issued in the session of July 6, 2008, date of publication July 26, 2008, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 1154, rule No. 118, Case No. 129 of 22 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2003, date of publication January 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 887, rule No. 129, Case No. 181 of 19 Q issued in the session of March 4, 2000, date of publication March 20, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 512, rule No. 62, Case No. 133 of 19 Q issued in the session of April 3, 1999, date of publication April 15, 1999, published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 237, rule No. 30, case No. 83 of 20 Q issued in the session of December 5, 1998, date of publication December 10, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 109, rule No. 15, case No. 162 of 19 Q issued in the session of March 7, 1998, date of publication March 19, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 1103, rule No. 133.

([2284]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 140 of 27 Q issued in the session of May 13, 2007, date of publication May 21, 2007, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 428, rule No. 42, Case No. 64 of 21 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2004, date of publication March 18, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 390, rule No. 63, Case No. 380 of 23 Q issued in the session of May 11, 2003, date of publication May 29, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 1112, rule No. 161, Case No. 65 of 18 Q issued in the session of January 6, 2001, date of publication January 18, 2001, published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 814, rule No. 98, case No. 65 for the year 18 Q issued in the session of January 6, 2001, date of publication January 18, 2001 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 814, rule No. 98, case No. 33 for the year 21 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2000 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 763, rule No. 91, case No. 181 for the year 19 Q issued in the session of March 4, 2000, date of publication March 20, 2000 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 512, rule No. 62, case No. 104 for the year 20 Q issued in the session of July 3, 1999, date of publication July 15, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9 Page No. 316 Rule No. 39, Case No. 145 of 19 Q issued in the session of June 6, 1998, date of publication June 18, 1998, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1423 Rule No. 109, Case No. 37 of 18 Q issued in the session of April 4, 1998, date of publication April 16, 1998, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1260 Rule No. 95.

([2285]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 8 of 28 Q issued in the session of June 10, 2007, date of publication June 17, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 523, rule No. 49, Case No. 167 of 27 Q issued in the session of April 15, 2007, date of publication April 19, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 369, rule No. 37, Case No. 306 of 24 Q issued in the session of December 11, 2005, date of publication December 29, 2005 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 2098, rule No. 342, Case No. 174 of 24 Q issued in the session of January 9, 2005, date of publication January 24, 2005 and published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1299, rule No. 218, case No. 15 of year 24 Q issued in the session of May 9,

The Constitution did not stop at establishing the right to litigation for all people as an authentic constitutional principle, but rather went beyond that to establishing the principle of prohibiting the text in the laws to protect any administrative action or decision from judicial oversight, and made this right an ultimate goal that it seeks, represented by judicial satisfaction, which litigants struggle to obtain, to compensate for the damages that have befallen them as a result of the aggression against the rights that they demand. If the legislator burdens it with restrictions that make it difficult to obtain or prevent it, this would be a breach of the protection that the Constitution has guaranteed for this right, and a denial of the facts of justice in the essence of its features.[2286]

Denying or restricting the right to judicial satisfaction, whether by withholding it from those who initially request it, or by presenting it slackly and slowly without justification, or surrounding it with procedural rules that are fundamentally flawed in themselves, is considered a waste or belittling of the protection imposed by the constitution or law for the rights that have been violated, which undermines the essence of this satisfaction and does not push it to its full extent, so that this is purely an aggression against the right to litigation that dissolves into a denial of justice in its most specific components, provided that it is understood that this denial is not based in its content on a mere error in applying the law, but rather is a failure to provide judicial satisfaction itself, especially whenever the judicial means that the legislator has made available to the opponents do not provide the one who has exhausted them with the necessary protection to preserve the rights that he claims, or his pursuit of his opponent to obtain the judicial satisfaction that he hopes for is futile.[2287]

The legislator's organization of the trial of children accused of committing felonies before the Children's Court, with its formation stipulated in the law and its jurisdiction to consider felonies in which the child is accused, is considered the natural judge according to the civilized vision of

---

2004, date of publication June 10, 2004 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 764, rule No. 128, case No. 242 of year 23 Q issued in the session of April 4, 2004, date of publication April 15, 2004 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 610, rule No. 99, case No. 231 of year 20 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2004, date of publication March 18, 2004 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 371, rule No. 60, case No. 101 of year 22 Q issued in the session of April 13, 2003, date of publication April 24, 2003, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page 1016, rule No. 147, Case No. 69 of 23 Q issued in the session of December 15, 2002, date of publication December 26, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page 777, rule No. 112, Case No. 219 of 21 Q issued in the session of September 22, 2002, date of publication October 24, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page 638, rule No. 93, Case No. 148 of 22 Q issued in the session of June 9, 2002, date of publication June 20, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page 426, rule No. 66, Case No. 47 of 22 Q issued In the session of February 10, 2002, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 157, rule No. 29.

([2286]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 77 of 22 Q issued in the session of July 6, 2008, date of publication July 26, 2008, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 1133, rule No. 116

Therefore, the Supreme Constitutional Court ruled to reject the unconstitutionality of the text of the first paragraph of Article 210 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which limits the right to appeal to the order that there is no basis for filing a criminal lawsuit to the plaintiff in the civil right alone, without the victim who did not file a civil lawsuit. This is due to the difference in the legal status of each of them - considering that the first is the person who was harmed by the crime, and wanted to exercise his civil right himself in addition to the criminal right that he represents and that the Public Prosecution exercises. As for the second, although he was harmed in this way, he left the matter to the Public Prosecution as a representative of society, so he did not file a civil suit, and it was available to him, so he himself dropped the right that the law granted him. In addition, the legislator did not deprive the victim who did not file a civil suit of the right to object to the issued order that there is no reason to file a lawsuit, and granted him the right to appeal to the presidential authorities in the Public Prosecution, and also granted the Attorney General the authority to issue a judicial decision to cancel the order within the three-month period following its issuance, the Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 141 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 4, 2009, date of publication January 17, 2009, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 1264, Rule No. 128.

([2287]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 15 of 17 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 316, rule No. 18, Case No. 5 of 15 Q issued in the session of December 17, 1994, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 918, rule No. 19.

children's criminality and delinquency. The legislator sought, by establishing these texts, a legitimate public interest based on objective foundations that justify the provisions they contain. Therefore, the claim of breaching the guarantee of a fair trial and the right to defense is unfounded.

Children's criminality has a special nature, and the precautionary measures and penalties that may be imposed on them do not aim to cause pain as much as they aim to correct it. Their falling into the abyss of crime is not due - in most cases - to evil souls as much as it is the result of environmental and social circumstances that contributed to pushing them to do so. Therefore, the legal status of a child accused of a felony differs from that of a non-child accused of the same felony, which provides a logical justification for the difference in the court competent to try each of them, as well as the difference in the procedures followed in the trial. Thus, the child's court, with its formation and the procedures followed before it in accordance with the law, becomes the natural judge for the trial of the first, while the criminal court or the Supreme State Security Court, as the case may be, is the natural judge for the trial of the second.[2288]

As for limiting litigation to one degree, it is necessary - initially - to distinguish between limiting the right to litigation to one degree on the one hand, and denying the right to it absolutely or in a restricted manner on the other hand.[2289]

The principle is that limiting litigation in matters decided by a single court does not contradict the Constitution, but rather falls within the framework of the discretionary power possessed by the legislator in the field of regulating rights, which frees him from being bound by any specific forms or rigid patterns that are difficult to change or amend, so that he may choose from the appropriate forms and procedures for enforcing this right what, in his objective assessment, is most consistent with the nature of the dispute that is entrusted to decide by a court or body with judicial jurisdiction, without prejudice to the basic guarantees in litigation.[2290]

It is something that the legislator is independent in his assessment, taking into account two matters: First: that this limitation be based on objective foundations dictated by the nature of the dispute and the characteristics of the rights raised therein; Second: that the single-level court or body be a court or body with judicial jurisdiction in terms of its formation, guarantees, and the rules in force before it; and that the legislator has entrusted it with adjudicating all elements of the dispute - factual and legal - so that it does not have to review what another party concludes; and that whenever the legislator has guaranteed the right to litigate for any claimant, regardless of its value, and the foundations that he has decided to limit the right to litigate for some claims to a single level are objective foundations that have what justifies them from sound judicial and practical logic and that he has undertaken all of this within the scope of his discretionary authority in organizing the right to litigate; and since litigation in itself is not an end but rather a means to reach judicial satisfaction by giving each person his right through specific rules that

---

([2288]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 47 of 22 Q, issued in the session of February 10, 2002, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 157, Rule No. 29.

([2289]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 102 of 12 Q, issued in the session of June 19, 1993, date of publication July 8, 1993, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 343, rule No. 29.

([2290]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 15 of 24 Q issued in the session of May 9, 2004, date of publication June 10, 2004, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 764, rule No. 128, Case No. 219 of 21 Q issued in the session of September 22, 2002, date of publication October 24, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 638, rule No. 93, Case No. 148 of 22 Q issued in the session of June 9, 2002, date of publication June 20, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 426, rule No. 66, Case No. 13 of 13 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1993, date of publication February 18, 1993, published in the second part From the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 206, Rule No. 16, Case No. 18 of 12 Q issued in the session of November 7, 1992, publication date December 3, 1992, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 56, Rule No. 6.

the constitution has guaranteed, then there is no contradiction between guaranteeing the right to litigate and organizing it legislatively.[2291]

In contrast to the above, the legislator may establish a court or body with judicial jurisdiction to adjudicate legal issues related to a particular dispute and no other, as a response on its part to a decision issued by an administrative body when it adjudicated it, as this is considered a denial of the right to resort to the judiciary, given that adjudicating the factual elements of the dispute is up to an administrative body that does not necessarily have the basic elements and guarantees of litigation. It is also necessary to distinguish between limiting the right to litigation to one degree on the one hand, and on the other hand, since this multiplicity - when evidence of it is available from the legislative texts themselves - is considered negating - and obviously - due to the lack of its being limited to one degree, and is always achieved when an appellate court reviews the rulings of the lower court in its factual and legal elements, and also when the judicial organization is headed and the top of its ranks is occupied by a court above them whose jurisdiction is limited to deciding on legal issues to establish them, even if appealing its rulings is impossible. [2292]

The legislator's intervention in setting a deadline for appeal is a form of the legislator's use of his discretionary power in regulating the right to litigation, unless that deadline is so short that it impedes the exercise of the right or makes it impossible or nearly impossible.[2293]

The state's commitment to bringing the judiciary closer to litigants seeks to ensure more effective protection of the right to litigation.[2294]

The opponents have no right to have a specific court consider their disputes.[2295]

Imposing fees on lawsuits does not include any infringement on the right to litigation, which the Constitution guarantees to all people and obliges the state to bring the judiciary closer to litigants and to expedite the settlement of lawsuits, because this does not conflict with the contribution of these litigants to the expenses of running the justice system in a manner that does not burden the access of rights to their owners.[2296]

It is noted that the legislator, in the text of the first paragraph of Article No. 210 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, prohibited the civil rights claimant (the injured party) from challenging the Public Prosecution's orders that there is no reason to file a criminal case in crimes committed by public employees and workers during or because of the performance of their duties, as it stipulated that: "The civil rights claimant may challenge the order issued by the Public Prosecution that there is no reason to file a case unless it was issued in a charge directed against a public employee or worker or one of the law enforcement officers for a crime

---

([2291]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 174 of 24 Q issued in the session of January 9, 2005, date of publication January 24, 2005, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 1299, rule No. 218, Case No. 219 of 21 Q issued in the session of September 22, 2002, date of publication October 24, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 638, rule No. 93, Case No. 148 of 22 Q issued in the session of June 9, 2002, date of publication June 20, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 426, rule No. 66.

([2292]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 102 of 12 Q, issued in the session of June 19, 1993, date of publication July 8, 1993, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 343, rule No. 29.

([2293]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 193 of 23 Q, issued in the session of December 15, 2002, date of publication December 26, 2002, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 810, rule No. 118.

([2294]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 11 of 24 Q, issued in the session of May 9, 2004, date of publication June 10, 2004, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 757, rule No. 127.

([2295]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 46 of 2004 Q, issued in the session of April 4, 2004, date of publication April 15, 2004, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 531, rule No. 88.

([2296]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 136 of 21 Q, issued in the session of May 5, 2001, date of publication May 17, 2001, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 949, rule No. 114.

committed by him during or because of the performance of his duties, unless it is one of the crimes referred to in Article 123 of the Penal Code.."[2297]

He objected to this text, saying that it violates the right to litigation, as it prevents the injured party from resorting to the natural of the judge to request compensation from the person responsible for the harmful act, in addition to retribution from him.

The Supreme Constitutional Court ruled to reject this objection on the basis that although the legislator has authorized the person who has suffered harm from the crime to claim civil rights during the investigation, resorting to the criminal judiciary to adjudicate civil rights is nothing more than an exception to the original jurisdiction of the civil judiciary to consider the lawsuit related to it. Therefore, the civil lawsuit pending before the criminal judiciary is subordinate to the criminal lawsuit, and the claimant of civil rights has the choice between resorting to one of the two paths, civil or criminal, if both are open to him. If the exceptional path is closed to him, his right to request compensation for damages arising from the crime remains before the civil judiciary, as an original right - not an exceptional one - which means that the principle is that the adjudication of the civil lawsuit is in the hands of this judiciary in its capacity as its natural judge. Therefore, the challenged legislative text does not prevent the claimant of civil rights from resorting to it to redress the harm he suffered from the crime committed by a public employee or user, since the path to collect civil rights before its natural judge remains open and his right to it does not lapse except by the lapse of the right in the lawsuit filed. To order it.

As for the claim that the plaintiff in civil rights is deprived of retribution from these people for a crime committed by them during the performance of their duties or because of them, the response is that the right to direct prosecution is only an exception to the principle of filing a criminal lawsuit by order of a judicial authority, and the legislator has closed - within the limits of his discretionary authority and for considerations related to the public interest - this path in the field of functional crimes without any waste of the right to prosecute their perpetrators criminally according to objective standards and in light of the evidence that strengthens and supports the accusation. If the above is the case, then the challenged legislative text does not violate the right to adjudicate civil rights to compensate for the harm arising from the functional crime or to waste the right to retribution from its perpetrator, which makes this entire objection unfounded.[2298]

12-1-3 Right to Equality Before the Courts - Equality of Arms

The principle of equality in a fair trial is manifested in the enjoyment by the holders of legal positions, i.e. the parties to the criminal case, of the same rights and freedoms. When one of them is deprived of these rights and freedoms guaranteed by the constitution, while the other ([2297] See: Article No. 210 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Article 123 of the Penal Code states that: "Any public employee who uses the authority of his position to stop the implementation of orders issued by the government or provisions of laws and regulations, or to delay the collection of funds and fees, or to stop the implementation of a ruling or order issued by the court or any competent authority shall be punished by imprisonment and dismissal." Likewise, any public employee who intentionally refrains from implementing a ruling or order mentioned above after eight days of being notified by a bailiff shall be punished by imprisonment and dismissal if the implementation of the ruling or order falls within the employee's jurisdiction."

The implication of all of the above is that the civil rights claimant (the injured party) may not appeal the order issued by the Public Prosecution stating that there is no basis for filing a criminal case in the crimes stipulated in Article 126 of the Penal Code, which is the crime of ordering a public employee or worker to torture an accused person or doing so himself to force him to confess. Likewise, the civil rights claimant (the injured party) may not appeal the order issued by the Public Prosecution stating that there is no basis for filing a criminal case in the crime stipulated in Article 127 of the Penal Code, which is the crime of ordering a public employee or person charged with a public service to punish a convict or punishing him himself with a punishment more severe than the punishment imposed on him by law or with a punishment not imposed on him.

([2298]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 19 of 8 Q, issued in the session of April 18, 1992, date of publication May 7, 1992, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 262, rule No. 30.

enjoys them, the legal text that established this discrimination is in violation of the principle of equality, in addition to its violation of the rights and freedoms that this text has wasted, which is what is called the principle of equality in arms L'égalité des armes.

The principle of equality in arms does not mean that the legislative text should determine the right to defense in the exercise of his rights, but rather it must include enabling him to exercise this right to the extent necessary that is consistent with the general requirements of a fair trial.

The Supreme Constitutional Court in Egypt referred to the principle of equality of arms, stating in one of its rulings that it is not permissible to violate, within the framework of a fair trial, the guarantee of defense, which equalizes the weapons of the opponents, and in light of which lawyers secure the interests of their clients and observe its limits in accordance with the principles of the profession and its requirements, and in a way that does not lower the controls of its practice to the point of wasting its objective levels, which adherence to which is supposed to be sufficient for their role as partners of the judicial authority in carrying out its mission.[2299]

The Constitution guarantees the rights stipulated in its core, protection from their practical aspects and not from their theoretical data. Convicting the accused of a crime exposes him to the most serious restrictions on his personal freedom, and the most threatening to his right to life. It has become necessary, when deciding on a criminal accusation, for the ruling to balance between the individual's right to freedom and the group's right to defend its basic interests, and to guarantee the concepts of justice even in the most serious and worst crimes through the objectivity of the investigation conducted publicly – and within a reasonable period – by an independent and neutral court established by law, and after presenting the facts in an abstract manner, considering that all of this is a primary guarantee that helps it to protect personal freedom, and it is not restricted except by sound legal means that no one is willing to commit to.[2300]

The controls of a fair trial are represented in a set of initial rules whose contents reflect a system with integrated features that seeks, through the foundations on which it is based, to preserve human dignity and protect his basic rights and prevents, through its guarantees, the misuse of punishment in a way that deviates from its objectives and achieves the ultimate purposes of penal laws, which are contradicted by the fact that the conviction of the accused is an intended goal in itself. Whereas the presumption of the accused's innocence of the criminal charge is always constitutionally linked - and to ensure its effectiveness - to procedural means that are considered closely related to the right to defense, including the accused's right to confront the evidence presented as proof of his guilt, with the right to refute it by means deemed appropriate in accordance with the law and in a manner that guarantees the accused's rights the minimum level of protection that may not be waived or diminished [2301]

In the context of a criminal case, it is noted that the position of the accusation differs from the position of the defense in various aspects. The defense has the right to be informed of the accusation and the facts on which it is based and to benefit from the principle of innocence. The accused also has the right to remain silent, and he also has the right, in order to refute the evidence of the accusation, to present illegal evidence.

([2299]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 9 of 16 Q, issued in the session of August 5, 1995, date of publication August 17, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 106, rule No. 7.

([2300]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 10 of 18 Q, issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 142, rule No. 9.

([2301] Appeal No. 15279 of 62 Q issued in the session of March 19, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, Page No. 343, Rule No. 57

See: Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 10 of 18 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 142, Rule No. 9.

On the other hand, the prosecution has the means of power to use, especially the powers of arrest, detention and precaution, but the prosecution authority is bound by legitimate evidence in its actions, and the prosecution must adhere to objectivity in its opinions and actions, which the defense is not bound to.

The accusation is not an enemy of the defense but must participate in balance with it during the trial in order to establish the truth to ensure the effectiveness of justice.

It is clear from this that what is meant by equality of arms is the balance between the rights of defense and the rights of the prosecution, so that the procedures do not turn into an ongoing accusation document before which the accused stands in a position of submission or obedience, which is considered contrary to the principle of innocence. The balance must be such that it protects the right of defense in the face of the rights of the prosecution. Therefore, the prosecution authority may not use the public interest as a pretext to attack and infringe upon the right of defense.

The principle of innocence reflects the balance that the Constitution has struck between the individual’s right to freedom on the one hand, and the group’s right to defend its basic interests on the other hand. Accordingly, the right of the Public Prosecution to present evidence of the accusation must be balanced by the guarantee of defense that equates the accused’s position with it - within the framework of the adversarial system of criminal justice - so that he can, through it, challenge its arguments and refute the evidence presented by it.[2302]

Criminal justice, in its essence, must be guaranteed through precisely and fairly defined rules, in the light of which it is decided whether the accused is guilty or innocent. This assumes a balance between the interest of the community in the stability of its security and the interest of the accused in not imposing a punishment on him that has no connection to an act he committed or that lacks evidence of this connection. Criminal justice must therefore not be separated from its components, which guarantee each accused a minimum level of rights that may not be waived or neglected, nor must it compromise the necessity for criminalization to remain linked to the ultimate purposes of penal laws.[2303]

The criminal accusation does not contradict organized freedom, and it is not permissible to adjudicate it away from the values of truth and justice, whose roots are deeply rooted in those principled rules that civilized nations have committed to and accepted as their behavior, even in the most serious and worst crimes. This means that personal freedom may not be sacrificed without necessity, and that the delicate balances that balance the position of the prosecution authority with the rights of its accused may not be violated, especially what relates to the accused’s right to be aware of the charge attributed to him, conscious of its dimensions, connected to its facts, perceptive of its evidence, and to be represented in person when it is decided, and to be assisted in defending it by a lawyer who manages his defense, so that only what is legally permissible from its evidence is accepted, and he does not neglect those mandatory legal means by which he can summon his witnesses and refute the statements of the prosecution witnesses after confronting them, for its structure is not sound, rather its coherence is disrupted.[2304]

([2302]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 6 of 13 Q, issued in the session of May 16, 1992, date of publication June 4, 1992, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 344, rule No. 37.

([2303]) Arab Republic of Egypt - Supreme Constitutional Court - Constitutional

[Case No. 49 - Year 17 - Session Date 6/15/1996 - Publication Date 6/27/1996 - Technical Office 7 Part No. 1 - Page No. 739 - Rule No. 48] - [Ruling of unconstitutionality].

([2304]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 58 of 18 Q, issued in the session of July 5, 1997, date of publication July 19, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 731, rule No. 48.

The accused's right to deny and reject the accusation is the minimum level of protection that must be guaranteed for his right to defense, so the French Code of Criminal Procedure, in Article 114, requires the investigator to inform the accused that he is free "not to make any statement," that is, to remain silent when being interrogated.[2305]

The procedural means that the prosecution authority has in its possession in the field of proving the crime are supported by huge resources that the accused falls short of, and are only balanced by the presumption of innocence coupled with a capable defense to ensure that he is not convicted of the crime, unless the evidence of it is exonerating from any suspicion that has any basis.

It is therefore not permissible to grant constitutional legitimacy to penal texts that do not have the means of defense available to both the prosecution authority and its accused, and their weapons are not equal in terms of proving and denying them.[2306]

Every crime created by the legislator has its elements that must be proven by the prosecution authority through presenting its evidence and convincing it in a way that removes all reasonable doubt about it, since it deliberately accuses a person of a crime it claims. To create a new reality that contradicts the assumption of innocence as an expression of the nature with which man was created and to which he has been connected since birth, and which cannot be violated by any will, regardless of its weight. Rather, it is removed by a judicial ruling related to a specific crime, and it has become final regarding its attribution to its perpetrator.[2307]

The implication of the presumption of the accused's innocence is that he is convicted of the crime he is accused of committing according to fair rules that do not prejudice his right to defense. The procedural rules by which the legislator regulates the adjudication of this accusation should ensure that each accused person has the substantive rights related to them and should not infringe upon them or affect their course or restrict their integrity, given that their purpose is to ensure that the individual is freed from the tyranny of authority or its abuse within a framework of organized freedom. There is no more firm and profoundly effective rule than that the accusation must include an adequate definition of the charge, specify its evidence, and be accompanied by a sufficient opportunity in the light of which the accused can present his view on it. While it is unacceptable for a person to be convicted of a crime of which he was not accused, this principle applies with equal force to every accusation without defense. It is not conceivable that the defense would be effective without a reasonable period of time to prepare

---

([2305] Appeal No. 15279 of 62 Q issued in the session of March 19, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, Page No. 343, Rule No. 57

In the same ruling, it was ruled that: The statement that obligating someone who engages in a criminal activity - such as drug trafficking - to notify or acknowledge engaging in that activity that requires punishment or accusing him of evading the payment of taxes due on his profits from that criminal activity - which he can avoid (i.e. the accusation) except by paying those taxes, which requires disclosing the punishable activity that imposed those taxes on his account, and this statement contradicts the principle of innocence and strips it of its content in practice, and is not satisfied with transferring the burden of his denial to the accused - contrary to the principle - but rather goes beyond it to obligating the accused to present evidence of his conviction with his own hand, which is a waste of the basic principles established by the constitution and a violation of personal freedom and the guarantee of defense, in the absence of which it is not permissible to investigate the incident that is the subject of the criminal accusation or convict the accused of it.

See: Appeal No. 17880 of 66 Q issued in the session of February 13, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20755 of 64 Q issued in the session of May 10, 2004 (unpublished).

([2306]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 64 of 17 Q issued in the session of February 7, 1998, date of publication February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78, Case No. 15 of 17 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 316, rule No. 18.

([2307]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 72 of 18 Q issued in the session of August 2, 1997, date of publication August 14, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 749, rule No. 49, Case No. 58 of 18 Q issued in the session of July 5, 1997, date of publication July 19, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 731, rule No. 48.

it, nor without informing the accused of the witnesses that the prosecution authority has prepared to prove its case, so that they can be confronted and challenged, nor by depriving him of the mandatory means by which he secures the appearance of witnesses in his favor whom he selects according to his choice and without restriction, regardless of their position in the authority they head or in which they perform work, nor that his poverty be a reason for denying him this right, nor that he be prevented from reviewing and discussing the documents submitted by the prosecution authority, nor that he be isolated from communicating with his lawyer directly or indirectly, whether that is during the stage of judicial adjudication of the accusation, or before it, or when appealing its final outcome, otherwise the right to defense becomes of limited value (of little value).

The right to defense is closely related to the criminal case from the perspective of clarifying its aspects, correcting and following up on its procedures, presenting the factual and legal issues that support the accused's position in a way that ensures their coherence, responding to what opposes them, and clarifying the truth in what is important of its points, especially through comparing between multiple alternatives, preferring the one most closely related to it, and the strongest possibility in the field of winning it, while supporting it with what is necessary from the documents that document it. Justice will not be easy to achieve or reach its goal, within the framework of a criminal accusation characterized by complexity, or the overlapping of the elements on which it is based, if the right to defense is absent, characterized by complexity, or the overlapping of the elements on which it is based, if the right to defense is absent, or limited to the stage of the accusation or how to decide it, without the stages of investigation in which the focus is - not on a crime whose facts and motives are still shrouded in mystery - but rather on a specific person suspected of committing it, surrounded by the party that is handling him with its questions and reservations about him.[2308]

The assumption of the accused's innocence is nothing more than a continuation of the human nature, and a necessary condition for organized freedom that enshrines its basic values, from which it is inconceivable that the group could be separated. It is also closely related to the right to life and to the pillars of justice on which all civil and political systems are based. Hence, the principle of innocence was part of the characteristics of the accusatorial system, necessary to protect the basic rights guaranteed by the Constitution to every accused, meaning that this innocence may not be suspended on a condition that prevents the enforcement of its content; nor may it be suspended through an accusation that is weak, nor may it be overturned either by exempting the prosecution from its obligation to prove the validity of its accusation, or through its intervention or that of others to influence without right the course of the criminal case and its final outcome. Rather, violating it - as an axiomatic principle - is an unforgivable error, a prejudicial error, requiring the annulment of any decision that does not comply with it.

Thus, the principle of innocence is considered an integral part of a fair trial, as it is supported by other elements that constitute its components, and together they represent a minimum of rights necessary for its administration, and under which falls the right of both the accused and the prosecution authority to have the same means by which their positions are equal, whether in the field of refuting or proving the charge; and these are rights that may not be deprived or marginalized, whether it concerns a person who is considered an accused or a suspect. All laws have approved it - not to protect the guilty - but rather to ward off the severity of the penalty prescribed for the crime that was mixed with suspicion of its commission, which prevents the certainty of its occurrence by those accused of committing it, since this accusation is not considered sufficient to destroy the principle of innocence, nor is it proof of the fact by which the crime is committed, nor is it an obstacle to proving it. Rather, this principle remains in place until it is overturned by a judicial ruling that has become final after it has encompassed the accusation with insight and foresight and concluded that the evidence of its validity - with all its components - was pure and complete.[2309]

([2308]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 64 of 17 Q, issued in the session of February 7, 1998, date of publication February 19, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78.

The presumption of innocence of the accused of a criminal charge is always constitutionally coupled - and to ensure its effectiveness - with procedural means that are closely related to the right to defense, including the right of the accused to confront the evidence presented by the Public Prosecution as proof of the crime, with the right to deny it by means deemed appropriate in accordance with the law, such as the right of the accused to confront the witnesses presented by the Public Prosecution as proof of the crime and the right to refute their statements and to abort the evidence presented by the denial evidence that he presents, and the right of the accused to summon his witnesses and not to be forced to make statements that testify against him (La protection contre L'auto incrimination.[2310]

The elements that make up the right to litigation are not complete unless the legislator provides the judicial dispute - at the end of its journey - with a fair solution that represents the judicial relief sought by the one who requests it to confront the violation of the rights he claims. The right to defense - in person or by proxy - is sought to be obtained through the means of defense by which the opponents present their evidence - in fact and law - in a way that does not discriminate between one another, but rather their weapons are equal in the field of the rights they claim. Then this satisfaction - assuming its consistency with the provisions of the constitution and the law - constitutes an indivisible part of the right to litigation. It is linked to the ultimate purposes that it works to achieve. This is supported by the fact that the judicial dispute is not established to defend theoretical interests that do not generate practical benefit, but rather its goal is to require a benefit that is approved by the law, and its reality crystallizes the scope of the disputed issues and the rule of law regarding them..[2311]

The right to defense is closely related to the judicial dispute from the perspective of clarifying its aspects, evaluating its course, following up on its procedures, presenting its arguments in a way that ensures the support of its pillars, responding to what opposes it, and managing a capable defense that clarifies the truth in what is important of the issues raised by the judicial dispute, especially through comparing between multiple alternatives, preferring the one most closely related to it, and the strongest possibility in the field of winning it, while supporting it with what is productive of papers.[2312]

If the plaintiff in the civil right and the accused are two parties in a single criminal dispute, and the two are considered to be in an identical legal position in this regard, then if the legislator grants the plaintiff in the civil right the right to appeal the decision that there is no basis for filing a criminal case, and deprives the accused of it, this would be a waste of the principle of equality, which contradicts the constitution. Moreover, depriving the accused of appealing the decision

---

([2309]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 29 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1042, rule No. 72.

([2310]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 10 of 18 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 142, rule No. 9, Case No. 28 of 17 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 262, rule No. 15, Case No. 25 of 16 Q issued in the session of July 3, 1995, date of publication July 20, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 45, rule No. 2, Case No. 49 of 17 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 739 Rule No. 48.

([2311]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 15 of 17 Q, issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 316, rule No. 18.

([2312]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 129 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1077, rule No. 75.

that there is no basis for filing a case confiscates his constitutional right to appear before his natural judge and wastes his right to litigate in order to obtain fair judicial satisfaction..[2313]

The right of the accused to be treated equally with other accused

The criminal judge, when exercising his discretionary power in imposing punishment on the offender, must individualize the punishment in accordance with the seriousness of the crime and the degree of danger of the offender. Complete equality between those sentenced in the amount of punishment requires the unity of legal positions in view of the seriousness of the crime and the degree of danger of the offender. Without this, equality before the judiciary is not achieved. The seriousness of the crime and the danger of the offender are an acceptable objective criterion as a basis for individualizing the punishment.

In application of this, the legislator, when he permitted the imposition of restrictions on the funds of some persons who, through the investigation with them, had sufficient evidence of their involvement in one of the crimes he specified, prevented them from managing or disposing of them, thereby distinguishing between them and other citizens, and even between them and other accused persons alleged to have committed other crimes, and all of them were included in one legal status, which is the assumption that they were normal, and the accusation - when it exists, and the mere investigation a fortiori - does not invalidate their innocence, nor does it differentiate between them in the rights they enjoy, since the forms of discrimination that violate their equality before the law - even if it is impossible to limit them - are based on any distinction, restriction, exclusion or preference, which exceeds the logical limits of organizing the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the constitution and the law, whether by denying the very existence of them or by restricting their effects in a way that prevents them from being exercised on a footing of complete equality between those legally qualified to benefit from them, and that the basis for imposing these restrictions is not even related to the issuance of a specific accusation regarding a specific person, but rather is based on the establishment of sufficient evidence from the investigation on If he is likely to be accused of one of the crimes specified by law, and this evidence is not confounded by the force of res judicata, and is not therefore considered an irrevocable judgment convicting them of it, then distinguishing between them and others - and the principle of innocence unites them - is contrary to the rule of reason, unreasonable, apparently arbitrary, and therefore contrary to the principle of equality established by the constitution. [2314]

12-2 Within the framework of international conventions

Guarantees of equality in the context of the trial stages involve several aspects. It prohibits the use of discriminatory laws and discrimination in the implementation of laws. It includes the right to equality before the law and the right to receive equal protection of the law; it also includes the right of every individual to resort to the courts and to receive the same treatment as others before the courts.

12-2-1 The right to equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law and everyone is entitled to equal protection of the law.[2315]

([2313]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 163 of 26 Q issued in the session of December 2, 2007 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 749, Rule No. 74.

([2314]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 26 of 12 Q, issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 124, Rule No. 8.

([2315]) Article 7 of the Universal Declaration, Articles 2(1), 3 and 26 of the International Covenant, Articles 2 and 15 of CEDAW, Articles 2 and 5 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, Article 5 of the Convention on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, Articles 2 and 3 of the African Charter, Articles 1 and 24 of the

The right to equal protection of the law prohibits discrimination, in law or in practice, in the administration of criminal justice. However, this does not mean that any difference in treatment is discrimination. Discrimination is limited to cases where the distinction is due to criteria that are illogical or far from objectivity, and do not serve the purpose of achieving a legitimate goal or are consistent with that. It means that judges, prosecutors and law enforcement officials have a duty to respect and protect the prohibition against discrimination.[2316]

States should review existing laws and draft laws to ensure that they are free from discrimination. It must monitor the implementation of applicable laws and regulations to ensure that they do not have any discriminatory effect. Laws must also be amended and practices corrected as necessary to eliminate all forms of discrimination and ensure equality.[2317]

Examples of discriminatory criminal laws include laws that allow for additional penalties based on the legal status of foreign nationals in the country; or that criminalize people who change their religion ;[2318]

or criminalize consensual sexual activities between adults of the same sex;[2319]

Or that pardons men who marry women they have raped; or that does not criminalize marital rape.[2320]

Examples of discriminatory procedural laws include laws that give less weight to a woman's testimony than a man's, requiring it to be corroborated; rape laws that allow the victim's sexual history and conduct to be used to strengthen evidence when it is not relevant or necessary to the case; and those that require evidence of sexual violence to prove lack of consent.[2321]

Examples of discrimination in the implementation of laws include prosecutions that specifically target an ethnic group;[2322]

American Convention, Article 11 of the Arab Charter, Article 14 of the European Convention, Article 2 of the American Declaration, and Principle 22 of the Principles on Persons Deprived of Liberty in the Americas; see Article 4(f) of the Inter-American Convention on Violence against Women, Articles 8 and 2 of the Protocol to the African Charter on the Rights of Women, Article 4(2)-(3) of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, Protocol 12 to the European Convention, and Article 67 of the Rome Statute.

([2316]) See the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers,. UN Doc Council of Europe on Violence against Women. §42 (2011) A/66/289.

([2317]) Article 3 of the International Covenant, Article 2(1)(c) of the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, Article 4(1)(b) of the Convention on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, Articles 2 and 8 of the Protocol to the African Charter on the Rights of Women, Article 7(e) of the American Convention on Violence against Women, and Article 4(2) of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women.

General Recommendation 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, Part 1A; Gonçalves v. Portugal, Human Rights Committee,. UN Doc 4/ §7 (2010) CCPR/C/98/D/1565/2007; Report of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, United States of America,. UN Doc § §19 (2009) A/HRC/11/2/add. 5 and 74; Recommendation 5 (CM/Rec) 2010 of the Council of Europe, §§1-§2, 4 and §46 of the annex; Report of the Fourth World Conference on Women, 20/§232 (1995) UN Doc. A/CONF/177 (d); see recommendation 25 of the CEDAW Committee, §7; and resolution 10/7 of the Human Rights Council, §8.

([2318]) See General Comment 22 of the Human Rights Committee, §5.

([2319]) Human Rights Committee: Tonin v. Australia, / UN Doc. CCPR 9-2/§ §8 (1994) C/50/D/488/1992, Kenya, / UN Doc. CCPR/CO/83 §27 (2005) KEN; Dudgeon v. United Kingdom (7525)/76), European Court (1981) §61 and §63; see also L. And. v. Austria (39393)/98 and 39829/98), European Court (2003) §44-§54; Salah and Others v. Egypt, Opinion 7/2002 of the Working Group on Enforced Disappearances,. UN Doc 2002) E/CN. 4/2003/8/Add. 1) p. 68-73 §27-§28.

([2320]) Concluding observations of the CEDAW Committee: Bolivia, / UN Doc. CEDAW/C §7 (2008) BOL/CO/4, Lebanon, §27 (2008) UN Doc. CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/3.

([2321]) See Article 54 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, CEDAW Committee General Recommendation 21 §8; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc. A/66/289(2011) §48; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Japan, §14 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/JPN/CO/5..

([2322]) Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Croatia, §12 (1999) UN Doc. CERD/C/304/Add. 55, and. UN Doc CERD/C/HRV §15 (2009) /CO/8; and Concluding Observations of the Committee against Torture: Bosnia and Herzegovina, §10-§11 (2005), UN Doc. CAT/BIH/CO/1.

and the disproportionate application of broad stop-and-search laws, or anti-terrorism laws that target specific groups;[2323] and the repeated arrest and detention of individuals because of their political opinions;[2324]

and the laws criminalizing adultery, which are applied mainly against women;[2325]

Failure to investigate incidents of violence against women and prosecute perpetrators, and to treat them as personal rather than criminal matters;[2326]

Failure to investigate possible discriminatory motives behind a crime [2327]

The United Nations General Assembly has repeatedly called on States to ensure that counter-terrorism legislation is non-discriminatory.[2328]

12-2-2 The right of the individual to access the courts on an equal basis with others

Everyone, including persons accused of criminal offences and victims of crime, has the right to equal access to the courts without discrimination.[2329]

The duty to respect this right requires States to establish courts, provide them with resources and ensure that they hold fair trials. These courts should be in places that are easily accessible to people in all parts of the country, including rural areas.[2330]

It should also be easily accessible for people with disabilities. States must also ensure that legal aid, professional interpreters and document translators are available to those who do not speak or understand the language used in court.[2331]

As well as witness protection programs, nationwide.[2332]

It must also ensure that procedures are easily accessible to persons with disabilities.[2333]

([2323]) See the Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, §37 (2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/4/26 and 98/2006/2005) UN Doc. E/CN. 4) §26-§27, 42-50, 72, 211/§23 (2009) UN Doc. A/64.

([2324]) Aminu v. Nigeria, (205)/97, African Commission (2000) §21-§22 and §27.

([2325]) Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc §74 (2011) A/66/289; see Amnesty International, Six-point checklist on justice for violence against women (Document number: ACT 77/002/2010).

([2326]) European Court: Obuz v. Türkiye (33401)/02), (- § §195 (2009) 202, Bevacqua and S. v. Bulgaria (71127)/01), § 63 (2008) and 8304; CEDAW Committee: A. T. v. Hungary, 2003/4/ § § 8 (2005) UN Doc. CEDAW/C/32/D/2 and 9/1-9/3, Tayag Vertido v. Philippines, 2008 / UN Doc. CEDAW/C/46/D/18 9/8-1/ §8 (2010); Lenahan (Gonzalez) and others v. United States (12). 626), Inter-American Commission (215- § 209 (2011); Concluding Observations of the Committee against Torture: Yemen, § 29 (2010), UN Doc. CAT/YEM/CO/2/Rev. 1.

([2327]) Natschova and Others v. Bulgaria (43577)/98) Grand Chamber of the European Court §162-§168 (2005).

([2328]) For example, UN General Assembly: Resolution 65/221, §§4 and 6(e) and 6(m), Resolution 66/171, §§4 and 6(f) and 6(n).

([2329]) See, among other standards, article 8 of the Universal Declaration, articles 2, 3, 14(1) and 26 of the International Covenant, articles 2 and 15 of CEDAW, articles 13(1) and 9 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, article 18 of the Migrant Workers Convention, articles 2, 7 and 19 of the African Charter, article 8 of the Protocol to the African Charter on the Rights of Women, articles 8, 24 and 25 of the American Convention, articles 12, 13 and 23 of the Arab Charter, and articles 6 and 13-14 of the European Convention.

General Comment 32 of the Committee against Torture, §8-§11; Goode v. Republic of Botswana (313)/05), African Commission §163 (2010); Rosendo Canto et al. v. Mexico, Inter-American Court §184 (2010).

([2330]) Concluding observations of the Arab Human Rights Committee: Jordan, (2012) §17.

([2331]) Principle 10 of the Guidelines and Guideline 3(f) §43 of the Principles on Legal Aid.

([2332]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §10 (Legal aid); Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 289/UN Doc. A/66 2011(§ 60 (73-100-101 (witness protection programmes); interpreters: Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Iran, 19-§13 (2010) UN Doc. CERD/C/IRN/CO/18, Norway,. UN Doc §16 (2003) CERD/C/63/CO/8, Romania, - UN Doc. CERD/C/ROU/CO/16 §19 (2010) 19; Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion 99/OC-16 §119-§120 (1999); Rosendo Cantú et al. v. Mexico, (2010) §185-§184; Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission (2009): Chapter §179 5.

The availability of effective legal aid plays a crucial role in whether a person can protect his or her rights, participate meaningfully in proceedings, or seek justice through the courts.[2334]

States must ensure that effective legal assistance is available to persons, in criminal cases, during the pre-trial stage, during the trial and at the various stages of appeal,[2335]

As well as in their efforts to seek redress and redress for alleged violations of constitutional guarantees, wherever they occur, for example in death penalty cases.[2336]

Prompt and effective access to courts requires respect for the right of the individual to recognition as a person before the law, a right that is violated, for example, when a person is detained outside the law, including during enforced disappearance.[2337]

Foreign nationals and stateless persons who are in the territory or subject to the jurisdiction of a State shall have the right to access the courts on an equal basis with nationals of that State, regardless of their status.[2338]

Women have the right to resort to the courts on an equal footing with men.[2339]

In this context, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women explained the following: “Some countries limit women’s right to litigation through applicable laws, limited access to legal advice, and inability to seek redress from the courts.

“Also, her position as a witness or her testimony in some other countries does not have the same respect and weight as a man’s. ”[2340]

The United Nations General Assembly has called on States to ensure that effective legal aid is available to all women victims of violence to enable them to make informed decisions about legal proceedings.[2341]

Among the prohibited obstacles to seeking recourse to the courts under international law are the issuance of decisions to grant amnesty or exemption from punishment for those convicted, or immunities that prevent the prosecution or imposition of penalties on perpetrators of war crimes,

---

([2333]) Among other standards, Article 7(f) of the American Convention on Violence against Women, Article 28 of the European Convention on Trafficking in Human Beings, Articles 18 and 56 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, and Section C(a)-(d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2334]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §10; see Golder v. United Kingdom (4451)/70, European Court (1975).

([2335]) See the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: United States of America, §22 (2008) UN Doc. CERD/C/USA/CO/6; Report of the United States Commission on Terrorism and Human Rights, (2002) Section 3(f) § 341 (1).

([2336]) Principle 3 and Guidelines 4-6 of the Principles on Legal Aid.

General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §10; Human Rights Committee: Currie v. Jamaica, 1989/2/ §§12 (1994) UN Doc. CCPR/C/50/D/377 and 13/2-13/4, Shaw v. Jamaica, 1996/1998) UN Doc.

CCPR/C/62/D/704) 6/ §7, Henry v. Trinidad and Tobago, 1997 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/64/D/752. 6/ §7 (1998).

([2337]) Report of the Inter-American Commission on Terrorism and Human Rights, (2002) Section 3(f)(341-343, (1); see Madou v. Algeria, Human Rights Committee, 7/§§7, 6/§7 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/94/D/1495/2006 and 8; General Comment 11 of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances on the right to recognition before the law in the context of enforced disappearances.

([2338]) Article 18 of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 26 of the European Convention on Migrant Workers, and Article 5 of the Declaration on Non-Nationals.

General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §9; Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, 223/§14 (2008) UN Doc. A/63; Goode v. Republic of Botswana (313)/05), African Commission § 163 (2010); see Yola v. Belgium (45413) / 07), European Court (40- § § 28 (2009)..

([2339]) Among a number of standards, Articles 2, 3, 14 and 26 of the International Covenant, and Articles 2 and 15 of CEDAW.

([2340]) CEDAW Committee General Recommendation 21, §8.

([2341]) Resolution 65/228 of the United Nations General Assembly, §12.

genocide, crimes against humanity, and other crimes covered by international law. Statutes of limitations for such crimes are in violation of international standards.[2342]

12-2-3 The right to equality before the courts

Equality before the courts is a right for every human being.[2343]

This right applies equally to foreign nationals and stateless persons.[2344]

This general principle of the rule of law means that every person has the right to access the courts on an equal basis with others, and that all parties to the lawsuit are treated equally without discrimination. This is "one of the basic elements of human rights protection and a procedural means of maintaining the rule of law. "[2345]

The right to equality before the courts requires States to eliminate discriminatory stereotypes that undermine the integrity of criminal proceedings. The composition of the judiciary, prosecution and police authorities should reflect the diversity of the communities they serve.[2346]

In addition, judges, prosecutors and law enforcement officials must be trained on the means of prohibiting discrimination and its various manifestations, and on the laws that punish it.[2347]

([2342]) Principles 4-6 and 18-19 of the Basic Principles on Reparation, Section C(d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Principles 7 and 14 of the Council of Europe Guidelines on the Eradication of Impunity; see Articles 2 and 6-7 of the Convention against Torture, Articles 6 and 8-10 of the Convention on Enforced Disappearance, Articles 1-4 of the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, Article 4 of the Genocide Convention, Article 7 of the American Convention on the Enforced Disappearance of Persons, the European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, Article 29 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court, Article 49 of the First Geneva Convention, Article 50 of the Second Geneva Convention, Article 131 of the Third Geneva Convention, Article 146 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and Article 85 of Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions. See: Human Rights Committee General Comment 31, § 18 and General Comment § 15, 20; Committee against Torture General Comment 3, § 40-42 and General Comment § 5, 2; Principles 19 and 22-29 of the Updated Principles on Impunity; Velasquez-Rodriguez v. Honduras, Inter-American Court § 172-176 (1988); Inter-American Commission: Consuelo Herrera et al. v. Argentina (50-§ 42 (1993) (10). 147 et al, Santos Mendoza et al v. Uruguay (51- § § 50 (1992) (10). 029 et al; European Court: Yaman v. Turkey (32446), § 55 (2004, Yater v. Turkey (33750)/03), § 70 (2009); Prosecutor v. Maurice Kallon and Brima Bazzi Camara (- 15 - SCSL-2004 AR72)E(AR16-AR72)E(), Appeals Chamber of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, Decision on Jurisdiction Challenge: Amnesty under the Lomé Agreement, SCSL-04-15-60, 13 March § 73 (2004) (from Annex 2); see also European Court: Asinov et al. v. Bulgaria (24760)/94), § 102 (1998), Kart v. Turkey (8917)/05) Grand Chamber § 111 (2009).

([2343]) Article 10 of the Universal Declaration, Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Articles 2(c) and 15(1) of CEDAW, Articles 2 and 5(a) of the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, Articles 12 and 13 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, Article 12 of the Arab Charter, Article 8(2) of the American Convention, Section A(2)(b) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67(1) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(1) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, and Article 21(1) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for the Former Yugoslavia.

([2344]) Article 18(1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, and Article 5 of the Declaration on Non-Nationals.

General Comment 15 of the Human Rights Committee, §§1, 7 and 9, 32; see Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, UN Doc. 223. A/63 §14 (2008); Advisory Opinion 99/1999 (OC-16), Inter-American Court, §119; Advisory Opinion 03/OC-18, Inter-American Court §173 (2003).

([2345]) See General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §2 and §8; Principle 5 of the Bangalore Principles.

([2346]) CEDAW General Recommendation 23, § 15; CERD General Recommendation 31, § 5(d) and 1(g); Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, § 289/§ 26 (2011) UN Doc. A/66 and 92; and concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Guatemala,. §8 (2010) UN Doc. CERD/C/GTM/CO/12-13.

([2347]) Article 7 of the Convention against Torture, Article 13(2) of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, Article 8 of the Protocol to the African Charter on the Rights of Women, Article 8(2) of the American Convention on Violence against Women, and Article 15 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women.

Principles 5 and 6(3)-6(4) of the Bangalore Principles; CEDAW Committee General Recommendation 19, §24(b); UN General Assembly resolution 63/155, §14; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc. 289/2011. A/66) §34-§40 and 94-96; Annex to Recommendation 5 (CM/Rec) 2010 of the Council of Europe, §3; General Policy Recommendation No. 13 (2011) (Rome) of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance, §§8(d) and 9(d), and No. 9 (2004) (Anti-Semitism); Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Bosnia and Herzegovina,. UN Doc

The right to equality before the courts requires that similar cases be dealt with according to the same procedures.[2348]

This prohibits the creation of exceptional procedures, courts or special categories of crimes or persons, unless this is based on objective and logical grounds that justify such distinctions.[2349]

It is impossible to speak of an objective and logical basis for subjecting a person to exceptional criminal procedures, or to trial by ordinary or special courts specially constituted to prosecute persons based on their race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, or on the basis of their national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status. Discrimination in the enjoyment of rights on such grounds is prohibited in international law, including, for example, in articles 2 and 26 of the International Covenant.

In principle, providing lower procedural guarantees in "political" criminal cases than those in "ordinary" cases cannot, for this reason, be compatible with the right to equality before the courts. In the context of terrorism-related proceedings, concerns have been raised about trials being held in courts with special procedures such as the exclusion of jury trials in Northern Ireland, or the trial of civilians in Tunisia before military courts that allow little scope for appeal. Concerns have also been raised about special tribunals (the US military commissions at Guantanamo Bay) that have tried only third-country nationals, in part because they violate the prohibition on non-discrimination and the principle of equality before the law.[2350]

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed concern that Israel applies criminal laws to Palestinians that differ from those applied to Israelis, resulting in prolonged detention periods and harsher penalties for Palestinian perpetrators of the same crimes.[2351]

It also raised concerns about discrimination in the treatment of rules of customary international law, and by courts applying the provisions of this law.[2352]

The European Court of Human Rights also clearly affirmed the principle of equality of arms between the accused and the public prosecution as a representative of the prosecution, and that it does not mean looking at the relationship between the public prosecution and the accused as a conflict relationship between them, but rather the principle is determined by looking at the interests that each party defends in most cases, which requires giving them the same attention.[2353]

First: The individual's right to be treated equally with others before the courts.

Equality of treatment before the courts in criminal cases requires that the defense and the prosecution be treated in a manner that ensures equality of arms between them in preparing and presenting their arguments on the case to the court.

---

§12 (2006) CCPR/C/BIH/CO/1; Japan, UN Doc. CCPR/C/JPN/CO/5 §14 (2008); Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Guatemala, 13 - §8 (2010) UN Doc. CERD/C/GTM/CO/12..

([2348]) Zimbabwe Lawyers for Human Rights v. Republic of Zimbabwe (2003/284), African Commission, §156 (2009).

([2349]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §14.

([2350]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: United Kingdom,. UN Doc CCPR/CO/73/UK(2001) §18 and;UN Doc. CCPR/C/GBR/CO/6(2008) §18 Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism: Tunisia, / UN Doc. A §35- §36 (2010) HRC/16/51/Add. 2; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 60/2005/§17-§19, UN Doc. E/CN. 4; see also A and Others v. United Kingdom, (3455)/05 ECJ Grand Chamber § 190 (2009).

([2351]) Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Israel,. §35 (2007) UN Doc. CERD/C/ISR/CO/13.

([2352]) Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Lebanon, §14 (1998) UN Doc. CERD/C/304/Add. 49, Rwanda,. UN Doc. §12 (2000) CERD/C/304/Add. 97.

([2353]) Referred to in the book: Marc Verdussen Arrêt Borgers of October 30, 1991, p. 342, 343.

Every accused person is entitled to be treated equally with other accused persons of the same status, without discrimination on any prohibited ground.[2354]

Equality of treatment in this context does not mean identical treatment; rather, it means that where the objective facts are the same, the response of the legal system should be the same, and the principle of equality is violated if the court treats the accused on a discriminatory basis or makes a prosecution decision on such a basis.

Violations of the right to equal treatment by the courts include: failure to assign competent defense counsel to those who cannot afford it; failure to provide a competent interpreter when required; and practices that result in higher rates of individuals belonging to ethnic or racial groups, or those suffering from mental illness, in detention facilities and prisons than their normal proportion in the community;[2355]

and disproportionately lenient sentences handed down to persons convicted of gender-based violence;[2356]

The impunity of law enforcement officials convicted of committing human rights violations, or the issuance of lenient sentences against them.[2357]

The European Court of Human Rights has also ruled that each party to the case must have a reasonable opportunity to present his case before the court in conditions that do not disadvantage him in relation to his opponent in the case.[2358]

Second: The right to a fair hearing of cases

The right to a fair hearing includes the minimum set of procedures and guarantees for a fair trial set out in international standards, but its scope is broader. This right includes compliance with national standards provided they are consistent with international standards. A trial may meet all national and international procedural guarantees, yet it may not meet the standard of fair trial.

The right to a fair hearing lies at the heart of the concept of a fair trial, and therefore every person has the right to have his case heard fairly.[2359]

([2354]) Articles 2(1), 14(1) and 14(3) of the International Covenant, article 15 of CEDAW, article 5(a) of the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, article 18(1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, article 8 of the Protocol to the African Charter on Women, article 8(2) taken together with article 1(1) of the American Convention, and sections A(2)(b) and (d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa; see articles 6 and 14 of the European Convention, article 2 of the American Declaration, principle 5 of the Bangalore Principles.

([2355]) General Recommendation No. 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination §§26 and 30; Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, 7/2006/§65-§67 (2005) UN Doc. E/CN. 4; Report on Terrorism and Human Rights, Inter-American Commission, (2002), Section 3(h) §398-§400(3) (interpreters); Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: New Zealand, §12 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/NZL/CO/5; Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Belgium, / UN Doc. CERD/C §14 (2008) BEL/CO/5; Concluding observations of the CEDAW Committee, Canada,. UN Doc §33-§34 (2008) CEDAW/C/CAN/CO/7; see Henry v. Trinidad and Tobago, Human Rights Committee, 1997/6/ §7 (1999) UN Doc. CCPR/C/64/D/752.

([2356]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Bosnia and Herzegovina, UN § § 12 (2006) Doc. CCPR/C/BIH/CO/1 and 16; Japan, / UN Doc. CCPR/C §14 (2008) JPN/CO/5; Concluding observations of the CEDAW Committee, Honduras, UN. §18 (2007) Doc. CEDAW/C/HON/CO/6.

([2357]) Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Colombia, §11 (1999) UN Doc. CERD/C/304/Add. 76; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Austria, § 20 (2010), UN Doc. CAT/C/AUT/CO/4.

([2358]) CEDH, 27 Oct. 1993, Sériel , no. 274; Gaz. Pal. 19 Juill. 1994.

([2359]) Article 10 of the Universal Declaration, Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 18(1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 13 of the Arab Charter, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Section A(1)-(2) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67(1) of the Rome Statute, Articles 19(1) and 20(2) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, Articles 20(1) and 21(2) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Yugoslavia; see Article 40 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 7(1) of the African Charter, Article 8 of the American Convention, and Article 26 of the American Declaration.

Fair consideration of cases requires an independent, impartial and competent court established by law. One of the basic criteria for fair consideration of cases is the principle of equality of legal opportunity between the two parties to the case. This means that they are treated procedurally equally throughout the trial. There is growing recognition that a fair hearing of cases also requires respect for the rights of victims, which they should exercise consistently and on an equal footing with the rights of the accused.[2360]

The right to a fair hearing in criminal cases is based on a number of specific rights enshrined in international standards, sometimes referred to as the "right to due process." These include the right to be presumed innocent, to adequate time and facilities for the preparation of a defense, to be tried without undue delay, to defend oneself or through legal counsel, to call and examine witnesses, not to incriminate oneself, to appeal against judgements, and to be protected from the retroactive application of criminal laws. However, international standards governing trial procedures make it clear that the rights mentioned represent the "minimum" guarantees that must be available. Observing each of these guarantees, in all circumstances and cases, does not guarantee a fair hearing of the case. But the right to a fair trial is broader than the sum of the guarantees individually, and depends on the way in which the entire trial was conducted.[2361]

The guarantee of a fair hearing of the case does not guarantee that the court did not make errors in its evaluation of the evidence, in its application of the law, or in its instructions to the jury.[2362]

Moreover, the violation of a right guaranteed by international or national law does not necessarily mean that the entire trial was not fair.[2363]

Human rights standards do not grant the accused the right to a trial by jury, but all trials, whether before or without a jury, must respect the guarantees of a fair trial.[2364]

While some treaties, including the ICCPR, may temporarily restrict certain guarantees of a fair trial during states of emergency, the Human Rights Committee has made it clear that a court may not, in any way, deviate from the fundamental principles of a fair trial.[2365]

Procedural guarantees for fair hearing should be ensured by law, and the courts should ensure the integrity of criminal proceedings.[2366]

According to the Human Rights Committee, "... A trial is unfair, for example, if the court tolerates the public in the courtroom acting in a hostile or supportive manner towards one of the parties in a criminal case, which interferes with the right to defense, or if an accused is subjected to other

---

([2360]) See the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, (ICC-01/04-135-tEN) Pre-Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Court (2006) §37-§39.

([2361]) See Advisory Opinion 90/OC-11, Inter-American Court (1990) §24; Inter-American Commission, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights (2002) Section 3(h) §399, 3; International Criminal Court: Prosecutor v. Lubanga, (ICC-01/04-01/06-102) Pre-Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Court, Decision on the Final Order of Disclosure and Confirmation of the Timetable (15 May 2006) ICC-01/04-01/06-102); §97 (2006) Appeals Chamber, Judgment on Appeal against a Decision Concerning a Defence Challenge to the Jurisdiction of the Court Pursuant to Article 19(2)(a) of the Rome Statute (14 December 2006), §37-§39.

([2362]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §26; see: Prosecutor v. Lubanga, (722) - 06/01 - 04/ICC-01) Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Court, Judgment on Appeal against a Decision Concerning a Defence Challenge to the Jurisdiction of the Court Pursuant to Article 19(2)(a) of the Rome Statute (14 December 2006) §30.

([2363]) See Prosecutor v. Momčilo Kranjićnik (IT-00-39-A), Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, (17 March 2009) §135.

([2364]) Wilson v. Australia, Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR 4/ §4 (2004) C/80/D/1239/2004; Taxquit v. Belgium, (926)/05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §83-§84 (2010).

([2365]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §11.

([2366]) Principle 6 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, Guidelines 12, 13(b) and 14 of the Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors, Article 64(2) of the Rome Statute, Article 19(1) of the Londres Statute, Article 20(1) of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal, Council of Europe Recommendation (12 CM/Rec), (2010), §60.

manifestations of hostility that lead to similar results. Other aspects that negatively affect the fairness of the trial include the behavior of jurors in a racist manner and the leniency of the judiciary towards that, or the selection of the jury in a manner that reflects the presence of racial prejudice. "[2367]

The International Criminal Court has confirmed that when it becomes impossible to hold a fair trial due to violations of the accused's rights, the trial proceedings must then be suspended.[2368]

Third: Equality between defense and prosecution (equality of legal opportunities)

One of the basic criteria for fair consideration of cases is the principle of equality of legal opportunity between the two parties to the case.[2369]

In criminal cases, where the prosecution finds all the state apparatus behind it, the principle of equal opportunity between the defense and the prosecution becomes an important guarantee of the accused's right to defend himself. It also ensures that the defense has a real opportunity to prepare and present its argument in the case, and to discuss the arguments and evidence presented to the court, on an equal footing with the prosecution.[2370]

The basic conditions for the application of the right to equal legal opportunity include the right to adequate space and facilities for the preparation of the defense, including the right of the prosecution to disclose all material information relating to the case.[2371]

These also include the right to a lawyer, the right to summon and question witnesses, and the right of the accused to attend his trial.[2372]

However, this principle does not require that the two parties to the conflict have equal financial capabilities or human resources.[2373]

UN human rights bodies have found that this principle has been violated, for example, when the accused has not had access to the information necessary to prepare his defense; and when the accused has not been able to properly instruct defense counsel ;[2374]

When the defense was denied the opportunity to call witnesses on an equal footing with the prosecution ;[2375]

([2367]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §25; Gridin v. Russia, Human Rights Committee, 1997/2/ §8 (2000) UN Doc. CCPR/C/69/D/770..

([2368]) Prosecutor v. Lubanga, (772) - 06/01 - 04/ICC-01), Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Court, Decision on the Appeal of Mr. Thomas Lubanga Dyilo against the Decision on the Defence Challenge to the Jurisdiction of the Court (14 December 2006) §37.

([2369]) Section A(2)(a) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, European Court: Cris v. France (39594)/98, Grand Chamber §§72 (2001) and 74, Zhuk v. Ukraine (45783)/05), §25 (2010); Prosecutor v. Tadić (IT-94-1-A) ICTY Appeals Chamber (15 July 1999) §43-§44 (1999); Situation in Uganda 05-US-Exp/01-04/ICC-02)) International Criminal Court, Decision on the Prosecutor's Applications for Leave to Appeal and Suspension or Stay of the Execution of the Hearing of Leave to Appeal (10 July 2006) §24.

([2370]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 13; Jasper v. United Kingdom (27052)/95), Grand Chamber of the European Court § 51 (2000).

([2371]) European Court: Jasper v. United Kingdom (27052)/95, Grand Chamber 51 § (2000); Foucher v. France (22209)/93, 34 § (1997); Prosecutor v. Tadić (1-A-IT-94) Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia 47 § (1999).

([2372]) See section 6(a) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Nahimana and Others v. Prosecutor (ICTR-99-52-A), ICTR Appeals Chamber (28 November 2007) §220 (2007); see Advisory Opinion 2002/OC-17, Inter-American Court §132 (2002).

([2373]) Nahimana and Others v. Prosecutor (ICTR-99-52-A), Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for Rwanda (28 November 2007) §220; Prosecutor v. Kordic and Mario Cerkez (IT-95-14/2-A, Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (2004) §175-§176.

([2374]) Wolf v. Panama, Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR 6/ §6 (1992) C/44/D/289/1988; Moassiev v. Russia (62936)/00), European Court §224 (2008); Barreto Leyva v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court (2009) §29, §54, §62-§63.

When the accused did not agree to a postponement of the trial due to the absence of his lawyer ;[2376]

When the accused or the defense lawyer is excluded from a hearing attended by the prosecution representative [2377]

The African Commission explained that the principle of equal opportunity between the two parties to the lawsuit requires that the defense be the last to intervene before the court before the conclusion of the pleadings for the court to conduct its deliberations.[2378]

The Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism has raised concerns about a number of cases in which individuals have been charged with terrorism-related offences without being given equal opportunities with the prosecution to prepare their defense. Noting the disproportionate access to resources for the prosecution and the defense, the Special Rapporteur cited, as an example, the failure to allocate sufficient financial support to defense lawyers in Spain to visit their clients who were detained in various parts of the country until their trial began. With regard to Egypt, he expressed concern about the restrictions on consultation meetings between the accused and their lawyers, both before and during the trial, and about the fact that defense lawyers were not allowed to review the case files until the first session of the trial, which made the right of the accused to adequate conditions for preparing an adequate defense merely ink on paper.[2379]

Chapter Thirteen: The Right to Public Hearing of Cases

13-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

The principle of public hearings has constitutional value, as it was approved by the Constitution, which states: "Court hearings are public, unless the court decides to keep them secret in consideration of public order or morals. In all cases, the verdict shall be pronounced in a public hearing. "[2380]

Through the publicity of the sessions, the parties to the dispute become clear about their rights and obligations in court to ensure a fair legal trial. This publicity contributes to ensuring the impartiality of those who are entrusted by law with the task of judging the case and guarantees citizens a means of verifying the guarantees of the trial. It is a means of monitoring the effectiveness of justice, as the publicity of the judicial procedures gives citizens a means of verifying directly or through the press the availability of the conditions in which the judiciary is

---

(2375) See Cantoral-Benavides v. Peru, Inter-American Court (2000) §127; Opinion 24/2008 of the Working Group on Enforced Disappearances (Syria), §27 (2010) UN Doc. A/HRC/13/30/Add. 1; Prosecutor v. Orić IT-03-68-AR73. 2)), Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Interim Decision on the Length of the Defence Case (20 July 2005) §6-§11.

(2376) Robinson v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee. / UN Doc. CCPR. 4/ §10 (1989) C/35/D/223/1987.

(2377) Becerra Barney v. Colombia, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc 2/ §7 (2006) CCPR/C/87/D/1298/2004; Zhuk v. Ukraine (45783)/05), (2010) §25-§35.

(2378) Lawyers Without Borders (on behalf of Bwambamye) v. Burundi (231)/99, African Commission (2000) §25-§35.

(2379) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism: UN Doc §27 (2008) A/63/223, Spain, 2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/10/3/Add. 2) §27, Egypt, §36-§37 (2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/13/37/Add. 2..

(2380 Article No. 187 of the Constitution.

conducted in their name, and this guarantee greatly exceeds the guarantees granted to the parties to the case.

The Supreme Court, which was responsible for monitoring the constitutionality of laws, concluded that the principle of public hearings is limited to rulings issued by courts in the narrow sense, and not by other judicial bodies. Therefore, publicity does not apply to criminal orders or disciplinary councils.[2381]

The principle of public hearings may not be excluded except to protect another constitutional value, which is either the protection of the right to private life, or the protection of public order or morals.[2382]

The Constitution has guaranteed the protection of the right to privacy in Article No. 57.[2383]

This was confirmed by Article 268 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which stipulated that: “The session must be public. However, the court may, in consideration of public order or the preservation of morals, order that all or part of the case be heard in a secret session, or prevent certain categories from attending it.” The basic principle in the law is that trial sessions be public, but Article 268 of the Code of Criminal Procedure permitted the court to order that all or part of the case be heard in a secret session in consideration of public order or the preservation of morals.[2384]

The Penal Code stipulates the punishment of anyone who publishes, by any means of publicity, a mention of what happened in civil or criminal cases that the court decided to hear in a secret session.[2385]

Paragraph 4 of Article 85 of the Penal Code stipulates that news and information related to measures and procedures taken to uncover crimes affecting state security from abroad, or to investigate or prosecute their perpetrators, are considered defense secrets. However, the court may authorize the broadcast of what it deems to be the proceedings of the trial.

Whereas the established constitutional principle is the publicity of trial sessions that citizens witness without discrimination, so that public opinion can follow what is happening in cases that concern it, and ignoring it leads to the invalidity of the trial procedures and the invalidity of the judgment issued accordingly, all of this unless the court decides to keep some trials confidential in consideration of public order or to preserve morals, or the law decides to keep the trial confidential for considerations it deems appropriate, as is the case in the trial of a child as stated in the first paragraph of Article 126 of the Child Law issued by Law No. 12 of 1996, the Child Law has prohibited the attendance of a child’s trial before the Child Court except for his relatives, witnesses, lawyers, social observers, and those whom the court permits to attend with special permission. This means that the scope of the confidentiality of trial sessions is before the Child Court only, not the Criminal Court, if the child is tried before it in the circumstances stipulated by law.[2386]

([2381] Case No. 17 of 7 Q issued in the session of April 1, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 1, page No. 166.

([2382]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 38 of 40 Q, issued in the session of January 4, 2020, date of publication January 13, 2020, page No. 60.

([2383] Article No. 57 of the Constitution.

([2384]) See: Appeal No. 28462 of the 67th year of the Q issued in the session of May 7, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 666, Rule No. 85.

([2385] Article No. 189 of the Penal Code.

([2386]) Article No. 126 of the Child Law, see: Appeal No. 7066 of year 81 Q issued in the session of January 26, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 155, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 29653 of year 67 Q issued in the session of March 10, 1998 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 388, Rule No. 53.

However, the presence of the civil claimant with his lawyer in the secret trial session does not invalidate the procedures because he is a party to the case and has the right not to be satisfied with the presence of his lawyer on his behalf and to testify to his case himself. However, publicity is the rule in trials, and secrecy invalidates them by law. The law's permission for them in consideration of the system or morals is contrary to the rule, and it is the right of the judge alone, not the right of the opponents of the lawsuit.[2387]

However, deliberation on judgments must take place in secret among the judges together, where the judges who heard the pleadings exchange opinions on the cases presented to them without supervision from anyone other than God and their consciences, so that each judge can express his opinion in complete freedom and the judge who divulges the secret of the deliberation is held criminally and disciplinarily accountable. The judge rules on the case according to the belief that he has formed in complete freedom without external influence, whatever its source, whether from the public or the media.[2388]

The mere absence of mention of publicity in the minutes of the session and the ruling cannot be a reason to overturn the ruling unless the appellant proves that the session was secret without justification.[2389]

Placing the accused in a glass cage or restricting entry to the courtroom with permits does not conflict with the public nature of the trial. The purpose of this is to manage the session and organize entry.[2390]

13-1-1 Electronic litigation

First: Introduction

The rapid development witnessed by the world in the field of communications and information technology has led to the emergence of the World Wide Web (the Internet), which is an interconnected and saturated network that connects thousands of networks, allowing communication in the form of exchanging digital information within a unified protocol between computers and networks located all over the world, which operate in various languages, and which has cast its shadow on all areas of life; as modern means of communication via the Internet have had the greatest impact on many aspects of social and economic activity and the emergence of e-commerce and e-government, as it has provided its users with many and varied capabilities such as shopping, advertising, concluding various contracts, and conducting all transactions without the need for movement or physical presence, so exchanging information and goods and making reservations and other things has become extremely easy, done with the least possible effort and time, until it has become the lifeblood in all aspects, especially commercial and economic.

This technological revolution also extended to include the legal field in general and judicial work in particular after many governments moved towards adopting the concept of e-government and

---

([2387] Appeal No. 257 of 47 Q issued in the session of January 9, 1930 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules No. 1, page No. 417, rule No. 370.

([2388]) Article No. 166 of the Code of Civil Procedure, see: Appeal No. 29653 of the 67th year of the Civil Procedure, issued in the session of March 10, 1998, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 388, Rule No. 53.

([2389] Appeal No. 1345 of 46 Q issued in the session of April 25, 1929 and published in the first part of the legal rules collection No. 1, page No. 282, rule No. 241.

([2390]) Appeal No. 23147 of 85 Q issued in the session of December 26, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 945, Rule No. 118, Appeal No. 44270 of 85 Q issued in the session of October 22, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 735, Rule No. 94, Appeal No. 2470 of 85 Q issued in the session of March 9, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 302, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 18637 of 84 Q issued in the session of April 14, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 360, Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 901 of 21 Q issued in the session of March 11, 1952 and published in Part Two of Technical Office Book No. 3, Page No. 562, Rule No. 209.

moving to the electronic environment. Hence, the need for the existence of an electronic court and remote litigation emerged, which imposes a new method in conducting procedures in lawsuits, by creating electronic means starting from registering the lawsuit, through initiating its procedures, and ending with adjudicating it and issuing the judgment electronically, i.e. (by relying on the international information network "the Internet").

Although many countries have adopted the concept of e-government, and thus most of the governmental, economic, media and community interactions and components have moved to the electronic environment, the judiciary has not achieved noticeable progress in most countries of the world, compared to what has been achieved by private sector departments and some government agencies. There are many Arab countries where judges still rely on paper writing to record procedures. Moreover, there are some ministries of justice that do not have an active website on the Internet yet; which has contributed significantly to the delay of cases before the courts, to the point that some disputes, even if few, remain before the judiciary for a decade or more. Hence, it was imperative for this important facility to keep pace with the development of society and interact with its developments effectively, which has made it important to resort to electronic litigation in the field of judicial work.

Second: The nature of remote communication technology in criminal proceedings

E-litigation means the use of remote communication technology and means in conducting trials. It is a modern term resulting from the tremendous development in communication means.

The use of electronic litigation in the field of trials is a technological revolution in the entire justice sector in the countries that have adopted it, including the European countries, and some Arab countries, most notably the United Arab Emirates, the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, Algeria, and Tunisia.

This is due to the fact that the use of this technology has achieved prompt justice, eliminated slow litigation, and many other advantages. It has also achieved effectiveness in achieving fair trial guarantees, the most important of which is that the personal presence of one of the parties to the lawsuit (whether the accused, the victim, the witness, the expert, or others) is not physical, but rather is achieved through participation via remote communication methods.

Therefore, the principle of presence in these trials is achieved through the visible presence of the person without his personal presence. This is done through the Internet, where direct communication is achieved through sound and image without physical movement between the parties to the dispute who are geographically distant and the court, and at a specific moment in time through the technologies of this network.

One of the most important electronic litigation techniques is the video conference technology, which has made it possible in the electronic litigation process to communicate via an electronic mediator, and the absence of the physical presence of the parties in the litigation procedures.

Third: Definition of remote trial

Remote trial means the use of modern technical means to conduct a judicial trial between parties who are not in the same physical space, where the trial is conducted through remote communication technology (Video Conference), meaning an audio and visual conversation between the judicial body and one of the parties to the lawsuit to ensure direct communication, despite being in different and distant places. [2391]

([2391]) D. Hesham Al-Balawi, Remote Trial and Fair Trial Guarantees, Public Prosecution Presidency Magazine, Issue 1, June 2020, p. 11.

Telecommunication technology is also known as an audio and visual conversation between two or more parties in direct communication with each other via modern means of communication, to achieve remote presence. [2392]

It can also be defined as conducting the trial in accordance with the legal and procedural requirements of the parties to the criminal case, so that the judicial body remains at its headquarters in the courthouse, by connecting it via electronic means of communication. [2393]

Fourth: The distinction between remote litigation and traditional litigation

Remote litigation is consistent with traditional litigation in the subject matter, as well as the parties to the lawsuit; both aim to enable the person to file a lawsuit before the competent judicial authority that considers the dispute and issues a ruling on it; electronic lawsuits are like traditional lawsuits, and differ from them only in the method of implementing the procedures. Within the framework of remote litigation, implementation is carried out via the Internet via a visual and audio medium, which distinguishes it from traditional litigation.

The trial via modern means of communication is also distinguished from the regular or traditional trial in that the personal presence of one of the parties to the lawsuit (whether the accused, the victim, the witness, the expert, or others) is not physical, but rather is achieved via remote communication technologies. The principle of presence in this type of trial is achieved through the visual presence of the person without his personal presence.

Fifth: Advantages of using remote communication technology in criminal proceedings

Scientific and technological progress has imposed a transition to a new reality that is consistent with the data imposed by the requirements of this progress, its laws, and the mechanisms for dealing with it. Compared to traditional litigation - which relies on manual work more than electronic work - the use of remote communication technology is characterized by many characteristics and advantages, the most important of which are:[2394]

Reducing the presence of paper documents and the emergence of electronic documents, as correspondence between the two parties to the litigation is done electronically, and these electronic documents are the only legal document available to the parties in the event of a dispute between them; this results in several outcomes, the most important of which is reducing the circulation and storage of paper files of lawsuits in the courts, and also reducing storage spaces in the court building.

Speed of implementation of litigation procedures, without the need for the parties to the lawsuit to go to court, which saves time and reduces congestion and overcrowding of courts and sessions. Through this technology, the parties to the case can access the court's website, view the case file, and follow it while they are in their locations.

Less file loss and higher level of security of court records, as electronic documents are more reliable and easier to detect any change or modification in them, in addition to the ease of accessing them.

Ease of viewing the case file remotely, eliminating routine work, such as moving to more than one place to file the case file, and ease of paying legal expenses; as electronic payment methods replace regular cash payment. The use of this modern technology in litigation also ([2392] This definition is included in Article 1 of the UAE Federal Law on the Use of Telecommunication Technology No. 5 of 2017.

---

([2393]) D. Omar Abdul Majeed Musbah, Fair Trial Guarantees in Light of the Adoption of Remote Communication Technology in Criminal Procedures in the United Arab Emirates, A Comparative Study, Kuwait International Law School Journal, Sixth Year, Issue 24, December 2018, p. 387.

([2394] Amir Farag Youssef, Electronic Courts and Electronic Litigation, Modern Arab Office, Cairo, 2014, p. 41.

helps raise the level of security in court records, as it is easy to detect any change or modification in them, in addition to the ease of viewing and accessing them at any time.

Rationalizing the financial expenses associated with transporting thousands of detainees daily to and from courtrooms, which costs the state treasury huge sums.

One of the most important advantages of using this technology is also protecting the security of witnesses, victims and informants, as there are some cases in which it is impossible to reveal the identity of witnesses, or victims of some crimes whose identity is preferable not to be revealed, as this technology allows them to be placed in other courtrooms and heard through the communication system without seeing their faces.

All these advantages have made this technology successful, which has led to an increase in demand for it in order to develop and accelerate the work of the relevant authorities in the justice sector on the one hand, and to save effort and money on the other hand.

In the event that audio-visual communication technology is used in trial procedures, special halls are equipped at the prison level with the necessary modern means of communication, and the same applies to courts, which are equipped with communication devices, large screens and loudspeakers, allowing all those present at the sessions to follow the trial, see the accused and witnesses, and listen to their statements and testimonies.

Although all the advantages of adopting remote communication technologies in trials make them of great importance in normal times, their importance increases and even becomes a necessity in exceptional circumstances that societies may experience, such as the “Corona pandemic,” which has made remote trials an urgent necessity to preserve the lives and public health of all those involved in the judicial process.

Sixth: The impact of the use of remote communication technology in criminal proceedings on fair trial guarantees

A- Introduction

International and national reports on judicial affairs indicate the weakness of the effectiveness of traditional judiciary and its inability to keep pace with the developing and renewed pace of economic and social life. It has been noted that the volume of civil and criminal cases before the courts has increased, which in turn has led to slowness in issuing and implementing judgments. This slowness in processing cases undoubtedly prevents the achievement of the ultimate goal, which is to reach a fair trial and issue judgments within reasonable timeframes.

Hence, the use of remote communication technology in criminal proceedings, as a new stage in the development of criminal proceedings, reflects the trend towards benefiting from technological data in the development of criminal proceedings, which in turn is reflected in the performance of the criminal justice system. The objectives set for this stage are not separate in their intellectual and philosophical context from the purposes of the previous stages, but rather are a natural extension of them. The use of communication technology as a modern means of remote criminal investigation and trial will remain subject to constitutional and legal considerations such as due process, the right to a lawyer, the right to be present, the right to confront and witnesses, and the principle of oral pleading is achieved through it, all with the aim of enhancing the guarantees of a fair trial. This is in addition to the impact of this technology on the speed of resolving disputes, which is a factor of security and stability; as the phenomenon of slowness in resolving lawsuits is a dangerous phenomenon that affects all members of society, and creates a defect in the justice system, and it had to be addressed, and the importance of using this type of technology in conducting trials became apparent.

Accordingly, we will discuss the impact of using remote communication technology on fair trials in terms of the speed of adjudicating cases within a reasonable period in the first section, then we will discuss the extent of the impact of this technology on guarantees of the rights of defense during remote communication procedures, in the second section, as follows:

B- The impact of using remote communication technology on achieving the rule of adjudicating cases within a reasonable period of time

The citizen's right to obtain his right within a reasonable period of time is considered one of the most important indicators of supporting the confidence of litigants in the judiciary and its members, due to its connection to the field of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the principle of reasonable time, which is a principle related to the rights and freedoms of individuals, and the assumption of the presumption of innocence. The goal is to ensure that the judgment on the fate of the individual is issued without any unjustified delay, as well as to ensure that his rights to defend himself are not infringed upon, since the passage of a period of time on judicial procedures may cause the details of the facts to fade from the memory of witnesses or become distorted, or it may be difficult to find them or other evidence may be damaged or disappear. This rule also aims to confirm the shortening of the period of anxiety and psychological stress that the accused suffers out of fear for himself and his fate and the suffering he suffers as a result of the stigma that will befall him socially, as a result of being accused of committing an unlawful act. Despite the presumption of innocence. The judiciary's resort to remote communication technology aims to speed up the pace of its work, especially when it comes to cases in which one of the accused or witnesses is accused in another case, and is imprisoned hundreds of kilometers away, so he is heard through modern means of communication in order to save the money and effort required to transport him to the courts.

C- The impact of remote litigation procedures on guarantees of defense rights

One of the most important basic principles in conducting a trial is that the litigation sessions must be public. The public nature of the sessions is the general principle in conducting trials. It is worth noting that the use of remote communication technology in the trial stage will not negatively affect the public nature of the sessions, but rather the opposite, as the trial procedures will be conducted with sound and image, and with high accuracy in front of all those attending this trial, so that everyone can keep up with the smooth running of justice, the plaintiff, the defendant, his attorney, the judiciary and the witnesses; as this is done in front of everyone, and even verifying the identity of the accused defendant in front of everyone, and in recording the case in the first session, and all these guarantees are taken into account and ensured; therefore, we find that publicity is achieved through this trial, as the trial procedures are presented to everyone in the courtroom through image and sound. Thus, the principle of publicity can be achieved in several ways; the public can attend sessions in more than one place. They can come to the hall where the judge sits and which has a large display screen or come to the distant rooms where the opponents are and follow the proceedings of the sessions. It is also possible to provide the opportunity for those who wish to attend a session to obtain approval from the judge of the session and go to the nearest court headquarters to him and watch the proceedings of the session via the court's internal Internet network, which connects the court headquarters to each other, noting that the judge has the ability to make the sessions confidential and limited to the opponents or their agents, when necessary.

As for the principle of attendance or confrontation between opponents, and the possibility of providing the opportunity for those present to watch these trials so that the pleading is public, just like any other, this is achieved using remote communication technology, and even more accurately than before the traditional judiciary, as the plaintiff will be in front of everyone, as well as the defendant on the screen, voice and sound, and identity verification will be conducted in front of everyone via the screen and with high accuracy, and his acknowledgment and the acknowledgment of his agent to conduct the trial remotely will be taken, and everyone will be able to monitor the proper course of justice by attending and watching everyone.

As for the extent to which the principle of orality is achieved in electronic remote litigation, there is no doubt that the wisdom behind the principle of orality is to apply the principle of confrontation between opponents - the principle of presence; so that each party to the lawsuit has the opportunity to hear and confront his opponent, and to be able to know what data and evidence his opponent has and discuss it, and also to allow the judge to form his emotional conviction through the arguments presented by the parties before him in the session. All of this has become possible to achieve in electronic litigation through the electronic medium represented by direct communication by voice and image via the Internet, without physical movement between the parties to the dispute and the court at a specific time, by using the technologies of this Internet network, the most important of which is the "videoconference" technology, which allows the possibility of communication via the electronic medium, and the absence of the physical presence of the parties in the litigation procedures when using remote communication technology.

Therefore, applying the principle of orality and confrontation through the use of remote communication technology, when confrontation is not possible - according to the traditional concept - is appropriate, more just and more capable of performing its function in adhering to the traditional concept of the principle of orality, with which it can be assumed that hearing oral statements is no longer possible, since applying the principle of orality of criminal procedures regarding hearing witnesses requires that hearing them is basically possible, as it has been ruled that the criminal trial must be based on the oral investigation conducted by the court in the session, and in which it hears witnesses as long as that is possible, and therefore the concept of electronic presence appeared when using remote communication technology.

One of the most important consequences of the principle of orality of criminal proceedings when using remote communication technology is the principle of its immediacy, i.e. its continuity without interruption, for those who give their testimony immediately on facts that may change over time. The witness’s confidence or hesitation is one of the elements that allow for assessing the extent of the witness’s truthfulness, and this goal cannot be achieved if the pleadings and deliberations are separated from the judgment by a period of time, as the impact of the criminal evidence presented in the court session against the accused and his methods of defense should not be dispersed.

However, there are several conditions that must be observed for the validity of the session, when using remote communication technology in criminal trials through an Internet connection, the most important of which are:

First: Verify the validity of identity and legal status

It means ensuring the physical presence of both parties to the dispute, by ensuring that they are online at the time set for the session, and their capacity in the lawsuit as a plaintiff or his representative, for example.

Second: Respect for privacy

Trust that the message, which may be an oral statement or a document, reaches only the recipient himself (the judge or the lawyer), and ensure that the message is intact and has not been altered or missing during transmission, and trust that it is legible in the linguistic sense, and in the legal informational sense, readable, audible and clearly visible.

Third: Ensure that the recipient of the message has the legal capacity and authority.

Confidence that he will not deny what he received and the timing, i.e. the time report, by day and hour, that the communication took from beginning to end, and in the legal informational sense: the period of the session.

The identity and legal status of the opponents or their agents can be verified behind the computer screen, when the dispute is held, by relying on some technical tools such as: password, personal identification number, encryption, etc.

From the above it is clear that

The concept of electronic litigation is a modern concept that emerged as a result of the emergence of modern technology that has entered all areas of life, including judicial work.

Electronic litigation allows judges to consider and conduct their judicial procedures using new electronic means that rely on electronic media technology.

The electronic litigation system offers many advantages to judges and litigants, as it saves time and effort, as it enables litigants to submit requests at any time and from anywhere by accessing the court's website. Therefore, neither the parties to the lawsuit nor the judges themselves have to go to the courthouse. This saves time and reduces the crowding and congestion of courts and sessions.

Applications are submitted and lawsuits are filed via e-mail, and data is exchanged electronically, and this data is usually signed by the owner of the editor or document.

The use of remote communication technology in the judicial field requires many necessary components and requirements without which it cannot be implemented, the most important of which is human energies, such as judges, clerks, administrators and technicians who are qualified and trained to use this technology in their field of work. Including mechanical or technical ones, such as computers, electronic programs, electronic records, in addition to the electronic court website, including technical requirements necessary to protect data and information by encrypting it in order to secure it from tampering.

6- The electronic litigation system also requires the enactment of laws and legislative systems that regulate and facilitate the work of judges in the court and at the same time provide technical criminal protection for it.

Seventh: Remote litigation in Egyptian legislation

The Egyptian legislator did not fully organize remote litigation, but rather all that the legislator has turned to in this field is the use of electronic litigation in considering pretrial detention renewal sessions. The Ministry of Justice announced in 2020 - following the outbreak of the Corona virus and under the pretext of taking into account public safety and health, and also in order to take serious measures to change the course of Egyptian litigation to digital litigation - the start of considering pretrial detention renewal sessions remotely via "video conference" technology, which means that the accused will not be transferred from his prison to attend the detention renewal session in person to be directly before his natural judge and lawyer, but rather the accused remains in his place of detention and watches the session through communication via one of the electronic devices, and that only the investigating judge and lawyer will be in the courtroom. This is according to what the Ministry of Justice stated, in order to save the costs of transporting and securing the accused to the courtroom, and to achieve prompt justice and speedy adjudication of cases.

The Minister of Justice issued Decision No. 8901 of 2021 to provide legislative cover for this experiment and then generalize it and provide legal protection for it. The text of the decision stated in its first article: “With due regard to all legal guarantees, the judges may hold hearings to consider the renewal and resumption of pretrial detention remotely using technology. "

Therefore, it is understood from the decision that this procedure should not be the basis for holding detention renewal sessions, but rather it has been given a permissible character if all legal guarantees are available. Despite this, the Ministry of Justice announced the generalization of remote pretrial detention sessions, and as a result, remote detention renewal sessions began to be held without the accused moving from their places of detention to the court.

13-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

The right to a public hearing is a fundamental guarantee of fairness and independence of litigation, and a means of protecting public confidence in the justice system.

13-2-1 The right to a public hearing of cases

All courts must hold their sessions and deliver their judgments in public, except in a few strictly defined exceptional cases. The right to a public hearing of criminal cases is also guaranteed by international standards.[2395]

Under the Arab Charter, this right is not subject to restriction in emergency situations.[2396]

While the African Charter does not explicitly guarantee the right to a public hearing of criminal cases, the African Commission has found that the failure to hold public hearings constitutes a violation of Article 7 of the Charter (on fair trial).[2397]

Moreover, the principles of fair trial in Africa include this right. The right to a public trial means not only that the parties to the case (and victims in jurisdictions where they are not parties to the case) are present at the hearings, but that the hearings are also open to the general public and the media. In addition to protecting the rights of the accused, this embodies the public rights to know and monitor how justice is administered and protected, and the rulings reached by the judicial system.[2398]

The right of the observer concerned to monitor trials and his right “to witness public hearings, proceedings and trials, in order to form an opinion as to their compliance with national law and applicable international obligations and commitments” is expressly guaranteed in the Declaration on Human Rights Defenders.[2399]

At least one court must hear the case in public, unless the case can be considered as one for which exceptions are allowed.[2400]

([2395]) Article 10 of the Universal Declaration, Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 18(1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 8(5) of the American Convention, Article 13(2) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Principle 36(1) of the Body of Principles, Sections A(1) and (3) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 26 of the American Declaration, Articles 64(7), 67(1) and 68(2) of the Rome Statute, Articles 19(4) and 20(2) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, Articles 20(4) and 2(21) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Yugoslavia; see Article 7(1) of the African Charter.

([2396] Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter.

([2397]) African Commission: Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224)/98) §51-§54 (2000); Civil Liberties Organization, Legal Defence Centre and Legal Aid Project v. Nigeria (218)/98), §35-§39 (2001).

([2398]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 28; European Court: Thiers and Others v. San Marino (24954)/94 and 24971/94 and 24972/94), § 92 (2000); Galstyan v. Armenia (26986)/03), § 80 (2007); Palamara-Iribarne v. Chile, Inter-American Court § 168 (2005).

([2399]) Article 9(3)(b) of the Declaration on Human Rights Defenders, adopted by resolution 53/144 of the United Nations General Assembly.

([2400]) Fredin v. Sweden (18928)/91, European Court (1994) §18-§22.

Where the case has been heard in public in the lower courts, the decision whether appellate court proceedings may be held in camera will depend largely on the nature of the charges.[2401]

13-2-2 Basic conditions for public review

A public trial requires an oral hearing of the prosecution and pleadings in the presence of the public, including the media, depending on the subject of the case. The court shall announce the date and place of hearings open to the parties to the dispute and to the general public and shall provide reasonable facilities for interested members of the public to attend such hearings.[2402]

The Human Rights Committee found that violations of the right to a fair public trial had occurred in criminal cases involving public figures. In one such case, the trial was held in a small courtroom that could not accommodate the interested public; a second trial was held behind closed doors.[2403]

The European Court concluded that the right to a public hearing was violated when the trial of a person who allegedly threatened prison guards was held within prison walls. This resulted in the unjustified obstruction of the public's effective participation in the session due to the lack of information on how to get to the prison, the conditions of entry, and the fact that the session was held in the early morning.[2404]

The right to a public hearing does not necessarily include all pre-trial proceedings, including those relating to decisions taken by prosecutors or public bodies.[2405]

The European Court noted that the right to a public hearing applies to proceedings in which a charge is decided, but not necessarily to hearings in which the lawfulness of detention pending trial is reviewed.[2406]

However, the Inter-American Court found that a violation of the right to a public hearing had occurred during the investigation phase of a case tried by a military court in Chile, in which several of the accused's rights had not been respected.[2407]

Even in cases where the public is excluded from attending the trial, the court's decision must be made public, including the basic facts, evidence and legal reasons for the ruling, unless the case concerns minors whose interests otherwise require it or the case concerns disputes between spouses or concerns the guardianship of children.[2408]

13-2-3 Exceptions to the right to a public hearing

The right of the general public to attend criminal proceedings may be restricted in a limited number of precisely defined cases, all of which must be explained for their reasons, as follows:

([2401]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 28; European Court: Thiers and Others v. San Marino (24954/94 and 24971/94 and 24972/94), § 95 (2000), Ekbatani v. Sweden (10563/83), § 31-§ 33 (1988).

([2402]) Section A(3) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §28; Van Meers v. Netherlands, Human Rights Committee, 1986/2/ §6 (1990) UN Doc. CCPR/C/39/D/215; Reyban v. Austria (35115)/97), European Court § 29 (2000).

([2403]) Human Rights Committee: Marinich v. Belarus, / UN Doc. CCPR 5/§10 (2010) C/99/D/1502/2006; Kulov vs Kyrgyzstan, . 6/ §8 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/99/D/1369/2005.

([2404]) European Court: Reyban v. Austria (35115)/97, European Court §28-§31 (2000); see also Hamatov v. Azerbaijan (9852)/03 and (13413), §140-§152 (2007).

([2405]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §28.

([2406]) Reinbrecht v. Austria (67175)/01), European Court §41 (2005).

([2407]) Palamara-Iribarne v. Chile, Inter-American Court (2005) §165-§174.

([2408]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §29.

Public morals (some cases may include sexual crimes);[2409]

Public order, which means primarily the order inside the courtroom;[2410]

National security in a democratic society;)[2411]

When confidentiality becomes necessary to preserve the interests of minors or the private lives of the parties to the case (such as protecting the identity of victims of sexual violence);[2412]

To the extent strictly required by necessity, if the court finds that there is an extreme necessity requiring this in special cases in which publicity would harm the interests of justice;[2413]

In addition, there are express exceptions intended to protect the interests and privacy of children who are accused of infringing the penal law, or who are victims or witnesses of a crime. A child accused of violating the penal code is entitled to full respect for his privacy during all stages of the judicial proceedings. To protect the child's right to privacy, the African Charter on the Rights of the Child requires that the media and the public be excluded from the proceedings. Other standards allow courts to hold hearings behind closed doors when the interests of children or justice require it. The Committee on the Rights of the Child recommends that States impose rules requiring that court hearings involving a child facing the law be held behind closed doors. Exceptions to this rule should be very limited and clearly stated in law. Other measures should also be taken to ensure that no personal information or data that could identify a child is published, including in court rulings or by the media.

A variety of international standards aim to protect the privacy and identity of child victims of crime, victims of gender-based sexual violence, and victims of human trafficking. The European Convention on the Sexual Abuse of Children allows judges to hold closed hearings that are not attended by the public.[2414]

Both the Human Rights Committee and the European Commission found that excluding the public from two cases, one involving charges of rape of a woman and the other of sexual offences against children, was admissible under article 14 of the ICCPR and article 6 of the European Convention.[2415]

In cases against adults where exceptions to the right to a public trial apply, courts should, as an alternative to holding all trial sessions behind closed doors, consider whether closing aspects of the proceedings could be sufficient. Courts should also consider alternatives to holding all or some hearings behind closed doors, including by taking measures to protect witnesses. Such measures must be consistent with the accused’s right to a fair trial in the context of conflict of ([2410]) Article 14(1) of the ICCPR, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Section A(3)(f)(2) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, see Gredin v. Russian Federation, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc 2/ §8 (2000) CCPR/C/69/D/770/1997; see M. Nowak, The United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: Commentary on the International Covenant, Second Revised Edition, Engel, 2005, pp. 34-325. Z. P. v Canada (640), Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR 6/ § §4 (1991) C/41/D/341/1988 and 5/63/1913) v Austria;6), European Commission, Abstract 2 of the Strasbourg Law of Case No. 438 (30) April 1965 (unpublished).

---

([2409]) Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, g. for. v. Canada, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc. /CCPR . 6 / C/41/D/341/1988 (1991) §4.

([2411]) Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, and Section A(3)(f)(2) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2412]) Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, and Article 6(1) of the European Convention; see also Section A(3)(f)(ii) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2413]) Article 14(1) of the International Covenant, Article 8(5) of the American Convention, Article 13(2) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(1) of the European Convention; see Section A(3)(f)(2) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2414]) Article 36(2) of the European Convention on the Sexual Abuse of Children.

([2415]) Z. P. v Canada, Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR 6/ § §4 (1991) C/41/D/341/1988 and 5/63/1913 (X. v Austria;6), European Commission, Abstract 2 of the Strasbourg Law of Case No. 438 (30 April 1965) (unpublished).

rights proceedings, including the principle of equality of opportunity for the defense and the prosecution.[2416]

While the customary rule remains that the ICC must hold its hearings in public, it may close part of a trial to protect a victim, witness or accused, or to allow for the presentation of evidence by electronic or other means. The reasons behind the order to close the session must be made public.[2417]

The widespread use of closed hearings on the grounds of national security, including in trials of people on terrorism-related charges, has raised legitimate concerns. International law does not give the state unrestricted discretionary power to determine for itself the issues it considers to be affecting national security.[2418]

According to the Johannesburg Principles, “no restriction which a State seeks to justify on the grounds of national security shall be legitimate unless its real purpose and demonstrable effect is to protect the existence of the State or its territorial integrity or unity against the use or threat of force; or to protect its ability to respond to the use or threat of force, whether the source of the threat is external, such as a military threat, or internal, such as incitement to the violent overthrow of the government.”[2419]

The Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism reiterated his conviction that restrictions on the right to a public hearing on the grounds of national security should only be resorted to to the extent strictly necessary. To ensure integrity, “it should be accompanied by adequate monitoring or review mechanisms.” He expressed concern that prosecutors in a criminal case in South Africa involving national security had requested that all trial proceedings be held behind closed doors.[2420]

In its report on terrorism and human rights, the American Commission suggested that elements of the right to a public trial should be subject to restriction, for example in states of emergency (of such a nature that rights may be restricted) when there are threats to the life or physical integrity of judges or other officials involved in the administration of justice, or to their independence. However, she said that such restrictions should be determined on a case-by-case basis, be strictly necessary and subject to measures to ensure the fairness of the trial, including the right to challenge the jurisdiction, independence or impartiality of the court.[2421]

The African Commission concluded that the military court proceedings against alleged plotters who were planning a military coup in Nigeria violated the accused's right to a public hearing. The committee noted that the government did not provide specific reasons for excluding the public from the trial sessions.[2422]

Secret trials are a more blatant violation than any other infringement on the right to public trials. The US Commission ruled that secret trials of civilians in Peru before military courts in which the identities of the judges were concealed (the phenomenon known as “faceless judges”) and held in military facilities that were off-limits to the public violated, among other things, the defendants’ right to a public trial.[2423]

([2416] See Section A(3)(g)-(i) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.
([2417]) Article 68(2) of the Rome Statute, and Guideline 20 of the ICC Guidelines.
([2418] See Section A(3)(f)(ii) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.
([2419]) Principle 2(a) of the Johannesburg Principles.
([2420]) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism: UN Doc UN Doc. A/HRC/6/17/Add. 2, §30 (2008) A/63/223 (South Africa). §32 (2007).
([2421]) U.S. Commission, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights, (2002) Section 3(a)3(d) §262.
([2422]) Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224)/98), African Commission §51-§54 (2000).
([2423]) Inter-American Commission: Castillo-Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, §§169-§173 (1999), Lori Berenson-Mejia v. Peru, §§197-§199 (2004).

Except as specified, trials must be public and open to the public at large, including the media, and should not be limited to a special category of people only.[2424]

Chapter Fourteen: Presumption of Innocence of the Accused

14-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

The accused is innocent until proven guilty in a fair legal trial, in which he is guaranteed the right to defend themselves.[2425]

The origin of innocence is assumed in every accused person, for man was born free, purified from sin and the filth of disobedience, his feet did not slip into evil, and his hand did not touch injustice or slander. It is assumed that he was healthy when he was born alive, and that he remained so, avoiding sins of all kinds, keeping away from vices of all kinds, and adhering to a straight path that does not deviate from the straight path. This is an assumption that cannot be demolished based on illusion, but rather must be refuted by evidence derived from the best papers and the scales of truth, with insight and discernment. This will not be the case unless he is convicted by a judgment that has been closed off to appeal, and thus has become final.[2426]

The principle of every accusation is that it should be serious and it is not conceivable that the accusation could be a rash act that the Public Prosecution slips into through its haste or negligence. It was self-evident that the accusation of a crime is not evidence of its proof, and evidence of it is not equal to it. The accusation, even if it was based on reasons that suggest the accused's conviction of the crime, was nothing more than a mere suspicion that the court of subject matter did not rule on with a decisive and irrevocable ruling, whether by proving or denying it. The Supreme Constitutional Court ruled that the initial rules on which a fair trial is based - whether when ruling on every criminal accusation or on the rights and civil obligations of the person - although they are procedural in origin, their application within the scope of the criminal case - and throughout its episodes - necessarily affects its final outcome. It was decided that the principle of innocence falls under these rules as a primary rule required by the nature upon which man is created and required by procedural legitimacy, and as a primary assumption for the effective administration of criminal justice to provide every individual with security in the face of control, tyranny and prejudice. The assumption of innocence was not limited to the case in which there is the person is in it at birth, but it extends to the stages of his life until its end to compare the actions he commits and is not separated from it by a criminal accusation, regardless of the weight of the evidence on which it is based. The presumption of innocence represented a fixed principle related to the criminal accusation in terms of proving it and not the type of punishment prescribed for it. This principle was latent in every individual, whether he was a suspect or an accused, as it was a fundamental rule approved by all laws, not to guarantee protection for the guilty, but to achieve a legal principle that means that a mistake in forgiveness is better than a mistake in the punishment that must be averted from every

---

([2424]) Section A(3)(d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §29.
([2425] Article No. 96 of the Constitution.
([2426]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 26 of 12 Q issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 124, rule No. 8, Case No. 28 of 17 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 262, rule No. 15.

individual whose accusation is doubtful (Dans le doute on acquitte) or based on evidence that cannot be legally accepted. The criminal accusation - in light of the above - does not shift the principle of innocence or invalidate its content, but rather this principle remains dominant over the criminal case, even existing before it is initiated, and extending throughout its stages and whatever the time of its ruling.[2427]

Every person charged with a criminal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defense. This is a rule that has been applied in democratic countries and within the framework of which there is a set of basic guarantees, which, when integrated, ensure a concept of justice that is generally consistent with contemporary standards in force in civilized countries.[2428]

Among them is its belief in the sanctity of private life, and the severity of restrictions that affect personal freedom, which the constitution considers to be one of the natural rights inherent in the human soul, and cannot be separated from it as an aggression, and to ensure that the state - when exercising its powers in the field of imposing punishment in order to preserve the social order - adheres to the ultimate purposes of penal laws, which contradict the conviction of the accused as an intended goal in itself, or the rules according to which he is tried are in conflict with the correct concept of effective criminal justice administration. Rather, these rules must adhere to a set of values that guarantee the rights of the accused a minimum level of protection, which may not be waived or diminished, and under these rules falls the principle of innocence as a primary rule imposed by nature and required by the facts of things.[2429]

The principle of innocence is that this innocence may not be suspended on a condition that prevents the enforcement of its content, nor may it be suspended through a weak accusation, nor may it be overturned either by exempting the prosecution from its obligation to provide evidence of the validity of its accusation, or through its or others' intervention to influence the course of the criminal case and its final outcome without right. Rather, violating it - as an axiomatic principle - is an unforgivable error, a prejudicial error, requiring the annulment of any decision that does not comply with it.

The principle of innocence is thus considered an integral part of a fair trial, as it is supported by other elements that constitute its components, and together they represent a minimum of rights necessary for its administration, and under which falls the right of both the accused and the prosecution authority to have the same means by which their positions are equal, whether in the field of refuting or proving the charge, and these are rights that may not be deprived or marginalized, whether it concerns a person who is considered an accused or a suspect. All laws have approved it - not to protect the guilty - but rather to ward off the severity of the penalty prescribed for the crime that was mixed with suspicion of its commission, which prevents the certainty of its occurrence by those accused of committing it, since this accusation is not considered sufficient to destroy the principle of innocence, nor is it proof of the fact by which the crime is committed, nor is it an obstacle to proving it. Rather, this principle remains in place until

---

([2427]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 49 of 17 Q, issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 739, rule No. 48.

([2428]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 96 of 27 Q issued in the session of March 7, 2020, date of publication March 16, 2020, page 3, Case No. 202 of 32 Q issued in the session of November 3, 2018, date of publication November 13, 2018, page 3, Case No. 102 of 36 Q issued in the session of October 13, 2018, date of publication October 22, 2018, page 23, Case No. 88 of 36 Q issued in the session of February 14, 2015, date of publication February 25, 2015, Case No. 78 of 36 Q issued in the session of February 14, 2015, date of publication February 25, 2015, Case No. 196 of 35 Q issued in the session of November 8, 2014, date of publication November 12, 2014.

([2429]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 186 of 33 Q issued in the session of October 13, 2018, date of publication October 22, 2018, page No. 34, Case No. 61 of 21 Q issued in the session of February 3, 2018, date of publication February 12, 2018, page No. 20, Case No. 10 of 18 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1996, date of publication November 28, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 142, Rule No. 9.

it is overturned by a judicial ruling that has become final after it has encompassed the accusation with insight and foresight, and concluded that the evidence of its validity - with all its components - was pure and complete.[2430]

There is no way to refute the principle of innocence except by evidence presented by the Public Prosecution, the persuasive force of which reaches the level of certainty and conviction, proving the crime attributed to the accused in every aspect and with respect to every fact necessary for its occurrence. Otherwise, the principle of innocence does not collapse, as it is one of the pillars on which the concept of a fair trial is based. The implication of this is that the principle of innocence in the accused is that the proof of the charge against him falls on the Public Prosecution, which alone bears the burden of presenting evidence, and the accused is not required to present any evidence of his innocence, just as the legislator does not have the right to impose legal presumptions to prove the charge or to transfer the burden of proof to the accused.[2431]

It is not permissible to treat a person as if he is merely a suspect, as considering a person a suspect undermines the principle of innocence. Every crime that is alleged to have been committed cannot be proven without conclusive evidence that covers all of its elements, and it is also not permissible to assume its proof - even in one of its elements, whether material or moral - through a legal presumption that the legislator arbitrarily creates. Without this, the principle of innocence is nothing but an illusion, and whenever the legislator - through a legal presumption he created - wastes the presumption of the accused's innocence of the charge against him, this is a violation of the means of repelling it, and a waste of the balance between the rights he possesses to refute it, and those possessed by the prosecution authority to prove it.[2432]

The elements of a crime are not fully established unless the prosecution authority proves them by presenting its evidence and convincing them in a way that removes all reasonable doubt about them. This is because, by accusing a person of a crime it claims, it deliberately creates a new reality that contradicts the presumption of innocence, as it is an expression of the nature with which man was created and to which he has been connected since birth. It cannot be shaken by an accusation, nor can it be overturned by a will, no matter how weighty it may be. Rather, it is removed by a judicial ruling related to a specific crime, and it has become final regarding its attribution to its perpetrator, after clear and conclusive evidence has been established of the availability of its elements stipulated by the legislator. If the person is suspected, then treating him on the basis of this consideration alone, which strips him of the rights guaranteed by the constitution, is not permissible.[2433]

It is established that the principle of innocence is considered a fundamental rule in the accusatory system, which is not permissible, imposed by the facts of things and required by procedural legitimacy and the protection of the individual in the face of forms of control, tyranny and prejudice, which prevents the fact that a crime is committed from being considered proven without serious and conclusive evidence that reaches the level of certainty and conviction and leaves no room for suspicion of the absence of the charge or doubt therein, and without that the principle of innocence is not absent, and it was also established that it is necessary in the principles of reasoning that the evidence on which the judgment relies leads to the results it

---

([2430]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 29 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1042, rule No. 72.

([2431] Appeal No. 61 of 88 Q issued in the session of November 25, 2018 (unpublished).

([2432]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 29 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1042, rule No. 72.

([2433]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 58 of 18 Q, issued in the session of July 5, 1997, date of publication July 19, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 731, rule No. 48.

based on it without arbitrariness in the conclusion and without conflict in the judgment of reason and logic.[2434]

Criminal justice, in its essence, must be guaranteed through precisely defined and fair rules, in the light of which it is decided whether the accused is guilty or innocent. This assumes a balance between the interest of the community in the stability of its security, and the interest of the accused in not imposing on him a punishment that has no connection to an act he committed, or that lacks evidence of this connection. Therefore, criminal justice must not be separated from its components that guarantee each accused a minimum level of rights that must not be waived or neglected, nor must it compromise the necessity for criminalization to remain linked to the ultimate purposes of penal laws.[2435]

The presumption of innocence is a fixed principle relating to the criminal charge, and extends to the criminal case in all its stages and throughout its procedures. It has become inevitable that it is not permissible to overturn the acquittal except by conclusive evidence that the court arrives at, and from which its belief is formed in order to be able to refute the principle of innocence imposed on a person, in light of the evidence presented before it, which proves every element of the crime, and every fact necessary for its establishment, including criminal intent in both its types if it is required in it, and without that the principle of innocence is not demolished)[2436]

The principle of innocence is related to the criminal charge in terms of proving it, and has nothing to do with the nature or seriousness of the crime that is its subject, nor with the type or extent of its punishment. This principle is inherent in every individual, guaranteeing his protection whether in the influential stages preceding his criminal trial, or during it, and throughout its episodes.[2437]

The presumption of innocence seems more necessary in the field of defense rights, given that the procedural means that the public prosecution has in its possession in the field of proving the crime are supported by huge resources that the accused lacks, and are only balanced by the presumption of innocence to ensure that he will not be convicted of the crime unless the evidence for it is clear of any suspicion that has a basis (Dans la doute, on acquitte). Penal texts may not therefore be interpreted as negating the principle of innocence of the accused by violating them, nor as ending the necessity that evidence of the violation of them be productive and influential. Rather, each accused - relying on this principle - may remain silent "initially", and may indicate "finally" what is considered a reasonable doubt Doute raisonnable surrounding the charge in terms of its proof.[2438]

([2434]) Appeal No. 43943 of 85 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 470, rule No. 55, Appeal No. 33873 of 84 Q issued in the session of July 29, 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66, page No. 572, rule No. 79, Appeal No. 3654 of 80 Q issued in the session of January 5, 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 63, page No. 49, rule No. 5, Appeal No. 19803 of 67 Q issued in the session of November 12, 2007 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 58, page No. 679, rule No. 130, Appeal No. 19803 of 67 Q issued in the session of November 12, 2007 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 58 Page No. 679 Rule No. 130.

([2435]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 50 of 37 Q issued in the session of March 2, 2019, date of publication March 11, 2019, page No. 34, Case No. 24 of 29 Q issued in the session of May 5, 2018, date of publication May 13, 2018, page No. 36.

([2436]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 114 of 29 Q issued in the session of January 14, 2017, date of publication January 24, 2017, page 3, Case No. 116 of 29 Q issued in the session of July 25, 2015, date of publication August 2, 2015, Case No. 22 of 29 Q issued in the session of May 9, 2015, date of publication May 20, 2015, Case No. 35 of 30 Q issued in the session of June 1, 2014, date of publication June 9, 2014, Case No. 127 of 30 Q issued in the session of April 6, 2014, date of publication April 20, 2014.

([2437]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 26 of 12 Q, issued in the session of October 5, 1996, date of publication October 17, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 124, Rule No. 8.

([2438]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 29 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1042, rule No. 72.

The origin of innocence is not a legal presumption, as the presumption of innocence is not purely a legal presumption, nor is it one of its forms, since the legal presumption is based on transferring the proof from its original location - represented by the fact that is the source of the claimed right - to another fact close to it and connected to it, and this alternative fact is the one whose proof is considered proof of the first fact by virtue of the law. This is not the case with regard to the innocence assumed by the Constitution, as there is no fact that the Constitution has replaced another fact, and established it as an alternative to it. Rather, the presumption of innocence is based on the nature upon which man was created. He was born free and innocent of sin or disobedience, and it is assumed throughout the stages of his life that the origin of innocence is still latent in him, accompanying him in the actions he commits, until the court of subject matter, with a decisive and irrevocable ruling, overturns this assumption, in light of the evidence presented by the Public Prosecution proving the crime attributed to him in every aspect of it, and with respect to every fact necessary for its establishment, including criminal intent in both its types if it is required therein, and the right of the accused to confront the witnesses presented by the Public Prosecution to prove the crime, and the right to refute their statements and abort the evidence they presented with the evidence of denial that he presents. Without this, the origin of innocence is not demolished, as it is one of the pillars upon which the concept of a fair trial guaranteed by the Constitution is based, and it reflects a principled rule that is in itself It is indisputable, clear as the truth itself, required by procedural legitimacy, and its enforcement is a primary assumption for the administration of criminal justice. The constitution requires it to protect personal freedom in its vital areas, and to provide every individual with security in the face of control, tyranny and prejudice, in a way that prevents the fact that a crime is committed from being considered proven without evidence, and in a way that prevents the legislator from assuming that it is proven by a legal presumption that he creates.[2439]

And since the legal presumptions - even those that are conclusive - are those that the legislator establishes in advance and generalizes after formulating them in light of what is due to occur in practice, and the legislator, by establishing them, seeks to exempt the opponent from proving a specific fact after he has replaced it with something else and established it as an alternative to it, so that the evidence is transferred to it, then if the opponent proves it, this is considered proof of the original fact by virtue of the law. Legal presumptions are thus only indirect proof whose scope of application is originally limited to civil matters. If they extend beyond that to other matters, the issue of their constitutionality becomes determined in light of their infringement on personal freedom and their violation of its components.[2440]

The legislator's introduction of a legal presumption that undermines the presumption of innocence, which infringes on personal freedom, which penal texts represent the most dangerous restrictions on, and which is considered necessary to guarantee against all forms of prejudice and tyranny to protect it, especially in the context of a criminal trial, the fairness of which is considered a condition for its integrity from a constitutional perspective, and an affirmation of the necessity that its reins be in the hands of the court of subject matter alone, so that its judgment in it is not separate from the investigation work that it conducts itself, from which it extracts its conviction of the commission of the alleged crime or its absence.[2441]

([2439]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 156 of 34 Q, issued in the session of November 2, 2019, date of publication November 5, 2019, page No. 23.

([2440]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 58 of 18 Q, issued in the session of July 5, 1997, date of publication July 19, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 731, rule No. 48.

([2441]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 29 of 18 Q, issued in the session of January 3, 1998, date of publication January 15, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1042, rule No. 72.

14-1-1 The Legal Basis of the Presumption of Innocence

It is established that the criminal dispute does not seek to establish the state's right to punish except after providing all guarantees to respect the individual freedom of the accused. The state, with its powers through its various apparatuses, undoubtedly has the right to obtain its right to punish the accused of committing the crime by all means and methods. However, the principle of legitimacy that governs the legal state obliges its legislative, executive and judicial apparatuses to respect the general rules set by law to ensure respect for individual freedoms and the life of society.

The basic principle of man is innocence, and he has the right to enjoy his freedom and all his other rights stipulated in the law. Accordingly, the state must respect this freedom and those rights. So how can the state intervene, in defiance of this general principle, to infringe upon his freedom based on its right to punish? The organization of the state, in order to guarantee this freedom and these rights, requires that the recognition of its right to punishment be in the hands of an independent body, which is the judiciary. In order for the problem to be transferred to the judiciary so that it can decide on it with a ruling that cannot be appealed, certain procedures must be taken, which are what is called criminal litigation. In this litigation, the state aims to collect the necessary evidence of the occurrence of the crime and attribute it to the accused, then determine his responsibility for it and impose the appropriate punishment on him.

The presumption of innocence of the accused requires that he be treated as such in all stages of the criminal case, in addition to the stage of evidence before the stage of accusation arises. The seriousness of the crime or the manner in which it occurred is of no importance, as the legal presumption indicating the innocence of the accused is established regardless of the type of crime or the nature of the measures taken to uncover the truth and establish the state’s authority to punish.

It is clear that even under war powers no person may be sentenced to death or restricted in his liberty until he has been confronted with the charges against him, tried and convicted on the basis of solid evidence. If we look at other constitutional texts, we should conclude that there are two types of procedures, civil and military procedures. Military procedures are intended to suit emergency or war conditions, which is referred to as martial law.

Martial law and other exceptional laws must not conflict with the texts and provisions set forth in the constitutions in the assumptions studied in this regard.

If we look at the provisions and texts in the criminal laws in this regard, we find that they guarantee the protection of human rights, as the Penal Code specifically prohibits the violation of the personal freedom of citizens by public authorities, under any form of arrest or arbitrary custody or assault on the sanctity of homes or the violation of the secrets of correspondence or professional secrets and so on. In this regard, there is a clear convergence between the Penal Code when it is committed to the legitimacy of crimes and penalties, and the Criminal Procedure Code when it is committed to procedural legitimacy. The Penal Code protects basic human rights by threatening to punish anyone who violates them, and this means that the Penal Code is bound by the public rights guaranteed by the Constitution. As for the Criminal Procedure Code, it must ensure a balance between the state’s right to obtain evidence of guilt and the accused’s right to prove his innocence, or as it is called equality in arms “Egalité des arues”, or in other words, the basic elements for a fair trial for the accused and his assistance in defending himself must be available, and this means that criminal procedures are bound by respect for the personal freedom guaranteed by the Constitution based on the presumption of innocence.

There may not be a dispute over the rights of the accused, but over what restricts these rights for the public good. There is no dispute that exceptional circumstances may justify restricting these rights from what is followed in normal circumstances, but only to the extent necessary.

According to the principle of legitimacy that governs the legal state, the legislator must ensure that an adequate balance is established between the rights of the state's representative in the accusation (the Public Prosecution) and the rights of the accused, so as to guarantee the other's freedom, all his rights and human dignity. Respecting this principle is necessary and essential to achieve a fair criminal trial. Therefore, the Criminal Procedure Code must regulate the limits within which public authorities can infringe on individual freedoms in order to establish social justice. This law is the law of the honorable, because it specifies the guarantees that ensure the protection of their freedom against control and arbitrariness.

The trend of criminal policy towards protecting society must never reach the point of infringing on the rights and guarantees of the accused. It is inconceivable that there would be a clash between the requirements of social protection and the requirements of human protection, because depriving the citizen of his human rights means stripping him of the means he needs to prove his existence and develop his personality, which hinders his adaptation to the life of society. Here it is noted that the protection of human rights is not viewed as natural rights, but rather is focused on two foundations:

Protecting human rights represents a social value that is integrated into the general feeling of the members of society, and this feeling must be taken into consideration in order to preserve the social entity.

Respecting human rights is the means to ensure its true response to society, and this response is not conceivable unless its means are consistent with the traditions and principles of society.

The principle of innocence is one of the principles recognized by all legal systems. If society has an interest in punishing criminals, then the freedoms of the innocent cannot be infringed upon. This society must defend these freedoms and guarantee them until there is complete evidence of the commission of the crime. Then the infringement of freedom is achieved as a punishment determined by the law. The freedom of the innocent cannot be diminished, because this freedom is a basic human right and has been guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The innocence of a person is the principle, and his conviction is the exception. Any infringement of freedom can only occur after the conviction has been established and after innocence has been refuted by evidence of conviction.

This has some consequences, including placing the burden of proof on the Public Prosecution and interpreting doubt in favor of the accused.

This principle requires that it be protected by certain guarantees that ensure its respect and support so that it does not become a mere piece of evidence devoid of any positive content that guarantees human freedom.

A person enjoys complete freedom until his conviction is decided, which requires that he be surrounded by certain guarantees that stand as a barrier against the arbitrariness of the legislator or the state's agencies with regard to the measures they take that affect individual freedoms. All measures taken in the name of defending society and in order to protect the interests of the state may not extend beyond the necessary scope to which they must be confined, and they may not affect a general principle of the legal system, which is the innocence of a person until his conviction is decided.

This principle means that the accused must be treated as innocent as long as his conviction has not been proven or decided by a criminal judgment. This innocent treatment cannot be provided unless it is confirmed by certain guarantees that ensure its observance. In light of these guarantees, the state authorities do not act as instruments of conviction or as devices for mere accusation, but rather they become tools of social criminal justice whose mission is to guarantee and ensure freedoms.

All guarantees regulated by law aim to achieve personal freedom that confirms this right in the face of public authority. They are a living expression of the power of the law in resisting the deviation of public authority, and through them the rule of law is confirmed.

The innocence of a human being requires that he be surrounded by important guarantees when it is necessary to infringe upon his freedom. These guarantees ensure that the infringement upon his freedom is restricted to the narrowest limits and that this infringement appears as an exception. These restrictions fall into two types:

An objective type, which is represented by the objective reasons for infringing on freedom;

Formal type, which is represented by the substantive forms in which all procedures for infringing freedom are emptied.

As for the objective reasons, they all come back to one meaning that justifies departing from the original innocence of man, and this meaning is represented in the availability of strong indications that cast doubt on this innocence. Arresting and searching a person and his residence is not legally valid unless there is sufficient evidence to accuse the person of committing the crime, which casts doubt on the general principle of his innocence. This requires that it is not permissible to resort to it except to the extent necessary to uncover the truth.

As for the essential forms required by law when freedoms are infringed upon, the law requires these forms as a guarantee for the accused in order to balance the state's right to punishment and the accused's right to freedom.

Formalism takes two forms:

A fixed form that takes the form of a written statement, such as the date, signature, and reasons for warrants to search a residence or monitor correspondence and conversations;

Animated form: It takes a specific form during which procedural actions must be carried out, and appears either in the form of specific dates during which procedural actions must be carried out, such as pretrial detention, or in the form of specific facts that must occur during procedural actions, such as the presence of the accused during the search and all investigation procedures, etc.

The principle of innocence of the accused refers to a temporary and ambiguous state that the accused goes through, before his innocence is confirmed of what is attributed to him and before his conviction is verified. This principle is considered a fundamental principle in the democratic system of criminal procedures, and one of the assumptions of a fair trial. The House of Lords has described it as a "golden thread in the fabric of criminal law."[2442]

Regardless of the difference in laws in placing the principle of innocence in the hierarchical structure of the legal system, it is considered a human right, and a basic right that receives constitutional protection. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948 stipulated that everyone charged with a crime is presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has been given the guarantees to defend himself (11/1). This principle was confirmed by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which was unanimously approved by the United Nations General Assembly in 1966 (Article 14), as stipulated by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms of 1950 (Article 6). It was confirmed by the Human and People's Rights Project in the Arab World, which was developed by the Conference of Arab Experts, which was held at the International Institute for Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences in Syracuse in December 1985, as it stipulated in (Article 5/2) that the accused is innocent until proven guilty by a judicial ruling issued by a competent court. This principle is considered a basic principle to guarantee the personal freedom of the accused, and it requires that every person accused of a crime, no matter how serious, must be treated As an innocent person until proven guilty by a final judicial ruling, this principle was confirmed by the Egyptian Constitution issued in 2014 (Article 96/1), the Tunisian Constitution (Chapter No. 12), the Syrian Constitution (Article 10/1), and the Libyan Constitution (Article 15).

---

([2442]) J. Spencer، "Le droit anglais" Revue International de droit pénal، 1992 (vol. 1 et 2) " La prevue en procédure pénal comprée، p. 83 et 90..

This principle is consistent with the principles of the pure Islamic Sharia, as it was mentioned in the noble hadith: "Avert the punishments from Muslims as much as you can. If you find a way out for the Muslim, then let him go, for it is better for the imam to make a mistake in forgiveness than to make a mistake in punishment."

The principle of innocence is considered a fundamental pillar of constitutional legitimacy in the Code of Criminal Procedure. This pillar is consistent with the first pillar of constitutional legitimacy in the Penal Code, which is the legitimacy of crimes and punishments. The application of the rule "no crime or punishment without a legal text" inevitably assumes another rule, which is the presumption of innocence in the accused until his guilt is proven in accordance with the law. Some people, when commenting on the European Convention on Human Rights, were keen to explicitly indicate that the true meaning of the rule "legitimacy of crimes and punishments" is to guarantee the principle of innocence for every accused person.[2443]

The conference held by the International Association of Jurists in New Delhi in 1959 confirmed that the application of the principle of legality involves recognizing the rule that the accused is presumed innocent until proven guilty.[2444]

This meaning is what the Egyptian Court of Cassation expressed when it said: [Justice is not harmed by a criminal escaping punishment as much as it is harmed by the infringement on people's freedoms and their arrest without justification] [2445]

([2443]) KAREL VASAK، La convention Européenne droits de l'homme، Paris 1964، p. 48-49..

([2444]) Vasak، op. p. 18..

([2445]) Appeal No. 50968 of Judicial Year 85, issued on February 24, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32432 of Judicial Year 85, issued on February 11, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29959 of Judicial Year 84, issued on March 12, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23705 of Judicial Year 84, issued on March 8, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6442 of Judicial Year 82, issued on April 4, 2013, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 64, p. 458, Rule No. 60, Appeal No. 5232 of Judicial Year 82, issued on January 13, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4662 of Judicial Year 80, issued on November 19, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7290 of Judicial Year 79, issued on July 7, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5012 of Judicial Year 79, issued on May 4, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8583 of Judicial Year 80, issued on March 27, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 45353 of Judicial Year 73, issued on January 24, 2011, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 62, p. 54, Rule No. 9, Appeal No. 6959 of Judicial Year 80, issued on October 19, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32412 of Judicial Year 73, issued on March 7, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32442 of Judicial Year 73, issued on March 7, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 498 of Judicial Year 79, issued on September 29, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12457 of Judicial Year 72, issued on April 19, 2009, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 60, p. 223, Rule No. 29, Appeal No. 27816 of Judicial Year 70, issued on November 19, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 77606 of Judicial Year 76, issued on March 28, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15766 of Judicial Year 76, issued on February 12, 2007, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 58, p. 151, Rule No. 31, Appeal No. 16583 of Judicial Year 70, issued on February 22, 2006, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 57, p. 300, Rule No. 33, Appeal No. 11544 of Judicial Year 75, issued on February 6, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 60176 of Judicial Year 73, issued on June 2, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 63297 of Judicial Year 73, issued on May 3, 2005, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 56, p. 271, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 26503 of Judicial Year 64, issued on July 26, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15692 of Judicial Year 70, issued on April 21, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26585 of Judicial Year 68, issued on March 5, 2002,

Basic procedural guarantees must be ensured at all stages of the proceedings, such as the presumption of innocence, the right to be informed of the charges, the right to remain silent, the right to the services of a lawyer, the right to have a parent or guardian present, the right to confront and examine witnesses, and the right to appeal to a higher authority.

14-1-2 The Nature of the Presumption of Innocence

Some have argued that "the default of the accused is innocence" is considered a simple legal presumption, and the presumption is an inference of the unknown from the known, and the known is that the default of things is permissibility unless the opposite is decided by a judicial ruling and based on a legal text that the crime occurred and the punishment is deserved, and the unknown inferred from this default is the innocence of the person until his conviction is proven by a judicial ruling.[2446]

However, the Supreme Constitutional Court concluded that the presumption of innocence is not purely a legal presumption, nor is it one of its forms, on the basis that the legal presumption is based on transferring the proof from its original location - represented by the fact that is the source of the claimed right - to another fact that is close to it and connected to it, and this alternative fact is the one whose proof is considered proof of the first fact by virtue of the law, and this is not the case with regard to the innocence assumed by the constitution, as there is no fact that the constitution has replaced another fact and established it as an alternative to it, but rather the presumption of innocence is based on the nature upon which man is created, as he was born free and innocent of sin or disobedience, and it is assumed throughout the stages of his life that the origin of innocence is still latent in him, accompanying him in what he does of actions until the court of subject matter overturns this presumption with a decisive ruling - from which there is no return - in light of the evidence presented by the Public Prosecution proving and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 53, p. 366, Rule No. 65, Appeal No. 27945 of Judicial Year 67, issued on April 16, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 516 of Judicial Year 65, issued on January 6, 1998, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 49, Part I, p. 58, Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 29390 of Judicial Year 59, issued on November 19, 1997, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 48, Part I, p. 1281, Rule No. 194, Appeal No. 3294 of Judicial Year 63, issued on February 15, 1995 (unpublished), Appeal No. 179 of Judicial Year 60, issued on February 19, 1991, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 42, Part I, p. 372, Rule No. 50, Appeal No. 8280 of Judicial Year 58, issued on May 31, 1990, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 41, Part I, p. 792, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 11226 of Judicial Year 59, issued on March 11, 1990, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 41, Part I, p. 519, Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 15008 of Judicial Year 59, issued on December 21, 1989, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 40, Part I, p. 1274, Rule No. 205, Appeal No. 3055 of Judicial Year 58, issued on October 20, 1988, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 39, Part I, p. 930, Rule No. 140, Appeal No. 3298 of Judicial Year 56, issued on October 21, 1986, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 37, Part I, p. 788, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 6391 of Judicial Year 54, issued on March 19, 1986, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 37, Part I, p. 428, Rule No. 87, Appeal No. 2913 of Judicial Year 54, issued on April 3, 1985, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 36, Part I, p. 524, Rule No. 88, Appeal No. 1230 of Judicial Year 54, issued on March 28, 1985, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 36, Part I, p. 488, Rule No. 81, Appeal No. 1207 of Judicial Year 54, issued on October 8, 1984, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 35, Part I, p. 632, Rule No. 139, Appeal No. 6097 of Judicial Year 53, issued on February 15, 1984, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 35, Part I, p. 153, Rule No. 31, Appeal No. 411 of Judicial Year 50, issued on June 9, 1980, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 31, Part I, p. 737, Rule No. 142, Appeal No. 1872 of Judicial Year 53, issued on November 29, 1973, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 34, Part I, p. 1010, Rule No. 204, Appeal No. 174 of Judicial Year 43, issued on April 9, 1973, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 24, Part II, p. 506, Rule No. 105, Appeal No. 1172 of Judicial Year 36, issued on January 31, 1967, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 18, Part I, p. 128, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 1209 of Judicial Year 34, issued on January 25, 1965, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 16, Part I, p. 87, Rule No. 21, Appeal No. 1030 of Judicial Year 28, issued on October 21, 1958, and published in the Official Technical Office, Vol. 9, Part III, p. 839, Rule No. 206.

---

([2446]) ESSAID، La presumption d'innocence، Thése، op، cit. ، pp. 73 et 74..

the crime attributed to him in every aspect of its elements, and with regard to every fact necessary for its establishment.[2447]

The Egyptian Constitution of 2014 confirmed this principle, as Article 96 of it stipulated that: "The accused is innocent until proven guilty in a fair legal trial, in which he is guaranteed the right to defend himself." This principle was recognized by both the Anglo-Saxon legal system and the Latin legal system.[2448]

The factual evidence presented by the Public Prosecution, and through the procedures undertaken by the criminal judge by virtue of his positive role in proving the truth, is not sufficient to refute this principle. Rather, this principle remains in place despite the available evidence presented to refute it, until a final judicial ruling is issued convicting the accused, as the law considers a final judicial ruling to be a title of truth that is not open to debate.

With this ruling, the principle of innocence is extinguished and there is a conclusive presumption of the truth of what the ruling has decided. This conclusive presumption alone is what is suitable for nullifying the principle of innocence in the accused if the final ruling is a conviction. Therefore, it is not sufficient to refute this principle merely by other evidence, whether it is legal evidence - simple or conclusive - or judicial. This general principle extends its effects to both proving the crime and proving the reasons for permissibility or impediments to liability.

The conviction of the accused depends on the absence of permissibility and the absence of obstacles to liability. The Public Prosecution, in the context of proof, must present evidence that refutes the principle of innocence, which can only be established through a final judicial ruling proving the occurrence of the crime and attributing it to the accused, while establishing his responsibility and the absence of any of the reasons for permissibility.[2449]

Since the principle of innocence is nothing but an affirmation of a general principle, which is the freedom of the accused, it entails the necessity of protecting all rights and freedoms, without which the principle of innocence loses its meaning, because freedom cannot be elevated through violations of the rights and freedoms that form an integrated unit, which is human dignity. The principle of innocence has no meaning if the trial is conducted through procedures in which the rights of defense are not respected. This is what was realized by the recommendations of the preliminary session of the 15th International Conference on Criminal Law held in Spain in May 1992, which discussed the subject of movements to reform criminal procedures and protect human rights. This meaning appeared clearly in what was stipulated in (Article 96/1) of the Egyptian Constitution, which required that the accused's conviction be proven in a legal trial in which he is guaranteed the guarantees of his defense. The implication of this is that a (legal) trial, i.e. a fair one - i.e. one in which all the rights of the accused are respected - is a necessary condition for proving the conviction that negates the principle of innocence. Therefore, the principle is not negated by merely referring the accused to trial, but rather its negation depends on the issuance of a final judgment. (Condemning).[2450]

Since the principle of innocence cannot be achieved without this ruling, it is not permissible to impose other penalties as an alternative to filing a lawsuit before the court, such as the obligation to pay a specific fine before the conviction is proven by a ruling, or the obligation to pay the expenses of the lawsuit procedures before the trial, or the imposition of an

---

([2447]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 25 of 16 Q, issued in the session of July 3, 1995, date of publication July 20, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 45, rule No. 2.

([2448]) See the report on Common law countries in the International Journal of Criminal Law, 64 (1992), pp. 33, 55.

([2449]) See the recommendations of the Toled Symposium in Spain in May 1992 in preparation for the Fifteenth International Congress on Criminal Law to be held in Brazil in 1994.

([2450] Article 96 of the Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt, amended in 2014.

administrative penalty without proof of conviction in accordance with the rules stipulated in the disciplinary law.

Literally speaking, only those accused of a crime enjoy the presumption of innocence. However, as European courts have noted after some hesitation, the presumption of innocence can be invoked against any person against whom a state agency has brought an accusation. The presumption of innocence is not limited to criminal litigation procedures when a criminal case is initiated, but is also reflected in the investigation procedures, disciplinary trial procedures, and more than that, the Human Rights Committee in Strasbourg confirmed in 1967 that it is not permissible, in a press conference organized by the Minister of the Interior following the occurrence of a murder, to issue a declaration to public opinion that a specific person in his name has incited the commission of the crime, because this declaration entails a violation of the presumption of innocence.

On the other hand, a final judgment of conviction alone is sufficient to nullify the principle of innocence. However, the amount or type of punishment is not related to this principle. After the conviction is proven, the judge may derive elements from the criminal's personality to estimate the punishment, which are elements that are not suitable for proving the conviction in the first place. The mere bad reputation of the accused or his previous commission of the crime is not suitable as evidence for convicting him of the crime, even if it is suitable as an element in estimating the punishment. The European Committee of Human Rights, which is responsible for implementing the European Convention on Human Rights, has decided that the presumption of innocence - from a legal perspective - does not stand in the way of increasing the punishment at the appeal stage. The Supreme Constitutional Court in Egypt has also confirmed that the presumption of the accused's innocence represents a fixed principle related to the criminal charge in terms of proving it and not the type of punishment prescribed for it.

However, it has been observed that if the principle of innocence is to be respected literally, criminal proceedings will become impossible. Therefore, the practical, realistic content of this principle depends on the guarantees of rights and freedoms that surround the application of this presumption.[2451]

The principle of innocence means that the accused must be treated in the same way as innocent people, and therefore the principle is that he enjoys all the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the constitution and regulated by law. However, since the provisions of the constitution are integrated and interconnected, and the constitution, as it guaranteed personal freedom and all human rights, also guaranteed criminalization and punishment (Article 95 of the constitution) and guaranteed trial for crimes when it stipulated that no punishment shall be imposed except by a judicial ruling (Article 95 of the constitution), constitutional legitimacy in criminal procedures requires a balance between respecting basic rights and freedoms and guaranteeing the procedures taken against the accused.[2452]

The two matters must be reconciled and respected together without compromising one at the expense of the other. This reconciliation is achieved by relying on the principle of innocence in determining the legal framework within which the accused's exercise of his personal freedom and other human rights is regulated in light of the requirements of the criminal dispute. This legal framework is represented in the form of guarantees that ensure the protection of personal freedom and other human rights when taking any criminal action against the accused.

([2451]) Stefan Trechsel‹ The protection of human rights in criminal.
Procedures‹ Rev. int droit penal‹ 1978‹ p. 554 et 555..
([2452] Article 95 of the Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt, amended in 2014.

The law regulates the use of the accused's personal freedom within the criminal dispute in light of the objectives of the criminal dispute. This legal regulation must not exceed the principle of innocence by surrounding the procedures permitted by the law with certain guarantees that ensure the protection of the accused's rights and freedoms, which he exercises as an innocent person.

Every criminal procedure permitted by law must be bound by these guarantees to avoid danger in its implementation, otherwise it would be contrary to the principle of innocence. The criminal procedure stipulated by law without being surrounded by these guarantees would be an arbitrary assault and contrary to the principle of innocence, which is considered an assault on constitutional legitimacy.

Criminal procedures should not be taken without constitutional legitimacy, as this legitimacy is based on the principle of innocence, and this principle, as we have explained, determines the scope of any criminal procedure through the guarantees that restrict it. In this regard, there is a convergence between the Penal Code when it adheres to the legitimacy of crimes and penalties, and the Code of Procedure when it adheres to the principle of innocence. The former, in what it decides of crimes and penalties, is bound by respect for the public freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution. It is not permissible to criminalize any act that is considered an exercise of one of these freedoms, such as freedom of contract, freedom of assembly, freedom to form associations and unions, and freedom of the press. Likewise, the Code of Criminal Procedure, in what it decides of procedures for criminal litigation, is bound by respect for the guarantees guaranteed by the Constitution for rights and freedoms, based on the principle of innocence. It is not permissible to allow any criminal procedure to be initiated unless it is surrounded by these guarantees.

The principle of innocence, as a rule governing criminal procedures, requires that the accused not be described with any description of guilt during the course of the criminal dispute. This description does not change except when a conviction is issued. A fair trial is subject to the principle of confrontation, so the accused is allowed to confront the evidence attributed to him and direct his defense towards it at this stage. In light of the principle of innocence, the accused is not obligated to prove his innocence, but rather the Public Prosecution, as a representative of the prosecution, must present this evidence.

The principle of innocence as a rule of judgment requires that the court interpret doubt in favour of the accused, and that it not rule to convict him except on the basis of complete certainty and not on mere probability. This principle applies to the court alone, unlike the principle of innocence as a rule of criminal procedure, which addresses all parties that conduct all stages of the criminal dispute (including the court).

14-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

A fundamental principle of the right to a fair trial is that anyone charged with a criminal offence is presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law after a fair trial.

14-2-1 Presumption of Innocence

Everyone has the right to be presumed innocent and to be treated as innocent at trial unless and until he has been found guilty according to law in a trial that conforms at least to the minimum essential requirements of justice.[2453]

([2453]) Article 11 of the Universal Declaration, Article 14/2 of the International Covenant, Article 20(b)(1) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18(2) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 7(1)(b) of the African Charter, Article 8(2) of the American Convention, Article 16 of the Arab Charter, Article 6(2) of the European Convention, Principle 36(1) of

The right to the presumption of innocence is a rule of customary international law – and applies at all times and in all circumstances. It may not be subject to reservations in treaties or lawfully restricted in time of war or other public emergency.[2454]

It is an essential element of the right to fair criminal proceedings and the rule of law.

The right to the presumption of innocence applies to suspects even before they are formally charged with any crime and brought to trial, and the right remains in effect until the conviction is upheld after exhausting all appeals.

Criminal procedures and their implementation in each case, and the treatment of the accused, must respect the principle of the presumption of innocence.

14-2-2 Burden and standard of proof

Presuming the accused innocent until proven guilty means that the burden of proof lies with the prosecution. Unless guilt is proven beyond a reasonable doubt, no court may convict. If there are reasonable grounds for doubt, the accused must be acquitted.[2455]

Although the burden of proof or standard of proof is not expressly set out in the International Covenant or in regional human rights treaties, the Human Rights Committee, the Inter-American Court, the European Court and the African Commission have all indicated that the presumption of innocence requires the prosecution to prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt. According to the Human Rights Committee, the presumption of innocence “imposes on the prosecution the burden of proving the charge and ensures that guilt is not presumed until the charge is proved beyond reasonable doubt”.[2456]

The Special Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia has explained that this standard “requires that the truth-seeker be satisfied that there is no reasonable explanation for the evidence other than that the accused is guilty”.[2457]

The African Commission concluded that the proceedings against Ken Saro-Wiwa and his co-accused violated the principle of presumption of innocence. The court that conducted the trial acknowledged that there was no direct evidence linking the defendants to the crimes with which they were charged, but convicted them on the basis that none of them could prove their innocence. Moreover, before and during the trial, Nigerian government representatives had declared, in press conferences and at the United Nations, that the accused were guilty.[2458]

In accordance with the principle of presumption of innocence, the rules of evidence and the method of conducting the trial must ensure that the prosecution bears the burden of proof at all stages of the trial.

---

the Body of Principles, Principle 26 of the American Declaration, Article 66 of the Rome Statute, Article 20(3) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, and Article 21(3) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for the Former Yugoslavia.

([2454]) Human Rights Committee General Comment 24, § 8, General Comment 29, § 11 and 16, and General Comment § 6, 32; see ICRC Study on Customary International Humanitarian Law, vol. 1, Rule 100, pp. 357-358.

([2455]) Section N(6)(e) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 66(2) and (3) of the Rome Statute, Rule 87(a) of the Rwanda Tribunal Rules, and Rule 87(a) of the Yugoslavia Tribunal Rules.

([2456]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 30; European Court: Barbera, Messegüe and Gabardo v. Spain (10590)/83), § 77 (1988, Telfner v. Austria (33501)/96), § 15 (2001); see Ricardo Cañes v. Paraguay, Inter-American Court § 153-§ 154 (2004).

([2457]) Prosecutor v. Milan Martić (IT-95-11-A), Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, (8 October 2008) §55 and §61.

([2458]) PEN International, Constitutional Rights Project, Rights International on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr. and Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria 137/94 et al)), African Commission, § 9 (1998).

In some countries, the law requires that the accused (not the prosecution) state the elements of certain crimes. For example, the accused may be required to explain the reasons for his presence in a particular place (i.e. at or near the scene of the crime), or his possession of certain items (such as stolen, smuggled or prohibited goods). When these conditions are included in the text of the law, they are called "legal presumptions" or "presumptions of law and fact." The validity of these procedures has been challenged because they unacceptably place the burden of proof on the accused rather than the prosecution, in violation of the principle of presumption of innocence. In order to meet the requirements of the principle of presumption of innocence guaranteed in international law, it must be specified in law. It must also be rebuttable, preserving the accused's right to defense.[2459]

The Human Rights Committee has raised concerns about legal presumptions in laws criminalizing drug possession (for example where possession of a specific quantity leads to a presumption that it is for the purpose of supplying to others) and in counter-terrorism laws (including those requiring the accused to prove the absence of intent).[2460]

The American Committee considers that a criminal charge should not be brought on the basis of mere suspicion, or mere circumstantial evidence, as this places the burden of proof on the accused rather than the prosecution, in violation of the principle of presumption of innocence.[2461]

The Human Rights Committee has found that one element of Sri Lanka's Terrorism Act violates the presumption of innocence. Rather than requiring the prosecution to prove that a confession was voluntary, the law requires the accused to prove that his confession - which he claims was extracted under torture - was not voluntary and should therefore be excluded from evidence.[2462]

The Rome Statute prohibits any transfer of the burden of proof to the accused or any imposition of the burden of proof on him.)[2463](.

14-2-3 Measures to protect the right to presumption of innocence

If a decision is made to detain a person pending trial, and for how long, this detention must be consistent with the principle of the presumption of innocence.[2464]

The treatment of persons held in pre-trial detention and the conditions of their detention must be consistent with the presumption of innocence.[2465]

The Human Rights Committee has stressed that denial of bail or length of pre-trial detention should not be considered as indicators of guilt. It considered that imposing the maximum period of pre-trial detention by linking it to the penalty required for the alleged offence could constitute

---

([2459]) Section N(6)(e)(3) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Salabiako v. France (10519)/83), European Court (1988) §28-§30.

([2460]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: New Zealand, UN Doc §17 (2010) CCPR/C/NZL/CO/5 (for further clarification see. UN Doc CCPR/C/NZL/Q/5, question 19, p. 3), Australia, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/AUS. §11 (2009) CO/5.

([2461]) Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission: Peru, OEA/Ser. L/V/II. 95, doc. 7 rev Ch. V, (1996), Section §4, 8.

([2462]) (See Chapter 17 on exclusion of evidence), Singarasa v. Sri Lanka, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc. 4/ §7 (2004) CCPR/C/81/D/1033/2001.

([2463]) Article 67(l)(1) of the Rome Statute.

([2464]) Principle 3(2) of the Principles on Persons Deprived of Liberty in the Americas, and Rule 3/1 of the Council of Europe Rules on Pre-trial Detention, see General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 30; Van der Tang v. Spain (19382)/92), European Court § 55 (1995); Pinheiro and Dos Santos v. Uruguay (11). 506), USC §65-§66 (2002).

([2465]) Principle 36(1) of the Body of Principles, and Rule 84/2 of the Standard Minimum Rules; see Rule 95/1 of the European Prison Rules, Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, Spain, §24-§25 (2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/10/3/Add. 2; see Ladonna v. Slovakia (02/31827) ECtHR §66-§72 (2011).

a violation of the presumption of innocence, as well as the right to a trial within a reasonable time or release.[2466]

It also concluded that excessive pre-trial detention constituted a violation of the presumption of innocence.[2467]

Similarly, the Inter-American Court has made clear that pretrial detention that is disproportionately long, or without adequate justification, can constitute violations of the presumption of innocence, as it "tantamounts to a presumption of judgment" before trial. She stressed that pre-trial detention is only a preventive measure, not a punitive one; it must not exceed the strict limits necessary to ensure that the detained person does not obstruct the investigation or evade justice.[2468]

The presumption of innocence requires that judges and juries have no prior judgment in any case they are hearing.[2469]

It means that the authorities, including prosecutors, police and government officials, may not make any statements suggesting an opinion condemning the accused before the criminal proceedings are completed, or after a decision of acquittal has been issued.[2470]

It also means that the authorities have a duty to discourage the media from undermining the integrity of a criminal trial by issuing prejudgments or influencing the outcome of the trial, in a manner consistent with the right to freedom of expression and the right of the public to be informed of the proceedings of the trial.[2471]

Informing the public that a criminal investigation is underway, mentioning the suspect's name in this context, or saying that the suspect has been arrested does not violate the presumption of innocence, as long as the person is not suggested to be guilty.

The European Court has made it clear that a clear distinction must be drawn between stating that a person is suspected of a criminal offence, which is acceptable, and declaring that this person has committed a crime, which, in the absence of a final conviction, constitutes a violation of the presumption of innocence.[2472]

The principle of presumption of innocence must be taken as the basis on which the trial proceeds. Judges must therefore conduct the trial without having any preconceived opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused before them and must ensure that the trial is conducted in accordance with this principle.

Accordingly, the Human Rights Committee found that the presumption of innocence had been violated in a case where the trial judge asked the prosecution a number of preliminary

---

([2466]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §30; Human Rights Committee, Italy, §14 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/ITA/CO/5..

([2467]) Cagas et al. v. Philippines, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc. 3/ §7 (2001) CCPR/C/73/D/788/1997..

([2468]) Inter-American Court: Chaparro Alvarez and Lapo Iñiguez v. Ecuador, §145-§146 (2007); Tibi v. Ecuador, §189 (2004); Suarez-Rosero v. Ecuador, §77-§78 (1997); see Inter-American Commission, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights (2002), section 3(d)(1)(A), §223.

([2469]) Telfner v. Austria (33501)/96), European Court §15 (2001) and §19-§20.

([2470]) Section N(6)(e)(ii) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2471]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §30; Human Rights Committee: Gridin v. Russia, 1997/5/ §§3 (2000) UN Doc. CCPR/C/69/D/770 and 8/3, Ngo v. Cameroon, 2005/2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/96/D/1397) 6/ §7; Law Office of Ghazi Suleiman v. Sudan (222)/98 and 229/99), African Commission § § 54 (2003) and 56; Laurie Berenson-Mejia v. Peru, Inter-American Court (161- § 158 (2004); European Court: G. C. P §54-§61 (2011), (03/20899) v Romania and 46; Nestak v Slovakia §88-§91 (2007), (01/65559); CERD General Recommendation 31, §29; see Papon v France (No. 2) (54210)/00), European Court §6 (2001) (d).

([2472]) Kraus v. Switzerland, (7986)/77), European Commission decision § 3 (2006, European Court: Fatahlaev v. Azerbaijan (40984)/07), (2010) § 160-§ 163, Khodzhin and Others v. Russia (13470)/02) § 93-§ 97 (2008).

questions, refused to allow several defense witnesses to testify regarding the accused's alibi, and where senior officials made widely disseminated public statements portraying the accused as guilty.[2473]

The right not to be compelled to incriminate oneself or to confess guilt, and the related right to remain silent, are rooted in the principle of the presumption of innocence. It was found that allowing confessions extracted under torture or other ill-treatment, or under duress, to be admitted into evidence constituted a violation of the presumption of innocence.[2474]

Care must be taken to ensure that the accused is not surrounded by signs suggesting guilt during the trial, which may affect the presumption of his innocence. These include placing him in a cage in the courtroom, shackling his hands or feet with handcuffs or shackles, forcing him to wear prison clothes in the courtroom, or shaving his head before sending him to court in countries where procedures require shaving prisoners' hair after they are convicted.[2475]

Low rates of acquittal in criminal cases can raise doubts about the extent to which the principle of presumption of innocence is respected.[2476]

14-2-4 After acquittal

If a person is acquitted of a criminal charge, by a final judgment of a court (including on procedural grounds such as the expiry of the time limit for prosecution), this judgment becomes binding on all official authorities. Therefore, public authorities, particularly the courts, the public prosecution and the police, must refrain from giving any indication that this person is likely to be guilty, in order to avoid violating the principle of the presumption of innocence, and out of respect for the court's judgment and the rule of law.[2477]

The European Court found that the presumption of innocence had been violated after the accused had been acquitted or the proceedings had been discontinued, when the courts expressed doubts about his innocence in their explanation of why they had refused to grant him compensation for the period he had spent in pre-trial detention.[2478]

The legal systems of some countries separate criminal and non-criminal (civil) justice. Therefore, a judgment of acquittal issued against a person in a criminal case does not prevent him from being sued in a civil case based on the same facts.[2479]

But using a different (lower) standard of proof. However, decisions in such cases must respect the presumption of innocence and must not entail criminal consequences for a person who has previously been acquitted of a criminal charge.[2480]

([2473]) Larrañaga v. Philippines, Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR. 4/ §7 (2006) C/87/D/1421/2005.

([2474]) Inter-American Commission: Alfonso Martin del Campo Dodd v. Mexico §45-§63 (2009),(12). 228) and 76, Manriquez vs. Mexico (11). 509)، (1999). §85.

([2475]) See Rule 17(3) of the Standard Minimum Rules, Rule 97/2 of the European Prison Rules, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §30; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers: Russian Federation, /41/UN Doc. A/HRC/11 §37 (2009) Add. 2 (1); see European Court: Samoila and Sionka v. Romania (33065)/2003), (100- § 99 (2008, Ramishvili and Kohridze v. Georgia (174)/06), (2009) § 94- § 120 and § 132.

([2476]) See Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers: Russian Federation, §37 (2009) UN Doc. A/HRC/11/41/Add. 2 (1)..

([2477]) See Allen v. United Kingdom (25424)/09 ECJ Grand Chamber §103 (2013).

([2478]) European Court: Scanina v. Austria (13126)/87, (1993) § 31- § 30, Assan Rochetti v. Austria (28389). 95), (32- § § 31 (2000, Tindam v. Spain (25720)/05), (41- § § 35 (2010); see European Court: Geerings v. Netherlands (30810)/03), § 41-§ 51 (2007), Minelli v. Switzerland (79/8660), (1983), Hammern v. Norway (30287)/96), § 47-§ 49 (2003).

([2479]) X. v Austria, (81/9295), European Commission decision (1982).

([2480]) See European Court: Allen v. United Kingdom (25424)/09) Grand Chamber (2003) §101 and §123, Ringvold v. Norway (34964)/97). §38 (2003).

Chapter Fifteen: The Principle of Legality of Crime and Punishment

15-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

This principle is based on two basic pillars: protecting personal freedom and protecting the public interest.

In terms of protecting personal freedom, this principle sets clear limits for individuals on criminal acts before they are committed, through clear, specific texts for everything that is lawful or unlawful before they are committed. Thus, it guarantees them security and peace of mind in their lives, and thus prevents the control of the prosecution or judge, as none of them has the right to convict anyone unless the crime attributed to the accused and the punishment imposed on him were previously stipulated in the law before he committed that act.

The legal state - unlike the police state - is committed to the principle of the legality of crimes and punishments, as the law guarantees respect for the rights and freedoms of individuals in the face of the state.

On the other hand, the protection of the public interest is achieved by assigning the function of criminalization, punishment and criminal procedures to the legislator alone, in application of the principle of the legislator's exclusive jurisdiction in matters of rights and freedoms, considering that the values and interests protected by the penal code can only be determined by the representatives of the people, which was expressed by the Supreme Constitutional Court by saying: [The essential values that the penal code is issued to protect cannot be crystallized through the legislative authority elected by the citizens to represent them, and that its expression of their will requires it to have the power to decide on the actions that may be criminalized and their penalties, to ensure their legitimacy. Therefore, the application of this principle was necessary to enable citizens to connect with those values on which the structure of their society is based, in a way that unites them and ensures their social cohesion, so that they do not despise them, otherwise imposing a criminal penalty on them would be necessary to deter them].[2481]

In this way, people know in advance the values and interests on which society is built, and which are protected by the penal code, which contributes to the development of the social spirit and achieves social cohesion.

The principle of the legality of crimes and punishments means that there is no crime or punishment except based on a law, and there is no punishment except for actions subsequent to the date of the law's entry into force. This means that it is prohibited to file a lawsuit due to the commission of actions that were not criminalized at the time they were committed.[2482]

Crimes shall be punished in accordance with the law in force at the time of their commission.[2483]

Successive Egyptian constitutions have been keen to stipulate that a crime is only created by a legal text, and it is not permissible to assume its existence, nor to determine its elements in a way that is unknown to them. It has become a principle in those constitutions that there is no crime without a law or within its limits, and connected to this principle is that there is no

---

([2481]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 48 of 17 Q, issued in the session of February 22, 1997, date of publication March 6, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 411, rule No. 27.

([2482] Article No. 95 of the Constitution.

([2483]) Article No. 5 of the Penal Code, see: The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 1 of 41 Q, issued in the session of October 5, 2019, date of publication October 10, 2019, page No. 50.

punishment without a crime, no crime without a punishment, no retroactivity of criminal laws, and no punishment without a judicial ruling.[2484]

The principle of the legality of crimes and punishments does not necessarily require that the criminal penalty for acts deemed criminal by the legislator be directly specified. Rather, it is sufficient for the penal text to include those elements with which this penalty is capable of being specified, and thus determined through them. Thus, the penalty contained therein is neither vague nor leads to control but is based on foundations whose pillars the legislator has previously determined.[2485]

15-1-1 Drafting of Penal Texts

The principle of criminal legality "no crime or punishment except by law" came to achieve two important goals: first, the legislator's monopoly on issues of rights and freedoms, which is achieved by the principle of the exclusivity of legislation, and second, informing people of criminalization and punishment and what may threaten their freedoms before committing any act that exposes them to that. This is what is called legal certainty, and this legal certainty is achieved by the individual knowing clearly and specifically the actions to which he may be exposed, which requires special characteristics in criminal texts and in their interpretation. Therefore, legislation must be issued clearly and specifically, far from ambiguity and lack of specificity.

Therefore, it is required in criminal texts:

It must be specified in a certain manner, without ambiguity or vagueness:

The basic rules required by the Constitution in penal laws are that the degree of certainty governing their provisions should be at its highest levels, and more evident in these laws than in any other legislation, since penal laws impose the most serious restrictions on personal freedom and have the greatest impact. It is therefore necessary - in order to guarantee this freedom - that the acts punishable by these laws be defined in a decisive manner that prevents confusion with others, and that they should always be clear and explicit in stating the narrow limits of their prohibitions, since ignorance of them or their ambiguity in some aspects does not make those addressed by them aware of the reality of the acts that they must avoid. Likewise, the ambiguity of the content of the penal text means that the court of subject matter is prevented from applying disciplined rules that determine the elements of each crime and decide its punishment in a clear manner. These are rules that are not permitted and represent a framework for their work that may not be exceeded, since the goal sought by the constitution is to provide every citizen with full opportunities to exercise his freedoms within a framework of controls that it has restricted them with. It is necessary for the restrictions on freedom imposed by criminal laws to be certain because they call on those addressed by them to comply with them in order to protect their right to life and their freedoms from the dangers reflected by the punishment. The ambiguity of criminal laws has historically been linked to the abuse of power, and it was inevitable that the legislator would resort to new approaches in formulation that would not slip into those flexible, ambiguous or diluted expressions loaded with more than one meaning, with which the circle of criminalization expands, which would lead the court of subject matter to clear caveats that might end up - in the field of its application of penal texts - in inventing crimes that the legislator did not really intend to create, and in exceeding the limits that the constitution considered a vital area for exercising the rights and freedoms that it guaranteed,...

([2484]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 17 of 28 Q, issued in the session of October 13, 2018, date of publication October 22, 2018, page No. 3.

([2485]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 107 of 32 Q, issued in the session of March 14, 2015, date of publication March 25, 2015.

The characteristic of clarity and certainty in penal laws aims to guarantee individual freedom in the face of control, based on the belief of civilized nations in the sanctity of private life and the burden of restrictions that affect personal freedom, to ensure that every state exercises - in the field of imposing punishment in order to preserve the social order - the authority granted to it by taking into account the ultimate purposes of penal laws, which are incompatible with the conviction of the accused being an intended goal in itself. Whenever this is the case, the absence of ambiguity in these laws falls within the scope of the set of values that guarantee the rights of the accused the minimum level of protection that may not be waived or diminished.[2486]

The real scope of the principle of the legality of crimes and punishments is determined in light of several guarantees, the most important of which is the necessity of formulating penal texts in a clear and specific manner, without ambiguity or obscurity. Therefore, the law must define the elements that constitute the crime in clear and specific terms. If the legislator punishes a specific crime "malversation" without specifying its elements on which it is based, then the legislative text included in the law in this regard is not in accordance with the constitution. The European Court of Human Rights has also confirmed that the crime must be clearly defined in the legislation. With this clarity, individuals achieve legal stability and the principle of equality before the law is confirmed. These texts are not nets or traps cast by the legislator, hunting with their breadth or concealment for those who fall under them or make mistakes in their locations. These are guarantees whose purpose is to ensure that those addressed by penal texts are aware of their reality, so that their behavior is not contrary to them, but rather consistent with them and in compliance with them.[2487]

([2486]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 3 of 10 Q, issued in the session of January 2, 1993, date of publication January 14, 1993, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 103, rule No. 10.

([2487]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 50 of 37 Q issued in the session of March 2, 2019, date of publication March 11, 2019, page 34, Case No. 24 of 29 Q issued in the session of May 5, 2018, date of publication May 13, 2018, page 36, Case No. 53 of 31 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2017, date of publication November 15, 2017, page 26, Case No. 13 of 37 Q issued in the session of June 3, 2017, date of publication June 13, 2017, page 35, Case No. 116 of 29 Q issued in the session of July 25, 2015, date of publication August 2, 2015, Case No. 114 of 29 Q issued in the session of January 14, 2017 2017 Publication date January 24, 2017 Page No. 3, Case No. 234 of 36 Q issued in the session of December 3, 2016 Publication date December 15, 2016 Page No. 36, Case No. 22 of 29 Q issued in the session of May 9, 2015 Publication date May 20, 2015, Case No. 22 of 25 Q issued in the session of March 14, 2015 Publication date March 25, 2015, Case No. 35 of 30 Q issued in the session of June 1, 2014 Publication date June 9, 2014

The Supreme Constitutional Court ruled on the constitutionality of Article 375 bis of the Penal Code, which states that: "Without prejudice to any more severe penalty stipulated in another text, whoever, by himself or through others, displays force, threatens violence, or uses either against the victim or his spouse, or one of his ascendants or descendants, with the intent to terrorize or intimidate him by causing him any physical or moral harm, or to damage his property, or to steal his money, or to obtain a benefit from him, or to influence his will to impose authority over him, or to force him to perform an act or to compel him to refrain from it, or to obstruct the implementation of laws or legislation, or to resist the authorities, or to prevent the implementation of judgments, orders or enforceable judicial procedures, or to disturb public security or tranquility, shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than one year, whenever such act or threat is likely to strike terror into the soul of the victim, or to disturb his security, tranquility or peace, or to expose his life or safety to danger, or to cause damage to any of his property or His interests or infringement of his personal freedom, honor or reputation. The penalty shall be imprisonment for a period of not less than two years and not more than five years if the act is committed by two or more persons, or by bringing an animal that causes panic, or by carrying any weapons, sticks, machines, tools, flammable, corrosive, gaseous, narcotic, sleeping pills, or any other harmful substances, or if the act is committed against a female, or against someone who has not reached the age of eighteen years. In all cases, it stipulates that the convict be placed under police surveillance for a period equal to the period of the sentence imposed," where it was challenged on the grounds of unconstitutionality. The defendant complained about that text on the grounds that there was no social necessity to criminalize the acts subject to the challenged text, and that its wording was vague and ambiguous in a way that made it difficult for those addressed by it to ascertain the truth of the criminalized and punishable acts. The court saw that that complaint was refuted on the grounds that criminalizing the acts mentioned in this text finds its social necessity in protecting the safe from terror, preventing the violation of laws, and preserving the rule of law, which constitutes a constitutional justification for criminalizing them. The crimes mentioned in this text are primarily concerned with the seriousness of the criminal acts and

The restrictions imposed by criminal laws on personal freedom require that their provisions be formulated in a way that eliminates all controversy regarding the truth of their content, so that certainty about them reaches a level that protects them from controversy, and in a way that prevents public authority officials from applying them selectively, according to personal standards, mixed with whims, and that harm the innocent due to their lack of the objective foundations necessary to control them.[2488]

The origin of criminalization is for the legislator to seek to define the acts that involve a direct infringement on the protected interest. However, the modern development in the means and tools of committing the crime has required the legislator to confront organized crime and what it represents in terms of infringement on that interest, especially in the crimes that are most dangerous to society.[2489]

Criminal punishment must be limited to behaviors that harm a significant social interest that cannot be tolerated. Although criminal law agrees with other laws in its efforts to regulate the relationships of individuals with each other and with their relations with their society, this law differs from them in that it adopts criminal punishment as a tool to compel them to commit the actions it orders them to do, or to abandon those it forbids them from committing. In doing so, it seeks to determine, from a social perspective, what aspects of their behavior cannot be tolerated. This means that the punishment for their actions is not in violation of the constitution, unless it exceeds the limits of necessity required by the circumstances of the group at a stage of its development. If it is justified from a social point of view, the suspicion of a constitutional violation is removed. Therefore, the legislator must always strike a precise balance between the interests of society and the concern for its security and stability on the one hand, and the freedoms and rights of individuals on the other hand.[2490]

---

what they may cause in terms of infringement or aggression on rights, freedoms, and social interests subject to criminal protection. They are all considered rights, freedoms, and social interests. The legislator correctly estimated that protecting them from any acts that may infringe upon them or undermine them justifies criminalization. The constitution has mentioned most of them, such as the right to a safe life and dignity, the right to bodily integrity, personal freedom, the right to preserve honor and reputation, the right to property, and the right to security and tranquility, which the constitution was keen to emphasize in Articles (33, 35, 51, 54, 59, 60) thereof, so that each of the words mentioned in the text, whether specifying the act or the protected rights, freedoms, and interests, has a specific, regulated meaning, and thus the statement of expansion and dilution is removed from them, and the suspicion of obscurity and ambiguity is eliminated. There is no blame on the challenged text, as it took the multiplicity of perpetrators, or the perpetrator's bringing an animal that causes panic, or his carrying weapons, sticks, machines or tools used in aggression as circumstances that necessitate a harsher punishment, because the multiplicity and use of weapons or animals strengthen the resolve of the perpetrators and encourage them to commit the crime, and discourage the victims, undermine their resolve and instill terror in their souls. Nor is there any blame on the text for taking the victim's characteristics, namely femininity and childhood, as an aggravating circumstance, considering that they are, in most cases, less able to resist acts of bullying and more affected by threats and violence. It goes without saying that the crime stipulated in the contested article is an intentional crime, and error is not sufficient to establish guilt, regardless of its form or degree. The crime does not occur unless the act is committed with knowledge of its nature and the intention to do it, and the perpetrator's will is directed, with insight, towards threatening to harm one of the rights, freedoms and interests mentioned in this article. In addition to requiring the presence of a specific intent from among the multiple intents included in the text, it also goes without saying that the wording of this article has established the personality of responsibility, so that no one is held accountable for the crime except the one who actually committed it, as the sin is personal and does not accept representation. Therefore, the text of Article (375 bis) of the Penal Code is subject to the constitutional controls for criminalization, and does not violate Articles (54/1, 73, 92/2, 95) of the Constitution. See in this regard the Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 13 of Year 37 Q, issued in the session of June 3, 2017, publication date June 13, 2017, page No. 35.

([2488]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 183 of 29 Q, issued in the session of November 4, 2012, date of publication November 14, 2012.

([2489]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 97 of 28 Q, issued in the session of February 4, 2017, date of publication February 15, 2017, page No. 36.

([2490]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 24 of 29 Q issued in the session of May 5, 2018, date of publication May 13, 2018, page 36, Case No. 88 of 32 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2018, date of publication January 23, 2018, page 43, Case No. 53 of 31 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2017, date of publication November 15, 2017, page 26, Case No. 13 of 37 Q issued in the session of June 3, 2017, date of publication June 13, 2017, page 35, Case No. 114 of 29 Q issued in the

It is stipulated that the enforcement of restrictions imposed by criminal laws on personal freedom is subject to their constitutional legitimacy, and this includes that they be defined in a certain and unambiguous manner, since these laws call upon those addressed by them to comply with them in order to defend their right to life, as well as their freedoms, those risks reflected by the punishment, and thus it was inevitable that the penal texts be formulated in a way that prevents their flow, or the difference of opinions about their purposes, or the determination of criminal responsibility in areas other than their areas as an aggression on the personal freedom guaranteed by the constitution, and the ambiguity of the penal text means that the legislator is ignorant of the acts that he has criminalized, so their statement is not clear and obvious, nor their definition is decisive, or their understanding is straightforward, but rather vague and hidden from the masses, with their differences in understanding the penal text that criminalizes them, its significance, the scope of its application, and the truth of what it aims for, so that the enforcement of the text becomes linked to personal standards that refer to the assessment of those responsible for applying it of the truth of its content, and the replacement of their own understanding Its purposes are the place of its true aims, and its content is correct.[2491]

The crime in its legal concept is represented by a breach of a penal text, and its occurrence can only occur through an act or omission that achieves this breach. Every crime has a material element that cannot exist without it, which is essentially represented by an act or omission that occurred in violation of a penal text, thus revealing that what the criminal law initially relies on, in its deterrents and prohibitions, is the materiality of the act that is being held accountable for committing, whether this act is positive or negative. This is because the relationships that this law regulates in the field of its application to those addressed by its provisions, are centered on the acts themselves, in their external signs and real manifestations, and their material characteristics, as they are the basis of guilt and its cause, and they are what can be proven and denied, and they are what distinguishes between crimes from each other, and they are what the court of subject matter directs on the rule of reason to evaluate them and estimate the appropriate punishment for them. Rather, in the field of estimating the availability of criminal intent, the court of subject matter does not isolate itself from the incident in question that has been clearly and conclusively proven, but rather it turns its gaze It is a virtue in its elements of what the perpetrator really intended by committing it, and thus these elements reflect an external and material expression of a conscious will, and it is therefore inconceivable according to the provisions of the Constitution that a crime exists in the absence of its material element, nor is it possible to establish evidence of the availability of a causal relationship between the materiality of the criminal act and the results it caused, far from the reality of this act and its content.

It is necessary that all manifestations of the expression of human will - and not the intentions that a person harbors in the depths of his being - are considered to fall within the area of criminalization whenever they reflect external behavior that is legally punishable. If the matter is not related to actions caused by the will of the perpetrator and are expressed externally in material forms that are not mistaken by the eye, then there is no crime.

Whereas the origin of crimes is that they reflect a complex composition, considering that their foundation is a simultaneity between a hand that is connected to sin in its work, and a conscious session of January 14, 2017, date of publication January 24, 2017, page 3, Case No. 234 of 36 Q issued in the session of December 3 For the year 2016, date of publication December 15, 2016, page No. 36, Case No. 146 for the year 20 Q issued in the session of February 8, 2004, date of publication March 4, 2004, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 222, Rule No. 34.

---

([2491]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 161 of 26 Q, issued in the session of April 7, 2018, date of publication April 16, 2018, page No. 21.

mind that is mixed with it to dominate it, determining its steps, and directing itself to the result arising from its activity; so that criminal intent is a moral element in the crime, complementary to its material element, and compatible with the individual personality in its features and orientations. This conscious will is what civilized nations require in their approaches to criminalization, as it is a pillar of crime and a fixed principle inherent in its nature, and not something crude or foreign or alien to its characteristics. This is because freedom of will means freedom to choose between good and evil, and each has his own direction, so that crime - in its true meaning - is resolved into a relationship between the punishment imposed by the state through its legislation, and the will in which that criminal tendency operates, the correction of which and the response to its effects must be an alternative to pure revenge and retaliation against its owner. It has become a fixed matter - and as a general principle - that an act is not criminalized unless it is voluntary and based on free choice, and therefore intentional. Although it is permissible to say that determining the content of that will, standing on its nature, is still a difficult matter, its meaning - as a moral element in the crime - revolves in general around criminal intentions, or delinquent, or evil, deliberate tendencies, or those whose basis is deception, or those that are purely based on knowledge of the sin, coupled with the intent to breach its limits, so that all of them indicate the will to commit the act with malice.[2492]

One of the basic rules required by the Constitution in penal laws is that the degree of certainty, which regulates its provisions, should be at its highest levels, and more evident in these laws than in any other legislation, since penal laws impose the most serious and most effective restrictions on personal freedom. These are rules that are not permitted and represent a framework for their work that may not be exceeded, since the goal sought by the Constitution is to provide every citizen with full opportunities to exercise his freedoms, within a framework of controls that it has restricted them with.[2493]

Criminalization is not a judicial act, but rather an authentic legislative act undertaken by the legislator, who determines its suitability and scope, adhering to the aforementioned constitutional controls, and clearly and unambiguously explains the legal model that covers the physical act, the moral component of this model, and all the conditions and requirements of this model, then determines the penalty prescribed for that model, all of which is in implementation of the principle of the legality of crimes and penalties; the Supreme Constitutional Court's oversight does not invoke its jurisdiction to carry out oversight of legislative texts in order to extend the penalty prescribed therein to other than what is stipulated in the legislation, as this falls within the framework of the legislator's discretionary power. If he sees that making this amendment is inevitable, he may exercise his discretionary power in this regard, with the alternatives and adaptations he possesses.[2494]

---

([2492]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 156 of 34 Q issued in the session of November 2, 2019, date of publication November 5, 2019, page 23, Case No. 186 of 33 Q issued in the session of October 13, 2018, date of publication October 22, 2018, page 34, Case No. 61 of 21 Q issued in the session of February 3, 2018, date of publication February 12, 2018, page 20, Case No. 139 of 29 Q issued in the session of January 13, 2018, date of publication January 23, 2018, page 35, Case No. 173 of 31 Q issued in the session of December 2, 2017, date of publication December 11, 2017, page 48, Case No. 97 of 28 Q issued in the session of From February 2017, date of publication February 15, 2017, page 36, case No. 289 of 24 Q issued in the session of March 5, 2016, date of publication March 14, 2016, case No. 124 of 25 Q issued in the session of January 14, 2007, date of publication January 28, 2007, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page 194, rule No. 21, case No. 114 of 21 Q issued in the session of June 2, 2001, date of publication June 14, 2001, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page 986, rule No. 119, case No. 49 of 17 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7 Page No. 739 Rule No. 48, Case No. 25 of 16 Q issued in the session of July 3, 1995, date of publication July 20, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, Page No. 45 Rule No. 2, Case No. 5 of 15 Q issued in the session of May 20, 1995, date of publication June 8, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 686 Rule No. 43, Case No. 20 of 15 Q issued in the session of October 1, 1994, date of publication October 20, 1994, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 358, Case No. 105 of 12 Q issued in the session of February 12, 1994, date of publication March 3, 1994, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 154 Rule No. 17, Case No. 3 of Year 10 Q issued in the session of January 2, 1993, date of publication January 14, 1993, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 103, Rule No. 10, Case No. 59 of Year 18 Q issued in the session of February 1, 1997, date of publication February 13, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 286, Rule No. 19.

([2493]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 173 of 31 Q, issued in the session of December 2, 2017, date of publication December 11, 2017, page No. 48.

The legislator has the discretionary power to regulate rights and duties - without prejudice to the public interest - to determine, on objective grounds and through the penal systems he approves, the elements of each crime without the constitution imposing specific methods on him to define them, and without prejudice to the necessity that the acts criminalized by these systems be conclusive in stating the narrow limits of their prohibitions, so that they are not tainted by ambiguity or interfere with legitimate acts protected by the constitution.

The ambiguity of the penal text means that the legislator is ignorant of the acts that he has deemed criminal, so their statement is not clear and distinct, nor is their definition conclusive or their understanding straightforward, but rather vague and hidden from the masses, with their disagreement about the content of the penal text that criminalizes them, its significance, the scope of its application, and the truth of what it aims at, so that the implementation of this text becomes linked to personal standards that refer to the assessment of those responsible for applying it of the truth of its content, and the substitution of their own understanding of its purposes for its true aims and the correctness of its content.[2495]

Since the original principle is that the legislative authority itself - through a law - undertakes to define crimes and specify their penalties, and therefore it cannot completely relinquish this mandate by entrusting it entirely to the executive authority, and although it is sufficient for it to define a general framework for the conditions of criminalization and the corresponding penalty, for the executive authority to detail some of its aspects, its intervention in the penal field is not considered except in accordance with the conditions and situations regulated by the law, which means that the legal texts alone - with their generality and lack of personality la Portée générale et impersonnelle - are the ones with which criminalization revolves, and it is not conceivable that it would arise apart from them, and this does not mean that the executive authority has a reserved area in which it alone regulates the conditions of criminalization, as its role remains subordinate to the legislative authority, and is defined in light of its laws, and it does not undertake it on its own initiative without support from an existing law [2496]

The basic principle is that every crime should have a specific penalty stipulated by law or determined - at least - according to the limits it specifies. Likewise, one of the initial rules required by the Constitution in penal laws is that the degree of certainty governing their provisions should be at its highest levels, and more evident in these laws than in any other legislation, since penal laws impose the most serious restrictions on personal freedom and have the greatest impact. It is therefore necessary - in order to guarantee this freedom - that the acts punishable by these laws be defined in a decisive manner that prevents confusion with others, and that they should always be clear and explicit in stating the narrow limits of their prohibitions, since ignorance of them or their ambiguity in some aspects does not make those addressed by them aware of the reality of the acts that they must avoid. Likewise, the ambiguity of the content of the penal text means that the court of subject matter is prevented from applying disciplined rules that determine the elements of each crime and decide its punishment in a clear manner. These are rules that are not permitted and represent a framework for their work that may not be

---

([2494]) See in this regard: The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 173 of 31 Q, issued in the session of December 2, 2017, date of publication December 11, 2017, page No. 48.
([2495]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 146 of 20 Q, issued in the session of February 8, 2004, date of publication March 4, 2004, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 222, rule No. 34.
([2496]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 24 of 18 Q, issued in the session of July 5, 1997, date of publication July 19, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 709, rule No. 47.

exceeded, since the goal sought by the constitution is to provide every citizen with full opportunities to exercise his freedoms within a framework of controls that it has restricted them with. It is necessary for the restrictions on freedom imposed by criminal laws to be certain because they call on those addressed by them to comply with them in order to protect their right to life and their freedoms from the dangers reflected by the punishment. The ambiguity of criminal laws has historically been linked to the abuse of power, and it was inevitable that the legislator would resort to new approaches in formulation that would not slip into those flexible, ambiguous or diluted expressions loaded with more than one meaning, with which the circle of criminalization expands, which would lead the court of subject matter to clear caveats that might end up - in the field of its application of penal texts - in inventing crimes that the legislator did not really intend to create, and in exceeding the limits that the constitution considered a vital area for exercising the rights and freedoms that it guaranteed, which ultimately violates the essential controls on which a fair trial is based according to the text of Article 67 of the constitution.[2497]

The texts must include a clear definition of the controls for their application:

Every criminal penalty has a direct effect that returns to its nature and is represented in depriving a person of his right to life, freedom or property. This penalty has been, throughout dark stages in history, a flexible tool for oppression and tyranny, achieving the ambitions of the despotic authority, and distancing the punishment from its social purposes. It was logical and necessary for civilized countries to work to establish their penal legislation according to fixed foundations that guarantee in themselves the adoption of sound legal means in their objective and procedural aspects, to ensure that the penalty is not a tool that suppresses freedom, storming it with contradiction to the values that the group believes in in its interaction with civilized nations and its contact with them. It was necessary - in the field of supporting and establishing this trend - for contemporary constitutions to decide on the restrictions that they saw fit on the authority of the legislator in the field of criminalization, expressing their belief that human rights and freedoms may not be sacrificed except for a necessity dictated by a social interest that has its consideration, and in recognition of their recognition that freedom in its full dimensions is inseparable from the sanctity of life, and that the facts The bitter experience that humanity has experienced throughout its stages of development imposes an integrated system that guarantees the group's vital interests and protects – within the framework of its objectives – the individual's rights and basic freedoms in a way that prevents the misuse of punishment to distort its purposes. This was achieved in particular through strict controls and more precise standards to determine the nature of the acts that are prohibited from being committed, in a way that removes their ambiguity, and in a way that strips the court of the discretionary power with which it decides the occurrence of a crime or imposes a penalty without a text, so that the social interest - in its highest levels - remains a constraint on the legislative authority, seeking legitimacy in the reality of its content, and seeking justice in the depths of its sources.

The characteristic of clarity and certainty in penal laws aims to guarantee individual freedom in the face of control, based on the belief of civilized nations in the sanctity of private life and the burden of restrictions that affect personal freedom, to ensure that every state exercises - in the field of imposing punishment in order to preserve the social order - the authority granted to it by taking into account the ultimate purposes of penal laws, which are incompatible with the conviction of the accused being an intended goal in itself. Whenever this is the case, the absence of ambiguity in these laws falls within the scope of the set of values that guarantee the rights of the accused the minimum level of protection that may not be waived or diminished.[2498]

---

([2497]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 3 of 10 Q, issued in the session of January 2, 1993, date of publication January 14, 1993, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 103, rule No. 10.

The idea of punishment, whether criminal, disciplinary or civil, means that a certain error cannot be exceeded. This is determined in the criminal field through the penal texts, whose definition of the acts that the legislator has introduced into the field of criminalization is clear and decisive, meaning that a legal definition of the crime that specifies its elements is necessary (Nullum Crimen Sin lege). It is not permissible to make an analogy to it to attach others to it, considering that criminal legitimacy is based on those acts that the legislator has deemed sinful from a social perspective, and his prohibitions do not extend to others, even if committing them causes public disorder, or their content is crude and frivolous. Hence, this legitimacy, in view of the serious restrictions imposed by penal texts on personal freedom, restricts the interpretation of these texts and also determines the scope of their application in a way that does not confuse them with others, and on the assumption that penal texts may not be nets or traps cast by the legislator, hunting with their breadth or concealment those who fall under them or make mistakes in their locations, and because the punishment that these texts are compared to is not considered a necessary result of the crime to which they are connected, but rather a part of it that complements and completes it.[2499]

That the texts be governed by strict standards and sharp criteria that are consistent with their nature:

Criminal texts are governed by strict standards that relate to them alone, and by sharp criteria that are consistent with their nature, and are not challenged in their application by other legal rules.[2500]

Criminal texts should be formulated within narrow limits.

The origin of penal texts is that they are formulated within narrowly tailored limits, defining the acts that the legislator has criminalized, and specifying their nature, to ensure that ignorance of them does not lead to a violation of the rights guaranteed by the constitution to citizens, such as those related to the freedom to express opinions and ensure their flow from their various sources, as well as the right to the integrity of the personality and that every individual is safe against unlawful arrest or detention. Although it is permissible to say that assessing the punishment and determining the conditions for imposing it are part of the framework of organizing rights and fall under the discretionary authority of the legislator, this authority is limited by the rules of the constitution and it is necessary that penal texts not be nets or traps that the legislator casts, hunting with their breadth or concealment for those who fall under them or do not see their locations.[2501]

Legal evidence in the field of criminalization

It should be noted that the constitutionally established jurisdiction of the legislative authority - in the field of establishing crimes and determining their penalties - does not entitle it to interfere with the evidence it establishes in order to prevent the criminal court from carrying out its

([2498]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 3 of 10 Q, issued in the session of January 2, 1993, date of publication January 14, 1993, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 103, rule No. 10.

([2499]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 33 of 16 Q, issued in the session of February 3, 1996, date of publication February 17, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 393, rule No. 22.

([2500]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 37 of 15 Q issued in the session of August 3, 1996, date of publication August 15, 1996, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([2501]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 49 of 17 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 739, rule No. 48, Case No. 25 of 16 Q issued in the session of July 3, 1995, date of publication July 20, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 45, rule No. 2.

original mission in the field of verifying the existence of the elements of the crime specified by the legislator in implementation of the principle of separation of the legislative and judicial authorities.

The legislator may not specify a specific fact and make its direct proof indirectly evidence of the occurrence of the moral element of the crime, thereby introducing the point of view he has deemed appropriate in a matter in which the matter is ultimately up to the court of subject matter, due to its connection to the investigation that it conducts itself in search of the objective truth when deciding on the criminal accusation; it is an investigation over which no one else has authority, and the outcome of what it reveals is the belief that it forms from the totality of the evidence presented to it.

Thus, the legislator - through the legal presumption he established - has violated mandatory procedural means that are closely related to the right to defense; by making the accused confront the fact imposed by the legal presumption against him, and requiring him to deny it contrary to the principle of innocence, dropping - from a realistic perspective - all the value that the constitution has bestowed on this principle [2502]

15-1-2 Interpretation of Penal Laws

The general rule in interpreting criminal law is that if the penal text is incomplete or ambiguous, it should be interpreted broadly in favor of the accused and narrowly against his interest, and that it is not permissible to take it into account in the penal code by analogy against the interest of the accused because there is no crime or punishment without a text in application of the principle of the legality of crimes and punishments, which took the guarantee of personal freedom as a basis for its approval and confirmation. However, this freedom itself restricts its content, so this principle is only enforced to the extent and within the limits that guarantee its preservation. It is not permissible, therefore, to apply penal texts that are misapplied to an existing position of an accused, nor to interpret them in a way that takes them out of their meaning or purposes, nor to extend the scope of criminalization - by analogy - to acts that the legislator has not criminalized. Rather, it is always necessary - whenever their content is open to more than one interpretation - for the judge to prefer, among them, what is more guaranteeing of personal freedom, within the framework of a logical relationship that he establishes between these texts and the will of the legislator, whether that which he declared or that which can be assumed. (rationally).[2503]

15-1-3 The law most favorable to the accused

The principle is that crimes are punished according to the law in force at the time they were committed. However, if a law is issued after the act has occurred and before a final judgment is made, which is more beneficial to the accused, then it is the law that is to be followed and no other.

If a law is issued after a final judgment that makes the act for which the criminal was convicted not punishable, the execution of the judgment shall be suspended and its criminal effects shall end.

([2502]) See: Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 96 of 27 Q, issued in the session of March 7, 2020, date of publication March 16, 2020, page No. 3.

([2503]) Appeal No. 27354 of year 59 Q issued in the session of November 15, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 1001, rule No. 157. See: the ruling of the Supreme Constitutional Court, case No. 81 of year 22 Q issued in the session of April 6, 2008, publication date April 21, 2008 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 979, rule No. 100.

However, if the lawsuit procedures are initiated or a conviction is issued for an act that was committed in violation of a law that prohibits its commission within a specific period, the expiry of this period does not prevent the lawsuit from proceeding or the penalties imposed. [2504]

The stability of the principle of the legitimacy of crimes and punishments in the concepts of civilized countries called for its confirmation among them. It was then echoed in many international covenants, including the last paragraph of Article 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the first paragraph of Article 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and Article 7 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights. This principle is also repeated in many constitutions, including what is stipulated in Article 66 of the Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt, which states that there is no punishment except for actions subsequent to the entry into force of the law that stipulates them, and what is also stipulated in Article 187 of this Constitution, which stipulates that the principle of the provisions of laws is their application from the date of their entry into force, and they have no effect on what occurred before them except by a special text approved by the majority of the members of the legislative authority as a whole. [2505]

The provisions of the laws only apply to what occurs from the date of their enforcement, and they have no effect on what occurred before them. The principle of the non-retroactivity of the substantive provisions of the texts of criminal laws is derived from the rule of the legality of crime and punishment, which requires that they be limited to the punishment of crimes in accordance with the law in force at the time of their commission. The law that is most favourable to the accused is outside this scope.[2506]

It is decided, in application of the principle of the legality of crimes and punishments in both its aspects, that the rules of the Penal Code do not apply to the past, nor do they extend to events that occur after the end of their application, either due to their cancellation or the expiration of the specified time period for their application, meaning that these rules only apply with a direct effect, and the only exceptions to this rule are the texts that are more beneficial to the accused only, as they apply with a retroactive effect that extends to the past.[2507]

The time frame for the application of the legal rule is determined on the basis of the immediate and direct effect of the legislation, and retroactivity is only an exception under the conditions and situations guaranteed by the constitution, with it being absolutely impermissible in the field of penal texts unless it is more beneficial to the accused.[2508]

The issuance of a new law that removes the criminalization of acts that were criminalized by the old law creates a new legal status for the accused and undermines - by returning these acts to the circle of legitimacy - a previous status for them.[2509]

The law that is most suitable for the accused is the one that creates for him, from a substantive and not a procedural perspective, a position or status that is more suitable for him than the old law, by cancelling the crime attributed to him or some of its penalties, or reducing them, or

---

([2504] Article No. 5 of the Penal Code.

([2505]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 84 of 17 Q, issued in the session of March 15, 1997, date of publication March 27, 1997, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 461, rule No. 30.

([2506] Appeal No. 11551 of 63 Q issued in the session of February 28, 1999 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 147, rule No. 33.

([2507]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 91 of 27 Q, issued in the session of December 2, 2007, date of publication December 13, 2007, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 769, rule No. 77.

([2508]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 143 of 19 Q, issued in the session of November 12, 2006, date of publication November 21, 2006, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 127, rule No. 13.

([2509]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 333 of 23 Q, issued in the session of June 10, 2007, date of publication June 17, 2007, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 551, rule No. 52.

establishing a way to exempt from criminal liability, or cancelling an element of the crime. In these cases and based on the significance of changing the policy of criminalization and punishment to mitigation, the accused has the right to benefit in his favor from those new texts from the date of their issuance.[2510]

Every new law that removes the criminalization of acts that were criminalized by the old law creates a new legal status for the accused and undermines - by returning these acts to the circle of legitimacy - a previous status.[2511]

If two laws are applied in succession and the second is not more favourable to the accused, the first law must always be applied to the acts that occurred before it was amended, because the second cannot be applied to an incident that preceded its issuance. It is established that criminal law has no retroactive effect on incidents prior to its enforcement, and this is a fundamental rule required by the legitimacy of crime and punishment.[2512]

But it must be taken into account that although the legislator stipulated in the second law the cancellation of the first law, he did not intend, obviously, for this cancellation to include non-punishment for the acts that were also punished in the second law.[2513]

It must also be considered that the penal laws that are compared with each other, specifically those that are most beneficial to the accused, assume that they all agree with the provisions of the Constitution, and that they are in conflict with one subject, and that they differ from one another in their punishments. Thus, the forms of punishment that are perpendicular to one subject do not prevail except those that are in their content, conditions, or amount less severe than others, and have a lighter effect. Accordingly, if the repealed law, under which the act was committed, is unconstitutional, the new law cannot be applied to the facts that occurred before its issuance. Otherwise, applying the new text to the facts prior to its enforcement would be a violation of the rule of legality of crimes and punishments, as it would apply in this case to non-criminal acts. Thus, the rule of the law that is most favorable to the accused is only applied on the assumption that the older and newer laws are constitutional.[2514]

Although criminal laws are originally not permissible to apply to facts that were fully formed before they came into force, the generality of this rule loses its meaning, since personal freedom, although it is threatened by the worst criminal law, this law protects and safeguards it if it is more lenient with the accused, whether by ending the criminalization of acts that were criminalized by a previous criminal law, or by amending its classification or the structure of some of the elements on which it is based, in a way that completely erases its penalties or makes them less severe, in implementation of the rule of the law that is best for the accused, that rule which, although it takes the text of Article 5 of the Penal Code as a basis and support, the

---

([2510]) General Authority for Criminal Matters, Appeal No. 48528 for year 76 Q issued in the session of April 21, 2009 and published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 18, Rule No. 3, and see: Appeal No. 25203 for year 74 Q issued in the session of April 19, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 322, Rule No. 50, Appeal No. 24966 for year 59 Q issued in the session of June 7, 1993 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 566, Rule No. 84, Appeal No. 2081 for year 49 Q issued in the session of March 12, 1980 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 364, Rule No. 67.

([2511]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 22 of 15 Q, issued in the session of April 1, 2012, date of publication April 15, 2012.

([2512]) Appeal No. 13539 of 82 Q issued in the session of May 2, 2013 and published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page No. 548, Rule No. 77, Appeal No. 2898 of 84 Q issued in the session of November 25, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 859, Rule No. 114, Appeal No. 17271 of 68 Q issued in the session of October 4, 1999 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 498, Rule No. 115.

([2513] Appeal No. 15094 of 63 Q issued in the session of November 24, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, Page No. 1128, Rule No. 189.

([2514]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 183 of 31 Q, issued in the session of April 1, 2012, date of publication April 15, 2012.

protection of personal freedom guaranteed by the Constitution establishes and establishes this rule in a way that prevents the legislator from amending or departing from it, since what is considered a law that is best for the accused, even if it does not fall under the interpretative laws whose provisions are integrated into the interpreted law, and go back to the date of its enforcement as part of it, crystallizes the will of the legislator that he initially intended when he approved this law, except that every new law The criminalization of acts that were criminalized by the old law, or the modification of their classification or the structure of the elements on which they are based, or the modification of their punishments in a way that makes them less severe, creates a new legal status for the accused, and undermines a previous status, and thus the new law - which has become more lenient towards the accused, and more helpful in preserving personal freedom, which the constitution considered a natural right that cannot be touched - replaces the old law, so that they do not conflict or overlap, but rather the later of the two supersedes the earlier one.[2515]

Whenever a new law is issued that restores the situation to its state before criminalization or punishes with a lighter punishment than to restore to its owners that freedom that the old law had taken away from them, and that this law turns back on its heels, upholding the values that the new law has sided with, and assuming that preserving them does not violate public order, as it is a flexible, evolving concept, in light of the standards of reason, from which the most suitable law is not separate, but rather agrees with them and works in light of them, then its enforcement since its issuance is only to establish public order, in a way that prevents its disintegration, after this law has become more complete for the rights of those addressed by the old law, and more protective of their freedoms. [2516]

Any law that is more favorable to the accused and issued after the act has occurred - and before a final ruling is made on it - means that the subsequent law applies to acts that were criminalized by a previous law, and that it takes the text of Article 5 of the Penal Code as a basis and support. However, the protection of personal freedom that the Constitution guarantees in Article 41 thereof is what establishes and consolidates this rule in a way that prevents the legislator from amending or departing from it. That is because what is considered a law that is more beneficial to the accused, even if it does not fall under the interpretative laws whose provisions are integrated into the interpreted law and are considered part of it to the date of its enforcement, crystallizes the will of the legislator that he initially intended when he approved this law. However, every new law that erases the criminalization of acts that were criminalized by the old law creates a new legal status for the accused and undermines - by returning these acts to the circle of legitimacy - a previous status. Hence, the new law - which has become more lenient towards the accused and more helpful in preserving personal freedom, which the constitution considers a natural right that cannot be infringed - replaces the old law, so that they do not conflict or overlap, but rather the later one takes precedence over the earlier one. It has become necessary, therefore, in the field of implementing the substantive criminal laws (les lois penales de fond) that are more lenient towards the accused, to emphasize that preserving personal freedom on the one hand, and the necessity of defending the interests of the group and preserving its public order on the other hand, are two parallel interests that do not conflict. It has become a foregone conclusion - and whenever a new law is issued that restores the situation to its state before criminalization - that the freedom that the old law had taken away from its owners should be restored to them, and that this law should turn back on its heels, upholding the values that the new law has sided with, and assuming that preserving them does not violate public order as a flexible concept that develops in light of the standards of the collective mind from which the most appropriate law is not separate, but rather agrees with them and works in light of them, so its enforcement since its issuance is only to establish public order in a way that prevents its disintegration, after this law has become more guaranteeing of the rights of those addressed by the old law and more protective of their freedoms.[2517]

([2515]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 14 of 25 Q issued in the session of August 1, 2015, date of publication August 10, 2015, Case No. 82 of 18 Q issued in the session of March 14, 2015, date of publication March 25, 2015, Case No. 13 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 2, 2011, Case No. 81 of 22 Q issued in the session of April 6, 2008, date of publication April 21, 2008 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 979, rule No. 100, Case No. 116 of 29 Q issued in the session of July 25, 2015, date of publication August 2, 2015, Case No. 22 of 29 Q issued in the session of May 9, 2015, date of publication May 20 For the year 2015, Case No. 35 of the year 30 Q issued in the session of June 1, 2014, publication date June 9, 2014.

([2516]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 158 of 26 Q, issued in the session of December 6, 2009, date of publication December 20, 2009.

It is legally established in cases where the type of punishment is the same in the previous and subsequent laws, that the more appropriate of them is the one that determines a shorter period for it, whether in its maximum limit or minimum limit or both, provided that the law that is more appropriate for the accused is issued before he is sentenced with a final judgment that is not subject to appeal, opposition, or cassation. It is the same in this regard whether the judgment was issued without being subject to appeal, or whether it became so due to the expiration of the appeal deadlines, or the exhaustion of the aforementioned appeal methods. If the judgment is subject to appeal at the time of issuance of the new law that is more appropriate for the accused, then this law is the applicable law, whether the new law was issued during the appeal deadline or was issued during the period in which the case is before the appeal court. And in cases where there are multiple laws that must be applied during the period between the commission of the act and the final ruling in the case, such as if a law that is more favorable to the accused was issued after the law during which the criminal act was committed, and then this more favorable law was repealed by another law before the final ruling in the case. Therefore, the application of this most suitable law - despite its cancellation - is necessary, without the law of action or the law of the final judgment, in implementation of the considerations that led the legislator to establish the rule of retroactivity of the most suitable criminal laws for the accused.[2518]

Denying the retroactive effect of criminal laws assumes that their application in relation to the accused is harmful to him. If it is more beneficial to his legal position in the face of the prosecution authority, then their retroactivity is inevitable, in application of the rule of the law that is most beneficial to the accused.[2519]

Issuing an amendment to the law stipulating that a fine may be imposed instead of a prison sentence will achieve the meaning of the law that is most beneficial to the accused.[2520]

Law No. 71 of 2009 promulgating the Mental Health Care Law and amending some provisions of the Penal Code issued by Law No. 58 of 1937 achieves the meaning of the law that is most suitable for the accused in the ruling of the second paragraph of Article 5 of the Penal Code if the accused has a legal status that is more suitable for him than the old law, by stipulating equality between insanity and mental illness as reasons for exemption from punishment, while

---

([2517]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 84 of 17 Q issued in the session of March 15, 1997, date of publication March 27, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 461, rule No. 30, Case No. 48 of 17 Q issued in the session of February 22, 1997, date of publication March 6, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 411, rule No. 27.

([2518]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 82 of 18 Q, issued in the session of March 14, 2015, date of publication March 25, 2015.

([2519]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 144 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 2, 2011, Case No. 71 of 27 Q issued in the session of January 2, 2011, date of publication January 8, 2011, Case No. 157 of 27 Q issued in the session of July 4, 2010, date of publication July 11, 2010, Case No. 167 of 26 Q issued in the session of June 6, 2010, date of publication June 20, 2010.

([2520] Appeal No. 23361 of 4 Q issued in the session of November 15, 2015 (unpublished).

the old law limited it to insanity and coma resulting from narcotic drugs of any kind if he took them by force or without his knowledge of them.[2521]

The law issued prohibiting the death penalty, life imprisonment, or hard labor for an accused who was not yet eighteen years old at the time of committing the crime is a law that is more favorable to the accused.[2522]

It is established that the rule of the application of the most suitable law stipulated in Article 5 of the Penal Code only applies with respect to substantive issues without procedures. It only affects texts related to criminalization and determining the punishment or amending it by mitigation or aggravation.[2523]

On the other hand, the issuance of a law that includes an objective rule that would restrict the state's right to punish, and thus it applies from the day of its issuance to the lawsuit as long as it has not ended with a final judgment, as it is the most suitable law for the accused according to Article Five of the Penal Code.[2524]

If the law has arranged effects on reconciliation, as it results in the expiration of the criminal case and the suspension of the execution of the sentence imposed, and the jurisdiction to suspend the execution is vested in the Public Prosecution if a final judgment is not issued in the case or the suspension of the execution of the sentence in the event that the judgment becomes final, then reconciliation is considered a waiver by the social body of its right in the criminal case in exchange for the consideration on which the reconciliation was based, and its effect occurs by force of law, which requires the court, if reconciliation is concluded during the consideration of the case, to rule that the criminal case has expired. However, if it is delayed until after the case is decided, then it necessarily results in the suspension of the execution of the criminal penalty imposed. The reconciliation system, as previously mentioned, is optional for the accused, as it allows him to adhere to the application of the most appropriate law on him and avoid the issuance of a judgment against him if he is likely to convict, and he may reject it if he returns acquittal, and he may even accept it in the latter case to avoid the moral harm to him from standing in the position of the accused before the judicial authorities. Since that was the case, and the reconciliation or settlement system, although it appears procedural, it establishes a substantive rule that restricts the state's right to punishment by deciding that the criminal case has expired. By reconciliation instead of punishing the accused, which is what achieves the meaning of the most suitable law in the concept of Article 5 of the Penal Code, as long as it creates a better situation for him [2525]

Although the rules of reconciliation appear to be procedural, their ruling establishes a substantive rule, because it benefits the state's right to punish by deciding the expiry of the criminal case for reconciliation instead of punishing the accused. Therefore, the issuance of a law permitting reconciliation in a criminal case applies from the day of its issuance to the case,

---

([2521] Appeal No. 26890 of 72 Q issued in the session of November 8, 2009 (unpublished).

([2522] Appeal No. 11356 of 74 Q issued in the session of December 21, 2010 and published in Technical Office Book No. 61, Page No. 716, Rule No. 94.

([2523]) Therefore, the legislator's establishment in Article 50 of Law No. 94 of 2015 issuing the Anti-Terrorism Law by creating circuits in criminal courts, each of which has the rank of a president in the Courts of Appeal to consider felonies of terrorist crimes, falls under the meaning of procedural laws, not substantive laws, since the rules that affect the formation of circuits in criminal courts are purely formal procedures, and as such they are implemented with immediate effect on pending lawsuits that have not been adjudicated, even if they relate to acts that occurred prior to their issuance, unless the law provides otherwise, Appeal No. 4745 of 88 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2018 (unpublished)

See: Appeal No. 21110 of 85 Q issued in the session of January 28, 2018 (unpublished).

([2524] Appeal No. 43943 of 85 Q issued in the session of December 2, 2015 (unpublished).

([2525]) Appeal No. 17275 of 84 Q issued in the session of April 20, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 448, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 1759 of 78 Q issued in the session of December 14, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 909, Rule No. 112.

as it is the most suitable law for the accused in accordance with Article 5 of the Penal Code, as it created a situation for the accused that is more suitable for him than the previous law.[2526]

As for exceptional laws issued in emergency situations and in which there is no specific period for their validity, they are exempt from the application of the rule of the rule that is most favorable to the accused, according to the text of the last paragraph of Article Five of the Penal Code, which states that: ".... However, if the lawsuit procedures are carried out or a conviction is issued, and this is for an act that occurred in violation of a law that prohibits its commission within a specific period, then the expiry of this period does not prevent the lawsuit from proceeding or the execution of the penalties imposed. "[2527]

The cases of suspension of the period of the penalty do not include a rule of criminalization and determining the penalty, but rather fall under the meaning of procedural laws, not substantive laws, and relate to public order because they target the public interest, not the personal interest of the accused, which requires the application of its provisions with immediate effect from the day of their enforcement on the rulings prior to their issuance, even if this would worsen the position of the convict, as long as he did not acquire a right by completing the limitation period. There is no room in this regard to apply the exception of the most suitable law because Article 5 of the Penal Code only applies with respect to substantive issues without procedures, as it only affects texts related to criminalization and determining the penalty or amending it.[2528]

The laws amending jurisdiction are applied with immediate effect, as are the procedural laws. If the law amends the jurisdiction of an existing court by transferring some of the cases it was competent to consider according to the old law to another court or judicial authority, then this latter authority becomes competent and the court whose jurisdiction was amended has no effect after the new law comes into force, even if the case has already been brought before it as long as it has not ended with a final judgment. This is all unless the legislator provides for temporary provisions regulating the transitional phase. Therefore, if a law is issued that transfers jurisdiction to consider the criminal case arising from the crime attributed to the juvenile accused to the juvenile court during the period of his trial, then this law applies with immediate effect and there is no room for applying the rule of the application of the most suitable law, because the scope of applying that rule originally affects the substantive rules. As for the procedural rules, they shall apply from the date of their entry into force with immediate effect to cases that have not been adjudicated, even if they relate to crimes that occurred prior to their entry into force, unless the law provides otherwise.[2529]

The legislator excluded from the rule of the immediate effect of the litigation laws the laws amending the deadlines. The deadlines amended by the new law do not apply with immediate effect to the periods and deadlines that began under the repealed law, but rather the deadlines stipulated in the repealed law are applied until their period is completed. If the new law amends the deadlines for appeal by reducing or increasing the deadline, but the deadline for appeal began under the old law, then the period is completed according to the old law, and the criterion for knowing the law that must be applied in this case is the date of issuance of the judgment. There is no reason to adopt the rule that the law most favourable to the accused applies, in

---

([2526]) Appeal No. 11997 of 67 Q issued in the session of November 2, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 848, Rule No. 92, Appeal No. 25421 of 64 Q issued in the session of May 30, 1999 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 343, Rule No. 80.

([2527]) Appeal No. 12345 of 84 Q issued in the session of January 11, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 115, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 7719 of 84 Q issued in the session of November 2, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 793, Rule No. 100.

([2528] Appeal No. 53603 of 75 Q issued in the session of June 11, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, Page No. 726, Rule No. 74.

([2529] Appeal No. 10812 of 67 Q issued in the session of November 1, 2005 and published in Technical Office Book No. 56, Page No. 538, Rule No. 83.

implementation of Article 5 of the Penal Code, since the scope of application of that rule originally affects the substantive rules. As for the procedural rules related to the deadlines for appealing criminal rulings, the law in effect at the time of issuance of the ruling is the one that applies, in implementation of the exception contained in Article 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[2530]

Although the Constitution stipulates that there is no punishment for acts subsequent to the date of entry into force of the law that stipulates them, establishing the rule of non-retroactivity of penal laws, and also confirming this rule by what the Constitution has established that the principle of the provisions of laws is their application from the date of their entry into force, and the impermissibility of applying their effect to what occurred before them, and that there is no departure from this principle except by a special text, and in non-criminal matters, and with the approval of the majority of the members of the legislative authority as a whole, in order to prevent the imposition of a penalty for an act that was permissible at the time of its commission, or to increase it for an act for which the penalty was lighter, and the principle of non-retroactivity of penal laws restricts the legislative authority in application of the principle of the legality of crimes and penalties, and to protect personal freedom in a way that repels any aggression against it, this principle does not work alone, but rather it is complemented and alongside it is another rule, which is the retroactivity of the law that is most beneficial to the accused, which is a rule that benefits him from the texts that erase the criminal nature of the act, or reduce the penalty imposed as a penalty for committing it, to something less than it. [2531]

It is also legally stipulated that the new legislation applies to the ongoing crime even if its provisions are more severe than the previous ones due to the continued commission of the crime under the new provisions. The decisive factor in distinguishing between a temporary crime and a continuing crime is the nature of the material act constituting the crime as defined by the law, whether this act is positive or negative, committed or omitted. If the crime is completed and ends as soon as the act is committed, it is temporary. However, if the criminal situation continues for a period of time, the crime is ongoing throughout this period. The point of continuity here is the intervention of the perpetrator’s will in the punishable act, a successive and renewed intervention, and the time preceding this act in preparing to commit it and getting ready to commit it or the time following it in which its criminal effects continue in its aftermath is not taken into account. Since that was the case, the crime of the respondent’s failure to implement the engineering decision was based on a negative act that depends on the intervention of his will, a successive and renewed intervention in forming the punishable act of abstention. Therefore, it is a continuing crime that is subject to the provisions of the subsequent law as long as it continues, even if its provisions are more severe.[2532]

It is established that the law that is most suitable for the accused is the one that creates for him, from the substantive aspect - not the procedural aspect - a position or status that is more suitable for him than the old law, such as cancelling the crime attributed to him, or cancelling some of its penalties or mitigating them, or deciding a way to exempt from criminal liability without cancelling the crime itself, or requiring a new element for its establishment that was not present in the act of the accused. In these cases, the accused has the right - based on the significance of changing the policy of criminalization and punishment to mitigation - to benefit for

---

([2530] Appeal No. 2588 of 63 Q issued in the session of February 5, 1995 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 319, rule No. 45.

([2531]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 12 of 13 Q, issued in the session of November 7, 1992, date of publication December 3, 1992, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 68, rule No. 7.

([2532]) Appeal No. 1512 of year 51 Q issued in the session of November 3, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 805, rule No. 139. See: the Supreme Court ruling, in case No. 1 of year 8 Q issued in the session of April 16, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 1, page No. 230.

his benefit from those new texts from the date of their issuance, provided that the act he committed is not in violation of a law that prohibits its commission within a specific period, as the end of this period does not prevent the prosecution from proceeding or the execution of the penalties imposed in accordance with the text of the third paragraph of Article 5 of the Penal Code. Since resorting to the rule of the most suitable law in the above is only an exception to the established general principle that the criminal law governs the crimes that occur under it until the binding force is removed by a subsequent law that repeals its provisions, it is interpreted narrowly and revolves around it. Existence and non-existence with the reason that called for its establishment, because the reference in resolving the conflict between laws in terms of time is the intention of the legislator, which may not be confiscated in it. [2533]

15-1-4 Ignorance of the law is not an excuse.

The principle is that knowledge of the criminal law and the complementary penal laws is assumed for everyone, and therefore the plea of ignorance or error therein is not acceptable, just as the plea of ignorance of the amendments introduced to the law is not permissible, since that, as the law stipulates, is within the knowledge of all people.[2534]

Ignorance of the penal code and its complementary laws is not an excuse and does not waive responsibility.[2535]

Ignorance of the law or a mistake in understanding its texts does not negate criminal intent, given that knowledge of the penal law and its correct understanding is assumed for all people.[2536]

The court is not obligated to respond to the plea of ignorance of the law, and the court's failure to respond to that plea does not invalidate its ruling.[2537]

Providing those addressed by the law with sufficient information (Fair Notico) to guarantee their rights and freedoms stipulated by the constitution or mandated by the rules of international public law, can only be achieved through publishing it in the Official Gazette, which ensures publicity.[2538]

([2533]) General Authority for Criminal Matters, Appeal No. 8941 of Year 50 Q, issued in the session of April 7, 1981, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 3.

([2534]) Appeal No. 17275 of 84 Q issued in the session of April 20, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 448, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 26006 of 84 Q issued in the session of May 17, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 468, Rule No. 65, Appeal No. 14934 of 83 Q issued in the session of February 4, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 48, Rule No. 5, Appeal No. 28349 of 69 Q issued in the session of February 6, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 253, Rule No. 46, Appeal No. 1582 of 37 Q issued in the session of November 20, 1967 and published in Part Three of the Office Book Technical No. 18, Page No. 1116, Rule No. 233.

([2535]) Appeal No. 6764 of 52 Q issued in the session of April 13, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page No. 506, rule No. 104, Appeal No. 1321 of 42 Q issued in the session of January 21, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 78, rule No. 18, Appeal No. 1135 of 37 Q issued in the session of October 9, 1967 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 937, rule No. 188.

([2536]) Appeal No. 26006 of 84 Q issued in the session of May 17, 2015 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 468, rule No. 65, Appeal No. 14934 of 83 Q issued in the session of February 4, 2014 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 48, rule No. 5, Appeal No. 10015 of 63 Q issued in the session of January 19, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 211, rule No. 30, Appeal No. 6151 of 58 Q issued in the session of January 18, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 97, rule No. 13, Appeal No. 7588 of 53 Q issued in the session of March 28, 1985 and published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 460, rule No. 78, appeal No. 1104 for the year 45 Q issued in the session of October 26, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page No. 630, rule No. 141.

([2537] Appeal No. 7204 of 82 Q issued in the session of March 10, 2013 and published in Technical Office Book No. 64, Page No. 354, Rule No. 41.

([2538]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 20 of 15 Q, issued in the session of October 1, 1994, date of publication October 20, 1994, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 358.

Notifying the addressees of the legal rule, with its content, is considered a condition for informing them of its content, and its implementation, accordingly, assumes its announcement through publication, and the arrival of the specified date for the start of its enforcement. This meant that the entry of this rule into the implementation phase was linked to two events that occurred together and complemented each other - although the realization of the second was dependent on the occurrence of the first - namely its publication and the expiration of the period specified by the legislator for the start of its implementation. It was decided that every legal rule - whether included in a law or regulation - may not be considered as such, unless its mandatory nature, which distinguishes it from the moral rule, is compared to it, as this characteristic is considered part of it, and its components are not completed by its loss.

Whereas the above means that publishing a legal rule guarantees its publicity, the spread of its provisions, and its connection to those concerned with it, and prevents the claim of ignorance of it, and this publication is considered a guarantee of their awareness of its nature, content, and scope, preventing them from evading it, even if their knowledge of it has not become certain, or their understanding of its content is weak. And their compulsion before publishing it to abide by it - and they are strangers in the field of its application - includes a violation of their freedoms or the rights guaranteed by the constitution, without adhering to the legal means that have defined its boundaries and separated its conditions. It has been necessary to say that the legal rule that is not published does not include sufficient notification of its content or the conditions for its application, so its components are not complete, which the constitution considered to be fulfilled as a condition for the permissibility of interfering with it to regulate rights and freedoms of all kinds, and what is related to them in preserving personal freedom and the right to property.[2539]

On the other hand, it is permissible to excuse oneself on the grounds of ignorance of a provision of a law other than the Penal Code, provided that the person claiming this ignorance provides evidence that he has made sufficient investigation and that his belief that he is carrying out a lawful act has reasonable grounds. This is what is relied upon in the laws from which the legislator took the foundations of criminal liability, and it is what is inferred from all texts of the law.[2540]

Ignorance of a rule established in another law - other than criminal laws - is an ignorance composed of ignorance of this legal rule and of reality at the same time, which must be considered legally in criminal matters as a whole as ignorance of reality.[2541]

Ignorance of the provisions or rules of a law other than the Penal Code or an error in it, such as an error in understanding the foundations of administrative law, renders the committed act not punishable.[2542]

([2539]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 95 of 23 Q, issued in the session of June 3, 2012, date of publication June 13, 2012.

([2540]) Appeal No. 18637 of 84 Q issued in the session of April 14, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 360, Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 19077 of 76 Q issued in the session of November 18, 2008 and published in Technical Office Book No. 59, page No. 516, Rule No. 95, Appeal No. 21342 of 71 Q issued in the session of October 16, 2008 and published in Technical Office Book No. 59, page No. 438, Rule No. 81, Appeal No. 28529 of 70 Q issued in the session of September 19, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 780, Rule No. 81, Appeal No. 13196 of 76 Q issued in the session of May 18, 2006 and published In the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 636, Rule No. 69, Appeal No. 892 of 74 Q issued in the session of February 26, 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 320, Rule No. 36, Appeal No. 39618 of 72 Q issued in the session of January 16, 2003 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 112, Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 3842 of 56 Q issued in the session of November 20, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 924, Rule No. 176.

([2541]) Appeal No. 41358 of 75 Q issued in the session of October 10, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 482, rule No. 81, Appeal No. 475 of 36 Q issued in the session of June 5, 1967 and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 744, rule No. 149, Appeal No. 1359 of 35 Q issued in the session of February 1, 1966 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 17, page No. 86, rule No. 15.

15-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

No one may be prosecuted on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed or omitted.

Criminal offences should be clearly defined and strictly enforced. No person may be prosecuted more than once for the same offence within the same jurisdiction.

No one shall be held guilty of any crime on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed.[2543]

The prohibition on the retroactive application of criminal law may not be suspended under any circumstances, including states of emergency.[2544]

Criminal offences referred to in these standards include:

Crimes arising from national law - whether basic law or common law - as interpreted by the courts.[2545]

Acts or omissions that are criminalized under international treaty law or customary international law.

This means that prosecution may be brought against perpetrators of crimes that were criminal acts under international law when they were committed, such as genocide, war crimes, slavery, torture and enforced disappearance, even if they were not criminalised under national law at the time they were committed.[2546]

With regard to the ongoing crime, as is the case with enforced disappearance,[2547]

The institution of a prosecution shall not be considered retroactive if the criminal conduct on which the prosecution is based was established in national or international law before the crime was completed. In cases of enforced disappearance, the crime is considered to continue until the fate and whereabouts of the victim are revealed.[2548]

([2542] Appeal No. 1095 of 26 Q issued in the session of December 25, 1956 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 7, Page No. 1331, Rule No. 365.

([2543]) Article 11(2) of the Universal Declaration, Article 15 of the International Covenant, Article 19(1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 7(2) of the African Charter, Article 9 of the American Convention, Article 15 of the Arab Charter, Article 7 of the European Convention, and Section N7(a) of the Principles on a Fair Trial in Europe; See Article 22 of the Rome Statute, European Court: Weber v. Estonia No. 2 (45771)/99, (2003) § 39-§ 37, Korbly v. Hungary (9174)/02), Grand Chamber (95-§ 69 (2008); De la Cruz Flois v. Peru, Inter-American Court § 104-§ 109 (2004) and 110-114; Dauda Jawara v. Gambia (147)/95 and 149/96), African Commission, Annual Report 13 § 62-§ 63 (2000).

([2544]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, Article 27(2) of the American Convention, Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15(2) of the European Convention.

([2545]) European Court: Cantoni v. France (17862)/91, § 29 (1996); Sáez Oceja and Others v. Spain (74182)/01 and 74186/01), (inadmissibility decision) (2007), under § 2.

([2546]) European Court: Papon v. France (No. 2) (54210)/00), (inadmissibility decision) (15 November 2001) Law, §2, Kolk and Kislaje v. Estonia (23052)/04 and 24018/04), (2006); Baumgarten v. Germany, Human Rights Committee, 2000/2003) UN Doc. CCPR/C/78/D/960) 5/9-3/ §9; see Interim Decision on Applicable Law (0111) - (STL-11, Appeals Chamber of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon (16 February 2011) §133 (2011).

([2547]) Bamaka-Velásquez v. Guatemala, Inter-American Court (2000) § 128; Grand Chamber of the European Court: Varnava and Others v. Turkey (90/16066-90/16064 and 16068-16073/90), § 148 (2009, Al-Masry v. The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (39630)/09), § 240 (2012).

([2548]) See article 17(1) of the Declaration on Disappearances, general comment on enforced disappearance as a continuing crime of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances; see article 14(2) of the draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

The above-mentioned standards provide a guarantee against arbitrariness in prosecution, conviction and punishment.[2549]

The principle of tolerance also embodies: that is, the principle that courts apply the law whose provisions are biased in favor of the accused in the event of differences between the criminal law in force at the time of the commission of the crime and the criminal law that was enacted after the commission of these crimes but before the final judgment in the case was issued.[2550]

Also, these standards mean that a person may not be prosecuted for an act that was prohibited by law at the time it was committed if, as a result of a change in the law, that act no longer constitutes a crime when the person is charged or a final judgment is rendered against him.[2551]

These criteria also:

It is prohibited to impose a more severe penalty than the penalty that was in force at the time the crime was committed;

Requires the application of changes in the law that mitigate the penalty;

It requires respect for the principle of legality.

The principle of legality imposes a duty on states to define criminal offences precisely in the body of the law. The principle of legality is met when an individual can know from the text of the relevant legal provision, and according to the interpretation of the courts, which actions or omissions could expose him to criminal prosecution.[2552]

The fact that a person needs legal advice to understand the law does not necessarily make it a very ambiguous law.[2553]

As a general rule, the wording of the law should be sufficient to deduce the definition of the limits of any crime - without the need for analogy -[2554]

In the event of ambiguity, it must be interpreted in the best interests of the accused.

The Inter-American Court has explained this as follows: “Crimes must be classified and described in precise and unambiguous language capable of narrowly defining the crime punishable... This means clearly defining criminal behavior, clarifying its elements and the factors that distinguish it from patterns of behavior that do not constitute crimes punishable by law or are punishable but not by imprisonment. Ambiguity in the description of crimes creates doubts and opens the door to abuse of power, especially when it comes to affirming the criminal responsibility of individuals and punishing them for their criminal conduct with penalties that affect their enjoyment of the most precious things, such as life and liberty. ”[2555]

([2549]) European Court: Strelitz and Others v. Germany (34044/96, 35532/97, 44802/98), § 50 (2001, AS. W. v. United Kingdom §34-§36, (1995), (92/20166), Corbeli v. Hungary (9174)/02), Grand Chamber §69 (2008); Pietraruya v. Uruguay (44)/1979), Human Rights Committee (1984) UN Doc. CCPR/C/OP/1) pp. 2/76, §13 and §17.

([2550]) Scoppola v. Italy (No. 2) (10249)/03), Grand Chamber of the European Court §106-§109 (2009); see Cochet v. France, Human Rights Committee, 2008/4/7-2/ §7 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/100/D/1760.

([2551]) Cochet v. France, Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR. 4/7-2/ §7 (2010) C/100/D/1760/2008.

([2552]) European Court: Kokkinakis v. Greece (14307)/88, (1993) §52, AS. W. v. United Kingdom (20166)/92), (36-§§34, (1995, Korbly v. Hungary (9174)/02), Grand Chamber - §70 §69 (2008); Prosecutor v. Mitar Vasiljević (IT-98-32-T), Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (29 November 2002) §201-§204; Prosecutor v. Zlatko Aleksovski (IT-95-14/1-A), Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (24 March). §126- §127 (2000).

([2553]) European Court: Cantoni v. France (17862)/91), (1996) §29 and §35, Corbeli v. Hungary (9174)/02), Grand Chamber §69-§70 (2008), Sandy Thames v. United Kingdom (No. 1) (6538)/74), §49-§53 (1979).

([2554]) See, European Court, Korbly v. Hungary (9174)/02), Grand Chamber §69-§70 (2008), Weber v. Estonia No. 2 (45771)/§121 (99).

([2555]) Castillo Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-American Court (1999). §121.

A number of human rights bodies and mechanisms have raised concerns about the lack of specificity in counter-terrorism and national security laws.[2556]

The United Nations General Assembly urged States to ensure that laws criminalizing terrorist acts are easily accessible, are drafted in a precise manner that is non-discriminatory and non-retroactive, and is consistent with international law, including human rights law.[2557]

The principle of legality requires criminal courts to ensure that they do not punish acts that are not punishable by the laws mentioned in the charges.[2558]

It also requires the prosecution to prove each element of the crime stipulated in the legal standard.[2559]

In this context, the Inter-American Court ruled that a conviction by a court violated the principle of legality because it was based on the accused's membership in a terrorist organization and failure to report relevant information – rather than on the crime of complicity in terrorist acts, as charged.[2560]

Chapter Sixteen: Prohibition of Double Jeopardy for the Same Crime

16-1 Under Egyptian Law

This principle is known as the conclusiveness of the criminal judgment. According to this conclusiveness, the criminal judgment is considered a title of truth. Based on this, this conclusiveness has a positive aspect, which is that it is a conclusive legal presumption that cannot be proven otherwise, and a negative aspect, which is that the accused cannot be tried for the same act again.

Article 454 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates this principle, stating that: "The criminal case against the accused and the facts attributed to him shall expire upon the issuance of a final judgment of acquittal or conviction..."

The Supreme Constitutional Court has raised this principle to the level of constitutional principles, ruling that the principle of not punishing a person twice for the same act is one of the principles that have been repeated by legal systems of all kinds, and is considered part of the basic rights included in international agreements for every human being, and its squandering violates personal freedom, the protection of which from aggression is considered an essential guarantee for the humanity of the individual and his right to life, because one crime does not

---

([2556]) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, § § 13 (2005) UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/98, 26-27, 42-50 and 72, Spain, §6-§14 (2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/10/3/Add. 2, Israel, UN Doc §16 A/HRC/6/17/Add4; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Hungary, §9 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/HUN/CO/5, Russian Federation, UN Doc § 7 (2009) CCPR/C/RUS/CO/6 and 24, United States of America, UN Doc § 11 (2006). CCPR/C/USA/CO/3/REV. 1, Libya, UN Doc 12 § (2007) CCPR/C/LBY/CO/4; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Algeria, §4 (2008) UN Doc. CAT/C/DZA/CO/3; Venice Commission of the Council of Europe, Report on counter-terrorism measures and human rights, CoE §32-§34 (2010), Doc. CDL-AD(2010)022); Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, 31/1995/§25 (1994) UN Doc. E/CN. 4 (d); Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Hong Kong SAR,. §14 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/HKG/CO/2.

([2557]) Resolution 65/221 of the United Nations General Assembly, §6(1).

([2558]) De la Cruz Floys v. Peru, Inter-American Court (2004) §81-§82.

([2559]) Nicholas v. Australia, 2002/2004) UN Doc. CCPR/C/80/D/1080). 5/7-2/ §7.

([2560]) De la Cruz Floyd v. Peru, Inter-American Court (2004). §77 - § 103.

bear two burdens, and by fulfilling the penalty prescribed for its commission, the right to retribution has reached its ultimate goal.[2561]

Double criminal responsibility for a single act violates the law and harms justice. Therefore, it is prohibited to try a person twice for the same act.[2562]

The penalty must not include punishing a person more than once for a single act (double jeopardy), and this is a rule guaranteed by all legal systems and formulated by international conventions as a universal maxim between countries, the basis of which is that one crime does not bear two sins, and that although the principle is that the legislator should allocate for each crime the punishment that suits it, its imposition on its perpetrator and its fulfillment means that retribution has been completed by its imposition, and no one will have any recourse against its perpetrator after that.[2563]

Therefore, it is not permissible for a person to be exposed to the risk of being prosecuted with a criminal charge more than once for the same crime, nor for the state, with all its powers and resources, to try again to convict him for a crime it claims he committed - even through a criminal danger that it considers a crime in itself and attaches to it - because if it does so, it only keeps him anxious, disturbed, threatened by its whims, extending its wrath to him when it wants, so that he becomes subject to various types of suffering that he cannot bear, squandering his resources unnecessarily, faltering in his steps. Rather, his conviction, even if he is innocent, remains more likely the more the criminal charge is consecutive for the same crime.[2564]

The Supreme Constitutional Court ruled that Article 5 of Law No. 98 of 1945 regarding vagrants and suspects is unconstitutional, as it considered a suspect to be any person over the age of

---

([2561]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 55 of 27 Q issued in the session of December 10, 2006, date of publication December 24, 2006, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 168, rule No. 18, Case No. 3 of 10 Q issued in the session of January 2, 1993, date of publication January 14, 1993, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 103, rule No. 10.

([2562]) Appeal No. 50733 for the year 85 Q issued in the session of November 22, 2016 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 67, page No. 812, rule No. 101, Appeal No. 6752 for the year 80 Q issued in the session of February 12, 2012 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 63, page No. 205, rule No. 26, Appeal No. 9606 for the year 79 Q issued in the session of October 17, 2011 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 62, page No. 294, rule No. 48, Appeal No. 20557 for the year 62 Q issued in the session of March 3, 2002 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 53, page No. 325, rule No. 59, Appeal No. 22145 for the year 64 Q issued in the session of December 31, 2000 and published in the Office's letter Technical No. 51, Page No. 866, Rule No. 171, Appeal No. 16595 for the year 63 Q issued in the session of October 4, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, Page No. 494, Rule No. 114, Appeal No. 17692 for the year 61 Q issued in the session of June 3, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, Page No. 778, Rule No. 102, Appeal No. 4735 for the year 60 Q issued in the session of March 29, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, Page No. 402, Rule No. 57, Appeal No. 413 for the year 60 Q issued in the session of January 25, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, Page No. 269, Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 8418 for the year 58 Q issued in the session of March 8, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 370, rule No. 59, Appeal No. 4460 for year 52 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page No. 947, rule No. 196, Appeal No. 1282 for year 45 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page No. 696, rule No. 153, Appeal No. 1991 for year 38 Q issued in the session of March 31, 1969 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 401, rule No. 87.

([2563]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 9 of 28 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2007, date of publication November 13, 2007, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 719, rule No. 71, Case No. 49 of 17 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 739, rule No. 48.

([2564]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 8 of 16 Q issued in the session of August 5, 1995, date of publication August 31, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 139, rule No. 8, Case No. 49 of 17 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 739, rule No. 48, Case No. 9 of 25 Q issued in the session of April 4, 2004, published in the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 2817, rule No. 14.

fifteen who has been convicted more than once of one of the following crimes or who is known for acceptable reasons to have been accustomed to committing some of these crimes:

Assaulting or threatening to assault or harm one's person or property;

Mediation in the return of kidnapped persons or stolen or embezzled items;

Disrupting means of public transportation or intelligence;

Trafficking in toxic or narcotic substances or providing them to others;

Counterfeiting money, forging government banknotes or banknotes legally circulating in the country, or imitating or promoting any of the above;

Crimes of purchasing food supplies distributed by public sector institutions, consumer cooperatives and their branches, if this is not for personal use and for resale;

The crimes stipulated in Law No. 10 of 1961 regarding combating prostitution;

The crimes of explosives, bribery, embezzlement of public funds, aggression against them, and treachery stipulated in Chapters Two, Three, and Four of Book Two of the Penal Code;

Felonies or misdemeanors that harm the security of the government from abroad, as stipulated in Chapter One of Book Two of the Penal Code;

The crimes of prisoners escaping and concealing perpetrators stipulated in Chapter Eight of Book Two of the Penal Code;

Arms trafficking crimes;

Preparing others to commit crimes or training them to commit them, even if no crime occurs as a result of this preparation or training;

Harboring suspects in accordance with the provisions of this law with the intent to threaten or control others;

The crimes of fraud and deception stipulated in Law No. 48 of 1941 on the suppression of fraud and deception.

Article No. 6 of the same law punishes the suspect with one or more of the following preventive measures:

Determining residence in a specific place or location;

Prohibition of residence in a particular place;

Repatriation to the country of origin;

Place under police surveillance;

Deposit in one of the work institutions specified by a decision of the Minister of Interior.

The measure shall be for a period of not less than six months and not more than three years. In the event of recidivism or the suspect being caught carrying weapons, tools or other instruments that may cause injuries or facilitate the commission of crimes, the penalty shall be imprisonment and a ruling on one or more of the previous measures for a period of not less than one year and not more than five years.

Deportation of foreigners

This is because it involves punishing a person more than once for one act. He has been tried for all of his previous crimes, and the punishment for each one has been fulfilled. There is no other crime that he committed - consisting of an act or omission - for which a criminal case can be brought. Rather, it is motivated by his dangerous condition, which the legislator assumed was based on his previous crimes, and based it on them. This does not detract from the fact that they are measures intended to confront and curb the criminal tendency latent in those with multiple criminal records. It is necessary to consider him a suspect in order to avoid his danger, since it is sufficient for the court of subject matter to estimate, on the occasion of the last crime he committed, the appropriate punishment for it, taking into account his criminal past.[2565]

However, for the defense to be valid, the force of res judicata in criminal matters must be met, which requires refraining from considering the case:

that there is a final criminal judgment previously issued in a specific criminal trial, and that there is a commonality between this trial and the next trial in which this plea is sought to be invoked in terms of subject matter, cause, and persons accused;

The judgment must be issued on the subject of the lawsuit, whether it rules on conviction and imposition of punishment or acquittal. However, if a judgment is issued on a matter that is not decisive on the subject, then the final judgment cannot be considered binding.[2566]

The basis for the validity of judgments is the unity of the parties, the subject matter and the reason. It is not sufficient that a final criminal judgment has previously been issued in a particular trial. Rather, there must be a union between this trial and the next trial in the subject matter, the reason and the persons accused.[2567]

If a lawsuit is filed for a specific incident with a specific description and a ruling is issued in it, it is not permissible to file a lawsuit for that same incident with a new description. The basis of the incident that prevents a retrial - even under a new description - is that the basis on which the facts were established in the two lawsuits is the same, meaning that each lawsuit does not have an independent subject and special circumstances that achieve the otherness that prevents saying that the cause is the same in them. Saying that the crime is the same or that it is multiple is a legal qualification that is subject to the discretion of the Court of Cassation.[2568]

([2565]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 3 of 10 Q, issued in the session of January 2, 1993, date of publication January 14, 1993, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 103, rule No. 10.

([2566]) Appeal No. 61 of 88 Q issued in the session of November 25, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2199 of 87 Q issued in the session of February 15, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8951 of 79 Q issued in the session of September 18, 2011, Appeal No. 530 of 69 Q issued in the session of October 5, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 936, Rule No. 156, Appeal No. 9731 of 67 Q issued in the session of July 22, 1999 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 419, Rule No. 99, Appeal No. 10442 of 60 Q issued in the session of November 9, 1997 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 1215 Rule No. 184, Appeal No. 5544 for the year 53 Q issued in the session of May 14, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 498, Rule No. 110, Appeal No. 109 for the year 43 Q issued in the session of June 11, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 732, Rule No. 152.

([2567] If the appellant argues in his appeal that the previously issued ruling did not address the appellant, but rather acquitted his brother, then everything he raises regarding the ruling's error in applying the law by not implementing the provisions of Articles 454 and 455 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and its failure to provide reasoning in this regard is unsound. Appeal No. 623 of 55 Q issued in the session of May 14, 1985 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 654, Rule No. 116.

([2568] Appeal No. 23634 of year 67 Q issued in the session of June 2, 1998 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 764, rule No. 101.

It was also ruled that the accused's issuance of several checks, all or some of them without funds, to the benefit of one person on one day and for one transaction - regardless of the date each one bears or the value for which it was issued - constitutes a single, indivisible criminal activity, which is what achieves the indivisible connection between these crimes. Article 32 of the Penal Code must be implemented and a single penalty must be imposed for these incidents. If a single final judgment of conviction or acquittal is issued for the issuance of any of the checks, the criminal case for this criminal activity shall expire in accordance with the provisions of the first paragraph of Article 454 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

It is stipulated that in the event of a cheque being traded that has no balance available and can be withdrawn from one beneficiary to another by issuing it to the bearer or by endorsing it, a criminal action may not be brought against the drawer based on the request of each beneficiary of the cheque in the event of issuing it to the bearer or from the endorser each

It is not permissible to return to the criminal case after a final ruling has been issued based on a change in the legal description of the crime, nor to re-submit the case before the judiciary for the same act and against the same convicted accused.[2569]

Since the crime is carried out through successive, consecutive actions within the single criminal purpose that was in the mind of the perpetrator. Each of the actions that occur in implementation of this purpose is not punishable alone, but rather the punishment is for all of these actions as a single crime, such that if one of these actions does not appear until after the first trial, then the first ruling prevents the filing of a lawsuit regarding this action out of respect for the principle of the force of the thing judged upon.[2570]

However, if the two incidents attributed to one accused and another accused constitute a link in a chain of incidents committed by the two for a single criminal purpose, each incident has its own characteristics and special circumstances that establish the difference that prevents the claim of the unity of the cause in the two lawsuits.[2571]

As for crimes that continue in a continuous and renewed manner, the trial of the perpetrator for a continuing crime includes the criminal status prior to the filing of the lawsuit and until a final judgment is issued in it. The appellate court must combine the lawsuits filed against the accused separately, and he shall be tried in each action and punished therein independently. Rather, the criminal action shall be brought based on the request of one of the beneficiaries of the cheque, and if a final judgment of conviction or acquittal is issued in it, then it is forbidden to retry him for the same cheque based on the initiation of the criminal action by another beneficiary, since the incident in question is the issuance of a cheque without a balance, regardless of the number of its bearers or endorsers.

---

Appeal No. 9082 of 71 Q issued in the session of October 13, 2002 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 951, rule No. 157, Appeal No. 47524 of 59 Q issued in the session of April 18, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 589, rule No. 75, Appeal No. 17692 of 61 Q issued in the session of June 3, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 778, rule No. 102, Appeal No. 8735 of 59 Q issued in the session of October 20, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 43, page No. 853, rule No. 131, Appeal No. 3505 of 56 Q issued in the session of February 26, 2011 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 334, Rule No. 50, Appeal No. 43943 for the year 85 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2016 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 470, Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 12426 for the year 84 Q issued in the session of January 11, 2015 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 113, Rule No. 7, Appeal No. 4135 for the year 80 Q issued in the session of November 17, 2011 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 62, page No. 393, Rule No. 67, Appeal No. 18549 for the year 68 Q issued in the session of March 14, 2001 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 330, Rule No. 54, Appeal No. 191 for the year 46 Q issued in the session of May 17, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, page No. 497, Rule No. 111, Appeal No. 1165 of year 41 Q issued in the session of November 29, 1971 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 22, page No. 673, Rule No. 164.
The Court of Cassation ruled that since the accused had produced alcohol smuggled from the production fees and adulterated at the same time and had thereby committed one act that constituted the two crimes attributed to him, and the criminal case for the crime of evading the payment of fees had expired by reconciliation in accordance with the provisions of Article 22 of Law No. 363 of 1956, this had no effect on the other criminal case arising from the crime of fraud, as long as a final judgment of conviction or acquittal had not been issued in the subject of the incident, because such a judgment alone is what would, in accordance with the provisions of Article 454 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, end the criminal case for the entire incident, such that it would be prohibited to return to its consideration based on another description of the act constituting it. It is necessary to rule that the criminal case has been settled by reconciliation, and this applies only to the first charge. Appeal No. 369 of 51 Q issued in the session of December 13, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 897, rule No. 198.

([2569] Appeal No. 1668 of 48 Q issued in the session of June 17, 1979 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 30, page No. 694, Rule No. 147.

([2570] Appeal No. 4547 of 67 Q issued in the session of June 4, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, Page No. 718, Rule No. 72.

([2571] Appeal No. 812 of year 44 Q issued in the session of November 10, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 25, page No. 715, rule No. 155.

in a continuing crime and issue a single judgment with a single penalty as long as a final judgment has not yet been issued in it.[2572]

The plea of inadmissibility of examining the case due to a previous ruling on it is related to public order, and it is one of the essential pleas that the court must, when presented to it, investigate the truth of the situation in its regard, and it may be raised for the first time before the Court of Cassation as long as the records of the ruling indicate it.[2573]

The validity of the plea of res judicata in criminal matters requires that the previous ruling issued be a final criminal ruling that was previously issued in a criminal trial. The force of res judicata before the criminal courts is only for final criminal rulings. Therefore, the rulings issued by the administrative judiciary courts do not terminate the criminal case and do not have the force of res judicata before the criminal courts.[2574]

There is no conflict between administrative responsibility and criminal responsibility, as each operates in its own orbit and has its own area of jurisdiction, not restricted by the other. Punishing an employee in an administrative capacity or imposing a penalty on him by the disciplinary board for an act of his does not prevent either of them from being able to try him before the criminal courts in accordance with the general law for every crime that may consist of this act, due to the difference between disciplinary and criminal lawsuits in the subject, in the cause, and in the opponents, which makes it impossible for the judiciary in one of them to have the force of a res judicata with respect to the other.[2575]

The ruling issued by a disciplinary court does not have the force of res judicata before criminal courts, even if it was issued imposing the penalties of imprisonment or detention - as in the penalties stipulated in Police Authority Law No. 109 of 1971 - whether related to officers or others, as they are all purely disciplinary penalties, including the penalties of imprisonment and detention.[2576]

The force of res judicata is only for final judgments after they have become conclusive, and when the judgment becomes such, it becomes a title of the truth, and it is not right to undermine it or discuss the legal positions that have been established by it, and the judgment thus becomes an argument for all, an argument related to public order, which requires the courts to implement the requirements of this argument, even on their own initiative.[2577]

The ruling of the judiciary is the title of the truth, and it is even stronger than the truth itself.[2578]

The force of res judicata, of a criminal judgment, whether before a criminal court or before civil courts, is only for final judgments after they have become conclusive, and that the judgment,

---

([2572] Appeal No. 253 of 43 Q issued in the session of May 6, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 607, rule No. 123.

([2573]) Appeal No. 8951 of 79 Q issued in the session of September 18, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7113 of 80 Q issued in the session of October 5, 2010 (unpublished).

([2574] Appeal No. 18637 of 84 Q issued in the session of April 14, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page No. 360, Rule No. 51.

([2575]) Appeal No. 15810 of 74 Q issued in the session of December 21, 2004 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page No. 868, Rule No. 128, Appeal No. 31768 of 73 Q issued in the session of April 20, 2004 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page No. 436, Rule No. 58.

([2576] Appeal No. 8635 of 67 Q issued in the session of July 1, 1997 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 719, rule No. 110.

([2577] Appeal No. 9606 of 79 Q issued in the session of October 17, 2011 and published in Technical Office Book No. 62, Page No. 294, Rule No. 48.

([2578]) Appeal No. 10336 of 64 Q issued in the session of July 3, 2000 and published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 511, rule No. 100, Appeal No. 3470 of 56 Q issued in the session of October 29, 1986 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 808, rule No. 156, Appeal No. 5152 of 55 Q issued in the session of February 3, 1986 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 235, rule No. 48.

when it becomes such, becomes a title of the truth, and it is not right to undermine it, nor to discuss the legal positions that have been established by it, and the judgment thus becomes an argument for all, an argument related to public order, which requires the courts to implement the requirements of this argument, even on their own initiative.[2579]

The order issued by the investigating authority stating that there is no reason to file a criminal case has the force of law that prevents the return to the criminal case as long as it is in effect and has not been cancelled. It is not permissible, while it remains in effect, to file a criminal case for the same incident in which it was issued, because it has within the scope of its force the force of res judicata that judgments have.[2580]

However, the order issued by the Public Prosecution stating that there is no reason to file a criminal case or to keep the papers in the reported crime has no force before the criminal courts in the case of false reporting of this crime, which must decide the case brought before it according to what its investigation concludes. The court before which the charge of false reporting is brought has the right to examine the charge of false reporting free from all restrictions.[2581]

It is also required that the judgment be issued about the lawsuit, whether it rules on conviction and imposition of punishment or acquittal. However, if a judgment is issued on a matter that is not decisive on the subject, then it is not permissible to have res judicata as a binding force. The judgment issued on the lack of jurisdiction and referral is not permissible at all.[2582]

Also, acquittal rulings based on non-personal reasons for the convicted persons, such that they deny the occurrence of the incident for which the lawsuit was filed, are considered a title to the truth, whether for these accused or for others who are accused in the same incident.[2583]

([2579] Appeal No. 6733 of 54 Q issued in the session of April 30, 1986 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 526, rule No. 104.

([2580] Appeal No. 12426 of 84 Q issued in the session of January 11, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page No. 113, Rule No. 7.

([2581]) Appeal No. 17444 of 63 Q issued in the session of September 28, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 484, rule No. 111, Appeal No. 12080 of 61 Q issued in the session of October 25, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 1151, rule No. 157, Appeal No. 8492 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 22, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 1046, rule No. 188, Appeal No. 1314 of 49 Q issued in the session of January 2, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 17, rule No. 2, Appeal No. 1874 of 44 Q issued in the session of February 3 For the year 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page No. 132, rule No. 29, Appeal No. 1874 for the year 44 Q issued in the session of February 3, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page No. 132, rule No. 29, Appeal No. 389 for the year 43 Q issued in the session of May 27, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 653, rule No. 134, Appeal No. 571 for the year 40 Q issued in the session of June 8, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 848, rule No. 200, Appeal No. 182 for the year 37 Q issued in the session of April 4, 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 496, rule No. 94.

([2582]) Appeal No. 5400 of 81 Q issued in the session of January 21, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 109, Rule No. 13, Appeal No. 1916 of 56 Q issued in the session of April 17, 1986 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 499, Rule No. 100.

([2583] Appeal No. 4135 of 80 Q issued in the session of November 17, 2011 and published in Technical Office Book No. 62, Page No. 393, Rule No. 67

The Court of Cassation ruled that: Since it was clear from the records of the contested judgment that the ruling to acquit the landowner was based on personal reasons closely related to the accused who was tried based on the failure to prove that he was the one who carried out the excavation of the land and was not related to the excavation incident committed by the appellant and proven against him, and the acquittal rulings are not considered a title to the truth, whether with respect to the accused therein or to others who are accused in the same incident, unless the acquittal was based on non-personal reasons with respect to those in whose favour the judgment was issued, such that it negates the occurrence of the incident for which the lawsuit was filed materially, which is something that was not available in the lawsuit at hand, then what the appellant raises in this regard is without merit. Appeal No. 3050 of 54 Q issued in the session of June 14, 1984 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 595, rule No. 133.

The basic principle of judgments is that they are binding only on their operative part, and their effect does not extend to the reasons, except for what is complementary to the operative part and closely and indivisibly connected to it, such that the operative part has no basis without it. However, if the court draws a conclusion from a fact presented to it, then this conclusion does not have binding force and does not prevent another court from deducing from a similar fact what it sees as consistent with the circumstances of the case presented to it, because there is no binding force between two judgments in two cases that differ in subject matter and cause.[2584]

Also, the ruling issued in the public lawsuit stating that the right to file it has expired due to the death of the accused cannot be considered a ruling that would prevent the lawsuit from being reconsidered if it turns out that the accused is still alive. Because it is not issued in a lawsuit between two parties who are notified to attend or who are present, each of whom presents his argument to the court, and then it decides on it as a dispute between two disputants. Rather, it is issued in absentia without notification, not as a decision in a dispute or lawsuit, but merely as a declaration by the court that it cannot, due to the death of the accused, except to stop the criminal lawsuit at this point, since the judgment is not for a dead person or against a dead person. If it becomes clear that this was based on a false basis, then it is not correct to say that there is a ruling that has acquired the force of res judicata and cannot be deviated from. Therefore, the ruling that rules that the case cannot be considered on the grounds that it was previously decided by the ruling issued that the right to file it has lapsed due to the death of the accused, while it has become clear that the accused is still alive - this ruling is wrong and must be overturned.[2585]

16-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

No one shall be tried or punished twice for the same offence under the same jurisdiction if he has already been finally convicted or acquitted thereof.

This prohibition on being tried twice for the same crime, also known as the “ne bis in idem” principle, prevents a person from being tried or punished more than once in the same jurisdiction for the same crime. Under some international standards, it is prohibited to try a person more than once for conduct arising from the same or similar set of facts.[2586]

The prohibition under the American Convention expressly includes new prosecutions based on “the same cause.” This means that a subsequent trial is prohibited if the charges relate to the same matter or the same set of facts, even if the accused is charged with a different crime.

While Article 4 of Protocol 7 to the European Convention expressly prohibits multiple prosecutions for the same offence, the European Court has made it clear that the prohibition on double jeopardy prohibits prosecution of a person for a second offence if that offence arose from facts similar to those on which the first prosecution was instituted or from facts substantially similar to them.

The prohibition would have been violated even if the person was acquitted in the second case, and the court found that the prohibition against double jeopardy was violated when an individual

---

([2584]) Appeal No. 7250 of 53 Q issued in the session of May 8, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 491, rule No. 108, Appeal No. 812 of 44 Q issued in the session of November 10, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 25, page No. 715, rule No. 155, Appeal No. 3423 of 31 Q issued in the session of June 12, 1962 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 13, page No. 546, rule No. 138.

([2585] Appeal No. 144 of 15 Q issued in the session of January 15, 1945 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules No. 6, page No. 605, rule No. 461.

([2586]) Article 14(7) of the International Covenant, Article 18(7) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 8(4) of the American Convention, Article 19 of the Arab Charter, Article 4 of Protocol 7 of the European Convention, and Section N(8) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

was charged under the Penal Code with misconduct based on the same acts that had previously resulted in an “administrative” sentence of three days’ imprisonment.[2587]

Repeated punishment of conscientious objectors for refusal to perform military service may constitute a violation of the prohibition against double jeopardy if the subsequent refusal to serve is based “on a continuing conscientious objection” ([2588]

This prohibition applies to all criminal acts, regardless of their seriousness. Even if a state's laws do not "criminalize" an act, it may be considered a "criminal offense" under international standards based on the nature of the crime and the potential penalties.

The prohibition does not apply to disciplinary measures that do not amount to penalties for a criminal act.[2589]

The prohibition applies at all times, including during states of emergency, under the Arab Charter and the Seventh Protocol to the European Convention.[2590]

It is expressly guaranteed by international humanitarian law applicable in times of armed conflict.

Under the International Covenant, the Migrant Workers Convention and Protocol 7 to the European Convention, the prohibition on double jeopardy applies expressly after a final judgment of conviction or acquittal. Otherwise, the prohibition under the American Convention applies only in cases of innocence.[2591]

All judicial reviews and appeals applicable to the case must be finally exhausted, or the prescribed time limits must have expired. Therefore, the prohibition will not be violated if a higher court, while considering the (first) trial proceedings, quashes the conviction and orders a retrial.[2592]

The law prohibits new trials or new penalties for the same crime under the same jurisdiction. This principle shall not be violated if the same accused is subsequently tried for another crime or under another jurisdiction.[2593]

However, the prohibition does not prevent a person who has previously been tried and convicted in absentia from being retried, if the accused so requests.[2594]

The prohibition of repeated trials on the same charge does not prevent the reopening of case files (including new trials) in the event of a miscarriage of justice, if the trial proceedings appear to have lacked integrity, or if new evidence appears or such evidence is discovered.[2595]

A distinction must be made between reopening the case file or holding a new trial based on exceptional circumstances (which is permissible) and trying or punishing the accused for the same crime (which is prohibited).

([2587]) Zolotukhin v. Russia (14930)/03), Grand Chamber of the European Court §82-§83 (2009) and 110-111.

([2588]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §55; Opinion No. 24/2003 of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (Israel), UN Doc. 2004 (E/CN. 4/2005/6/Add. 1) pp. 18 - §30 22 p.; Resolution 1998/77 of the Commission on Human Rights, §5.

([2589]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §57; Gerardus Streeck v. the Netherlands, Human Rights Committee, 2001 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/76/D/1001. 3/ §7 (2002).

([2590]) Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 4(3) of the Seventh Protocol to the European Convention.

([2591]) Article 8(4) of the American Convention.

([2592]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §56; Zolotukhin v. Russia (14939/03), Grand Chamber of the European Court §§107-§110 (2009).

([2593]) Human Rights Committee: A. R. J. ،3/ §7 (1987) ،(1986/204) A. P. v Italy 4/ §6 (1997) Doc. CCPR/C/60/D/692/1996 ،v Australia..

([2594]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §54.

([2595]) Article 4(2) of the Seventh Protocol to the European Convention.

New trials may therefore be held, for example, when new evidence emerges, after a conviction, of serious procedural irregularities, including the court's lack of independence or impartiality, or if new facts or evidence emerge or are discovered.[2596]

16-2-1 International Criminal Courts

Persons who have been tried before national courts for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court or other international criminal tribunals may be tried again before such international criminal tribunals, without this meaning being tried twice for the same crime, if :[2597]

if the act for which the accused was tried before the national court is described as an ordinary crime (as opposed to being described as genocide, a crime against humanity or a war crime); or if the proceedings before the national court were not independent or impartial, or if the proceedings before the national court were conducted in a manner intended to protect the accused from international criminal accountability;[2598]

Or if the consideration of the case before the national court lacks due diligence)[2599]

However, persons who have been tried before the International Criminal Court or other international criminal tribunals for acts within their jurisdiction may not subsequently be tried on the same charges before national courts.[2600]

Chapter Seventeen: The Right to a Trial Without Undue Delay

17-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

The principle of speedy trial finds its constitutional basis in the text of Article 97 of the Constitution, which stipulates that the state shall work to expedite the settlement of cases.

The guarantee of speedy settlement of cases stipulated in the Constitution aims to settle the judicial dispute after it is presented to its judges within a period of time that does not exceed any reasonable limit in its length, nor is its shortness infinitely short.[2601]

The right to a fair trial inherently includes the right to a trial conducted without undue delay—a right of fundamental significance. This ensures that an accusation is not left pending for an extended period without justification, thereby sparing the accused unnecessary anxiety and the impairment of their constitutionally guaranteed rights and freedoms, such as freedom of expression, the right to assembly, and participation in public life. Prolonged delays may damage

---

([2596]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §56; Almonacid-Arellano et al. v. Chile, Inter-American Court §154 (2006).

([2597]) Article 9(2) of the Statute of the Rwanda Tribunal, Article 9(2) of the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, and Article 10(2) of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal.

([2598]) Article 20(3) of the Rome Statute.

([2599]) Article 20(3) of the Rome Statute.

([2600]) Article 20(2) of the Rome Statute, Article 9(1) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 9(1) of the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, and Article 10 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

([2601]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 11 of 24 Q, issued in the session of May 9, 2004, date of publication June 10, 2004, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 757, rule No. 127.

the accused's reputation, lead to societal contempt, or result in job loss. Moreover, an excessively protracted trial impedes the accused's ability to defend themselves effectively, potentially compromising access to witnesses, whose memories may fade or who may no longer be available to testify.

The psychological toll of prolonged legal uncertainty is severe, leaving the accused feeling perpetually haunted by accusations without resolution. Such delays may also arise from hasty and poorly substantiated charges lacking credible evidence. The right to a trial free from procedural delays is, however, a relative one, determined by the specific circumstances of the case, including the complexity and gravity of the offense, the variety of evidence, and the number of witnesses involved.

The harm caused by delays in resolving criminal charges is presumed and does not require explicit proof, particularly in cases where the delay is intentional or egregious, rather than incidental or minor in impact. Nevertheless, the right to an expeditious trial should not compromise its fairness by abbreviating or truncating procedures, thereby stripping the trial of its safeguards and reducing the final judgment to a superficial and insufficiently deliberated decision—a summary trial.[2602]

The ultimate guarantee of speedy settlement of cases is that the judicial dispute be settled - after being presented to its judges - within a period of time that does not exceed any reasonable limit in length, nor is its shortness infinite. This is because extending the time for deciding this dispute without necessity disrupts its objectives and makes the dispute lose its value. If its time is premature, the ruling on it will be hasty and contrary to the truths of justice.[2603]

The denial of the right to judicial satisfaction is achieved through the noticeable delay in providing it, and the result of that is that those who request judicial satisfaction do not obtain it at the appropriate time; which is considered a waste of the protection guaranteed by the constitution or the legislator for rights of all kinds, and a denial of the facts of justice in the essence of its features and orientations.[2604]

The public interest requires the speedy completion of the criminal trial in order to achieve general deterrence, which requires speed in the procedures and imposing the appropriate punishment in the event of conviction, in addition to the expenses incurred by the state due to the length of the procedures.

The accused has a personal interest in putting an end to the pain he is exposed to because of his position as a suspect, which affects his honor, reputation and standing among people, especially in light of the public nature of the trial procedures. This is psychological pain that befalls him and his family, in addition to affecting the principle of innocence of the accused, which requires not prolonging the accused’s position as a suspect. Also, the accused waiting a long time for the trial may weaken his ability to collect evidence that refutes the evidence of the accusation, and it may also lead to forgetting witnesses, which affects knowing the truth.

The legislator was keen to stipulate the guarantee of a speedy trial in some texts, an example of which is what is stipulated in Article No. 276 bis of the Criminal Procedure Code: “A ruling shall be made expeditiously in cases involving juveniles and crimes stipulated in Chapters One, Two,

---

([2602]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 64 of 17 Q, issued in the session of February 7, 1998, date of publication February 19, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78.

([2603]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 145 of 1998, issued in the session of June 6, 1998, date of publication June 18, 1998, and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1423, rule No. 109.

([2604]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 55 of 20 Q issued in the session of March 4, 2000, date of publication March 20, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 470, rule No. 57, Case No. 37 of 18 Q issued in the session of April 4, 1998, date of publication April 16, 1998, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1260, rule No. 95.

Two bis, Three, Four and Fourteen of Book Two of the Penal Code and crimes stipulated in Articles 302, 303, 306, 307 and 308 of the Penal Code if they occurred through newspapers and Law No. 394 of 1954 regarding weapons and ammunition, amended by Law No. 546 of 1954.

The accused shall be summoned to appear before the court in the cases mentioned in the previous paragraph one full day before the session is held in misdemeanour cases and three full days in felony cases, excluding the travel distance times.

The announcement may be made by a bailiff or a public authority official.

The case shall be considered in a session held within two weeks from the date of its referral to the competent court. If the case is referred to the criminal court, the president of the competent court of appeal shall set a session on the aforementioned date.

It is also not permissible to postpone the consideration of the case in the crimes of defamation by publication in a newspaper or other publication more than once for a period not exceeding thirty days, and the judgment shall be pronounced accompanied by its reasons.[2605]

Article 12 of the Anti-Prostitution Law stipulates that the court shall rule on the public lawsuit urgently within a period not exceeding three weeks.[2606]

The legislator did not limit the cases in which a criminal case must be adjudicated quickly. The speed of adjudicating cases within a reasonable time is a general duty that all courts are committed to in order to achieve the public and private interest. The reasonableness of the time to adjudicate the case depends on the circumstances of each case. It is a relative matter, the determination of which depends on the facts of each case. The judge is responsible for assessing the elements of the case and its nature, on which the determination of the reasonable time to adjudicate the case depends. It should be noted that the right to defense may not be violated in order to achieve that speed, because ensuring the speed of adjudication of the case may not be at the expense of another guarantee.

It is not permissible to confiscate the right of the defense to hear the witness of the incident on the grounds that he sought to prolong the litigation or escape punishment.[2607]

17-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the right to be tried without undue delay, the determination of which will depend on the circumstances of the case.

Criminal proceedings must be initiated and concluded within a reasonable time.[2608]

The American Convention and the European Convention differ from the other standards mentioned in two respects: First, they do not explicitly define criminal procedures. The second is that it requires that the proceedings be completed "within a reasonable period of time," rather than "without undue delay," although this linguistic difference does not seem to matter.

([2605] Article No. 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2606] Article No. 12 of the Anti-Prostitution Law No. 10 of 1961.

([2607] Appeal No. 4355 of 57 Q issued in the session of February 9, 1988 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 259, rule No. 33.

([2608]) Article 14/3(c) of the International Covenant, Article 40(2)(b)(iii) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18(3)(c) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 7(1)(d) of the African Charter, Article 8(1) of the American Convention, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Article 67(1)(c) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(c) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 21(4)(c) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

The Committee on the Rights of the Child has made clear that the obligation to complete proceedings against children "without undue delay" under the Convention on the Rights of the Child requires greater expeditiousness.[2609]

When setting the timetable, the courts must:

Guaranteeing the right to defense with sufficient time and facilities to prepare the defense;

Taking into account the requirements for the fair administration of justice;

Respecting the right of the accused to have his criminal prosecution procedures completed without undue delay.[2610]

The International Criminal Court has warned that the need for speed cannot justify courts taking measures that are inconsistent with the rights of the accused or with the fairness of the trial in general.[2611]

The obligation of the State to expedite judicial proceedings becomes even more urgent for anyone accused of a criminal offence and detained pending trial, since when one is detained, the shorter the delay becomes reasonable. International standards, including Article 9 of the International Covenant, require that anyone charged with a criminal offence be released from detention pending trial if the period of detention pending trial exceeds what is considered reasonable in the circumstances of the case.

Ensuring a trial without undue delay in criminal cases is linked to the right to liberty, the presumption of innocence, and the right to defend oneself.[2612]

And also to ensure that his right to defend himself is not prejudiced due to the passage of an excessively long period of time, as the details of the facts may fade from the memory of the witnesses or be distorted, or they may be difficult to find, or other evidence may be destroyed or disappear.[2613]

This also aims to ensure that the period of anxiety experienced by the accused for fear of his fate and the suffering he endures as a result of the stigma attached to him as a result of being accused of committing a criminal act, despite the presumption of his innocence, is shortened. The right to a speedy trial embodies, in a nutshell, the wisdom that "slow justice is a kind of injustice."[2614]

The right to a trial within a reasonable time does not depend on the accused requesting the authorities to expedite the hearing of the case.[2615]

([2609]) General Comment 10 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, §52.
([2610]) See Coim and Others v. Belgium (32492/96, 32547/96, 32548/96, 33209/96, 33210/96), European Court § 140 (2000).
([2611]) The Prosecutor v. Jean-Pierre Bemba Gambo (1386) - 08/01 - 05/01 (ICC-01), Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Court (3 May 2011) §55.
([2612]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 35; McFarlane v. Ireland (06/31333) Grand Chamber of the European Court § 155 (2010); Prosecutor v. Sefer Halilović (IT-01-48-A) Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Decision on Defence Request for Urgent Scheduling of Appeal (27 October 2006) § 19 (2006); see, Suárez Rosero v. Ecuador, Inter-American Court § 70 (1997).
([2613]) See Massie v. United Kingdom (14399)/02, European Court. §27 (2004).
([2614]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 35; European Court: Salmoni v. France (25803)/94), Grand Chamber - § 118 § 107 (1999, Obuz v. Turkey (33401)/02), - § 151 § 150 (2009); Inter-American Court: Radilla-Pacheco v. Mexico, § 191 (2009, Las Palmeras v. Colombia, § 6266-6266 (2001); see also "Mapiripan Massacre" v. Colombia, Inter-American Court § 222 (2005); CEDAW Committee: Tayag Vertido v. Philippines, 2008/A. T. v Hungary (2010) 8§ /3؛ UN CEDAW/C/46/D/18 UN Doc. A/60/38, (2003/2) (Part I) (2005), Annex 4/ §8 3.
([2615]) McFarlane v. Ireland (31333)/06) Grand Chamber of the European Court. §152 (2010).

The accused is not required to prove that the unjustified delay caused him specific harm in order to demonstrate that his right not to be delayed was violated. Conversely, the burden of showing that the delay is justified remains with the State.[2616]

The standards do not guarantee that procedures will be completed without any delay; rather, they prohibit any undue delay. The period of time taken into account in determining whether the accused's right to a speedy hearing of his case has been respected begins from the moment he becomes aware that the authorities are taking specific steps to institute legal proceedings against him, i.e. when he is arrested or charged, for example.[2617]

It ends when the investigation is closed (by dropping the charges) or all means of appealing the issued ruling are exhausted or all deadlines expire and the ruling becomes final.[2618]

Ensuring the right to a trial without undue delay requires States to organize and provide adequate resources for their judicial systems.[2619]

Unjustified delays resulting from the accumulation of case files before the courts, the poor economic conditions of the judicial system or other conditions were considered;[2620]

A shortage of judges, or an increase in crime rates following an attempted military coup, are all sufficient justification for the state to be considered unable to guarantee this right.[2621]

17-2-1 What is meant by reasonable time?

“Reasonable time” is assessed based on the circumstances of each individual case. The elements to be considered in this context include: the complexity of the case; the conduct of the accused; the conduct of the authorities; what the accused stands to lose, including whether or not he is in detention and his health; the seriousness of the charges; and the possible penalties.[2622]

First: The complexity of the issue

There are many factors that are taken into account in determining whether the period over which proceedings were conducted was reasonable in light of the complexity of the circumstances of the case. These include the nature and seriousness of the alleged crime(s); the number of charges against the accused; the nature of the investigation required; the number of persons alleged to have been involved in the commission of the crime; the number of witnesses; the complexity of the facts; and any legal issues arising from the course of the case.)[2623] ([2617]) McFarlane v. Ireland (31333)/06) Grand Chamber of the European Court §- § 143144 (2010); Suarez Rosero v. Ecuador, Inter-American Court § 70 (1997).

([2616]) See, Barroso v. Panama, Human Rights Committee, UN CEDAW 5/ §8 (1995) C/54/D/473/1991; Hillier, Constantin, Benjamin and others v. Trinidad and Tobago, Inter-American Court 145 § (2002).

([2618]) Section N(5)(b) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §35; Human Rights Committee: Mwamba v. Zambia, 2006/6/ §6 (2010) UN CCPR/C/98/D/1520, Kennedy v. Trinidad and Tobago, 1998/5/ §7 (2002) UN CCPR/C/74/D/845.

([2619]) Kelot v. France (36932)/97, European Court §27 (1999).

([2620]) Lubutu v. Zambia, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR 3/ §7 (1995) C/55/D/390/1990/Rev. 1; García-Astó and Ramírez-Rojas v. Peru, Inter-American Court §162-§172 (2005).

([2621]) Sextus v. Trinidad and Tobago, Human Rights Committee,. 2/ §7 (2001) UN CCPR/C/72/D/818/1998.

([2622]) Section N(5)(c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa; see Principle 5 of the Principles on Persons Deprived of Liberty in the Americas, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 35; Kemache v. France (Nos. 1 and 2) (12325)/86 and 14992/89), § 60 (1991; McFarlane v. Ireland (06/31333), Grand Chamber of the European Court § 140-§ 156 (2010; Kudla v. Poland (30210)/96), Grand Chamber § 124-§ 131 (2000); Inter-American Court: Hilaire, Constantin, Benjamin and Others v. Trinidad and Tobago, § 143 (2002); Suárez Rosero v. Ecuador, § 72 (1997).

([2623]) The Prosecutor v. Prosper Mugiraneza (ICTR-99-50-AR73), Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for Rwanda (27 February 2004) Preamble §6(2).

However, even in complex cases, due care must still be taken to ensure that justice is administered expeditiously if the person detained is in custody.[2624]

The Human Rights Committee has repeatedly stressed that in cases involving serious charges, such as murder, where the accused is denied bail, the accused should be tried as expeditiously as possible.[2625]

In a case where a defendant in a murder case was detained for more than three and a half years before being acquitted, the Human Rights Committee found that the delay in issuing the indictment and in the trial was unjustified.[2626]

It is now recognized that economic or drug crimes involving a number of defendants, cases with international aspects, and those involving multiple murders or related to the activities of "terrorist" organizations are more difficult and complex than routine criminal cases, and therefore the reasonable time limit here is longer.

After examining the national legislation, examining the complexity of a case and the conduct of the authorities in Ecuador, the Inter-American Court considered that the fact that the court took 50 months to consider the case and complete its procedures constituted a violation of the American Convention.[2627]

In a case involving 723 defendants and 607 criminal offences, the European Court ruled that it was reasonable for the case to last eight and a half years. However, it considered that the subsequent delays and interruptions, including the three-year period it took for one court to prepare a written memorandum of reasons for judgment, and the appeals before two courts that lasted more than six years, exceeded the reasonable time limit.[2628]

The Human Rights Committee considered that the three-and-a-half-year continuation of an investigation in Belgium into allegations of criminal association and money laundering involving two men subject to UN and EU sanctions following the 9/11 events in the United States did not constitute a violation of the reasonable time requirement.[2629]

UN human rights mechanisms have expressed concerns about delays in proceedings for those detained by the United States at Guantanamo Bay, noting that the right to a trial without undue delay under the Covenant relates to the time at which trials should begin, as well as the time at which full proceedings should be completed. Human rights mechanisms considered that the US authorities had violated the right to a trial without undue delay by continuing to hold detainees without charge for years.[2630]

Second: The accused's behavior

The conduct of the accused shall be taken into account during the examination of the facts of the case when deciding whether or not the procedures were carried out without undue delay.[2631]

For example, delays caused by the accused's flight were taken into account when determining whether the proceedings were completed within a reasonable period of time.[2632]

([2624]) Peshchalnikov v. Russia (7025)/04), European Court (2009). §49.

([2625]) Sextus v. Trinidad and Tobago, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc. 2/ §7 (2001) CCPR/C/72/D/818/1998.

([2626]) Barroso v. Panama, Human Rights Committee, / UN Doc. CCPR. 5/ §8 (1995) C/54/D/473/1991.

([2627]) Suarez Rosero v. Ecuador, §73 (1997).

([2628]) European Court: Metap and Muftuoglu v. Turkey (15530)/89 and 32547/96 and 325448/96 and 33209/96 and 33210/96), §33-§37 (1996); see Coim and Others v. Belgium (32492)/96 and 32547/96 and 32548/96 and 33209/96 and 33210/96), §137-§141 (2000).

([2629]) Sovereignty and Fink v. Belgium, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR. 10/ §10 (2008) C/94/D/1472/2006.

([2630]) Joint report of the United Nations mechanisms on Guantanamo Bay detainees, 120/2006/§38 (2006) UN Doc. E/CN. 4.

([2631]) McFarlane v. Ireland (31333)/06) Grand Chamber of the European Court §148-§150 (2010).

However, the accused is not obliged to cooperate effectively in criminal proceedings against him. Furthermore, delays resulting from the accused exercising his procedural rights in good faith must not be taken into account when assessing whether the proceedings were completed within a reasonable period.[2633]

Third: The behavior of the authorities

The authorities have a duty to expedite the consideration of the case. If it fails to initiate proceedings at any stage due to negligence or allows delays in the investigation or in the facts of the case or takes more time than is reasonable to complete certain measures, the time period for considering the case shall be deemed to have exceeded the reasonable limit. Likewise, if the criminal justice system itself impedes the speedy handling of cases, this may be considered a violation of the accused's right to have his trial concluded within a reasonable time.

The Human Rights Committee found that article 14 of the International Covenant had been violated in a case in which the appeal in Canada took almost three years to be heard, primarily due to a 29-month delay in preparing the trial transcripts.[2634]

The European Court considered that the lapse of 15 and a half months between the filing of the appeal and its referral to the relevant court constituted an exceeding of the reasonable period.[2635]

In a complex case involving organized criminal activity, the court found that the length of time taken to prosecute the detained defendant – nearly four years and eight months for two judicial instances – was excessive. Where substantial periods passed without the authorities taking any action on the issue, without the government providing any satisfactory explanations for what happened.[2636]

Chapter Eighteen: The Defendant's Right to Self-Defense or Representation by a Lawyer

18-1 Under Egyptian Law

Every accused person has the right to seek legal counsel at all stages of the criminal case, as well as during all stages of the trial. Article 98 of the Constitution stipulates: "The right to defense, whether in person or by proxy, is guaranteed. The independence of the legal profession and the protection of its rights are guarantees to ensure the right of defense. The law guarantees financially incapable individuals the means to access justice and defend their rights."

Article 124 of the Code of Criminal Procedure reinforces this principle, stating: "In felonies and misdemeanors punishable by mandatory imprisonment, the investigator may not interrogate the accused or confront them with other accused individuals or witnesses without summoning their (2632) Sri v. Turkey and Denmark (21889)/93, European Court (2001) §73-§100.

(2633) Yagci and Sargin v. Turkey (16419/90 and 16426/90), European Court § 66 (1995); Human Rights Committee: Tariqat and Others v. Algeria, 5/8-4/§ § 8 (2006) UN CCPR/C/86/D/1085/2002, Ngo v. Cameroon, 9/§ 7 (2009) UN CCPR/C/96/D/1397/2005, Ross v. Philippines,. 4/ §7 (2005) UN CCPR/C/84/D/1089/2002.

(2634) Pinckney v. Canada (27/R. 7) Human Rights Committee, UN CCPR/C/OP/1 (1981), §10 and §22, p. 95.

(2635) Bonket v. The Netherlands (13645)/88, European Court §22-§23 (1993).

(2636) Peshchalnikov v. Russia (7025)/04), European Court (2009) §48-§53.

lawyer to be present, except in cases of flagrante delicto or urgency due to fear of evidence being lost, as recorded by the investigator in the minutes.

The accused must notify the court clerk's office or the prison warden of their lawyer's name or inform the investigator. Alternatively, the lawyer may undertake this notification.

If the accused does not have a lawyer, or their lawyer does not appear after being summoned, the investigator must appoint a lawyer on their behalf.

The lawyer may record in the minutes any defenses, requests, or observations they consider relevant.

Upon the final resolution of the investigation, the investigator, upon the appointed lawyer's request, issues an order to determine the lawyer's fees based on the fee schedule issued by the Minister of Justice after consulting the General Bar Association. These fees are treated as judicial expenses."

Article 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides: "In a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment that the law mandates enforcement immediately upon judgment, the accused must appear in person. If the accused present in such a misdemeanor does not have a lawyer, the court must appoint one to defend them.

In other misdemeanors and infractions, the accused may appoint a representative to present their defense, without prejudice to the court's right to require their personal appearance."

The above makes it clear that the right to legal representation is mandatory for any accused individual in a felony or a misdemeanor punishable by mandatory imprisonment to ensure effective, substantive defense rather than mere formal representation. This recognition stems from the seriousness of accusations punishable by mandatory imprisonment, with the guarantee yielding its full benefit only when a lawyer is present during the trial to witness its proceedings and to provide the accused with active assistance through all possible means of defense.[2637]

In its keenness to ensure the effectiveness of this fundamental guarantee, the legislator imposed the penalty of a fine as stipulated in Article 375 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which states: “Except in cases of valid excuse or a proven impediment, any lawyer—whether appointed by the investigating judge, the Public Prosecution, or the President of the Criminal Court, or engaged by the defendant—must defend the accused in court or appoint someone to act on their behalf. Otherwise, the Criminal Court shall impose a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, without prejudice to disciplinary proceedings if the situation warrants. The court may exempt the lawyer from the fine if it is proven that it was impossible for them to attend the session in person or appoint another on their behalf.”[2638]

However, the law does not require the presence of a lawyer for a defendant in a misdemeanor punishable by optional imprisonment, leaving this to the defendant’s discretion. Moreover, a lack of defense by the defendant or their lawyer in such misdemeanors—punishable by optional imprisonment—cannot form the basis for appealing the judgment on the grounds of a violation of the right to defense.[2639]

([2637]) Appeal No. 8307 of 5 Q issued in the session of July 16, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 581, Rule No. 67, Appeal No. 14734 of 83 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 127, Rule No. 8.

([2638]) Article No. 375 of the Criminal Procedure Code and see: Appeal No. 14734 of the 83rd year of the Civil Procedure Law, issued in the session of January 12, 2015, and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 127, Rule No. 8.

([2639] Appeal No. 23147 of 85 Q issued in the session of December 26, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page No. 945, Rule No. 118.

While the law does not prohibit a lawyer from representing a defendant in misdemeanor or aggravated felony cases, if the session minutes show that the defendant was present in person and had the opportunity to defend themselves, they cannot complain that the court did not grant their request to reopen the case for oral defense by their lawyer, whether or not the court allowed them to submit a memorandum as claimed or as indicated in the session minutes.[2640]

The law does not mandate legal assistance for defendants in misdemeanors—punishable by optional imprisonment—or infractions. Thus, the misdemeanor judge has complete discretion to grant or deny a defendant's request for adjournment to arrange for a lawyer based on what appears reasonable and justified to them.[2641]

The presumption of innocence, which requires a defendant to be convicted only through fair proceedings that do not undermine their right to defense, necessitates procedural rules ensuring all substantive rights connected to the accusation. These rules must not compromise, affect, or restrict the defendant's rights, as their purpose is to protect individuals from tyranny or abuse of authority within a framework of organized freedom. There is no rule more established or vital than the necessity of providing the accused with a clear definition of the charges, specifying the evidence, and granting an adequate opportunity to present their perspective.

It is unacceptable for a person to be convicted of a crime they were not charged with. This principle applies equally to any accusation made without providing for a defense. Effective defense cannot exist without sufficient time for preparation. Informing the defendant of the witnesses prepared by the prosecution to prove its case ensures the possibility of confronting and challenging them. Furthermore, the defendant must not be deprived of compulsory measures to secure the appearance of witnesses for their benefit, chosen without restriction, nor should poverty deprive them of this right. They must not be denied access to review the documents submitted by the prosecution or discuss them, nor be isolated from direct or indirect contact with their lawyer, whether during judicial proceedings, prior to them, or during appeals of the final outcome. Otherwise, the right to defense becomes limited and of little value.

The right to defense is closely linked to the criminal case in terms of clarifying its aspects, rectifying its procedures, monitoring its progress, and presenting factual and legal issues that support the defendant's position. This ensures its coherence, counters opposing claims, and elucidates the truth on significant points, especially through evaluating various alternatives to identify the most relevant and likely to succeed, backed by the necessary documentation to substantiate them. Justice cannot be effectively achieved or fully realized in a complex criminal charge or one involving intertwined elements if the right to defense is absent or limited to the accusation stage or its adjudication, without extending to the investigation phase. During this phase, the focus is not merely on a crime whose facts and motives remain obscure but also on a specific individual suspected of committing it, surrounded by the investigating authority's questions and its measures of custody.[2642]

The presumption of innocence in criminal charges is constitutionally linked—ensuring its effectiveness—to procedural means that are intrinsically connected to the right to defense. Among these is the defendant's right to confront the evidence presented to prove their guilt and

---

([2640] Appeal No. 1623 of 20 Q issued in the session of February 19, 1951 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 2, page No. 646, rule No. 246.

([2641] Appeal No. 342 of 46 Q issued in the session of January 17, 1929 and published in Technical Office Book No. 1, Part No. 1, Page No. 142, Rule No. 116.

([2642]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 64 of 17 Q, issued in the session of February 7, 1998, date of publication February 19, 1998, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78.

the right to refute it through legally permissible means, ensuring a minimum level of protection for the defendant's rights that cannot be compromised or diminished.[2643]

The defendant's right to deny and refute the accusation represents the minimum level of protection that must be ensured for their right to defense.[2644]

In general criminal cases, and particularly in felonies, it is impermissible to compel the parties to rely solely on written submissions for their defense. The principle in such cases is that the defense should be presented orally unless the parties themselves request to provide it in writing. This is because criminal justice fundamentally concerns matters of life and liberty and is based primarily on the judge's conviction and what resonates within their conscience.[2645]

18-1-1 The Right of the Accused to Defend Themselves

If the court serves as the final refuge to uncover and assess the facts accurately, then failing to uphold this role would render the trial ineffective and unjustly block the accused from seeking defense. Such an outcome is categorically rejected by the principles of justice. Guided by these principles, the right of the accused to defend themselves has emerged as a sacred right, one that surpasses the collective rights of society. Society is far less harmed by the acquittal of a guilty party than it is by the conviction of an innocent individual, which injures both society and justice itself.[2646]

The essence of Article 98 of the Constitution does not merely lie in affirming the right of an individual to choose a lawyer to represent them. Rather, it underscores the personal dimensions of the right to defense by recognizing the foundational aspect of this right—the Right of Self-Representation. This affirms the independence of these two rights (self-representation and legal representation), ensuring they do not conflict. Choosing a lawyer as a representative is a form of assistance requested by the individual, but the lawyer's authority in legal disputes only operates with the original party's consent, who ultimately bears the outcomes of the case.[2647]

An individual's right to choose a lawyer as their representative reflects, in most cases, the evolution of judicial systems and the complexity of legal rules, which are often too intricate for most people to navigate. What might appear clear to legal professionals may remain shrouded in ambiguity for others, regardless of their level of education or expertise. This is particularly true in specialized areas of law, given their evolving dimensions and concealed aspects. However,

---

([2643] Appeal No. 15279 of 62 Q issued in the session of March 19, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 343, Rule No. 57.

([2644] Appeal No. 15279 of 62 Q issued in the session of March 19, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 343, Rule No. 57.

([2645] Appeal No. 28947 of 68 Q issued in the session of October 20, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, Page No. 757, Rule No. 141.

([2646]) Appeal No. 20238 of 84 Q issued in the session of January 24, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 76701 of 75 Q issued in the session of November 26, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 913, Rule No. 102, Appeal No. 10228 of 71 Q issued in the session of November 15, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 861, Rule No. 165, Appeal No. 4684 of 58 Q issued in the session of November 2, 1989 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 819, Rule No. 138, Appeal No. 154 of 59 Q issued in the session of April 6, 1989 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 661, Rule No. 112, Appeal No. 6097 of 53 Q issued in the session of February 15, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 153, rule No. 31, Appeal No. 1172 of 36 Q issued in the session of January 31, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 128, rule No. 24, Appeal No. 1209 of 34 Q issued in the session of January 25, 1965 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 87, rule No. 21.

([2647]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 15 of 17 Q, issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 316, rule No. 18.

the right of self-defense has always preceded the right to choose a lawyer, being more closely tied to personal human characteristics and the integrity of the individual.[2648]

The accused has the right to present their defense even if they have legal representation. The accused is the principal party in the criminal case, while the lawyer is merely their representative. The presence of a lawyer does not negate the accused's right to raise defenses or requests. The court must listen to the accused, even if their arguments conflict with their lawyer's views, and must address these arguments as long as they are substantive.[2649]

The right of the accused to defend themselves is inherently personal, as they are the primary party responsible for presenting their statements to the court. The lawyer's role is to assist by offering defenses they deem in the client's best interest, whether related to factual or legal matters. If the accused insists on being questioned regarding matters they believe are essential to their defense, the court must grant this request and listen to their testimony. Should the court refuse this and direct the defense to proceed with pleadings instead, it effectively denies the accused their fundamental constitutional and legal right to defend themselves.[2650]

It is established that exercising the accused's legitimate right to self-defense in court cannot be dismissed as insincere or criticized for being late, as the trial itself is the proper time for such defenses. The law ensures that every accused individual has the right to present their requests and defenses during trial, and the court is obligated to examine and address them as long as they contribute to uncovering the truth and reaching the correct outcome.[2651]

A delay in presenting a defense does not necessarily indicate a lack of seriousness, provided it is substantive and has the potential to negate the charge or alter the court's perspective on the case. Similarly, exercising the accused's legitimate right to defend themselves in court cannot under any circumstances be dismissed as insincere or labeled as tardy, because the trial is the appropriate time for such defenses. The law guarantees every accused individual the right to present their requests for investigation and their defenses during trial.[2652]

([2648]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 15 of 17 Q, issued in the session of December 2, 1995, date of publication December 21, 1995, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 316, rule No. 18.
([2649] Appeal No. 726 of 35 Q issued in the session of June 14, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 576, rule No. 115.
([2650] Appeal No. 8322 of 75 Q issued in the session of May 16, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, Page No. 628, Rule No. 67.
([2651]) Appeal No. 23449 of 71 Q issued in the session of February 5, 2002 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 224, rule No. 41, Appeal No. 3943 of 65 Q issued in the session of January 10, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 55, rule No. 6, Appeal No. 3539 of 59 Q issued in the session of October 11, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 758, rule No. 126, Appeal No. 2602 of 53 Q issued in the session of December 15, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page No. 1056, rule No. 211, Appeal No. 79 of 48 Q issued in the session of April 24, 1978 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 442, Rule No. 84, Appeal No. 1217 for the year 46 Q issued in the session of February 20, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 28, page No. 277, Rule No. 60, Appeal No. 1415 for the year 42 Q issued in the session of January 22, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 95, Rule No. 23, Appeal No. 533 for the year 39 Q issued in the session of May 12, 1969 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 706, Rule No. 142.
([2652]) Appeal No. 6658 of 64 Q issued in the session of June 3, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 367, rule No. 86, Appeal No. 15 of 63 Q issued in the session of May 18, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 598, rule No. 88, Appeal No. 50161 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 12, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 1171, rule No. 168, Appeal No. 9463 of 64 Q issued in the session of April 10, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 505, rule No. 71, Appeal No. 17097 of 62 Q issued in the session of January 6, 1996 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 61, rule No. 6, Appeal No. 2294 for the year 49 Q issued in the session of April 9, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 483, rule No. 90, Appeal No. 1415 for the year 42 Q issued in the session of January 22, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24,

The manner in which an accused defends themselves using every available means cannot be used as evidence of their guilt. Furthermore, no individual should be condemned, even based on their own verbal or written confession, if such confession contradicts the truth or reality.[2653]

Additionally, the court is prohibited from considering documents or evidence that were not presented during the trial proceedings, after the conclusion of the pleadings and during deliberations. If the court relies on such documents without first informing the accused and allowing them the opportunity to examine and respond to them, this constitutes a violation of the accused's right to defense and renders the judgment invalid.[2654]

Inability of the Accused to Defend Themselves

If it is proven that the accused is unable to defend themselves due to a mental disorder that arose after the commission of the crime, the proceedings against them or their trial must be suspended until they regain their sanity. In such cases, the investigating judge, the magistrate judge, or the court handling the case—upon the request of the public prosecution—may issue an order to detain the accused in a facility designated for mental health care until their release is deemed appropriate, particularly if the case involves a felony or a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment.[2655]

This provision aims to uphold the principles of justice and ensure the sanctity of the right to defense during both investigation and trial. The accused is the primary party responsible for their defense, and the legal requirement for the appointment of a lawyer in felonies, as well as the optional appointment in misdemeanors and violations, exists solely to assist and support the accused in their defense. Therefore, if the accused suffers from a mental disability after the commission of the alleged crime, even though their criminal responsibility does not lapse, the investigation or trial procedures must be suspended until they regain their mental capacity. This ensures that they can personally defend themselves against the charges and contribute alongside their legal representative in formulating their defense strategy with full cognitive and intellectual faculties.[2656]

The court cannot base its judgment regarding the absence of a mental disorder affecting the accused during trial on the premise that the accused failed to present evidence to substantiate such a claim. The court has a duty, in such cases, to safeguard the accused's right to defense by verifying whether they were mentally sound at the time of the trial, without requiring the accused to provide evidence of their claim. If the court deviates from this duty and fails to undertake the necessary steps to ascertain the validity of the plea and determine whether the page No. 95, rule No. 23, Appeal No. 533 for the year 39 Q issued in the session of May 12, 1969 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 706, rule No. 142.

---

([2653] Appeal No. 751 of 38 Q issued in the session of June 3, 1968 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 19, page No. 657, rule No. 133.

([2654] Appeal No. 2244 of year 47 Q issued in the session of December 11, 1930 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, second year, No. 161, Rule No. 130.

([2655] Article No. 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2656]) Appeal No. 29139 of 74 Q issued in the session of October 7, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5988 of 64 Q issued in the session of February 13, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 240, rule No. 34, Appeal No. 5590 of 57 Q issued in the session of December 29, 1988 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 1386, rule No. 211, Appeal No. 2788 of 56 Q issued in the session of October 29, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 804, rule No. 155, Appeal No. 133 of 48 Q issued in the session of June 4, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 546 Rule No. 103, Appeal No. 4 of Year 35 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 580, Rule No. 116.

accused was mentally impaired during the trial, this would constitute a significant shortcoming in its reasoning, a flaw in its inference, and a serious violation of the right to defense.[2657]

Moreover, illness constitutes a compelling excuse. Therefore, if the court establishes the presence of such an excuse, it must postpone the trial to allow the accused to adequately prepare their defense. If the court refuses to grant a postponement solely due to repeated requests without assessing the validity of the excuse presented by the defense attorney, it would be violating the accused's right to defense.[2658]

18-1-2 The Accused's Freedom to Choose Their Lawyer

One of the fundamental principles mandated by law is that having legal counsel is compulsory for every accused person referred to the Criminal Court for a felony. This requirement ensures a genuine defense, not merely a formal one, recognizing the gravity of being accused of a felony. The benefit of this safeguard is realized only when a lawyer is present during the trial to observe its proceedings and actively assist the accused by presenting all viable defense strategies. Moreover, it is well-established that the accused has an undisputed right to choose their lawyer. This right is fundamental and takes precedence over the judge's authority to appoint a defender. If the accused selects a lawyer, the judge cannot infringe upon this right by appointing another lawyer. Similarly, the judge cannot deny the present lawyer the opportunity to defend the appellant or obstruct an absent lawyer from fulfilling their role, especially if the defense is divided among multiple advocates.

The law stipulates that every accused person facing a felony must have legal representation, whether appointed or chosen, ensuring the presence of a lawyer alongside the accused during the trial to witness the proceedings and assist the accused with every possible aspect of their defense. It is not mandatory for more than one lawyer to accompany the accused in a felony case. However, if these rights conflict with the session chairman's authority to manage the proceedings and maintain the flow of the case, the chairman's right must be upheld. The chairman should have complete discretion in handling the proceedings, provided the accused is not left without a defense.[2659]

Denying an individual the right to choose a lawyer who they deem capable of protecting their interests and advocating for their rights is not only unjustified but also contrary to legitimate interests.[2660]

The court must enable the chosen lawyer to follow the trial proceedings from beginning to end, ensuring the effectiveness of the right to defense and the accused's freedom to choose their lawyer. This right takes precedence over the court's authority to appoint a lawyer. If the accused has selected a lawyer, the judge cannot override this choice and appoint another lawyer unless it becomes evident that the chosen lawyer is deliberately working to obstruct the proceedings.[2661]

([2657] Appeal No. 4 of year 35 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 580, Rule No. 116.

([2658] Appeal No. 449 of 21 Q issued in the session of June 4, 1951 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 2, Page No. 1208, Rule No. 441.

([2659] Appeal No. 13489 of 85 Q issued in the session of November 27, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page No. 846, Rule No. 105.

([2660]) The Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 6 of 13 Q, issued in the session of May 16, 1992, date of publication June 4, 1992, and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 344, rule No. 37.

([2661] Appeal No. 1619 of 37 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1967 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 18, Page No. 926, Rule No. 185.

The law does not require more than one lawyer to defend an accused person in a felony case.[2662]

18-1-3 Enabling the Lawyer to Follow Trial Proceedings from Beginning to End

It is generally accepted that the court is not at fault if it refuses a request for adjournment to allow for preparation, as long as the accused has been properly notified and has had the time between the notification and the trial session to prepare their defense.[2663]

However, if the accused has entrusted a lawyer with their defense, the court must listen to the lawyer's arguments. If the lawyer requests a postponement of the case and the court decides not to grant it, the court must inform the lawyer of the refusal so they can proceed with their defense or take other measures they deem necessary to protect the rights of their client.[2664]

Unless the court finds that an unavoidable excuse has arisen for the accused or their lawyer, preventing preparation, the court must grant sufficient time for defense preparation. Failure to do so would result in a judgment that breaches the right to defense.[2665]

If a lawyer attends the session scheduled for the trial and requests an adjournment due to illness, providing a medical certificate, and the court dismisses this request and proceeds with the trial without addressing or evaluating this excuse in its judgment, the court would have violated the accused's right to defense. Illness constitutes an unavoidable excuse that requires the court to postpone the trial until the accused can properly defend themselves. If the court fails to consider the validity of the excuse presented by the lawyer, it breaches the accused's right to defense. [2666]

However, if the lawyer appointed by the accused does not attend, and the court appoints another lawyer to argue the case, this does not invalidate the proceedings or infringe on the accused's right to defense, provided the accused does not object to this arrangement or request a postponement until the appointed lawyer is present.[2667]

If the defense lawyer claims that the court has denied their right to present a defense before closing arguments and reserving the case for judgment, the lawyer must provide evidence to substantiate this claim and record the violation in a written submission before the judgment is issued.[2668]

([2662] Appeal No. 61 of 88 Q issued in the session of November 25, 2018 (unpublished).

([2663]) Appeal No. 1133 of 18 Q issued in the session of June 14, 1948 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, the seventh year, page No. 603, rule No. 634, Appeal No. 852 of 7 Q issued in the session of March 1, 1937 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, the fourth year, page No. 52, rule No. 54.

([2664]) Appeal No. 35403 of 85 Q issued in the session of January 19, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 130, Rule No. 16, Appeal No. 14734 of 83 Q issued in the session of January 12, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 127, Rule No. 8.

([2665]) Appeal No. 1596 of 21 Q issued in the session of January 7, 1952 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 3, page No. 392, rule No. 149, Appeal No. 341 of 31 Q issued in the session of May 22, 1961 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 608, rule No. 116, Appeal No. 929 of 42 Q issued in the session of November 19, 1972 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 1240, rule No. 277, Appeal No. 27755 of 64 Q issued in the session of April 24, 2001 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 454, rule No. 77, Appeal No. 1826 of 11 Q issued in the session of November 3, 1941 And published in the first part of the set of rules, Book No. 5, Page No. 564, Rule No. 293.

([2666] Appeal No. 3436 of 31 Q issued in the session of June 25, 1962 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 13, page No. 556, rule No. 140.

([2667] Appeal No. 121 of 25 Q issued in the session of April 26, 1955 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 903, Rule No. 269.

([2668] Appeal No. 21602 of 84 Q issued in the session of March 22, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page No. 319, Rule No. 45.

Failure to allow the lawyer to present their defense defeats the purpose for which the legislator mandated their presence with the accused, resulting in the nullification of the trial proceedings.[2669]

When the accused entrusts their defense to a lawyer, the court must listen to the lawyer's arguments and facilitate their role. If the lawyer requests that the case be reserved for judgment with permission to submit a written memorandum, the court must either grant this request or notify the lawyer of its refusal so they can proceed with oral arguments. Failure to do so results in the court rendering a judgment without proper defense, violating fundamental principles of criminal proceedings and undermining the validity of the judgment.[2670]

However, if the accused's appointed lawyer fails to appear and the court appoints another lawyer to argue the case, this does not constitute a procedural violation or infringe on the accused's right to defense, provided the accused does not object to this measure or explicitly request a postponement until their appointed lawyer can attend.[2671]

If the accused attends the trial and personally defends themselves without mentioning that they have a lawyer, even if a lawyer is present in the courtroom but unaware that the case was being heard, this does not constitute a breach of the right to defense.[2672]

It is not permissible to appeal a court's judgment on the grounds that the convicted person's lawyer withdrew from the session due to a strike. The court—authorized by law to resolve disputes—is obligated to proceed without delay. Its primary duty in such circumstances is to allow the accused to present their defense independently. The court's refusal to grant the accused an opportunity to appoint a replacement lawyer does not constitute a breach of their right to defense.[2673]

18-1-4 Ensuring that there is no conflict between the accused when defending them

The general principle is that the law does not prohibit a single lawyer or a single defense team from representing multiple defendants in the same criminal case, provided that the circumstances of the case do not give rise to a genuine conflict of interest between their defenses. A genuine conflict arises when the conviction of one defendant necessarily leads to the acquittal of another. The determination of such a conflict requiring separate legal representation for each defendant is based on the actual facts and circumstances, not on hypothetical defenses that each might have raised but did not. Therefore, as long as the interests of the defendants in their defense are not genuinely in conflict, there is no requirement for separate representation.[2674]

([2669] Appeal No. 19888 of 72 Q issued in the session of November 15, 2009 and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, Page No. 436, Rule No. 59.

([2670] Appeal No. 1139 of 37 Q issued in the session of October 9, 1967 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 18, Page No. 943, Rule No. 190.

([2671] Appeal No. 3672 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 8, 1989 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 893, rule No. 148.

([2672] Appeal No. 1508 of 14 Q issued in the session of October 16, 1944 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, sixth year, page No. 516, rule No. 376.

([2673] Appeal No. 342 of 46 Q issued in the session of January 17, 1929 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, first year, page No. 142, rule No. 116.

([2674]) Appeal No. 2189 of 84 Q issued in the session of November 1, 2014 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 775, Rule No. 99, Appeal No. 11598 of 79 Q issued in the session of September 18, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15465 of 72 Q issued in the session of October 19, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3506 of 78 Q issued in the session of December 17, 2008 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 59, page No. 557, Rule No. 99, Appeal No. 9407 of 69 Q issued in the session of October 8, 2007 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 58, page No. 585, Rule No. 113, Appeal No. 30419 of 70 Q issued in the session of July 2, 2009 2006, Appeal No. 20669 of 70 Q issued in the session of

The court must ensure there is no conflict of interest among defendants when a single lawyer or defense team represents them. If a case involves multiple defendants and their interests conflict—such that the defense of one requires incriminating another—each defendant must have their own lawyer. A single lawyer representing all of them in such a scenario constitutes a violation of their right to an adequate defense.[2675]

18-1-5 The lawyer's ability to defend

The lawyer must be capable of defending, and whether they are prepared or unprepared to defend the accused is a matter left to their discretion, guided by their conscience, professional judgment, and the traditions of their profession;[2676]

While the law requires that every accused in a felony case be represented by a lawyer before the criminal court, it does not prescribe specific defense strategies. Instead, it entrusts the lawyer—relying on the integrity of their profession and confidence in achieving its goals—with the freedom to conduct the defense in a manner that satisfies their conscience and legal

---

March 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 45274 of 74 Q issued in the session of April 20, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18699 of 74 Q issued in the session of November 18, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8726 of 65 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1776 of 65 Q issued in the session of June 14, 2004 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, Page No. 596, Rule No. 84, Appeal No. 38328 of 73 Q issued in the session of April 1, 2004 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, Page No. 287, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 27397 of 64 Q issued in the session of October 11, 2003 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 952, rule No. 126, Appeal No. 5233 of 68 Q issued in the session of December 12, 2000 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 51, page No. 814, rule No. 162, Appeal No. 24751 of 67 Q issued in the session of February 7, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14606 of 66 Q issued in the session of July 20, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 895, rule No. 116, Appeal No. 9228 of 64 Q issued in the session of April 7, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 466, rule No. 66, Appeal No. 2817 of 64 Q issued in the session of March 3, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 289, rule No. 43, Appeal No. 21258 of 62 Q issued in the session of October 11, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 855, rule No. 133, Appeal No. 2510 of 61 Q issued in the session of December 3, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 43, page No. 1110, rule No. 173, Appeal No. 86 of 60 Q issued in the session of January 21, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, page No. 147, rule No. 17, Appeal No. 15049 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 20, 1990 and published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 397, rule No. 64, appeal No. 5946 for year 56 Q issued in the session of January 14, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 92, rule No. 12, appeal No. 4106 for year 56 Q issued in the session of December 4, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 992, rule No. 190, appeal No. 3830 for year 56 Q issued in the session of November 16, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 888, rule No. 171, appeal No. 884 for year 55 Q issued in the session of May 9, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 631, rule No. 112, appeal No. 5801 For the year 53 Q issued in the session of February 28, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 205, rule No. 42, appeal No. 2107 for the year 51 Q issued in the session of March 9, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page No. 305, rule No. 63, appeal No. 1068 for the year 49 Q issued in the session of February 24, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 262, rule No. 52, appeal No. 1210 for the year 49 Q issued in the session of January 31, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 148, rule No. 29, appeal No. 1521 for the year 48 Q issued in the session of January 8, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 30 Page No. 24 Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 1384 of 41 Q issued in the session of January 9, 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 23 Page No. 30 Rule No. 9, Appeal No. 678 of 41 Q issued in the session of December 19, 1971 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 22 Page No. 767 Rule No. 184, Appeal No. 1001 of 41 Q issued in the session of December 6, 1971 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 22 Page No. 719 Rule No. 175, Appeal No. 674 of 39 Q issued in the session of May 19, 1969 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 20 Page No. 758 Rule No. 153.

([2675] Appeal No. 2046 of year 37 Q issued in the session of February 5, 1968 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 19, page No. 154, rule No. 27.

([2676]) Appeal No. 9886 of 65 Q issued in the session of December 2, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 1324, rule No. 202, Appeal No. 22443 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 7, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 330, rule No. 54, Appeal No. 19721 of 86 Q issued in the session of December 28, 2016 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, page No. 961, rule No. 120, Appeal No. 3672 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 8, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 893, rule No. 148.

expertise. Accordingly, if a lawyer appears on behalf of the accused and presents what they believe constitutes an adequate defense, this is sufficient to fulfill the law's purpose, regardless of the content of that defense. For instance, if the lawyer concludes that the charges against the accused are substantiated by their confession or other evidence, they may base their defense on acknowledging the accuracy of the accusation while focusing on seeking leniency. They may even defer entirely to the court's judgment in the matter[2677]

The lawyer may choose to join forces with another lawyer representing the accused.[2678]

He is not obligated to adopt a specific plan in defense, but rather he may arrange his defense according to what he sees as being in the interest of the accused;)[2679]

They are not obligated to adopt a specific strategy but have the discretion to structure their defense according to what they believe serves the accused's best interest. The requirement to have a lawyer represent every accused in a felony case is intended to ensure a genuine, not merely a formal, defense. If the defense provided by the court-appointed lawyer is insufficient to achieve this purpose, it renders the trial proceedings and the verdict invalid.[2680]

If the court-appointed lawyer's defense is limited to asserting that the accused was not alone at the scene of the crime, suggesting that someone else may have committed the act, and requesting acquittal primarily while secondarily pleading for maximum leniency, this does not fulfill the intended purpose of requiring a lawyer's presence. Such a defense falls short of the intended objective and undermines the rationale behind this requirement. Consequently, the trial proceedings become invalid, affecting the verdict and necessitating its annulment to allow the accused the opportunity to present a comprehensive, genuine defense before the judiciary.[2681]

Similarly, if the court appoints a lawyer who limits their defense to requesting leniency based on the accused's youth, lack of criminal record, or financial need due to their military service, this does not fulfill the requirement of a genuine defense. Such proceedings are deemed invalid, and the judgment is affected accordingly.[2682]

However, in cases of misdemeanors where the law does not mandate the presence of a lawyer, the accused may either defend themselves or appoint a lawyer of their choosing. In such cases, it is up to the accused—not the court—to evaluate whether the lawyer's defense aligns with their interests. Since lawyers are not bound by specific methods in their defense, but rather act

---

([2677] Appeal No. 29653 of year 67 Q issued in the session of March 10, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 388, rule No. 53

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The appellant's criticism of the conduct of his defense attorney - when he asked the court to treat him with mercy without asking the court to acquit him - is not a valid ground for objection to the ruling convicting him] Appeal No. 1355 of year 38 Q issued in the session of November 25, 1968 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 19, page No. 1008, rule No. 205, Appeal No. 116 of year 9 Q issued in the session of January 23, 1939 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, fourth year, page No. 446, rule No. 341.

([2678] The Court of Cassation ruled that: [If the lawyer is content to join his colleague, believing that the court is convinced of the innocence of their client, and then the court sentences the client to punishment, then this lawyer shall not be harmed later by the failure to fully defend the accused] Appeal No. 862 of the 5th year of Q issued in the session of April 1, 1935 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, third year, page No. 456, rule No. 354.

([2679] Appeal No. 860 of the 5th year of the Q issued in the session of April 1, 1935 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, the third year, page No. 455, rule No. 353.

([2680]) Appeal No. 6627 of 72 Q issued in the session of October 20, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 982, rule No. 164, Appeal No. 86 of 66 Q issued in the session of March 5, 1997 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 285, rule No. 41, Appeal No. 3722 of 58 Q issued in the session of October 20, 1988 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 938, rule No. 141.

([2681] Appeal No. 474 of 60 Q issued in the session of May 7, 1991 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 42, page No. 743, rule No. 106.

([2682] Appeal No. 22437 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 8, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 355, rule No. 57.

according to their conscience and judgment, the accused cannot challenge the verdict based on the lawyer's poor handling of the defense.[2683]

18-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

Every individual accused of committing a criminal act has the right to defend themselves personally or through a lawyer. They have the right to receive assistance from a lawyer of their choosing or a competent lawyer appointed to assist them in the interest of justice without charge if they are unable to afford the fees. Additionally, they have the right to communicate with their lawyer in a confidential setting.

18-2-1 The Right of the Accused to Defend Themselves

Every individual accused of committing a criminal act has the right to defend themselves against the charges brought against them.[2684]

This right to defense may be exercised either personally by the accused or with the assistance of a lawyer, although the accused may not always have complete freedom to choose between the two options.[2685]

All individuals charged with a criminal offense must be informed of their right to have a lawyer represent them.[2686]

This notification must be given well in advance of the trial to allow adequate time and resources for the preparation of the defense.

The decision to waive the right to legal representation, including during interrogation, must be made unequivocally and accompanied by sufficient safeguards.[2687]

An accused person who decides not to represent themselves has the right to be represented by a lawyer. Choosing to have a lawyer does not exclude the accused from participating in their own defense.[2688] he accused and their lawyer must have the right to attend the trial, and an oral hearing must be held. Furthermore, the principle of equality of arms between the defense and the prosecution must be upheld, ensuring the defense has the right to present their case, summon witnesses, and cross-examine them.

The European Court of Human Rights has emphasized that if the accused is detained awaiting trial, the conditions of detention, including those within the courtroom, must not impede the preparation of their defense.[2689]

([2683] Appeal No. 1174 of 19 Q issued in the session of October 18, 1949 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 1, page No. 10, rule No. 4.

([2684]) Article 11(1) of the Universal Declaration, Article 14(3)(d) of the International Covenant, Article 40/2(b)(2) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18(3)(d) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 7(1)(c) of the African Charter, Article 8(2)(j) of the American Convention, Article 16(3) of the African Charter, Article 6(3)(c) of the European Convention, Section N(2)(a) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Principle 5 of the Principles on Persons Deprived of Liberty in the Americas, Article 67(1)(d) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 20/4/d of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

([2685]) See, for example, Maysett v. Russia (63378)/00, European Court §65 (2009).

([2686]) Guideline 5 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Guideline 43§ 3 of the Principles on Legal Aid, Section N(2)(b) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67(1)(d) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 21(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia; see Article 14(3)(d) of the International Covenant.

([2687]) See Principle 29§ 8 of the Principles on Legal Assistance, and Rule 112(1)(b) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Court.

([2688]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §37.

([2689]) See Moiseyev v. Russia (62936)/00, European Court (2008) §222.

Similarly, the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights has concluded that restricting the opportunities for defense constitutes a violation of the right to defense as guaranteed under Article 7(c) of the African Charter.[2690]

Trials in which the accused and their defense counsel are not allowed to attend or cross-examine witnesses violate the accused's right to a public trial and to defend themselves, whether personally or through legal representation.[2691]

18-2-2 Permissible Restrictions on the Right of the Accused to Self-Representation

The right of an individual to represent themselves during trial or at the appellate stages is not absolute. It may be subject to restrictions when the court determines, in a specific case, that the interests of justice require the appointment of legal counsel for the accused contrary to their wishes. For example, if the accused is facing particularly serious charges, the court may determine that they are unable to act in a manner consistent with their own best interests. This also applies to cases where the accused persistently and substantially disrupts the proper conduct of the trial proceedings, continuing to interrupt despite warnings from the court, or when it is necessary to protect a vulnerable witness from suffering or intimidation if the accused conducts the cross-examination personally.[2692]

However, any restrictions on the accused's right to self-representation must not exceed what is necessary to preserve the interests of justice. Laws must not, under any circumstances, categorically prohibit an accused person from representing themselves in criminal proceedings.[2693]

18-2-3 The Right of the Accused to Be Represented by a Lawyer

The assistance of a lawyer is a primary means of ensuring the protection of the human rights guaranteed to individuals accused of criminal acts, particularly their right to a fair trial. Often, the ability of individuals to receive legal assistance determines whether they can meaningfully participate in legal proceedings.[2694]

Every individual accused of a criminal act has the right to legal assistance to protect and defend their rights.[2695]

([2690]) Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania (54/91, 61/91, 98/93, 164/97 to 196/97 and 210/98), African Commission, Annual Report §96 (2000) 13.

([2691]) Human Rights Committee, Guerra de la Espriella v. Colombia, UN Doc. 3/ §9 (2010) CCPR/C/98/D/1623/2007, Becerra Barney v. Colombia, UN Doc. 2/ §7 (2006). CCPR/C/87/D/1298/2004, Rodríguez Orejuela v. Colombia, 1999/3/ §7 (2002) UN Doc. CCPR/C/75/D/848; see General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §23.

([2692]) Human Rights Committee, General Comment §32, §37, Correa de Matos v. Portugal, 2002/5/7-4/ §7 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/1123/D/848; Prosecutor v. Vojislav Šešelj (IT-03-67-AR73. 3) Decision of the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia on the Appeal against the Trial Chamber's Decision to Appoint Counsel for the Defence (20 October 2006).

([2693]) () Human Rights Committee, General Comment §37, 32, Correa de Matos v. Portugal, 2002/5/7-4/ §7 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/1123/D/848, Hill v. Spain, 1993/2/ §14 (1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/59/D/526; Milosevic v. Prosecutor (IT-02-54-AR73. 7), Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (1 November 2004) §11-§21.

([2694]) See section N(2)(a) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §10.

([2695]) Article 14(3)(d) of the International Covenant, Article 40(2)(b)(xxii) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18(3)(d) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 7(1)(c) of the African Charter, Article 8(2)(d) and (e) of the American Convention, Article 16(3) and (4) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(3)(c) of the European Convention, Principle 1 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Rules 7/1 and 15/1 of the Beijing Rules, Section N(2)(a) and (c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67(1)(d) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 21(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

This right applies at all stages of criminal proceedings, including during the initial investigation, before and during the trial, and at all stages of appeal. In some cases, effective legal assistance may also be necessary to pursue constitutional remedies. For instance, the Human Rights Committee found a violation of the right to legal assistance when a trial judge allowed two prosecution witnesses to testify at a preliminary hearing without the defense lawyer present.[2696]

The Committee also expressed concerns about decisions to prohibit legal representation in customary courts in Botswana.[2697]

Similarly, the African Commission concluded that the right to defense was violated when a court refused to grant an adjournment or appoint a replacement lawyer after the defense counsel failed to attend the final hearing in a death penalty case, submitting a written argument instead.[2698]

The right to be represented by a lawyer applies even if the accused chooses not to attend the trial or is absent for other reasons.[2699]

This right includes the ability of the accused to meet and communicate with their lawyer in confidentiality, sufficient time and facilities to prepare their defense, and the freedom to appoint a lawyer of their choice or be provided with competent counsel.

First: The Right of the Accused to Choose Their Lawyer

Given the importance of trust and confidence between the accused and their lawyer, the accused generally has the right to choose their legal representative.[2700]

Principles related to fair trials in Africa explicitly state that judicial bodies must not appoint a lawyer for the accused if they already have a competent and qualified lawyer of their choice.[2701]

However, this right has been subject to violations, particularly in cases involving political crimes or terrorism-related offenses.[2702] found a violation of the rights of a civilian and five military personnel when they were denied their choice of legal representation and instead assigned military lawyers with no relevant experience to represent them before a special military tribunal.[2703]

However, the right of the accused to be represented by a lawyer of their choice is not absolute.

([2696]) Human Rights Committee, Brown v. Jamaica, / UN Doc. CCPR 6/ §6 (1999) C/65/D/775/1997; see Hendricks v. Guyana, UN Doc. 4/ §6 (2002) CCPR/C/75/D/838/1998.

([2697]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Botswana, UN Doc. §21 (2008) CCPR/C/BWA/CO/1.

([2698]) Lawyers Without Borders (on behalf of Bwambamye) v. Burundi (231)/99), African Commission, 14th Annual Report (31- § § 29 (2001); see Robinson v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, 1987/3/ § 10 (1989) UN Doc. CCPR/C/35/D/223..

([2699]) European Court: Poitrimole v. France (14032)/88, (1993) §34-§39.

([2700]) See article 14(3)(d) of the International Covenant, article 18(3)(d) of the Migrant Workers Convention, article 7(1)(c) of the African Charter, article 8(2)(d) of the American Convention, article 16(3) of the Arab Charter, article 6(3)(c) of the European Convention, principle 1 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, section N(2)(a) and (d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, article 67(1)(d) of the Rome Statute, article 20(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, and article 21(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for the Former Yugoslavia.

([2701] Section N(2)(d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2702]) See, for example, Human Rights Committee: Estrella v. Uruguay (74) / 1980), 6/ § § 8 (1983) UN Doc. CCPR/C/Op/2 and 10, Burgos v. Uruguay 5/§§11 (1981) UN Doc. A/36/40, (1979/52) and 13; Acosta v. Uruguay 2/§ § 13 (1984) UN Doc. Supp No. 40 A/39/40 (1981/110) and 15; Joint Report of the United Nations Mechanisms on the Detainees at Guantanamo Bay, UN Doc. §35 (2006) E/CN. 4/2006/120.

([2703]) Civil Liberties Organization, Legal Centre for Defence and Legal Aid Project v. Nigeria (218/98), African Commission (§28-§31 (2001); Commission on Human Rights Decision 1998/§2, 64(b); Ghazi Suleiman Legal Office v. Sudan (222/98 and 229/99), African Commission §58-§60 (2003); Amnesty International and Others v. Sudan (48/90, 50/91, 52/91 and 89/93), African Commission, Annual Report 13 §64-§66 (1999).

There must also be a logical and objective basis for imposing restrictions on the choice of lawyers, which must remain open to challenge before a court.[2704]

For example, the right to choose a lawyer may be restricted if the chosen lawyer fails to adhere to professional ethics, is themselves subject to criminal charges,[2705] or if he refuses to comply with the court procedures)[2706]

Such restrictions must align with the prohibition of any undue association between the lawyer and the client or their case due to the lawyer's professional obligations.[2707]

The accused does not have an unfettered right to choose their lawyer, especially if the state is covering the costs. In such cases, the European Court has noted that courts must consider the preferences of the accused when appointing a lawyer but may disregard these preferences if there are compelling reasons to believe it would not serve the interests of justice.[2708]

In death penalty cases, the Human Rights Committee emphasized that courts should prioritize appointing a lawyer chosen by the accused, even at the appellate stage, to ensure adequate and effective legal assistance.[2709]

Similarly, the African Commission highlighted the importance of allowing individuals to choose their representatives from a list of independent lawyers, free from government directives, particularly in death penalty cases. The absence of trust and confidence in the lawyer-client relationship can undermine the accused's ability to provide complete instructions to their lawyer[2710]

Second: The Right of the Accused to Have a Lawyer Appointed and Receive Free Legal Aid

If the accused has not appointed a lawyer of their choice, a lawyer may be appointed for them.[2711]

The American Convention, in Article 8(e), considered the right to be an established right if the accused chooses not to defend himself in person, or does not retain an attorney within the period prescribed by law for that purpose.

However, other international standards guarantee the right to be appointed by a lawyer when the interests of justice so require.

The decision whether the interests of justice require the appointment of a lawyer depends primarily on the seriousness of the crime, the serious risks that may arise from the absence of a lawyer, the likely punishment for the accused, and the complexity of the case or proceedings.[2712]

([2704]) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, UN Doc. 41- § §38 (2008) A/63/223.
([2705]) Enslin, Baader and Raspe v. Federal Republic of Germany (7572/76, 7586/76 and 7587/76), European Commission (decision) 8 July 1978, in Law §20.
([2706]) See Guideline 70 of the ICC Guidelines.
([2707]) Principle 18 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, and Section I(g) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.
([2708]) European Court: Croissant v. Germany (13611)/88), (1992) §29, Lagerblom v. Sweden (26891)/95), §54 (2003, Mazet v. Russia (63378)/00), §66 (2005); see Prosecutor v. Blagojevic and Jokić (IT-02-60-A), ICTY Appeals Chamber (9 May 2007) §17.
([2709]) See Pinto v. Trinidad and Tobago, Human Rights Committee, . 5/ §12 (1990) UN CCPR/C/39/D/232/1987.
([2710]) Civil Liberties Organization, Legal Advocacy Centre and Legal Aid Project v. Nigeria (218)/98, §28-§31 (2001).
([2711]) Article 14(3)(d) of the International Covenant, Article 18(3)(d) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Principle 6 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Article 8(2)(e) of the American Convention, Article 16(4) of the Arab Charter, and Section H(a) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa; see Article 6(3)(c) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, and Article 21(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Yugoslavia.
([2712]) Principle 3 of the Principles on Legal Aid, and Section H(b)(i) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 38; European Court: Taleb v. Greece (2494)/94), (53- § 52 (1998), Quaranta v. Switzerland § 32- § 38 (1991), (87/12744).

It may also be based on the defendant's particular vulnerabilities resulting from age, health condition, disability, or economic or social difficulties.[2713]

The principle of equality of legal opportunity between the defense and the prosecution should also be taken into account.

The interests of justice require that a lawyer be appointed at all stages of the case to defend persons accused of crimes punishable by death, if the accused has not chosen and appointed a lawyer to defend them.[2714]

In accordance with the principles of legal aid, the State should ensure the right to legal assistance for any person arrested, detained, suspected or charged with a criminal offence punishable by imprisonment, at all stages of the criminal justice process. Furthermore, legal assistance should be provided, regardless of the accused's personal capacity, if the interests of justice so require, given the urgency or complexity of the case, for example.[2715]

The European Court also concluded that where a person is deprived of his liberty, the interests of justice require, in principle, that he be provided with legal representation.[2716]

International bodies have expressed concern about systems that provide free legal aid only in death penalty cases, and about systems that provide it only if the potential penalty exceeds five years' imprisonment.[2717]

The Human Rights Committee has concluded that States should provide legal assistance in the pursuit of constitutional claims, including following conviction, if the interests of justice so require. Such proceedings do not result in a decision on criminal charges but rather issue rulings on constitutional issues, including issues relating to the fairness of the trial.[2718]

Under some international standards, the state must provide free legal advice if two conditions are met. The first is that the interests of justice require the appointment of a lawyer. The second is that the accused lacks sufficient ability to pay the lawyer.[2719]

While other criteria differ in their view of this.

The Arab Charter guarantees the right to receive free assistance from a lawyer if the accused is unable to defend himself, or if the interests of justice so require.[2720]

While the American Convention requires that a state pay the appointed attorney only if national law requires it,[2721]

([2713]) See Principle 10 of the Principles on Legal Aid.

([2714]) Principle 20 § 3 of the Principles on Legal Aid, and Section H(c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Human Rights Committee: General Comment § 38, 32, Alibueva v. Tajikistan, 2001/4/ § 6 (2005) UN CCPR/C/85/D/985, Robinson v. Jamaica, 1987/4/10-2/ § 10 (1989) UN CCPR/C/35/D/223, Aliyev v. Ukraine, 1997/3/7-2/ § 7 (2003) UN CCPR/C/78/D/781, Lavende v. Trinidad and Tobago, 1993/8/ § 5 (1997) UN CCPR/C/61/D/544.

([2715]) Principle 20-21 of the Principles on Legal Aid.

([2716]) European Court: Brizek v. Croatia (48185)/07), § 29 (2009, Quaranta v. Switzerland (12744)/87), § 32-§ 38 (1991); see R. D. v Poland 29692 (/96 and 34612/97), European Court §49-§52 (2001); see also in connection with the appeal proceedings: Maxwell v United Kingdom (18949)/91), European Court §40-§41 (1994).

([2717]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Botswana, UN Doc §20 (2008) CCPR/C/BWA/CO/1; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Turkey, §11 (2010) UN Doc. CAT/C/TUR/CO/3 (b)..

([2718]) Human Rights Committee: Kennedy v. Trinidad and Tobago, 10/ §7 (2002) UN CCPR/C/74/D/845/1998, Kelly v. Jamaica, . 7/ §9 (1996) UN CCPR/C/57/D/537/1993.

([2719]) Article 14(3)(d) of the International Covenant, Article 13(d) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 6(3)(c) of the European Convention, Principle 6 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Section H(a) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67(1)(d) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(j) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 21(4)(d) of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal, and Rule 45 of the Rules of the Yugoslavia Tribunal.

([2720] Article 16 (4) of the Arab Charter.

([2721]) Article 8(2)(e) of the American Convention.

The Inter-American Court has made it clear that states must provide free legal advice if this is necessary to ensure a fair trial.[2722]

The principles of legal aid stipulate that legal aid should be granted to those whose financial means pass the means test, but who are unable to pay or to engage a lawyer whose assistance is required in the interests of justice and who could otherwise be assigned.[2723]

States must allocate sufficient resources to ensure that legal aid is adequately and effectively available throughout the country to those charged with criminal offences.[2724]

This is of utmost importance to ensure the right to a fair trial without discrimination, the right to equality before the courts, the right of those accused to defend themselves, and the principle of equal legal opportunity.

If the financial capabilities test is applied:)[2725]

Initial legal aid should be provided to individuals in need of it as soon as possible, pending the results of the means test;

Individual income, not family income, should be taken as the basis for assessment if there is conflict between family members or they do not have equal opportunities to benefit from family income;

A person who is denied legal aid based on a means examination should have the right to appeal the decision not to grant him aid.

Laws that require the accused to repay the costs of legal assistance if he loses the case are not consistent with the right to a defense lawyer.[2726]

The courts must ensure that the accused and his appointed counsel have adequate time and facilities to prepare their defense.[2727]

The right to legal assistance for defendants who lack sufficient financial resources, guaranteed under Article 13 of the Arab Charter, expressly applies at all times, including during states of emergency.[2728]

18-2-4 The Accused's Right to Contact their Lawyer in Confidentiality

The right to contact an attorney is an integral part of the right to a defense attorney. It is explicitly included in international standards that guarantee the right to adequate time and facilities to prepare a defense, or the right of accused persons to defend themselves.[2729]

([2722]) Inter-American Court, Advisory Opinion 90/1990 OC-11 28§ 25§.
([2723]) Guideline 41 § 1 (a) of the Principles on Legal Aid.
([2724]) Principle 3 of the Guidelines on the Role of Lawyers; Principles 15§ 2 and 10 and Guidelines 11-13 and 15-16 of the Principles on Legal Aid, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 10-§ 7; Concluding Observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: United States of America, § 22 (2008) UN Doc. CERD/C/USA/CO/6; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Argentina, §20 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/ARG/CO/4; Tanzania, §21 (2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/TZA/CO/4; see Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc. 289/2011. A/66) §87 and §99.
([2725]) Guideline 41 § 1 (f) and (d) of the Principles on Legal Aid.
([2726]) See the concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Latvia, UN Doc §6 (2004) 3/CAT/C/CR/31 (h).
([2727]) Among other standards, Principle 7 and Guideline 44§ 4(g), 45§ 5(b) and 12§ 62 of the Principles on Legal Aid, Chan v. Guyana, Human Rights Committee, 2000/UN CCPR/C/85/D/913 3/6-2/ §6 (2006); Sakhnovsky v. Russia (21272)/03), Grand Chamber of the European Court §§97-§107 (2010).
([2728]) Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and this right is guaranteed under international humanitarian law, which applies during armed conflicts.
([2729]) Article 14(3)(b) of the International Covenant, Article 18(3)(b) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 8(2)(d) of the American Convention, Article 16(3) of the Arab Charter, Section N(3)(e) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article

This right remains included in other criteria.

Communications between the accused and his lawyer are confidential within the framework of their professional relationship.[2730]

The authorities must ensure that such communications remain confidential.

The right to communicate with a lawyer, under the International Covenant and the European Convention, includes the right to confidentiality of communications, although this is not expressly provided for in either treaty. The European Court considers the right of the accused to communicate with his lawyer in confidentiality as part of the basic requirements of a fair trial.[2731]

The authorities must provide the detained accused with adequate time and facilities to meet and communicate confidentially with his lawyer, including in person, by telephone and by letter. These meetings or phone calls may take place within sight of others but out of their hearing.[2732]

Detained persons should have the right to keep in their possession documents relating to their case.[2733]

The Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers also stressed that lawyers' files and documents should be protected from seizure or inspection, and that no telephone calls or other electronic communications should be intercepted.[2734]

The European Court expressed its conviction that the routine examination of correspondence between a detained person and his lawyer constituted a violation of the principle of equality of arms and a serious infringement of the rights of the defense. Correspondence with lawyers, whatever its purpose, is always privileged, she said, and that: "The reading of communications received by a prisoner from his lawyer or sent to him by him is not permitted except in exceptional circumstances, when the authorities have reasonable grounds to believe that this privilege has been abused and that the content of the communication constitutes a danger to the security of the prison or to the safety of others, or is of a criminal nature."[2735]

The UN Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism has expressed concern about violations of the right to confidential communication between individuals accused of 67(1)(b) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(b) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, and Article 21(4)(b) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for the Former Yugoslavia.

---

([2730]) Article 8(2)(d) of the American Convention, Article 16(3) of the Arab Charter, Principles 8 and 22 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Principles 7 and 12 and Guidelines 3 §43(d), 44§4(g), 45§5(b) and 10 §53(d) of the Principles on Legal Aid, Rule 93 of the Standard Minimum Rules, Principle 18 of the Body of Principles, Section N(3)(X(1-2) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Rule 23/4 of the European Prison Rules, and Article 67(1)(b) of the Rome Statute; see Article 14(3)(b) of the ICCPR, and Article 6(3)(c) of the European Convention.

([2731]) Human Rights Committee, General Comment §34, 32, Gridin v. Russian Federation, 1997/5/ §8 (2000) UN CCPR/C/69/D/770, S v. Switzerland (12629)/87 and 13965/88), European Court §48 (1991).

([2732]) Principle 8 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Rule 93 of the Minimum Rules, Principle 18(4) of the Body of Principles, and Section N(3)(e) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa; see Principle 7 and Guideline 4 §44(g), §45(5)(b) and §62(12) of the Principles on Legal Aid

See the second general report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, CPT/Inf/(92)3, §38; the 21st general report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, CPT/Inf2011, §23; Mudarca v. Moldova (14437)/05), European Court (99- §§84 (2007).

Öcalan v. Türkiye (46221)/99, Grand Chamber of the European Court §131-§148 (2005); Arutyutyan v. Uzbekistan, Human Rights Committee, . 3/ §6 (2004) UN CCPR/C/80/D/917/2000.

([2733]) See Principle 28§ 7 of the Principles on Legal Aid.

([2734]) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, §110 (2009) UN Doc. A/64/181; Zagaria v. Italy (28295)/00), European Court §§27-§36 (2007).

([2735]) Moiseev v. Russia (62936)/00), European Court (2008) §210.

terrorism-related offences and their lawyers, both during pre-trial detention and during the course of the trial.[2736]

He pointed out that "a decision to prosecute someone for a terrorist offence should never in itself have the effect of excluding or restricting confidential communications with counsel. If there are grounds for imposing restrictions in a particular case, communications between the lawyer and his client should be within sight but not within hearing of the authorities. "[2737]

The Inter-American Court concluded that the fact that a person accused of terrorism was unable to communicate freely and confidentially with his lawyer constituted a violation of Article 8(d) of the American Convention.[2738]

The European Court has ruled that in exceptional circumstances the confidentiality of communications may be lawfully restricted. But she said any such restrictions imposed must be prescribed by law and issued by court order. They must be proportionate to a legitimate purpose – such as preventing a serious crime involving death or injury – and be accompanied by adequate safeguards against misuse. The Council of Europe's non-treaty standards, including the European Prison Rules, are based on this jurisprudence.[2739]

The European Court has analysed the restrictions on the confidentiality of communication with a lawyer in the light of the right to private life. Such restrictions must be exceptional, prescribed by law, necessary and proportionate to achieve a legitimate aim, and accompanied by adequate safeguards to prevent abuse. It concluded that a review of written correspondence between the accused and his lawyer was justified on the basis of the requirements of protecting national security and preventing crime. I found that the guarantee was sufficient to prevent misuse when the messages were reviewed by a judge who had no connection with the proceedings of the criminal case and was duty bound not to disclose the information he had obtained.[2740]

A few years later, in another case, the European Court concluded that the fact that Abdullah Öcalan was not able to consult his lawyers in private may have prevented him from asking them questions of potential importance in relation to the preparation of his defense. It held that the restriction of visits by his lawyers to two one-hour meetings each week, and the restriction of his lawyers' access to his volumes of case files, constituted, given the complexity of the case, a violation of his right to a fair trial.[2741]

The right to confidentiality of communication between a person and his lawyer does not stop when a final judgment is issued in the case.[2742]

The Human Rights Committee has expressed concern that meetings between individuals sentenced to death and their lawyers to discuss applications for retrial in Japan remain subject to monitoring by prison staff until a court decides to retry the case.[2743]

Communications between a detained or imprisoned person and his lawyer shall not be accepted as evidence in the case unless they are associated with an ongoing or planned crime.[2744]

([2736]) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, Egypt. §36 (2009) UN Doc. A/HRC/13/37/Add. 2.
([2737]) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, §39 (2008) UN Doc. A/63/223.
([2738]) Cantoral-Benavides v. Peru, Inter-American Court (2000) §127-§128.
([2739]) Rule 23/5 of the European Prison Rules.
([2740]) Erdem v. Germany (46221)/99, Grand Chamber of the European Court §§133-§148 (2005).
([2741]) Öcalan v. Türkiye (46221)/99, Grand Chamber of the European Court §§133-§148 (2005).
([2742]) See Guideline 47 § 6 (a) of the Principles on Legal Aid.
([2743]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Japan, / UN Doc. CCPR/C. §17 (2010) JPN/CO/5.
([2744]) Principle 18(5) of the Body of Principles.

18-2-5 The right to be assisted by an experienced, specialized and competent lawyer

Defense lawyers, including assigned lawyers, shall exercise their profession freely and shall perform their duties diligently and per the law, recognized standards and professional ethics. They must explain to their clients their rights guaranteed by law and the duties imposed on them, as well as any matters related to the existing legal system that are unclear to them. They must assist their clients in every appropriate manner and take the necessary measures to protect their rights and interests, and to assist them in defending themselves before the courts.[2745]

In protecting the rights of their clients and promoting justice, lawyers must strive to uphold the banner of human rights recognized by national and international law.[2746]

The American Committee considered that the right to counsel is violated when lawyers fail to fulfill their duties to defend their clients.[2747]

When the authorities begin to appoint a lawyer to defend an accused, they must ensure that they choose a lawyer who is experienced and specialised in handling cases that are of the same nature as the crime committed.[2748]

The authorities have a special duty to ensure that the appointed lawyer represents his client effectively.[2749]

States are responsible if they fail to do what they are required to do when questions arise about the lawyer's ineffectiveness before the authorities and the court, or when ineffectiveness is apparent.[2750]

If it becomes apparent that the appointed attorney lacks effectiveness, the court, or other authority, must ensure that he is performing his duties properly, or replace him.[2751]

The European Court considered that a court in Portugal should have seen that a foreign national accused, who was facing charges of drug-related offences and his passport, was not effectively represented by a lawyer appointed to defend him when it received objections from him (and not from his lawyer) in his mother tongue (Spanish).[2752]

The Inter-American Court concluded that the State had violated the accused's right to legal representation in a case in which the lawyer it had appointed for the accused was absent during the accused's interrogation and during most of the accused's pre-trial testimony.[2753]

If the lawyer represents an accused at the appeal stage, effective assistance includes the lawyer advising the accused whether the lawyer intends to withdraw the appeal or argue that it is not justified.[2754]

([2745]) Principles 13 and 6 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Principle 12 of the Principles on Legal Aid, and Section I(1) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2746]) Principle 14 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, and Section (i(1) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2747]) Report on the human rights situation of the Miskito people of Nicaragua, Inter-American Commission, rev. 3(1983)‹doc. 10 ‹OEA/Ser. 1/V/11. 62 §19- §21 ‹at D)c(.

([2748]) Principle 6 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Principle 13 of the Principles on Legal Aid, and Section H(e)(2) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa; see Rule 22 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Court, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §38.

([2749]) Kelly v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR 10/ §5 (1991) C/41/D/253/1987; Chaparro Alvarez and Lapo Iñiguez v. Ecuador, Inter-American Court 159 § (2007).

([2750]) Daoud v. Portugal (22600)/93, European Court 38 § (1998).

([2751]) Artico v. Italy (6694)/74), European Court § 36 (1980); see General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 38.

([2752]) Daoud v. Portugal (22600)/93, European Court §34-§43 (1998).

([2753]) Chaparro Alvarez and Lapo Iniguez v. Ecuador, Inter-American Court §159 (2007).

The importance of effective legal representation in death penalty cases has also been repeatedly stressed by human rights bodies and courts.

18-2-6 Prohibition of harassment or intimidation of lawyers

Lawyers should be able to advise and represent people without restrictions, influence, pressure or improper interference from any party.[2755]

Lawyers should be immune from liability under criminal and civil law for oral or written statements made in good faith, whether in their legal briefs or in their pleadings before the courts. They should not suffer penalties for any work they do in accordance with their professional duties and recognized professional standards and ethics.[2756]

States have a positive obligation to protect lawyers who are threatened as a result of performing their duties.[2757]

The Human Rights Committee has found that article 14(d) is violated when courts or authorities obstruct appointed lawyers from carrying out their work effectively.[2758]

Governments must be careful not to equate the character of the lawyer with the character of his client or to hold him accountable for his case or for defending him.[2759]

The UN Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers has raised concerns that lawyers are often held responsible for their clients' cases, particularly when lawyers defend individuals in politically sensitive cases or in cases involving large-scale corruption, organized crime, terrorism or drug trafficking. Lawyers have been investigated or charged with supporting their clients' alleged criminal activities, or accused of defamation. Lawyers have also been brought to trial for raising allegations that their clients have been ill-treated, or for exposing shortcomings in the justice system.[2760]

Chapter Nineteen: The Right to Attend Trials and Appeal Hearings

19-1 Under Egyptian Law

The final investigation - conducted by the court - is characterized by the necessity of conducting it in the presence of the opponents. The basic principle is that the Public Prosecution must be present because it is considered an integral part of the formation of the court, and the trial

---

([2754]) Human Rights Committee: Kelly v. Jamaica, / UN CCPR 10/ §5 (1991) C/41/D/253/1987; Kelly v. Jamaica, / UN CCPR 5/9-4/ §9 (1996) C/57/D/537/1993, Suklal v. Trinidad and Tobago, . 10/ §4 (2001) UN CCPR/C/73/D/928/2000.

([2755]) Principle 16 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, Principles 16 § 2 and 12 of the Principles on Legal Aid, and Sections H(e)(3) and H(b) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, § 38.

([2756]) Principles 20 and 16(c) of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, and Sections I(b)(3) and (e) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Bagosora and Others v. The Prosecutor (ICTR-98-41-A), Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, Decision on the Application by Aloys Ntabakuzi for Orders against the Arrest and Investigation of the Head of the Defence Team Peter Lander by the Government of Rwanda (6 October 2010) §29-§30.

([2757]) Principle 17 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, and Section I(f) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers, UN Doc §68-§69 (2009) 181/A/64; PEN International, Constitutional Rights Project, Rights International on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr. and Civil Liberties Organization v. Nigeria (137/94, 139/94, 154/96 and 161/97), African Commission, Annual Report 12 §97-§101 (1998).

([2758]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §38.

([2759]) Principle 18 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, and Section I(g) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2760]) Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc (2009) 181/A/64 §64- §67.

sessions cannot be held without it. As for the accused, they must be enabled to attend the final investigation procedures, as is the case for the civil plaintiff and the person responsible for civil rights.

The presence of the accused is a condition for the validity of the trial procedures. Therefore, the unjustified exclusion of the accused from attending some of the trial procedures leads to its invalidity, invalidity related to public order.[2761]

If the accused is detained, the court has the right to compel them to attend, because this compulsion is a feature of restricting their freedom based on their pre-trial detention.

This principle stems from the fact that the judge may not base their ruling on procedures taken in the absence of the accused without giving them the opportunity to attend. Accordingly, if the prosecution submits reports or documents after the case has been reserved for judgment, the court may not rely on them in convicting, unless it first enables the accused to review them.

However, the decision issued to refer the case from one circuit to another circuit in the same court is something that the law does not require notification of absent opponents.[2762]

The second paragraph of Article 270 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates that: "The accused may not be removed from the session during the consideration of the case unless they cause a disturbance that requires this, in which case the procedures shall continue until they can be conducted in their presence." The court must inform them of the procedures that took place in their absence and enable them to review them. Therefore, the court may not close the door to pleading while the accused is removed from the session, as this procedure entails a waste of the duty to inform them of the procedures that took place in their absence, which prevents them from discussing them in the session.

19-1-1 The extent to which the accused may be absent from attendance and be represented by a lawyer

Every person accused of a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, which the law requires to be executed immediately after the issuance of the judgment, must appear in person. The first paragraph of Article 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure states that: "The person accused of a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, which the law requires to be executed immediately after the issuance of the judgment, must appear in person..."[2763]

([2761] Appeal No. 1999 of the 3rd year of the Q issued in the session of December 27, 1933 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, the third year, page No. 229, rule No. 177
The same applies if the accused was unable to attend because their name was included in the session's "roll" with a name other than their real name and they was called by this different name, Appeal No. 1897 of Year 37 Q issued in the session of December 25, 1967 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 18, Page No. 1298, Rule No. 277.
([2762] Appeal No. 1535 of 45 Q issued in the session of January 18, 1976 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 27, page No. 70, Rule No. 14.
([2763]) Article No. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 4307 of 81 Q issued in the session of January 9, 2013 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page No. 59, Rule No. 8, Appeal No. 26027 of 64 Q issued in the session of December 18, 2000, Appeal No. 29703 of 59 Q issued in the session of October 16, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 1035, Rule No. 147, Appeal No. 26730 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 2, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 295, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 19736 of 59 Q issued in the session of May 24, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 44 Page No. 538 Rule No. 77, Appeal No. 4340 of Year 56 Q issued in the session of February 10, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38 Page No. 242 Rule No. 36, Appeal No. 7120 of Year 53 Q issued in the session of March 7, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35 Page No. 254 Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 2088 of Year 53 Q issued in the session of January 22, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35 Page No. 85 Rule No. 17, Appeal No. 540 of Year 40 Q issued in the session of May 25, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21 Page No. 732 Rule No. 173.

The cases of mandatory imprisonment are those in which the court of first instance must include in its ruling the imprisonment being enforceable despite its appeal.[2764]

The accused must also attend the appeal trial sessions in person, because all sentences of imprisonment issued by a second-degree court are by nature immediately enforceable.[2765]

The Court of Cassation has settled that the presence of the accused in person in a misdemeanor in which imprisonment is permissible is necessary before the Court of Appeal in order for its ruling to be described as an in-person ruling, given that the principle is that all rulings issued by this court with imprisonment must be implemented immediately by their nature. Otherwise, the ruling would be in absentia if the accused did not appear in person but was represented by a representative. Therefore, despite the presence of a representative for the accused, the ruling would have been issued in reality - with respect to the convicted person - in absentia and could be challenged, even if the court described it as in-person, contrary to reality, since the criterion for describing the ruling as in-person or in absentia is the reality of the case, not what is stated in the operative part.[2766]

If the court makes a mistake and hears the lawyer's argument, all of its procedures will be invalid with a nullity related to public order, as it relates to one of the rules that regulate the presence of the accused or their representation in the session, and its ruling in this case will be in absentia, even if the court mistakenly described it as in the presence of the accused.[2767]

In other misdemeanors and violations, the accused may appoint a representative to represent them in their defense, without prejudice to the court's right to order their personal attendance.

Article No. 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure states that: "..." In other misdemeanors and violations, they may appoint a representative to present their defense, without prejudice to the court's right to order their personal attendance."

([2764]) Article No. 463 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 25889 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 17, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 43, page No. 1047, rule No. 160, Appeal No. 3654 of 57 Q issued in the session of March 1, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 446, rule No. 74, Appeal No. 494 of 58 Q issued in the session of February 22, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 310, rule No. 49, Appeal No. 5634 of 58 Q issued in the session of December 1, 1988 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 1201, rule No. 185.

([2765]) Appeal No. 19582 of 66 Q issued in the session of July 25, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18598 of 70 Q issued in the session of January 4, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 58, Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 10667 of 71 Q issued in the session of May 5, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 717, Rule No. 120, Appeal No. 1609 of 62 Q issued in the session of November 4, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 800, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 19736 of 59 Q issued in the session of May 24, 1993 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 538, Rule No. 77, Appeal No. 7961 of 58 Q issued in the session of May 31, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 786, rule No. 136, Appeal No. 5459 of 58 Q issued in the session of February 7, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 322, rule No. 52, Appeal No. 7779 of 59 Q issued in the session of January 18, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 177, rule No. 26, Appeal No. 1912 of 58 Q issued in the session of December 20, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1255, rule No. 202, Appeal No. 2825 of 55 Q issued in the session of December 25, 1986 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 1128, rule No. 215, appeal No. 663 of year 55 Q issued in the session of April 8, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 551, rule No. 94, appeal No. 2088 of year 53 Q issued in the session of January 22, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 85, rule No. 17.

([2766]) Appeal No. 10368 of 85 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5226 of 4 Q issued in the session of September 16, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 617, Rule No. 77, Appeal No. 4 of 2010 Q issued in the session of March 19, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page No. 27, Rule No. 5, Appeal No. 9547 of 66 Q issued in the session of February 7, 2006, Appeal No. 24829 of 71 Q issued in the session of January 8, 2006, Appeal No. 21540 of 65 Q issued in the session of April 22, 2004 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page No. 442, Rule No. 59.

([2767] Appeal No. 20677 of 69 Q issued in the session of May 18, 2005 and published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page No. 330, Rule No. 50.

In this case, the ruling is considered to be in absentia as long as the accused's lawyer is present in accordance with the law. This is not prevented by the court ordering the accused to appear in person and they refuses to comply with the court order, because the mere presence of the lawyer in accordance with the law is equivalent to the presence of the accused themself from a legal standpoint.[2768]

If the crime attributed to the accused is punishable by imprisonment or a fine, and a fine is initially imposed, and the accused alone appeals this ruling and the prosecution does not appeal it, then their attorney may represent the accused before the appellate court, which has no choice but to uphold the fine ruling or amend it in the interest of the accused, as it cannot rule imprisonment.[2769]

When a lawsuit is filed against them by way of direct prosecution, the accused may appoint a representative at any stage of the lawsuit to present their defense.[2770]

If the lawsuit is filed against the accused by way of direct prosecution - in cases where this is permissible - and the accused has appointed a representative who attended the pleading sessions before the Court of Appeal and presented their defense, then the appeal ruling shall be in the presence of the accused and shall not be subject to objection.[2771]

If the party who is required to appear according to the law does not appear on the day specified in the summons and does not send a representative on their behalf in the cases in which this is permissible, a judgment may be rendered in their absence after reviewing the papers, unless the summons was delivered to them in person and the court finds that there is no justification for their failure to appear, in which case the judgment shall be deemed to be in their presence.

The court may, instead of ruling in absentia, postpone the case to a subsequent session and order the opponent to be re-notified at their residence, while notifying them that if they fail to attend this session, the ruling issued will be considered to be in their presence. If they do not attend and the court finds that there is no justification for their absence, the ruling will be considered in their presence.[2772]

The judgment is considered in the presence of all the parties who attend when the case is called, even if they leave the session afterwards or fail to attend the sessions to which the case is adjourned without presenting an acceptable excuse, provided that the trial sessions to which the case is adjourned continue without interruption - so that it can be said that the accused is aware of them.[2773]

([2768]) Article No. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 16290 of 61 Q issued in the session of May 18, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 321, rule No. 73, Appeal No. 41964 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 7, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 1162, rule No. 174, Appeal No. 8695 of 58 Q issued in the session of May 31, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 802, rule No. 139, Appeal No. 4892 of 58 Q issued in the session of December 28, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1364, rule No. 218.

([2769] Appeal No. 3666 of 55 Q issued in the session of December 25, 1986 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 1132, rule No. 216.

([2770]) Article No. 63 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 22221 of 75 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2006 (unpublished).

([2771] Appeal No. 22221 of 75 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2006 (unpublished).

([2772] Article No. 238 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2773]) Article No. 239 of the Criminal Procedures Law, Appeal No. 21624 of year 66 Q issued in the session of July 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2965 of year 66 Q issued in the session of January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2966 of year 66 Q issued in the session of January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11163 of year 65 Q issued in the session of January 1, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25048 of year 64 Q issued in the session of April 16, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 638, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 10735 of year 62 Q issued in the session of March 11, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 460, Rule No. 75, Appeal No. 8777 of 62 Q issued in the session of February 7, 2002 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 261, rule No. 47, Appeal No. 14845 of 70 Q

However, if the connection between sessions is interrupted due to the lapse of one of them or the change of the court's location from one location to another, then it is obligatory to notify the accused with a new notification of the session they have set to hear the case at the new location.[2774]

If the lawsuit stumbles on its way and is interrupted and then is suddenly expedited by the prosecution, it is necessary to notify the accused with a valid summons so that its effect can result - if the accused does not appear and is not notified at all - the court does not have the right to address the lawsuit. If it does, its ruling is invalid because it was issued without the accused having the opportunity to defend themself. Such a ruling cannot be considered in the presence of the accused as long as they were not present at the procedures that took place after the lawsuit was initiated and were not aware of them - because the trial procedures must be considered together and given a single ruling in that regard.[2775]

The intended meaning of attendance is the presence of the accused in person or through a representative in the cases in which it is permissible to do so in the session in which the pleading took place so that they have the opportunity to defend themself. However, the legislator, for lofty considerations related to justice in itself, considered the judgment issued in a misdemeanor or contravention in some cases to be in attendance, by force of law, in the event that the opponent is present when the case is called, even if they leaves the session after that or fails to attend the sessions to which the case is adjourned without presenting an acceptable excuse. If one or both of the two matters are absent, such that they fails to attend at all or issued in the session of September 26, 2000 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 51, page No. 558, rule No. 109, Appeal No. 16398 of 60 Q issued in the session of October 27, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 1155, rule No. 158, Appeal No. 21867 of 63 Q issued in the session of September 20, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 921, rule No. 119, Appeal No. 537 of 55 Q issued in the session of March 20, 2011 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 431, rule No. 73, appeal No. 2045 for year 49 Q issued in the session of March 1, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 190, rule No. 30, appeal No. 1371 for year 48 Q issued in the session of December 17, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 940, rule No. 194, appeal No. 135 for year 42 Q issued in the session of May 21, 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 748, rule No. 166, appeal No. 40 for year 42 Q issued in the session of February 28, 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 253, rule No. 61, Appeal No. 1120 of 40 Q issued in the session of November 1, 1970 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 1024, rule No. 245, Appeal No. 1652 of 39 Q issued in the session of May 4, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 651, rule No. 154, Appeal No. 1652 of 39 Q issued in the session of May 4, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 651, rule No. 154, Appeal No. 282 of 38 Q issued in the session of June 4, 1968 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 19, page No. 661, rule No. 134, Appeal No. 752 of 37 Q issued in the session of June 12, 1967 and published In the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 788, rule No. 159, appeal No. 149 for year 37 Q issued in the session of March 27, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 449, rule No. 85, appeal No. 1772 for year 35 Q issued in the session of March 22, 1966 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 17, page No. 343, rule No. 68, appeal No. 1249 for year 34 Q issued in the session of January 19, 1965 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 83, rule No. 20, appeal No. 140 for year 34 Q issued in the session of May 12, 1964 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 15, page No. 376, rule No. 73, appeal No. 668 for year 30 Q issued in the session of November 15, 1960 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 792, rule No. 152, Appeal No. 305 for year 28 Q issued in the session of June 17, 1958 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 681, rule No. 172, Appeal No. 1331 for year 26 Q issued in the session of February 5, 1957 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 118, rule No. 36, Appeal No. 72 for year 25 Q issued in the session of April 9, 1955 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 804, rule No. 248, Appeal No. 1119 for year 22 Q issued in the session of December 30, 1952 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 297 Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 486 of 22 Q issued in the session of May 26, 1952 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 3, Page No. 1001, Rule No. 372.

---

([2774] Appeal No. 1652 of year 39 Q issued in the session of May 4, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 651, rule No. 154.

([2775] Appeal No. 8777 of 62 Q issued in the session of February 7, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, Page No. 261, Rule No. 47.

attends and then leaves the session or fails to attend the following sessions after presenting an acceptable excuse, and the court was able to pave its way in investigating the existence or non-existence of this excuse, and despite that it did not do so, then its judgment is in reality an in absentia judgment that may be challenged by returning to the general principle of the absence of the reason for considering it as in absentia due to the absence of one of its conditions, since the criterion in describing the judgment as in attendance or in absentia is the reality of the situation in the case, not what the court says about it.[2776]

Although what is meant by attendance in the eyes of the law is the presence of the accused in the session in person or through a representative on their behalf in the cases in which this is permissible, even if they does not speak or defend themself, it is sufficient for the judgment to be described as in their presence that the accused witnessed the session in which the trial took place and was given the opportunity to defend themself, as long as the court's work after that was limited to pronouncing the judgment.[2777]

The judgment is considered to be in absentia if the accused attended the session in which the case was heard, the pleadings were held and the judgment was reserved. This does not change if the accused failed to attend the session in which the judgment was pronounced, as long as they did not claim that their absence was due to a compelling reason.[2778]

Although it is true that what is meant by attendance is the presence of the accused in the session in person or through a representative in the circumstances in which this is permissible, even if they does not speak and defend themself, it is a condition, in order for the ruling to be considered in their presence, that the accused witnessed the session in which the trial took place and was given the opportunity to defend themself. If they had attended a previous session or sessions and then failed to attend the pleading session, or had attended when called upon to attend the session and then withdrew before their case was heard and the trial and pleading took place in their absence, then the judgment is considered in absentia, because attendance in criminal cases must be real, while the nominal attendance mentioned in the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law is not taken into account in criminal trial procedures.[2779]

It is clear from this that the criterion for describing the ruling as in person or in absentia is the reality of the case, not what the court says about it. The basis for considering the ruling in person is the attendance of the sessions in which the pleading took place, whether the ruling was issued in them or in another session. The presence of the lawyer is not taken into account in this case.[2780]

([2776]) Appeal No. 1678 of 39 Q issued in the session of February 2, 1970 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 225, rule No. 56, Appeal No. 395 of 27 Q issued in the session of June 25, 1957 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 709, rule No. 192, Appeal No. 4307 of 81 Q issued in the session of January 9, 2013 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page No. 59, rule No. 8, Appeal No. 12405 of 66 Q issued in the session of May 4, 2006, Appeal No. 12677 of 66 Q issued in the session of January 3, 2006, Appeal No. 23511 of 64 Q issued in the session of January 28, 2001 And published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, Page No. 178, Rule No. 28, Appeal No. 26027 for the year 64 Q issued in the session of December 18, 2000, Appeal No. 395 for the year 27 Q issued in the session of June 25, 1957 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 709, Rule No. 192.

([2777]) Appeal No. 917 of 28 Q issued in the session of June 23, 1958 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 9, page No. 706, rule No. 178, Appeal No. 3944 of 64 Q issued in the session of February 21, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 132, rule No. 28.

([2778] Appeal No. 1076 of 28 Q issued in the session of October 27, 1958 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 9, Page No. 852, Rule No. 209.

([2779]) Appeal No. 5693 of 56 Q issued in the session of March 5, 1987 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 383, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 2086 of 13 Q issued in the session of December 20, 1943 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, sixth year, page No. 363, Rule No. 277.

([2780]) Appeal No. 29703 of 59 Q issued in the session of October 16, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 1035, rule No. 147, Appeal No. 49023 of 59 Q issued in the session of April 17, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 531, rule No. 86, Appeal No. 16705 of 59 Q issued in

Misdemeanors brought before the Criminal Court are subject to the general provisions stipulated for attendance and absence before the Misdemeanor Court. The accused in a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, which the law requires to be executed immediately after the issuance of the judgment, must appear in person.[2781]

19-1-2 The presence of some of the accused and the absence of others

If the case is brought against several persons for one incident and some of them attend and others fail to attend despite being ordered to attend according to the law, the court must adjourn the case to a subsequent session and order that those who failed to attend be re-notified at their domicile, warning them that if they fail to attend this session, the judgment issued will be considered to be in their presence. If they do not attend and the court finds that there is no justification for their failure to attend, the judgment will be considered in their presence.[2782]

19-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the right to be present at their trial, to hear the prosecution's case and to defend themself. Persons convicted in absentia should, if arrested, be given a new trial before a different court.

---

the session of May 9, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 452, rule No. 64, Appeal No. 2449 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 28, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, page No. 437, rule No. 62, Appeal No. 7961 of 58 Q issued in the session of May 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 786, rule No. 136, appeal No. 1912 for year 58 Q issued in the session of December 20, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1255, rule No. 202, appeal No. 494 for year 58 Q issued in the session of February 22, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 310, rule No. 49, appeal No. 5634 for year 58 Q issued in the session of December 1, 1988 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 1201, rule No. 185, appeal No. 2825 for year 55 Q issued in the session of December 25, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 1128 Rule No. 215, Appeal No. 3666 for the year 55 Q issued in the session of December 25, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 1132, Rule No. 216, Appeal No. 6913 for the year 53 Q issued in the session of November 14, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 763, Rule No. 169, Appeal No. 7120 for the year 53 Q issued in the session of March 7, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 254, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 2088 for the year 53 Q issued in the session of January 22, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 85, Rule No. 17, Appeal No. 2519 for the year 52 Q issued in the session of November 14, 1982, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page No. 874, rule No. 180, Appeal No. 352 for year 50 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1980, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 766, rule No. 148, Appeal No. 1029 for year 47 Q issued in the session of February 26, 1978, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 175, rule No. 30, Appeal No. 1254 for year 45 Q issued in the session of November 30, 1975, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page No. 807, rule No. 177, Appeal No. 1130 for year 43 Q issued in the session of December 24, 1973, published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 1268 Rule No. 258, Appeal No. 1004 of 43 Q issued in the session of December 9, 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 1167, Rule No. 238, Appeal No. 445 of 37 Q issued in the session of April 17, 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 531, Rule No. 102, Appeal No. 149 of 37 Q issued in the session of March 27, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 449, Rule No. 85, Appeal No. 1757 of 35 Q issued in the session of December 6, 1965 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 910, Rule No. 175, Appeal No. 3155 of 31 Q issued in the session of May 29, 1962, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 13, page 506, rule 129, Appeal No. 1220 of 29 Q issued in the session of November 30, 1959, published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 10, page 958, rule 196, Appeal No. 662 of 25 Q issued in the session of November 7, 1955, published in the fourth part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page 1305, rule 383.

([2781]) Appeal No. 25048 of 64 Q issued in the session of April 16, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 638, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 636 of 71 Q issued in the session of March 3, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 346, Rule No. 62, Appeal No. 1130 of 43 Q issued in the session of December 24, 1973 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 1268, Rule No. 258.

([2782] Article No. 240 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

19-2-1 Right to a trial in person

Every person accused of committing a criminal act has the right to be tried in their presence so that they can hear the prosecution's argument, refute its claim and defend themselves.[2783]

The right to a trial in person is an integral part of the accused's right to defend themself.

The Human Rights Committee has made it clear that, in order to guarantee the rights of the defense, "all criminal proceedings must afford the accused the right to an oral hearing, at which they may appear in person or be represented by counsel and be able to present evidence and examine witnesses". [2784]

Although the right to a trial in person is not expressly provided for in the European Convention, the European Court has considered it to be of "decisive importance". She argued that it was "difficult to see" how a person could exercise their right to defend themself in person, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and obtain the free assistance of an interpreter when necessary "without being present". [2785]

Article 8(d) of the American Convention guarantees the right of the accused to defend themself in person. The right to attend court sessions is inherent in this right, as is their right to make statements (Article 8) and to question witnesses (Article 8).[2786]

While the African Charter does not explicitly provide for the right of the accused to be present at their trial, the principles of fair trial in Africa have enshrined this right.[2787]

The right to attend trials imposes on the authorities the duty to notify the accused (and their lawyer) of the place and time of the trial well in advance of its commencement, and to summon the accused to attend it rather than to exclude them, in an unlawful manner, from attending its sessions.[2788]

If the hearing dates are rescheduled, the accused must be notified of the new hearing dates and location.[2789]

Although there are limits to the efforts that the authorities are expected to make to notify the accused of their trial, the Human Rights Committee has considered that the right to be present at the trial was violated in a case where, in the former Zaire, the authorities did not issue the summons until three days before the trial began and did not attempt to send it to the accused who was living abroad, despite knowing their place of residence.[2790]

The right of the accused to attend their trial sessions may be restricted, temporarily and in exceptional circumstances, if they violate the procedures followed in the court to the extent that

---

([2783]) Article 14(3)(d) of the International Covenant, Article 18(3)(d) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 16(3) of the Arab Charter, Section N(6)(c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Articles 63(1) and 67(d) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, and Article 21(4)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Yugoslavia.

([2784]) Gora de la Espriella v. Colombia, Human Rights Committee, 3/ §9 (2010) 2007/UN CCPR/C/98/D/1623; see General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §§23 and 28, Domukovsky, Tsiklauri, Gelbakhiani and Dokvadze v. Georgia, Human Rights Committee, / UN Docs. CCPR ,CCPR/C/62/D/626/1995 ,CCPR/C/62/D/624/1995 ,C/62/D/623/1995 9/ §18 (1998) ‹CCPR/C/62/D/627/1995.

([2785]) European Court: Hermi v. Italy (18114)/02), Grand Chamber §58-§59 (2006), Sedovic v. Italy (56581)/00), Grand Chamber §81 (2006), Colozza v. Italy (9024)/80), §27 (1985).

([2786]) Article 8(2)(d) of the American Convention; see Principle 5 of the Principles on Persons Deprived of Liberty in the Americas.

([2787] Section N(6)(c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2788]) Mbengue v. Zaire (16) / 1977), Human Rights Committee, 1983 (2 Sel Dec. 76, pp. 2/14-1/§14, 78; see General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §31 and §36.

([2789]) Osyuk v. Belarus, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR. 3/8-2/ §8 (2009) C/96/D/1311/2004.

([2790]) Mbengue v. Zaire (16) / 1977), Human Rights Committee, 1983 (2 Sel Dec. 76, pp. 2/14-1/§14, 78.

the court considers it impractical to continue hearing the case in their presence. In such circumstances, the court may remove the accused from the courtroom, but it must consider ways to preserve the rights of the defense, such as ensuring that the accused is able to observe the trial and give instructions to their lawyer in person and away from the courtroom, for example through video link. Such measures may only be taken after it has been proven that other reasonable alternatives are no longer sufficient, and such measures shall be limited to the period of time during which they are indispensable for the proper conduct of the trial.[2791]

Such restrictions must be necessary and proportionate.

The accused may waive their right to attend the sessions, provided that this waiver is recorded in an unambiguous manner, and it is preferable that it be done in writing, and this must be accompanied by guarantees that are equal in importance to their attendance, and that it does not conflict with any important public interest.[2792]

In 1983, the Human Rights Committee concluded that an accused may be considered to have waived their right to be present at trial if they fail to appear before the court after being given proper notice and sufficient time in advance of the trial.[2793]

Whether this conclusion, reached in relation to an accused who was in exile in another country, can today be considered consistent with the law on extradition, with the prohibition imposed by the principle of non-refoulement and with human rights, remains an open question.

The defendant's waiver of their right to attend their trial sessions, or their trial in absentia, does not mean that they lose their right to be represented by a lawyer to defend them before the court.

19-2-2 Trial in absentia

A trial in absentia means that the court holds its sessions in the absence of the accused.

The statutes of the international criminal courts do not give any of them the authority to hold trials in absentia.

Trials in absentia are expressly prohibited under the principles of fair trial in Africa.[2794]

Any literal interpretation of Article 14(d) of the ICCPR leaves no doubt that the trial of an accused may not proceed in their absence.

However, the Human Rights Committee has made it clear that, in certain exceptional circumstances, an accused may be tried in absentia if the interests of justice so require. For example, a trial may be allowed to proceed after the accused has been informed of the charges, and of the date and place of the trial, well in advance of its commencement, but without appearing in the courtroom.[2795]

Before starting its sessions in the absence of the accused, the court must ensure that they have been duly notified of the case and of the time and place of the proceedings.[2796]

([2791]) Article 63(2) of the Rome Statute.

([2792]) Section N(6)(c)(3) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, European Court: Colozza v. Italy (9024)/80), § 28 (1985, Poitremol v. France (14032)/88), § 31 (1993, Hermi v. Italy (02/18114), Grand Chamber § 73 (2006).

([2793]) See Mbengue v. Zaire (16)/1977), Human Rights Committee, 1983 (2 Sel Dec. 76, p. 1/§14, 78.

([2794]) Section N(6)(c)(ii) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2795]) Human Rights Committee, General Comment §§36, 32 and 31, Mbengue v. Zaire (1983) Sel Dec. 76 2, (1977/16)), p. 1/ §14, 78, Saleh v. Uzbekistan, 4/ §9 (2009) UN CCPR/C/95/D/1382/2005.

([2796]) Maliki v. Italy, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR. 4/ §9 (2009) 1996/C/66/D/699.

Human rights monitoring mechanisms, which consider that trials may be conducted in absentia in exceptional circumstances, have stressed that in such cases, greater caution and vigilance must be exercised to ensure the rights of the defense.[2797]

These rights include the right to have legal counsel, even if the accused chooses not to attend the trial, and to be represented by a lawyer.[2798]

Individuals convicted in absentia have the right to seek remedies, including retrial in their presence, in particular if they were not properly notified of their trial or if they were unable to appear at the trial for reasons beyond their control.[2799]

In assessing the right of an accused to a retrial, following a trial in absentia, the burden of proof does not lie on the accused to show that they were not trying to evade justice or that their absence was due to reasons beyond their control. However, the court may consider whether there is an acceptable reason for the accused's absence.[2800]

The Special Rapporteur on human rights expressed concern about allegations that individuals who were extradited to Egypt outside the formal extradition procedure and who had previously been sentenced to death following trials in absentia were executed shortly after their arrival without a new trial.[2801]

Amnesty International calls for, if a person is arrested following a trial in which they were convicted in absentia, for the conviction in absentia to be quashed and for them to be retried in new and fully fair proceedings before an independent and impartial court.[2802]

It should be noted that the prohibition on a person being tried twice for the same offence does not prevent a person convicted in absentia from being retried if that person requests a retrial.[2803]

19-2-3 Right to attend appeal hearings

The right to attend appeal hearings (following conviction) depends on the nature of the proceedings. It depends, in particular, on whether the first-instance hearings are public, on whether the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to decide on both legal and procedural aspects, on whether legal and procedural issues are raised for consideration by the Court of Appeal, and on the manner in which the interests of the accused are presented and protected.[2804]

If the Court of Appeal considers the case from both its legal and procedural aspects, justice generally requires the presence of the accused, as well as the defense lawyer, if they are present.[2805]

The European Court found that the rights of the accused (who was represented by a defense lawyer) were not violated when they were not allowed to attend a part of their appeal that was devoted solely to legal aspects. However, the court said that their absence while the court was

---

([2797]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Tajikistan, UN Doc. §19 (2004) CCPR/CO/84/TJK.

([2798]) Section N(6)(f)(4) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, European Court: Beladouah v. the Netherlands (16737)/90), § 41 (1994, Poitrimole v. France (14032)/88), § 34 (1993).

([2799]) See section N(6)(c)(ii) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Coluzza v. Italy (9024)/80), European Court, § 29 (1985); Human Rights Committee: Malki v. Italy, 1996/2009 (UN CCPR/C/66/D/699) 5/ § 9, Concluding Observations: Croatia, § 11 (2009) UN CCPR/C/HRV/CO/2.

([2800]) European Court, Hermi v. Italy (18114)/02), Grand Chamber §75 (2006). Sedovic v. Italy (56581)/00, Grand Chamber (2006) 88-§ 87; see Medina v. Switzerland (20491)/92, European Court. §57 (2001).

([2801]) Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, Egypt. §42 (2009) UN Doc. A/HRC/13/37/Add. 2.

([2802]) See, for example, Amnesty International, Italian pardon of US Army officer opens door to impunity, doc. no.: EUR 30/005/2013.

([2803]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §54.

([2804]) Belziuk v. Poland (23103)/93), European Court 37 § (1998) (2).

([2805]) Sibgatulin v. Russia (32165)/02), European Court (2009) §38-§50.

considering whether their sentence should be modified, in light of factors including their character, motives and the gravity of the offence, constituted a breach of the state's duty to ensure their right to defend themself in person.[2806]

Since the prosecutor, the defense lawyer and the accused were not present during the appeal hearing in which the Court of Appeal decided to increase the sentence, the European Court considered that the accused's rights to a fair trial and to defend themself had been violated.[2807]

The European Court found that the rights of the accused had been violated in a case heard by the Supreme Court of Norway, in which the accused was convicted and sentenced, thereby overturning the acquittal of a lower court, after examining the legal and procedural aspects of the previous judgment, without summoning the accused to appear before the court.[2808]

The European Court considered that the participation of a convicted person via video link in an appeal of legal and procedural aspects of their case did not unduly restrict their right to defense. The accused could see and hear what was happening in the courtroom (including witness testimony), and they could participate and have their voice heard in the courtroom. While the defendant's attorney was present in the courtroom and able to confer with their client privately (via a secure telephone line). [2809]

If the Court of Appeal is only considering legal aspects, including whether the appeal should be granted, the European Court considers that the accused does not necessarily have the right to be present.[2810]

However, if the prosecution is present and has the opportunity to argue points of law relevant to the case, it is normally necessary, in the interests of justice and in particular equality of arms, for the accused's counsel to be present at a minimum.[2811]

Some additional factors taken into account in this regard were: whether the trial sessions were held in public.[2812]

Whether the accused was notified of the hearing and required to attend the appeal hearing (and the length of time prior to the notification if they were detained.;[2813]

Whether the accused's freedom is at risk.[2814]

In a case where the accused no longer had legal representation, the prosecution discussed before a panel of three judges whether the accused should be allowed to appeal their conviction on legal grounds. Since the accused was not present at the hearing and was unable to respond orally to the prosecution's argument in a manner consistent with the principle of equality of arms, this was considered a violation of their right to a fair trial.[2815]

([2806]) European Court: Cook v. Austria (25878)/94), (44- § § 36 (2000, Kremsau v. Austria (12350)/86), (69- § § 65 (1993, and for comparison, Kucera v. Austria (40072)/98), § 28-§ 29 (2002).
([2807]) Sikos v. Hungary (37251)/04), European Court § 21 (2006).
([2808]) See Botten v. Norway (16206)/90, European Court (1996) §48-§53.
([2809]) Viola v. Italy, European Court §70-§76 (2006); see Golubev v. Russia (26260)/02) European Court, decision (inadmissibility). (2006).
([2810]) See, European Court: Gok v. Ukraine (45783)/05), (2010) §32; Maksimov v. Azerbaijan (38228)/05), §39-§43 (2009).
([2811]) Bacchelli v. Germany (8398)/78, European Court §§35-§41 (1983).
([2812]) Hermi v. Italy (18114)/02), Grand Chamber of the European Court. §61 (2006).
([2813]) European Court: Gok v. Ukraine (45783)/05), § 34 (2010, Hermi v. Italy (18114)/02), Grand Chamber of the European Court (2006) § 98- § 101, Maksimov v. Azerbaijan (38228)/05), § 39- § 43 (2009, Sobolowicz v. Poland (No. 2) (19847)/07), § 38 (2009), § 42- § 43.
([2814]) Jock v. Ukraine (45783)/05), § 29 (2010).
([2815]) European Court: Gok v. Ukraine (45783)/05), (- § § 23 (2010) 35; see Maksimov v. Azerbaijan (38228)/05), § 39 - § 43 (2009).

Chapter Twenty: The Right to Call and Examine Witnesses

20-1 Under Egyptian Law

20-1-1 Definition of Testimony

Testimony is the process of proving a specific fact through what a person states about what they have seen, heard, or perceived with their senses concerning that fact in a direct manner. It involves a person's account of what they have personally witnessed, heard, or generally perceived with their senses. By its very nature, testimony requires that the individual providing it possesses the ability to discern and distinguish.[2816]

Testimony is a person's account of what they have personally seen, heard, or generally perceived with their senses.[2817]

It is established that the court may accept the statements of a witness even if they are based on hearsay.[2818]

([2816]) Appeal No. 15357 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 21, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1289, rule No. 207, Appeal No. 518 of 34 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1964 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 15, page No. 493, rule No. 98.

([2817]) Appeal No. 24101 of 86 Q issued in the session of November 13, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23908 of 65 Q issued in the session of May 1, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 26, rule No. 4, Appeal No. 15357 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 21, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1289, rule No. 207, Appeal No. 518 of 34 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1964 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 15, page No. 493, rule No. 98, Appeal No. 826 of 48 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 136 Rule No. 25, Appeal No. 18793 of 83 Q issued in the session of March 11, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 153, Rule No. 14, Appeal No. 12754 of 82 Q issued in the session of April 2, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 185, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 10857 of 63 Q issued in the session of January 24, 1995 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 246, Rule No. 33, Appeal No. 2296 of 52 Q issued in the session of March 3, 1983 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 34, page No. 314, Rule No. 61, Appeal No. 13665 of 70 Q issued in the session of March 22, 2001 And published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 353, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 5831 for the year 56 Q issued in the session of March 5, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 387, Rule No. 60, Appeal No. 2003 for the year 48 Q issued in the session of April 2, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page No. 426, Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 518 for the year 34 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1964 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 15, page No. 493, Rule No. 98, Appeal No. 24880 for the year 59 Q issued in the session of April 5, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 590, Rule No. 101, Appeal No. 32891 For the year 83 Q issued in the session of November 11, 2015 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 778, rule No. 116, appeal No. 3307 for the year 56 Q issued in the session of October 22, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 792, rule No. 152, appeal No. 49438 for the year 72 Q issued in the session of November 19, 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 875, rule No. 97, appeal No. 3559 for the year 81 Q issued in the session of December 25, 2012 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 878, rule No. 160, appeal No. 4844 for the year 55 Q issued in the session of October 28, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 887 Rule No. 161, Appeal No. 597 for the year 51 Q issued in the session of November 12, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 893, Rule No. 154, Appeal No. 2384 for the year 63 Q issued in the session of December 1, 2001 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 926, Rule No. 177, Appeal No. 18358 for the year 64 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 944, Rule No. 135, Appeal No. 4147 for the year 59 Q issued in the session of November 23, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1048, Rule No. 169, Appeal No. 20350 for the year 64 Q issued in the session of October 20, 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 1065, rule No. 152, Appeal No. 6506 for the year 62 Q, issued in the session of December 15, 1993, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 1164, rule No. 181, Appeal No. 15357 for the year 59 Q, issued in the session of December 21, 1989, published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1289, rule No. 207.

20-1-2 Witness Eligibility

A witness, in the language, is someone who has seen and observed something. Testimony is the name for observation, which is seeing something with one's own eyes. A person is considered a witness simply by being called upon to give testimony, whether they give it after taking an oath or without taking it.[2819]

Discernment is the basis of perception, and therefore the witness must be of the age of discernment, otherwise their testimony is invalid and devoid of effect, and it is not permissible to rely on that testimony even as evidence.[2820]

Testimony obviously requires the person who performs it to have reason and discernment, since the basis for the obligation to perform it is the ability to bear it.[2821]

This means that in order for the witness's testimony to be accepted, they must be discerning. If they are not discerning, their testimony will not be accepted, even as evidence.[2822]

Therefore, the testimony of a madman, a child who is not sane, or anyone else who makes the person unable to distinguish cannot be accepted.[2823]

([2818]) Appeal No. 12754 of 82 Q issued in the session of April 2, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 185, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 13665 of 70 Q issued in the session of March 22, 2001 and published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 353, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 3559 of 81 Q issued in the session of December 25, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 878, Rule No. 160.

([2819]) Appeal No. 4307 of 81 Q issued in the session of January 9, 2013 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page No. 59, rule No. 8, Appeal No. 20640 of 67 Q issued in the session of March 25, 2007 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 58, page No. 311, rule No. 59, Appeal No. 6280 of 68 Q issued in the session of March 21, 2007 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 58, page No. 293, rule No. 56, Appeal No. 5769 of 60 Q issued in the session of March 11, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 159, rule No. 37, Appeal No. 1280 of 61 Q issued in the session of November 9, 1992 and published in the first part of the Office Book Technical No. 43, Page No. 1014, Rule No. 156, Appeal No. 3604 of Year 57 Q issued in the session of November 12, 1987 and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 38, Page No. 960, Rule No. 175, Appeal No. 1285 of Year 50 Q issued in the session of November 24, 1980 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 31, Page No. 1029, Rule No. 199, Appeal No. 190 of Year 43 Q issued in the session of April 16, 1973 and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 24, Page No. 525, Rule No. 109.

([2820]) Appeal No. 984 of 67 Q issued in the session of October 7, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 1041, rule No. 155, Appeal No. 7896 of 60 Q issued in the session of October 7, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, page No. 973, rule No. 134, Appeal No. 1707 of 55 Q issued in the session of November 27, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 1052, rule No. 193, Appeal No. 1197 of 45 Q issued in the session of November 17, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page No. 701, rule No. 154.

([2821]) Appeal No. 24101 of 86 Q issued in the session of November 13, 2018, Appeal No. 2384 of 63 Q issued in the session of December 1, 2001 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 926, Rule No. 177, Appeal No. 18358 of 64 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 944, Rule No. 135, Appeal No. 15357 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 21, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1289, Rule No. 207, Appeal No. 4844 of 55 Q issued in the session of October 28, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 887 Rule No. 161, Appeal No. 3307 for the year 56 Q issued in the session of October 22, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 792, Rule No. 152, Appeal No. 2003 for the year 48 Q issued in the session of April 2, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page No. 426, Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 1561 for the year 45 Q issued in the session of January 25, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, page No. 94, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 518 for the year 34 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1964 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 15, page No. 493, Rule No. 98.

([2822]) Appeal No. 18793 of 83 Q issued in the session of March 11, 2014 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 153, rule No. 14, Appeal No. 2384 of 63 Q issued in the session of December 1, 2001 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 926, rule No. 177, Appeal No. 18358 of 64 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 944, rule No. 135, Appeal No. 15357 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 21, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1289, rule No. 207, Appeal No. 518 of 34 Q issued in the session of June 15, 2014 1964 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 15, page No. 493, rule No. 98.

Therefore, if the court decides to accept the testimony of a witness whose ability to distinguish is seriously disputed, it must investigate this dispute to the end in order to ascertain the ability of this witness to bear testimony or respond to it with something that refutes it.[2824]

Determining the nature of a mentally ill person and reaching the point of their or her incomplete capacity to give testimony, is considered a purely technical matter that the court cannot find its way to express an opinion on by itself, but rather must investigate it through a technical specialist.[2825]

There is nothing in the law that prohibits hearing the testimony of a deaf-mute person as long as they retain their other senses and has the ability to distinguish, and the court may accept their testimony according to their own way of expression.[2826]

The legislator also stipulated in the second paragraph of Article No. 283 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that: "..." It is permissible to hear witnesses who have not reached the age of fourteen years without taking an oath as a means of evidence," meaning that the law permits hearing witnesses who have not reached the age of fourteen years without taking an oath as a means of evidence, and does not prevent the judge from accepting their statements that they gives if they finds them to be truthful, as an element of evidence that the judge assesses according to their conviction.[2827]

A person sentenced to a criminal penalty does not have the procedural capacity to testify before the courts, and therefore it is not permissible to put them under oath. All that is permissible is to hear their statements and explanations for the purpose of evidence, and the court, within the limits of its discretionary authority, may be convinced by those statements.[2828]

([2823]) Appeal No. 18793 of 83 Q issued in the session of March 11, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 153, Rule No. 14, Appeal No. 518 of 34 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1964 and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 15, page No. 493, Rule No. 98.

([2824]) Appeal No. 1561 of 45 Q issued in the session of January 25, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, page No. 94, rule No. 20, Appeal No. 2296 of 52 Q issued in the session of March 3, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page No. 314, rule No. 61, Appeal No. 18793 of 83 Q issued in the session of March 11, 2014 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 153, rule No. 14, Appeal No. 18358 of 64 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 944, rule No. 135

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The law does not require that the person afflicted with a mental disability lose both awareness and discrimination, but rather it is fulfilled by the loss of one or both of them. The appellant had accused the victim of being unable to testify due to his suffering from a mental illness. The victim stated, when questioned before the court of first instance, that they was suffering from psychological distress, and submitted a photocopy of a notification of his permanent partial disability, the nature of which they did not explain. Given that, and the court, as is evident from the papers and the judgment records, had failed to ascertain the victim's ability as a witness to discern, or to examine the characteristics of his will and general awareness to ensure the integrity of his eligibility to testify, and had relied, among other things, in its judgment of conviction on his testimony, this renders its judgment defective in reasoning and a violation of the right to defense, which invalidates it], Appeal No. 4844 of Year 55 Q issued in the session of October 28, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 887, Rule No. 161.

([2825] Appeal No. 18793 of 83 Q issued in the session of March 11, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, Page No. 153, Rule No. 14.

([2826] Appeal No. 23908 of 65 Q issued in the session of May 1, 1998 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 26, rule No. 4.

([2827]) Article No. 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code, see: Appeal No. 28462 of year 67 Q issued in the session of May 7, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 666, rule No. 85, Appeal No. 23908 of year 65 Q issued in the session of May 1, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 26, rule No. 4, Appeal No. 6430 of year 62 Q issued in the session of November 8, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 949, rule No. 148, Appeal No. 3204 of year 54 Q issued in the session of February 18, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 264, rule No. 44.

([2828] Article No. 25 of the Penal Code states that: "Every sentence of a felony penalty necessarily entails depriving the convict of the following rights and benefits: (First)... (Thirdly) Testimony before the courts during the sentence, except for the purpose of evidence... »

20-1-3 The investigator shall hear any witness they deem necessary to hear, or upon the request of the parties.

The investigator shall hear the testimony of witnesses whom the parties request to hear unless they see no benefit in hearing them. They may hear the testimony of any witness whom they deem necessary to hear about the facts that prove or lead to proving the crime, its circumstances, and attributing it to the accused or acquitting them of it. [2829]

The civil claimant may request the investigator to hear witnesses in the case, and they may make their comments on the witness's statements after hearing them, and they may request to hear the witness's statements on other points that they did not prove.

The investigator may always refuse to ask any question that is not related to the case, or that is worded in a way that offends others.

The legislator left the investigator with the authority to decide which witnesses the parties request to hear, and which they do not see any benefit in hearing.[2830]

The investigator must respect the witness, treat them well, and avoid giving them any hint or statement that would indicate disdain for him, so that they do not reach a state of denying the testimony that would harm justice.[2831]

It is not permissible for the investigator to appear before the witnesses as if they is doubting their statements by making comments or signs that instill fear in their souls and prevent them from stating the facts they claim to have stated.[2832]

The witness is supposed to give their testimony freely and freely, and therefore the investigator may behave towards them objectively and honestly, and not use means of deception, threat or intimidation with him, and they may not suggest a specific answer to the witness, or direct questions to them that involve incitement and enticement. It is established that the witness listens and is not interrogated, so the investigator may not behave with them in an interrogation manner. The investigator must let them give their testimony about the incident to be proven with complete freedom and without interference from him. After that, the investigator intervenes with their detailed questions to determine the framework and limits of the testimony, and through that they may draw their attention to any contradictions that may occur in their testimony or confront them with facts that have been proven to be the opposite in the investigation. The investigator must clarify whether the facts provided by the witness are from their direct and personal information or are they merely indirect hearsay information transmitted from others or are they merely conjectural conclusions. In all cases, the investigator must ensure that the testimony expresses the personality of the witness, and that it responds to their sensory information, not their conjectural conclusions.

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [Since it is established that the statement of one accused person against another is a testimony that the court may rely on in convicting, and the court of subject matter has the right to rely in its ruling of conviction on testimony heard as evidence without taking an oath, as is the case with regard to those who are prohibited from giving testimony under an oath, including those sentenced to a felony sentence for the duration of their sentence in accordance with Clause (Third) of Article 25 of the Penal Code] Appeal No. 5942 of Year 64 Q issued in the session of February 14, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 247, Rule No. 36.

([2829] Articles Nos. 110 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2830] Appeal No. 1273 of 22 Q issued in the session of March 3, 1953 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 590, Rule No. 217.

([2831] Article No. 162 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

([2832] Article No. 163 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

The investigator must take care to record the testimony in the witness's own style, no matter how colloquial or clumsy it may be. Any intervention by the investigator to correct or shorten the witness's style without their consent entails a change in the truth.[2833]

If the report submitted to the Public Prosecution is of particular importance to the complainant, the Public Prosecution must hear the statements of the complainant alone in detail, then send the report to the Attorney General of the General Prosecution or the First Attorney General of the Appeal Prosecution, as the case may be, to seek an opinion on what follows.[2834]

The members of the prosecution must be economical in requesting officers, doctors and prison employees for investigation. They must also, in order to thwart the purpose that some prisoners seek in reporting that they have committed a crime in order to provide an opportunity to leave prison, go to the prison to question these prisoners instead of requesting them to the prosecution office.[2835]

When summoning employees of the civil registry departments to hear their statements on some technical points related to civil status work, members of the prosecution must address the inspectors of the civil status departments in the capitals of the governorates so that they can collect the correct information and data about the incident under investigation and present it to the prosecution to determine the truth of the matter when questioning the employee summoned for investigation.[2836]

Members of the Public Prosecution must be economical in requesting employees of the Central Agency for Public Mobilization and Statistics to question them as witnesses in investigations regarding crimes stipulated in Law No. 87 of 1960, as amended, regarding general mobilization, and must be satisfied with correspondence received from the aforementioned agency in this regard.

If the investigation requires summoning one of the agency's employees to question him, the agency must be notified to send the employee specialized in the subject of the investigation to give testimony in it, taking into account what the instructions require with regard to the prosecution offices located outside Greater Cairo, regarding sending a memorandum about the incident of the case and the required investigation, to the competent prosecution office within whose jurisdiction the aforementioned agency is located, for one of its members to carry it out.[2837]

If the investigation requires hearing from multiple drivers of vehicles from the Mechanical Transport Department, care should be taken not to require them to attend all at once, as this would disrupt the work of the department to which they belong. Rather, the Public Prosecution must summon them individually and at different times, taking the initiative to question those who attend to avoid requesting them for investigation more than once.

If a criminal case is filed against any of the aforementioned drivers, the members of the Public Prosecution must work to resolve it quickly.[2838]

The Public Prosecutions must include in the correspondence they issue to the Labor Department and in the requests for the attendance of representatives of this department as witnesses, the serial numbers that the inspectors of the department record in the papers and

---

(2833) D. Ahmed Fathy Sorour, The Mediator in Criminal Procedures, p. 302.
(2834) Article No. 252 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
(2835) Article No. 253 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
(2836) Article No. 263 bis of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
(2837) Article No. 269 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
(2838) Article No. 280 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

reports that they send to the Public Prosecution regarding the cases in which the correspondence or request for witnesses was issued.[2839]

20-1-4 Declaration of witnesses

The Public Prosecution shall notify the witnesses whom the investigating judge decides to hear. They shall be summoned to attend by bailiffs or by public authority personnel. The investigator may hear the testimony of any witness who attends of their own accord, and in this case, this shall be recorded in the report.[2840]

The Public Prosecution shall announce the witnesses whom the investigating judge decides to hear, and this shall be done through the bailiffs or public authority personnel. If witnesses other than those requested by the judge are presented to the Public Prosecution at a time when it is difficult to present them to him, it shall record them in a report and hear the statements of these witnesses therein briefly and present them with the report to the judge as soon as possible.[2841]

The general rule is that if someone does not have to be listened to, they do not have to be called.[2842]

Anyone summoned to appear before the investigating judge to give evidence must appear based on the request written to him. Otherwise, the judge may, after hearing the statements of the Public Prosecution, sentence them to pay a fine not exceeding fifty pounds. they may issue an order to summon them to appear again at their own expense, or issue an order to arrest and bring them in.[2843]

It is established that the correct announcement of the testimony is what imposes on the witness the duty of attendance, so the crime of refusing to testify does not occur if the announcement is invalid because this duty only arises from a correct announcement.[2844]

If the witness appears before the judge after being summoned to appear a second time or of their own accord and presents acceptable excuses, they may be exempted from the fine after hearing the statements of the Public Prosecution. they may also be exempted based on a request submitted by them if they are unable to appear in person.[2845]

The legislator has specified in the Criminal Procedures Law procedures that must be followed in the event that a witness fails to appear before the investigator to hear their testimony about the facts that prove or lead to proving the crime and its circumstances and attributing it to the accused or their innocence thereof, including taking measures to arrest and bring them in, or imposing a fine not exceeding fifty pounds. If the witness appears after being summoned to appear and presents acceptable excuses, they may be exempted from the fine.

There is nothing in the law that prevents summoning officers, investigating judges, and members of the Public Prosecution - as well as investigation clerks - as witnesses in cases in which they have work, except that summoning any of them shall only be done when the court or authority before which the testimony is given sees a reason for that.[2846]

([2839]) Article No. 287 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
([2840] Articles Nos. 111 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2841] Article No. 642 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
([2842] Appeal No. 26730 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 2, 1995 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 295, Rule No. 42.
([2843] Article No. 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2844]) Crim. 18 oct. 1956, J. C. P. 57 II 9713, 7 nov. 1971, Crim. no: 301.
([2845] Article No. 118 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2846] Appeal No. 6200 of 56 Q issued in the session of February 5, 1987 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 231, rule No. 33.

20-1-5 Going to hear the witness at their place of residence

If the witness is ill or has something that prevents them from attending, their testimony shall be heard in the place where it is. If the investigator goes to hear their testimony and it becomes clear to them that the excuse is invalid, they may sentence them to a fine not exceeding two hundred pounds. The partial judge has jurisdiction over this if the Public Prosecution is the one that conducted the investigation. The convicted person may challenge the ruling issued against them by way of opposition or appeal against that ruling.[2847]

Members of the Public Prosecution shall not go to government hospitals to question injured persons present therein except after receiving a written notice or a telephone signal from the hospital that they may be questioned. They may, when necessary, if the condition of the injured persons is dangerous or the interest of the investigation requires that they be questioned quickly, go to the hospital without delay and at any time, provided that they notify the hospital in a timely manner of their move whenever possible, and that they contact, upon their arrival at the hospital, its director or its first physician or their representative, if any, and inquire from them about the condition of the injured persons and their ability to answer the questions directed to them rationally, and that they record all of that in the report.[2848]

20-1-6 Procedures for hearing testimony before the court

Questions shall be directed to the witnesses by the Public Prosecution first, then by the victim, then by the civil rights claimant, then by the accused, then by the person responsible for the civil rights. The Public Prosecution, the victim, and the civil rights claimant may interrogate the aforementioned witnesses a second time to clarify the facts about which they testified in their answers.[2849]

However, hearing witnesses in the aforementioned order is a matter of organizing the proceedings in the session and violating it does not result in nullity. The principle is that nullity results from failure to observe the provisions related to any essential procedure. A procedure is considered essential if its purpose is to preserve the public interest or the interest of the accused or one of the opponents. However, if its purpose is only guidance and direction, it is not essential and failure to observe it does not result in nullity. Clarifying the order of procedures in the session, although it is in itself useful in organizing the course of the lawsuit and facilitating its consideration, it was not made obligatory and was not intended to protect an essential interest of the opponents. If the alleged breach of that order did not deprive the accused of presenting their defense and requests and of responding to the defense of their opponent and did not affect their established right to be the last to speak, then nullity does not result from it.[2850]

The court may dispense with hearing absent witnesses with the consent of the accused or their defense attorney. The failure to hear them before the court does not prevent it from relying in its

---

([2847]) Articles Nos. 121 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2848]) Article No. 234 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

([2849]) Article No. 271 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2850]) Appeal No. 13196 of 76 Q issued in the session of May 18, 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 636, rule No. 69, Appeal No. 59602 of 74 Q issued in the session of January 17, 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 115, rule No. 11, Appeal No. 8787 of 64 Q issued in the session of March 31, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 415, rule No. 59, Appeal No. 3053 of 54 Q issued in the session of March 14, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 403, rule No. 69, Appeal No. 140 of 24 Q issued in the session of March 11, 1954 And published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 420, Rule No. 141, Appeal No. 332 of the 22nd Q issued in the session of June 14, 1952 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 3, page No. 1103, Rule No. 413.

ruling on their statements in the investigations as long as they are presented for discussion in the session.[2851]

The court may be satisfied with the accused's confession before it, and sentence them without hearing witnesses.[2852]

The witnesses are called by their names, and after they answer, they are detained in the room designated for them, and they do not leave it except in succession to give testimony before the court. Whoever is heard from them remains in the courtroom until the door to the pleadings is closed, unless the court permits them to leave. It is permissible, when necessary, to remove a witness while hearing another witness, and it is permissible for witnesses to confront each other.[2853]

Also, the law does not stipulate that violating these procedures or not indicating that they were followed in the minutes of the session is invalid. All that matters is the assessment of the witness's testimony given in this circumstance.[2854]

Proving that a witness answered in the minutes of the session as if they were present, while they was not present and their statements were read out in the session, is a material error that has no effect on the validity of the ruling.[2855]

As long as the witness has heard in the presence of the accused and has not objected to hearing him, their right to this objection is forfeited if they do not assert it at the appropriate time.[2856]

The law does not require the court to hear all witnesses in one session or to conduct a confrontation between them, even if it allows that.[2857]

The witness's failure to appear despite the adjournment of the case for notification - and even after they has been summoned to appear before the court - does not mean that hearing them has become impossible.[2858]

([2851]) Appeal No. 3053 of 54 Q issued in the session of March 14, 1985 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 403, rule No. 69.

([2852]) Appeal No. 89 of 35 Q issued in the session of May 24, 1965 and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 505, rule No. 102, Appeal No. 396 of 27 Q issued in the session of May 27, 1957 and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 545, rule No. 150, Appeal No. 1259 of 25 Q issued in the session of February 21, 1956 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 7, page No. 254, rule No. 76, Appeal No. 784 of 22 Q issued in the session of October 6, 1952 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 12, rule No. 6.

([2853] Article No. 278 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2854]) Appeal No. 18637 of 84 Q issued in the session of April 14, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 360, Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 9841 of 70 Q issued in the session of March 18, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 485, Rule No. 80, Appeal No. 987 of 33 Q issued in the session of December 9, 1963 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 14, page No. 894, Rule No. 163, Appeal No. 987 of 33 Q issued in the session of December 9, 1963 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 14, page No. 894, Rule No. 163, Appeal No. 681 of 25 Q issued in the session of November 14, 1955 and published in Part Fourth from the Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 1317, Rule No. 388.

([2855] Appeal No. 681 of 25 Q issued in the session of November 14, 1955 and published in Part Four of Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 1317, Rule No. 388.

([2856]) Appeal No. 9841 of 70 Q issued in the session of March 18, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 485, Rule No. 80, Appeal No. 614 of 44 Q issued in the session of June 16, 1974 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 25, page No. 600, Rule No. 128.

([2857] Appeal No. 1782 of year 39 Q issued in the session of February 8, 1970 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 238, rule No. 59.

([2858] Appeal No. 1242 of 52 Q issued in the session of April 29, 1982 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page No. 540, Rule No. 110.

If the witness gives acceptable excuses for their inability to attend, the court may go to them and hear their testimony after notifying the Public Prosecution and the rest of the parties. The opponents may attend in person or through their representatives, and may direct to the witness the questions they deem necessary to direct to him.[2859]

The civil rights claimant is heard as a witness and takes an oath.[2860]

20-1-7 Hearing the witness in private and confronting them with each other or with the accused

The investigator hears each witness individually, and they may confront the witnesses with each other and with the accused.[2861]

The investigator must respect the witness, treat them well, and avoid giving them any hint or statement that would indicate disdain for him, so that they do not reach a state of denying the testimony that would harm justice.[2862]

It is not permissible for the investigator to appear before the witnesses as if they is doubting their statements by making comments or signs that instill fear in their souls and prevent them from stating the facts they claim to have stated.[2863]

Since the legislator stipulated that the investigator should hear each witness individually, and that they may confront the witnesses with each other and with the accused, this did not result in a violation of these procedures being invalid. All that matters is that the court has the right to assess the witness's testimony given in these circumstances.[2864]

It is not permissible to initiate specific questions with the witness in the details of the investigation. Rather, the witness must be left to express their information first without the investigator stopping him, unless it becomes clear to them that what they say is not connected to the subject of the investigation. Then they begin to discuss with them that they has said, to clarify any ambiguity that may have affected it, any apparent contradiction or conflict between it and the statements of those who preceded him, or what they sees as not being consistent with reality and reason, or anything else that requires discussion. The sequence and coherence of the investigation must be taken into account. As for the abundance of useless questions, the investigator will only reap the loss of effort in vain and the investigation will be far from the areas of accuracy, making it a target for the defense's objections, due to the confusion that may be tainted by it or the suggestion and surprise that may be revealed about it. The witness must, as much as possible, clarify the time and place of the incident, the perpetrator, the manner in which it occurred, and the motive for it. The investigator's intelligence does not escape them that accuracy, patience, perseverance, and broad-mindedness greatly help in uncovering subtle or obscure matters.[2865]

If the police officer refuses to mention how they arrested an accused person or how they knew that some of the perpetrators intended to commit a crime, it is sufficient to record that in the

---

([2859] Article No. 281 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2860] Article No. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2861] Articles Nos. 112 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2862] Article No. 162 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
([2863] Article No. 163 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.
([2864]) Appeal No. 1702 of 66 Q issued in the session of January 5, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 50, Rule No. 5, Appeal No. 23075 of 61 Q issued in the session of November 15, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 988, Rule No. 154, and Appeal No. 1316 of 8 Q issued in the session of May 2, 1938 and published in the first part of the Legal Rules Collection No. 4, page No. 226, Rule No. 215.
([2865] Article No. 231 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

investigation report, and they are not asked to state what they refused to mention unless the interests of the investigation require that.[2866]

Members of the Public Prosecution must take the initiative to question the injured, even if their injuries are minor, without waiting for them to recover, unless they learn from the treating physician that there is a danger to the injured person from questioning him, in which case their questioning is postponed to another time, and they must alert the judicial police officers to take this into account in their investigations.[2867]

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [It is established that the defect in the investigation conducted by the prosecution has no effect on the soundness of the ruling. If the prosecution conducts an investigation in the absence of the accused, then that is its right and there is no invalidity in it. The principle is that what matters at trial is the investigation conducted by the court itself. As long as the defense does not ask it to complete any deficiency or defect in the initial investigations, it does not have the right to use that as a reason to prevent it.[2868]

It also ruled that the mere absence of the accused when the witness was questioned does not invalidate their statements.[2869]

20-1-8 The accused requested to hear witnesses.

Witnesses shall be summoned to appear at the request of the parties by one of the bailiffs or the police officers twenty-four hours before the session, excluding travel times, and shall be notified in person or at their place of residence by the methods prescribed in the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law, except in the case of flagrante delicto, in which case they may be summoned to appear at any time, even verbally, by one of the judicial police officers or one of the police officers. The witness may attend the session without notice at the request of the parties.

Without prejudice to the provisions of the first paragraph of this article, the parties shall specify the names of the witnesses, their information and the method of relying on them, and the court shall decide whose testimony it deems necessary to hear. If the court decides that it is not necessary to hear the testimony of any of them, it must state the reasons for that in its ruling.

During the hearing of the case, the court may summon and hear the statements of any person, even by issuing an arrest warrant, if necessary, and it may order that they be summoned to appear at another session.

The court may hear the testimony of any person who appears of their own accord to provide information in the case.[2870]

It is established that when the law outlined the path that the accused follows in announcing the witnesses whom they sees as in their interest to hear before the court, it did not intend thereby to undermine the essential foundations of criminal trials, which are based on the oral investigation that the court conducts in the trial session in the face of the accused and in which it hears the witnesses, whether to prove the charge or to deny it, as long as hearing them is

---

([2866] Article No. 232 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

([2867] Article No. 233 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

([2868] Appeal No. 525 of 50 Q issued in the session of June 15, 1980 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 775, rule No. 150.

([2869]) The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The Public Prosecution may conduct the investigation in the absence of the accused if his presence is not possible, and all that the accused has to do is to insist before the court on what they sees as a defect, and the court's assessment of that falls within its authority, given that the Public Prosecution's investigation is evidence of the case that the court is independent in assessing, and the mere absence of the accused when questioning the witness does not invalidate his statements] Appeal No. 1861 of Year 40 Q issued in the session of March 7, 1971 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 22, page No. 194, Rule No. 47.

([2870] Article No. 277 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

possible, and then it combines what it extracts from their testimony with the total of its belief in the case.[2871]

The defense must respond to its request to hear witnesses to the incident even if they are not mentioned in the list of prosecution witnesses or the accused announces them because they are not considered witnesses for the defense in the full sense of the word so they is obligated to announce them, and because the court is the last resort that must be given space to investigate and investigate the incident in the correct manner, not restricted in that by the actions of the public prosecution in what it states in the list of prosecution witnesses or omitting it from the names of witnesses who witnessed the incident or who may have witnessed it, otherwise the seriousness in the court will be lost and the door of defense will be closed in the face of its unjust approaches, which is something that justice vehemently refuses.[2872]

If the accused does not request to hear the testimony of the civil rights plaintiff, they will not have the right - later - to complain to the court for not taking this action that they did not request from it.[2873]

The trial must be based on the oral investigation conducted by the court in the session, in which it hears the prosecution witnesses in the presence of the accused, as long as it is possible to hear them. It is permissible to suffice with the testimony of the witness if it is impossible to hear them or the accused or their defense accepts that. However, if the defense insists on the necessity of hearing the prosecution witnesses, and the court refuses to respond to its request with an invalid response, then that is considered a violation of the right of defense.[2874]

The courts may, during the examination of the case - in order to complete their conviction and seek to obtain the truth - hear witnesses whose names are not included in the list or who were not announced by the parties - whether on their own initiative or at the request of the parties or based on the witness's presence of their own initiative without being announced, and to summon any person whose testimony they see as beneficial to hear.[2875]

There is nothing in the law that makes notification a condition for hearing the witness. The court may hear the witness's statements even if they have not been notified to attend in accordance with the law, whenever it sees that they may make statements that would reveal the truth. All that the objecting party must do in this case is to present their full defense regarding the statements made by this witness, and the court must work to remove the harm that may befall them in a manner that does not lead to a violation of the right to defense.[2876]

If the witness fails to appear before the court after being summoned, they may be sentenced, after hearing the statements of the Public Prosecution, to pay a fine not exceeding ten pounds in violations, thirty pounds in misdemeanors, and fifty pounds in felonies.

([2871]) Appeal No. 2957 of 66 Q issued in the session of February 15, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 243, rule No. 36, Appeal No. 655 of 50 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 821, rule No. 158.

([2872] Appeal No. 2957 of 66 Q issued in the session of February 15, 1998 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 243, rule No. 36.

([2873]) Appeal No. 18327 of 62 Q issued in the session of May 27, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 663, rule No. 99, Appeal No. 589 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 27, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 1114, rule No. 201.

([2874] Appeal No. 6301 of 61 Q issued in the session of June 9, 1993 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 585, rule No. 87.

([2875] Appeal No. 655 of 50 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1980 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 821, rule No. 158.

([2876] Appeal No. 499 of 37 Q issued in the session of May 8, 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 605, rule No. 116.

If the court deems their testimony necessary, it may adjourn the case to re-submit them to appear, and it may order their arrest and appearance.

If the witness appears after being summoned to appear a second time or of their own accord and presents acceptable excuses, they may be exempted from the fine after hearing the statements of the Public Prosecution.

If the witness does not appear the second time, they may be sentenced to a fine not exceedingly twice the maximum prescribed limit, and the court may order their arrest and bringing them to the same session, or to another session to which the case is adjourned.[2877]

If the witness gives acceptable excuses for their inability to attend, the court may go to them and hear their testimony after notifying the Public Prosecution and the rest of the parties. The opponents may attend in person or through their representatives and may direct to the witness the questions they deem necessary to direct to him.[2878]

The civil rights claimant shall be heard as a witness and shall take an oath, if they so request or the court so requests, either on its own initiative or at the request of the parties.[2879]

The judgment is not flawed if it relies in its judgment of conviction on the statements of the plaintiff in the civil case, as long as the law permits hearing them as a witness.[2880]

If the accused does not request to hear the plaintiff's testimony in civil proceedings, they have no right to complain to the court for not taking a measure that they did not request from it.[2881]

20-1-9 Minutes of hearing witnesses

The investigator shall ask each witness to state their name, surname, age, profession, residence, and relationship to the accused. They shall record this information and the testimony of the witnesses without erasure or interpolation. No correction, deletion, or addition shall be accepted unless it is approved by the investigator, the clerk, and the witness.[2882]

The investigator and the clerk shall sign the testimony, as shall the witness, after it has been read to them and they have acknowledged that they is insisting on it. If they refuse to sign or stamp it, or are unable to do so, this shall be recorded in the minutes, along with the reasons they give. In all cases, both the investigator and the writer shall sign each page first.[2883]

The absence of the witness's signature in the minutes of the prosecution's investigation session does not invalidate the procedures nor does it affect the validity of the ruling based on their statements. What the law stipulates regarding the necessity for the witness to sign their testimony after it has been read to them and their acknowledgement that they insists on it, and to prove the witness's refusal to put their signature or seal in the minutes or their inability to do

---

([2877] Articles Nos. 279 and 280 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2878] Article No. 281 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2879]) Article No. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and see: Appeal No. 149 of Year 37 Q issued in the session of March 27, 1967 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 449, Rule No. 85.
([2880] Appeal No. 145 of 42 Q issued in the session of December 24, 1972 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 23, Page No. 1431, Rule No. 322.
([2881]) Appeal No. 589 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 27, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 1114, rule No. 201, Appeal No. 18327 of 62 Q issued in the session of May 27, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 663, rule No. 99, Appeal No. 1627 of 50 Q issued in the session of January 8, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 32, rule No. 2, Appeal No. 826 of 48 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 136, rule No. 25, Appeal No. 1350 of 42 Q issued in the session of January 22, 1973 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 90, rule No. 22.
([2882] Articles 113 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
([2883] Articles 114 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

so, with mention of the reasons they gives, is only a type of regulatory procedure for which the law does not stipulate invalidity for violating it, in addition to the fact that the investigator's and clerk's signature on the investigation minutes indicates the validity of what was proven in them.[2884]

Witnesses may make their comments on the testimony after hearing the witness's statements, and they may ask the investigating judge to hear the witness' statements on other points they make, and the investigator may always refuse to direct any question that is not related to the case, or that is worded in a way that harms others.[2885]

20-1-10 Witness Protection

Article No. 113 bis of the Criminal Procedure Code stipulates that: "It is not permissible for police officers or investigation authorities to disclose the victim's data in any of the crimes stipulated in Chapter Four of Book Three of the Penal Code issued by Law No. 58 of 1937, or in any of Articles (306 bis/A, 306 bis/B) of the same law, or in Article (96) of the Child Law issued by Law No. 12 of 1996, except to the concerned parties. "[2886]

Whereas the Constitution, in the last paragraph of Article (96), obligated the state - among other things - to protect victims in accordance with what is regulated by law, the Egyptian Constitution stipulated in its last paragraph of Article 96 that it obligated the state, among other things, to protect victims in accordance with what is regulated by law.

The proposed draft law came from the state's keenness to carry out its national responsibilities in protecting the reputation of the victim by not revealing their identity in crimes related to indecent assault, corruption of morals, exposure to others, and harassment stipulated in the Penal Code and the Child Law, for fear that the victim will refrain from reporting these crimes."

The law aims to protect the reputation of the victim by not revealing their identity in crimes related to indecent assault, corruption of morals, exposure to others and harassment stipulated in the Penal Code and the Child Law, for fear that the victim will refrain from reporting these crimes, as Article No. 113 bis added to the Criminal Procedures Law prohibits police officers or investigation authorities from disclosing the victim's data in any of the crimes stipulated in Chapter Four of Book Three of the Penal Code issued by Law No. 58 of 1937, or in any of Articles (306 bis/A, 306 bis/B) of the same law, or in Article (96) of the Child Law issued by Law No. 12 of 1996, except for those concerned.

The explanatory memorandum submitted by the government stated that the amendments aim to protect the reputation of the victim by not revealing their identity in crimes related to indecent assault, corruption of morals, exposure to others and harassment included in the Penal Code and the Child Law, for fear that the victim will refrain from reporting these crimes.

This is especially true since the crimes of indecent assault, corruption of morals, assault of others, and harassment included in the Penal Code and the Child Law issued by Law No. 12 of 1996 are crimes that affect the reputation of the victim, which may be a reason for refraining from reporting for fear of damaging the reputation.

Based on the state's keenness to carry out its national responsibilities in protecting the reputation of the victim by not revealing their identity in crimes related to indecent assault, corruption of morals, assault of others and harassment stipulated in the Penal Code and the Child Law, for fear that the victim will refrain from reporting these crimes.

([2884]) Appeal No. 10461 of 80 Q issued in the session of January 4, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1649 of 28 Q issued in the session of January 12, 1959 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 10, page No. 15, Rule No. 4.

([2885] Articles 115 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2886] Article No. 113 bis of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Article 113 bis came about because some victims were reluctant to report crimes committed against them for fear - from their point of view - of scandal, and to address the phenomenon of reluctance to report in these cases for fear of being defamed, and to avoid any negative effects resulting from announcing them, by creating a sub-file with the investigator that will be presented to the court when necessary, which is a procedure that does not prejudice anything and the investigation will not be affected by this procedure, because only the person's data will be withheld.

The legislator aims to protect the reputation of the victim by not revealing their identity in crimes related to indecent assault, corruption of morals, exposure to others and harassment stipulated in the Penal Code and the Child Law, for fear that the victim will refrain from reporting these crimes.

Disclosing the data of victims is a procedural violation and does not constitute a punishable crime. It is a procedural violation that only results in the invalidity of the disclosure according to the Criminal Procedure Code as well. Therefore, it does not constitute a punishable crime according to the law, although this violation may constitute a reason for a civil lawsuit for compensation later if it is proven to have been committed.

The text of the article is limited to prohibiting the data of victims in cases of sexual assault and endangering the life of a child only, and the prohibition does not include the data of witnesses to the incident.

The legislator prohibited law enforcement officers or investigation authorities from disclosing the victim's data in any of the crimes related to indecent assault, corruption of morals, exposure to others, and harassment contained in the Penal Code and the Child Law, for fear that the victim would refrain from reporting these crimes.

This comes especially since the crimes of indecent assault, corruption of morals, exposure to others, and harassment stipulated in the Penal Code and the Child Law issued by Law No. 12 of 1996 are crimes that affect the reputation of the victim, which may be a reason to refrain from reporting for fear of damaging the reputation except to those concerned. Article No. 113 bis of the Criminal Procedure Code stipulates that: "It is not permissible for police officers or investigation authorities to disclose the victim's data in any of the crimes stipulated in Chapter Four of Book Three of the Penal Code issued by Law No. 58 of 1937, or in any of Articles (306 bis/a, 306 bis/b) of the same law, or in Article (96) of the Child Law issued by Law No. 12 of 1996, except to those concerned" ([2887]

Reporting crimes is generally considered one of the basic human rights guaranteed by international conventions and national legislation. In fact, this right often rises to the level of a duty when exercised by public employees, as reporting a crime can often prevent it from occurring, as well as avoid the serious consequences that may result from it, which contributes to building trust and reassurance in society, and leads to enhancing the participation of individuals in particular and society in general in combating crime in all its forms, and assisting public authorities in carrying out their duties in this regard.

The United Nations Convention against Corruption recognizes the right of civil society, non-governmental organizations, individuals and local organizations to actively participate in preventing, combating and exposing corruption.

The Egyptian Constitution also recognized the right of every individual to report in Article 85, which states that: "Every individual has the right to address the public authorities in writing and with their signature. Addressing them may not be in the name of groups except for legal ([2887] Article No. 113 bis of the Criminal Procedure Code, added by Law No. 177 of 2020.

persons." The right to report is also supported by Article 25 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which states that: "Everyone who learns of the occurrence of a crime for which the Public Prosecution may file a lawsuit without a complaint or request shall notify the Public Prosecution or one of the judicial police officers of it."

Accordingly, the legislator has established the general rule in Article 25 of the Code of Criminal Procedure based on a constitutional principle stipulated in Article 85 of the Constitution, thereby establishing an inherent right for every citizen to report crimes whenever they are punishable without requiring that the reporter be the victim himself or any of their relatives, in-laws or those related to him. It is an absolute right for all, the only restriction on which is that the crime should not be one of the crimes that the law has subjected to the restriction of a complaint or request as a restriction on the right of the Public Prosecution to initiate criminal proceedings in this regard, such as crimes of adultery and theft between parents and children, for which the legislator required the victim to submit a complaint to the Public Prosecution in order for it to have the right to initiate public proceedings against their perpetrators, and the victim remains the owner of the right to the lawsuit and its continuation or not, and such as the crimes stipulated in Articles 8 and 9 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for which the Public Prosecution must have the right to initiate public proceedings in them, that this be preceded by a request from the Minister of Justice or the head of the competent authority or department.

The legislator has criminalized ordering the torture of any accused person in order to force them to confess. Article 126 of the Penal Code states that: "Any public employee or worker who orders the torture of an accused person or does so himself in order to force them to confess shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment or imprisonment from three to ten years."

If the victim dies, the penalty prescribed for premeditated murder shall be imposed.

Article 129 of the Penal Code also criminalizes the use of cruelty by an employee towards people based on their job, stating that: "Every public employee or worker and every person charged with a public service who uses cruelty towards people based on their job, such that they violates their honor or causes them physical pain, shall be punished by imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year or a fine not exceeding two hundred Egyptian pounds."

To encourage witnesses to report crimes, the legislator has permitted the reporting of crimes if the report is submitted to judicial and administrative authorities, and if the reporting party has reported truthfully and in good faith against the person being reported against, and with a matter that requires punishment for its perpetrator, i.e. a prohibited act. Article 303 of the Penal Code stipulates that "slander shall be punished by a fine of not less than five thousand pounds and not more than fifteen thousand pounds." If the slander is committed against a public employee or a person with a public representative capacity or charged with a public service, and it is due to the performance of the job, representation or public service, the penalty shall be a fine of not less than ten thousand pounds and not more than twenty thousand pounds. Article 304 of the Penal Code stipulates that "this penalty shall not be imposed on anyone who informs the judicial or administrative rulers, truthfully and without malicious intent, of a matter that requires the punishment of its perpetrator." This means that the following conditions must be met in order for the action of the informant to be permissible:

The notification must be made to one of the judicial or administrative judges, who are public authority officials responsible for receiving reports and taking the measures that result from the notification, or to administrative officials with regard to administrative and disciplinary violations committed by public employees.

The report must be true, and the intended meaning of the truth of the incident is its validity in itself. The reporter benefits from permission if they submit their report and supports it with the evidence they knows, or if they does not support it with any evidence, but the validity of their report is confirmed based on procedures carried out by the public authorities.

And that this be done in good faith, meaning that the reporter aims to achieve the public interest and assist the public authorities in identifying crimes and their perpetrators. Good faith is negated if the reporter knows that the report is false or believes it to be true but aims to defame the person against whom the report is made.

Finally, the matter reported must require punishment for its perpetrator, i.e. it constitutes a criminal act punishable by law or disciplinary action, in the case of public employees.

Thus, the reason for permissibility is that society has a fundamental interest in knowing about crimes that are committed in order to take the measures specified by law regarding them. Whoever informs the public authorities achieves this interest in society.

The Court of Cassation has ruled that: [It is established that the basic element in the crime of false reporting is the intentional lying in reporting, and this requires that the reporter be certain of the fact that they reported is false and that the person against whom the report is made is innocent of it. In order for the ruling that the report is false to be valid, the court must prove with certainty that this certain knowledge is available and must support this in its ruling with evidence that it produces rationally.[2888]

It ruled that: [It is legally established that in order to establish the crime of false reporting, two elements must be present: proof of the falsehood of the reported facts, that the perpetrator knew of their falsehood and intended to harm the victim, and that the matter reported is something that requires punishment for its perpetrator even if no lawsuit is filed regarding what they reported] ([2889]

From the above, it is clear that when the legislator decided on the reason for permission referred to in Article 304 of the Penal Code, they intended by that cases of truthful reporting of criminal or disciplinary incidents for which the perpetrator must be punished. Therefore, they did not impose responsibility on the reporter except in the case of false reporting in order to protect the rights of others. However, they may benefit from the reason for permission in the case of truthful reporting in order to protect people and encourage them to report crimes and fight corruption.

20-1-11 Witness Swearing Oath

Witnesses who have reached the age of fourteen must take an oath before giving testimony that they are testifying to the truth and telling nothing but the truth.

Witnesses who have not reached the age of fourteen may be heard without taking an oath as evidence. [2890]

The principle is that a witness must be truthful in their testimony. In order to force them to be truthful, the law requires witnesses who have reached the age of fourteen to take an oath before giving testimony that they are testifying to the truth and will only tell the truth. If the witness refuses to take the oath or to answer in circumstances other than those in which the law permits them to do so, they shall be sentenced in cases of violations to a fine not exceeding ten pounds, and in cases of misdemeanors and felonies to a fine not exceeding two hundred pounds.

([2888] Appeal No. 1067 of 41 Q issued in the session of May 14, 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 691, rule No. 155.
([2889] Appeal No. 203 of 40 Q issued in the session of April 5, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 21, page No. 514, rule No. 124.
([2890] Articles Nos. 116 and 283 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

If the witness changes their mind before the closing of the pleadings, they will be exempted from all or part of the penalty imposed on him.[2891]

Testimony is not valid unless it is preceded by an oath that the testimony is to be true and that the witness only tells the truth.

The swearing of a witness is one of the guarantees that were legislated for the benefit of the accused, because the oath reminds the witness of the God who is in charge of every soul and warns them of their wrath if they decides otherwise, and because it is suspected that this intimidation may result in the witness making statements in the interest of the accused that may be accepted by the judge and they may take them as a basis for forming their belief, and it is not permissible for invalidity to result from taking this guarantee that was intended to compel the witness to tell the truth.[2892]

However, the oath is stipulated in the interest of the opponents. If the witness is heard without taking the oath, and in the presence of the defendant's lawyer without any objection from him, then this results in the loss of their right to claim its invalidity.[2893]

This means that the elements of testimony are not legally complete except by taking an oath. However, the failure to take an oath does not negate the fact that the statements made by the witness without taking an oath are testimony.[2894]

The Court of Cassation ruled: [Even though the elements of testimony are not legally complete unless the witness takes an oath, this does not negate the fact that the statements made by the witness without taking an oath are testimony. A witness, in the language, is someone who has seen and observed something. Testimony is a noun derived from observation, which is seeing something with one's own eyes. The law, in Article 283 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, considers a person a witness simply by calling them to testify, whether they testifie after taking

---

([2891]) Articles No. 283 and 284 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and see: Appeal No. 1280 of Year 61 Q issued in the session of November 9, 1992 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 43, page No. 1014, Rule No. 156.

([2892]) Appeal No. 987 of 33 Q issued in the session of December 9, 1963 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 14, page No. 894, rule No. 163, Appeal No. 7 of 31 Q issued in the session of April 17, 1961 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 442, rule No. 82.

([2893]) Appeal No. 168 of 27 Q issued in the session of April 1, 1957 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 8, page No. 322, rule No. 86, Appeal No. 2443 of 24 Q issued in the session of February 26, 1955 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 6, page No. 573, rule No. 186

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [If the witness takes the legal oath and then testifies, there is no need to have them re-swear if the court deems it necessary to clarify matters related to what they previously stated or new facts. This is because the oath taken by the witness applies to everything they testifies in the case] Appeal No. 1189 of the 7th year of the Q issued in the session of May 10, 1937 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 4, Part No. 1, Page No. 71, Rule No. 80.

([2894]) Appeal No. 4307 of 81 Q issued in the session of January 9, 2013 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page No. 59, rule No. 8, Appeal No. 66149 of 75 Q issued in the session of April 4, 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 493, rule No. 56, Appeal No. 4184 of 73 Q issued in the session of September 29, 2003 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 884, rule No. 120, Appeal No. 5769 of 60 Q issued in the session of March 11, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 159, rule No. 37, Appeal No. 1280 of 61 Q issued in the session of November 9, 1992 and published in the first part of the Office Book Technical No. 43, Page No. 1014, Rule No. 156, Appeal No. 4060 for the year 57 Q issued in the session of February 10, 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, Page No. 269, Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 3604 for the year 57 Q issued in the session of November 12, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, Page No. 960, Rule No. 175, Appeal No. 190 for the year 43 Q issued in the session of April 16, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page No. 525, Rule No. 109, Appeal No. 1137 for the year 38 Q issued in the session of October 21, 1968 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 19, Page No. 841, Rule No. 166, Appeal No. 1891 for the year 34 Q issued in the session of March 1, 1965 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 187, Rule No. 40.

the oath or without taking it. Therefore, the ruling is not flawed by describing the statements of the victim who did not take the oath as testimony.[2895]

Anyone other than the accused against whom the criminal case has been brought, whose testimony contains information related to the case, both for proof and denial, is a witness who the law requires to take an oath before giving testimony, provided that they have reached the age of fourteen years.[2896]

The law also punishes false testimony and helping the perpetrator to escape justice by providing incorrect information related to the crime. Swearing a witness is one of the guarantees that were legislated for the benefit of the accused, because the oath reminds the witness of the God who is in charge of their soul and warns them of their wrath if they decides otherwise, and because it is suspected that this intimidation may result in the witness making statements in the interest of the accused that may be accepted by the judge, who may take them as a basis for forming their belief.[2897]

It is established that the statements of one accused against another accused are not considered testimony in the strict sense, since the accused does not take an oath, so their statements are not considered legal testimony as evidence of proof, although there is no harm in the court calling these statements testimony in deviating from the principle, considering them as evidence of conviction in the case. Accordingly, it is not permissible to hear the statements of the accused as a witness unless the accusation against them is finally cleared.[2898]

There is nothing in the law that prevents the court from accepting statements heard as evidence from someone who was accused in the same incident after it was decided not to file a criminal case against them if it finds them to be truthful.[2899]

The accused or their defense attorney must explicitly object to hearing the testimony of a witness without an oath. If the testimony is given in their presence and they do not object, then they has lost their right to claim this invalidity, which is related to one of the investigation procedures in the session, in accordance with Article 333 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The judgment will not be flawed - subsequently - if it relied on this testimony.[2900]

([2895] Appeal No. 1137 of 38 Q issued in the session of October 21, 1968 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 19, Page No. 841, Rule No. 166.

([2896] Appeal No. 26183 of 67 Q issued in the session of March 12, 2000 and published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page No. 272, Rule No. 51.

([2897] Appeal No. 1891 of year 34 Q issued in the session of March 1, 1965 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 16, page No. 187, rule No. 40.

([2898] Appeal No. 13196 of 76 Q issued in the session of May 18, 2006 and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, Page No. 636, Rule No. 69.

([2899]) Appeal No. 5769 of 60 Q issued in the session of March 11, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 159, rule No. 37, Appeal No. 884 of 22 Q issued in the session of July 2, 1953 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 1064, rule No. 370

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [Deprivation from giving testimony under oath for a group of persons sentenced to a felony is in fact a punishment whose apparent meaning is to belittle these persons and treat them as persons lacking legal capacity throughout the term of the sentence. Upon its expiration, their eligibility to give testimony under oath returns to them. It is not a deprivation of a right or privilege as long as what is observed in giving testimony before the courts is to uphold the interests of justice. If such persons take an oath during the period of being deprived of taking it, there is no invalidity, since invalidity cannot result from taking a precautionary guarantee stipulated by the law when it required taking an oath to force the witness to tell the truth], Appeal No. 7 of Year 31 Q issued in the session of April 17, 1961 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 442, Rule No. 82.

([2900] The first paragraph of Article 333 of the Code of Criminal Procedure states that: "..." The right to plead the invalidity of the procedures related to gathering evidence, the preliminary investigation, or the investigation in the session in misdemeanors and felonies shall be forfeited if the accused has a lawyer and the procedure took place in his presence without his objection... ".

The civil rights claimant is heard as a witness and takes an oath.[2901]

The civil rights plaintiff's swearing of an oath was not legislated to protect him, neither as a witness nor as a plaintiff, but rather as a guarantee for the accused against whom the testimony was given. Therefore, the civil rights plaintiff who did not swear the oath and whose testimony was not accepted by the court against the accused cannot complain about the procedures for their failure to swear the oath.[2902]

20-1-12 The witness cannot be rejected

Witnesses may not be rejected for any reason.[2903]

While it is permissible for the accused's ascendants, descendants, relatives, in-laws up to the second degree, and their spouse, even after the marital bond has ended, to refrain from testifying against him, unless the crime was committed against the witness or against one of their closest relatives or in-laws, or if they was the one who reported it, or if there is no other evidence to prove it.[2904]

This means that the witness does not refrain from testifying about the facts that they saw or heard, even if the person testifying against them is a relative or their spouse. Rather, they is exempted from giving testimony if they so wishes.[2905]

Accepting the testimony of a witness, even if they are a relative of the victim, is a matter left to the court's satisfaction with the veracity of what they testified to.[2906]

20-1-13 The witness's right to refrain from giving testimony

The witness must be completely neutral and must not have a personal interest that conflicts with their testimony, or conflicts with their capacity in the case with the capacity of the witness. The witness may refrain from testifying against the accused, their ancestors, descendants, relatives, and in-laws up to the second degree, and their wife, even after the marital bond has ended, unless the crime was committed against the witness or against one of their closest relatives or in-laws, or if they was the one who reported it, or if there is no other evidence to prove it.[2907]

However, if the witness appears before the investigator and refuses to testify or take the oath, the investigating judge in the cases they is investigating shall sentence them to a fine not exceeding two hundred pounds, after hearing the statements of the Public Prosecution. If the Public Prosecution is the one investigating the case, the judgment shall be issued against the

---

See: Appeal No. 3381 of Year 50 Q issued in the session of May 14, 1981 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 507, Rule No. 89.

([2901] Article No. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2902] Appeal No. 79 of 23 Q issued in the session of March 30, 1953 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 662, rule No. 240.

([2903] Articles Nos. 116, 208, 285 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2904] Articles Nos. 285 and 286 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2905]) Appeal No. 17203 of 83 Q issued in the session of May 12, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page No. 369, rule No. 41, Appeal No. 3506 of 78 Q issued in the session of December 17, 2008 and published in Technical Office Book No. 59, page No. 557, rule No. 99, Appeal No. 6281 of 53 Q issued in the session of March 27, 1984 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 353, rule No. 76, Appeal No. 826 of 48 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1978 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 136, rule No. 25, Appeal No. 1970 of 30 Q issued in the session of March 7, 1961 and published in the part The first of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 324, Rule No. 62, Appeal No. 1194 for the year 29 Q issued in the session of February 2, 1960 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 128, Rule No. 26.

([2906] Appeal No. 136 of 25 Q issued in the session of May 31, 1955 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 6, Page No. 1056, Rule No. 310.

([2907] Articles Nos. 116 and 286 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

witness if they refuse to testify or take the oath by the partial judge in the jurisdiction in which the witness was requested to appear, according to the usual circumstances.[2908]

If the witness is a relative or spouse of the person against whom they testify, they are not prevented from testifying about the facts they saw or heard, but they are exempt from giving testimony if they so wish. In this regard, the Court of Cassation ruled that: [The meaning of the text of Article 286 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that the witness is not prevented from testifying about the facts they saw or heard, even if the person against whom they testify is a relative or spouse, but they are exempted from giving testimony if they so wishes. As for the text of Article 67 of the Evidence Law, it prevents one of the spouses from disclosing without the consent of the other what they may have informed them of during the marriage, even after its expiration, except in the case of a lawsuit filed by one of them due to a felony or misdemeanor committed by them against the other. Since it is clear from the attached details that these two witnesses did not request to be exempted from giving testimony or objected to giving it, and it was established from the records of the contested judgment that they testified to what they saw or heard during the incident, then their testimony is beyond invalidity and it is valid in law to base the judgment on To their sayings.[2909]

The prohibition stipulated in the Evidence Law that neither spouse may disclose, without the consent of the other, what was communicated to him/her during the marriage, even after its separation, only applies in the event that a lawsuit is filed by one of them against the other or a lawsuit is filed against one of them due to a felony or misdemeanor committed by him/her against the other. However, if the felony or misdemeanor was committed by one of the spouses against another, this prohibition does not apply. Article No. 67 of the Evidence Law states that: “Neither spouse may disclose, without the consent of the other, what was communicated to him/her during the marriage, even after its separation, except in the event that a lawsuit is filed by one of them against the other or a lawsuit is filed against one of them due to a felony or misdemeanor committed by him/her against the other. ”[2910]

The Court of Cassation ruled that the testimony of the accused’s wife against them in the crime of killing her grandmother was valid, as long as the accused did not show their dissatisfaction with that during the investigations.[2911]

Exemption from testimony is a license granted to a relative or spouse and is subject to their request. It is permissible to hear their testimony and rely on it as long as they do not object to its performance.[2912]

The failure of the investigator to alert the witness to her right to refrain from testifying against her husband does not invalidate the investigations because this permission is granted to the wife, so if she wants to use it, she must express her desire to use this permission that the law has granted her. However, if she does not do so, her testimony is valid in law, and it is permissible to rely on it as evidence.[2913]

The exemption from testifying against a relative or spouse is also conditional upon the witness having learned of that testimony from the husband or relative. If they learned of it through

---

([2908] Articles Nos. 119 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2909] Appeal No. 61170 of 74 Q issued in the session of July 21, 2005 (unpublished).

([2910] Article No. 67 of the Law of Evidence in Civil and Commercial Matters.

([2911]) Appeal No. 17203 of 83 Q issued in the session of May 12, 2014 and published in Technical Office Book No. 65, Page No. 369, Rule No. 41.

([2912]) Appeal No. 3506 of 78 Q issued in the session of December 17, 2008 and published in Technical Office Book No. 59, Page No. 557, Rule No. 99.

([2913]) Appeal No. 6281 of 53 Q issued in the session of March 27, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 353, rule No. 76, Appeal No. 826 of 48 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 136, rule No. 25.

another source, there is no room for applying for that exemption. The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The meaning of Article 286 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that the witness is not prevented from testifying about the facts they saw or heard, even if the person testifying against them is a relative or spouse. Rather, they are exempted from testifying if they wishes. As for Article 209 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it prevents one of the spouses from disclosing, without the consent of the other, what they may have informed them of during the marriage, even after its expiration, except in the case of a lawsuit filed by one of them due to a felony or misdemeanor committed by them against the other. Since it is proven from what the judgment stated that what the appellant's wife testified to was not conveyed to her by her husband, but rather she testified to what she saw and heard, her testimony is beyond invalidity, and it is valid in law for the judgment to be based on her statement.[2914]

20-1-14 Preventing a witness from testifying or exempting them from giving testimony

The rules stipulated in the Code of Civil Procedure apply before criminal courts to prevent a witness from giving testimony or to exempt them from giving it.[2915]

The Evidence Law stipulates that: "Employees and those charged with public service shall not testify, even after they have left work, about information that came to their knowledge during their work that was not published legally and that the competent authority did not authorize its broadcast. However, this authority may authorize them to testify based on a request from the court or one of the parties. "[2916]

It also stipulated that: "Any lawyer, agent, doctor, or other person who learns of an incident or information through their profession or trade may not disclose it, even after the end of their service or the loss of their position, unless mentioning it to them was intended to commit a felony or misdemeanor."

However, the aforementioned persons must testify to that fact or information whenever requested to do so by the person who confided it to them, provided that this does not prejudice the provisions of the laws pertaining to them. "[2917]

The Law of Advocacy stipulates that: "The lawyer must refrain from testifying about facts or information that they have learned through their profession if they is asked to do so by the person who informed them of them, unless they mentioned them to them with the intent to commit a felony or misdemeanor. "[2918]

However, the Court of Cassation stipulated that the testimony of the defendant's lawyer against their client should be invalid if their statements were in the same case brought before the court or in a case related to it. However, if the lawyer was the appellant's representative in a case other than the case in which the defendant was being tried, then this restriction would be irrelevant. It ruled that: [It is established that although the court may not rely on any of the lawyer's statements in convicting the defendant, otherwise its ruling would be invalid because it was based on invalid evidence derived from the statements of their lawyer, the condition for ruling this invalidity is that what the ruling was based on was derived from the lawyer's statements in the same case brought before the court or in a case related to it, as stated in

---

([2914]) Appeal No. 1970 of 30 Q issued in the session of March 7, 1961 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 324, Rule No. 62, Appeal No. 1194 of 29 Q issued in the session of February 2, 1960 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 11, page No. 128, Rule No. 26.

([2915]) Articles Nos. 116 and 287 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2916]) Article 65 of the Law of Evidence in Civil and Commercial Matters.

([2917] Article 66 of the Law of Evidence in Civil and Commercial Matters.

([2918] Article No. 65 of the Lawyers' Law.

Article 32 of the Penal Code. However, if the lawyer was the appellant's representative in a case other than the case in which the defendant was being tried, then this restriction would be irrelevant. It was evident from the minutes of the trial sessions that the aforementioned lawyer was not the appellant's defender in the present case, and therefore did not make statements in it that it can be said that the appealed ruling relied on them in its ruling of conviction. Therefore, what the appellant raises in this regard It is not correct.[2919]

It ruled that: [It is established that Article 65 of the Lawyers' Law stipulates that "the lawyer must refrain from testifying about facts or information that they learned through their profession if requested to do so by the person who informed them of them, unless they mentioned them to them with the intention of committing a felony or misdemeanor." This is consistent with what is stipulated in Article 66 of Law No. 25 of 1968 promulgating the Evidence Law, which states that the lawyer must testify about facts that they saw or heard when requested to do so by the person who confided in them to him. However, they is prohibited from disclosing without the consent of their client what they may have informed them of due to their profession, and whenever that was the case, and it was established from the minutes of the trial session and the records of the contested judgment that the lawyer who testified about what they learned and heard about a fact related to the case based on the request of the civil rights plaintiffs and without objection from the accused appellant to that, their testimony is immune from invalidity and the judgment may be based on it] ([2920]

The Court also ruled: [The principle of giving testimony before the judiciary when its conditions are met is that it is a duty required to reach the recognition of the truth in disputes and to prove or deny the accusation. The witness is not exempted from providing everything they knows and does not withhold except in the special cases specified by law, including the prohibition of testimony to disclose a professional secret stipulated in Article 207 of the Code of Civil Procedure, unless the person who confided it to them is asked to disclose it. The witness must then give testimony in accordance with Article 208 of that law, the text of which indicates that the prohibition of testimony in this case is not an absolute prohibition. Modern legislation tends to give priority to the public interest in reaching the truth, especially if it concerns the interest of the group. For example, the French legislator added a second paragraph to Article 378 of the French Penal Code by decree-law issued on July 29, 1939, in which they permitted doctors and other professionals, if called upon to testify, to disclose any secrets they have in abortion incidents without being subject to punishment. The article stated: 622 of the Italian Penal Code stipulates that the disclosure of professional secrets is punishable unless such disclosure is for a legitimate reason. The last paragraph of Article 321 of the Swiss law issued on December 21, 1937 stipulates that the prohibition of the disclosure of professional secrets does not prevent professionals from being obligated to give testimony before the courts. Since this was the case, and since the legislator, when they enacted Article 310 of the Penal Code, did not generalize its ruling, but rather specified the text to the category of doctors, surgeons, pharmacists, midwives, and others, and specified the circumstances in which they are prohibited from disclosing secrets that their owner is forced to entrust them with, considering that the nature of their work requires this disclosure, and they are in the process of providing their services to the public, it is not correct to expand this exception by extending its ruling to those other than those mentioned in the text, such as servants, clerks, private employees, and the like, since their employers are not forced to inform them of the acts they commit that violate the law] ([2921]

([2919] Appeal No. 6067 of 79 Q issued in the session of December 16, 2009 (unpublished).
([2920] Appeal No. 69622 of 74 Q issued in the session of October 22, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, Page No. 558, Rule No. 97.
([2921] Appeal No. 884 of 22 Q issued in the session of July 2, 1953 and published in Part Three of Technical Office Book No. 4, Page No. 1064, Rule No. 370.

20-1-15 Hearing the testimony of the civil rights plaintiff

The investigator may hear the civil rights claimant as a witness and take an oath.[2922]

There is no legal impediment to preventing the victim, even if they did not file a civil suit, from being a witness and taking an oath. They are not an opponent of the accused and is not a party to the criminal case, and they may be the most important witness in it. There is no impediment to the court accepting their testimony and then assessing it as it deserves and relying on it in forming its conviction.[2923]

It is clear from the text of Article 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that hearing the statements of the civil rights claimant is not obligatory for the investigator. The Court of Cassation ruled that the civil rights claimant is heard as a witness and takes an oath. If the accused does not request hearing the testimony of the civil rights claimant in accordance with the provisions of this article, then they will not have the right - subsequently - to complain to the court for not taking this procedure that they did not request from it.[2924]

The civil plaintiff's oath was made a guarantee for the accused against whom the testimony was testified. Therefore, the civil plaintiff who did not take the oath and whose testimony was not accepted by the court against the accused cannot complain about the procedures because they did not take the oath.[2925]

20-1-16 Dispensing with hearing witnesses and reading their statements in the session

The court may decide to read the testimony given in the preliminary investigation, in the evidence collection report, or before the expert, if it is impossible to hear the witness for any reason.[2926]

The law guaranteed the defense the freedom to express whatever it deems useful in terms of statements, requests, and arguments before the court required to adjudicate the case, and at the same time to request the court to hear what it expresses to it and respond to it if it sees fit to accept it or reject it, with a statement of what justifies not responding to it. The Criminal Procedures Law guaranteed the inclusion of provisions related to the principle of oral pleading, the purpose of which was to present the elements of the case and make them subject to the consideration of the opponents in the session to examine and discuss them orally before the court according to what the opponents see as achieving their interest in this regard. The principle in criminal rulings was to be based on the pleading that takes place before the judge

---

([2922] Articles No. 116 and 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and Article No. 528 of the Judicial Instructions of the Public Prosecution.

([2923]) Appeal No. 5587 of 80 Q issued in the session of January 17, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1350 of 42 Q issued in the session of January 22, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 90, Rule No. 22, Appeal No. 145 of 42 Q issued in the session of December 24, 1972 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 1431, Rule No. 322, Appeal No. 192 of 7 Q issued in the session of December 21, 1931 and published in the Legal Rules Collection, Book Four, Part One, page No. 24, Rule No. 24.

([2924]) Appeal No. 18327 of 62 Q issued in the session of May 27, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 663, rule No. 99, Appeal No. 589 of 59 Q issued in the session of December 27, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 1114, rule No. 201, Appeal No. 1627 of 50 Q issued in the session of January 8, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 32, rule No. 2, Appeal No. 826 of 48 Q issued in the session of February 6, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 136, rule No. 25, Appeal No. 149 of 37 Q issued in the session of March 27, 1967 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 449, rule No. 85.

([2925] Appeal No. 79 of 23 Q issued in the session of March 30, 1953 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 662, rule No. 240.

([2926] Article No. 289 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

who issued the ruling and on the oral investigation that they conducted himself, as the basis of the criminal trial is the freedom of the judge to form their belief from the oral investigation that they conducts himself and in which they hears the witnesses as long as hearing them is possible, independently in obtaining this belief from the confidence that the witness's statements suggest or do not suggest, and the court may not encroach on this principle stipulated in Article 289 of the Criminal Procedures Law, which The law assumes it in the rules of trial for any reason whatsoever, unless it is impossible to hear the witness for any reason, or the accused or their defense accepts that explicitly or implicitly. If the defense insists on hearing and discussing the only prosecution witness in the case, and the court rejects this request without addressing it in its ruling and justifying the reason for rejecting it with valid reasons, and does not ask the accused and their attorney to complete their argument and present their request and other aspects of defense, then it will have violated the principle of oral pleading and the appellant's right to defense.[2927]

The principle in criminal judgments is that they are based on the pleadings that take place before the same judge who issued the judgment, and on the oral investigation that they conducted himself, since the basis of the trial is the freedom of the judge to form their belief from the oral investigation that they conducts and in which they hears the witnesses as long as hearing them is possible, obtaining this belief from the confidence that the witness's statements suggest or do not suggest, and from the effect that these statements have on their soul while they listens to them, which is based on the court that decided the case must hear the witness as long as hearing them is possible, and the accused or their defense lawyer did not waive that explicitly or implicitly, because examining the witness's psychological state at the time of giving testimony, their integrity, frankness, or evasiveness and confusion are among the matters that help the judge to assess their statements properly.[2928]

However, the law does not require, when changing the court panel, that the trial procedures be repeated or witnesses be heard before the new panel unless the accused or their defense attorney insists on that.[2929]

Although the principle is that a criminal trial must be based on the oral investigation conducted by the court in the session and in which it hears witnesses as long as this is possible, it is valid for it to decide to read the statements of witnesses if it is impossible to hear their testimony or if the accused or their defense accepts this, whether this acceptance is explicit or implicit by the behavior of the accused or their defense in a way that indicates it, the principle is that witnesses must be heard, but this rule has two restrictions: the first is that hearing the witness should not

---

([2927]) Appeal No. 4274 of 75 Q issued in the session of October 23, 2012 and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 565, Rule No. 98, Appeal No. 20676 of 61 Q issued in the session of October 14, 1993 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page No. 814, Rule No. 126.

([2928]) Appeal No. 1565 of 81 Q issued in the session of October 7, 2012 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 63, page No. 433, rule No. 75, Appeal No. 76701 of 75 Q issued in the session of November 26, 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 913, rule No. 102, Appeal No. 10228 of 71 Q issued in the session of November 15, 2001 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, page No. 861, rule No. 165, Appeal No. 23107 of 67 Q issued in the session of December 14, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page No. 680, rule No. 151, Appeal No. 17463 of 64 Q issued in the session of September 29, 1996 And published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 909, rule No. 129, appeal No. 154 for year 59 Q issued in the session of April 6, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 661, rule No. 112, appeal No. 4578 for year 57 Q issued in the session of January 4, 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 70, rule No. 4, appeal No. 1605 for year 55 Q issued in the session of October 2, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 36, page No. 801, rule No. 141, appeal No. 735 for year 53 Q issued in the session of May 18, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page No. 650, rule No. 131, appeal No. 1370 of 41 BC issued in the session of February 14, 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 156, Rule No. 39.

([2929]) Appeal No. 3765 of 58 Q issued in the session of November 9, 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page No. 1026, rule No. 155, Appeal No. 270 of 44 Q issued in the session of April 7, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 25, page No. 390, rule No. 84.

be impossible; and the second is that the accused or their defense insists on hearing him, so that it is not assumed that they has accepted explicitly or implicitly that their statements in the investigation are sufficient.[2930]

([2930]) Appeal No. 5249 of Judicial Year 62, issued on April 19, 1994, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page 541, Case No. 88; Appeal No. 6854 of Judicial Year 62, issued on March 8, 1994, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page 381, Case No. 55; Appeal No. 7098 of Judicial Year 55, issued on March 18, 1986, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page 419, Case No. 86; Appeal No. 1089 of Judicial Year 45, issued on October 20, 1975, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page 615, Case No. 138; Appeal No. 12550 of Judicial Year 86, issued on April 8, 2018; Appeal No. 8268 of Judicial Year 87, issued on June 15, 2019; Appeal No. 42222 of Judicial Year 85, issued on February 25, 2018; Appeal No. 10284 of Judicial Year 85, issued on November 25, 2017; Appeal No. 29658 of Judicial Year 86, issued on June 7, 2017; Appeal No. 14963 of Judicial Year 86, issued on March 14, 2017; Appeal No. 12673 of Judicial Year 85, issued on September 3, 2016; Appeal No. 7205 of Judicial Year 85, issued on June 1, 2016; Appeal No. 10175 of Judicial Year 85, issued on January 14, 2016; Appeal No. 28620 of Judicial Year 84, issued on June 14, 2015; Appeal No. 13703 of Judicial Year 84, issued on May 6, 2015, and published in Volume 66 of the Technical Office Book, page 437, Case No. 61; Appeal No. 26166 of Judicial Year 84, issued on April 8, 2015; Appeal No. 1249 of Judicial Year 82, issued on April 7, 2014; Appeal No. 4898 of Judicial Year 82, issued on December 1, 2013, and published in Volume 64 of the Technical Office Book, page 967, Case No. 148; Appeal No. 1537 of Judicial Year 78, issued on November 4, 2013; Appeal No. 3233 of Judicial Year 81, issued on November 18, 2012; Appeal No. 5932 of Judicial Year 81, issued on October 20, 2012; Appeal No. 18292 of Judicial Year 75, issued on November 13, 2012, and published in Volume 63 of the Technical Office Book, page 678, Case No. 121; Appeal No. 4476 of Judicial Year 81, issued on July 4, 2012; Appeal No. 7956 of Judicial Year 81, issued on May 28, 2012; Appeal No. 8015 of Judicial Year 81, issued on March 20, 2012, and published in Volume 63 of the Technical Office Book, page 308, Case No. 48; Appeal No. 13368 of Judicial Year 80, issued on December 7, 2011, and published in Volume 62 of the Technical Office Book, page 435, Case No. 72; Appeal No. 2180 of Judicial Year 80, issued on July 27, 2010; Appeal No. 15289 of Judicial Year 73, issued on March 8, 2010; Appeal No. 31092 of Judicial Year 73, issued on March 8, 2010; Appeal No. 3386 of Judicial Year 79, issued on December 3, 2009, and published in Volume 60 of the Technical Office Book, page 530, Case No. 69; Appeal No. 18765 of Judicial Year 71, issued on January 26, 2009, and published in Volume 60 of the Technical Office Book, page 96, Case No. 12; Appeal No. 5813 of Judicial Year 73, issued on November 12, 2008, and published in Volume 59 of the Technical Office Book, page 497, Case No. 92; Appeal No. 55677 of Judicial Year 75, issued on November 5, 2008, and published in Volume 59 of the Technical Office Book, page 479, Case No. 88; Appeal No. 5187 of Judicial Year 71, issued on October 7, 2008; Appeal No. 37251 of Judicial Year 74, issued on September 7, 2008; Appeal No. 14617 of Judicial Year 71, issued on December 6, 2007; Appeal No. 13613 of Judicial Year 71, issued on December 28, 2006; Appeal No. 20763 of Judicial Year 70, issued on September 7, 2006; Appeal No. 10834 of Judicial Year 65, issued on February 20, 2006, and published in Volume 57 of the Technical Office Book, page 288, Case No. 30; Appeal No. 17668 of Judicial Year 66, issued on October 20, 2005; Appeal No. 13311 of Judicial Year 67, issued on September 22, 2005; Appeal No. 22505 of Judicial Year 69, issued on April 6, 2004; Appeal No. 13786 of Judicial Year 69, issued on April 1, 2004; Appeal No. 23969 of Judicial Year 65, issued on December 4, 2003; Appeal No. 21700 of Judicial Year 72, issued on October 2, 2003; Appeal No. 39618 of Judicial Year 72, issued on January 16, 2003, and published in Volume 54 of the Technical Office Book, page 112, Case No. 11; Appeal No. 26675 of Judicial Year 69, issued on April 18, 2002, and published in Volume 53 of the Technical Office Book, page 670, Case No. 111; Appeal No. 4917 of Judicial Year 69, issued on April 3, 2002, and published in Volume 53 of the Technical Office Book, page 577, Case No. 94. Appeal No. 20185 of Judicial Year 62, issued on March 21, 2002; Appeal No. 6651 of Judicial Year 63, issued on January 3, 2002; Appeal No. 20524 of Judicial Year 69, issued on December 20, 2001; Appeal No. 29802 of Judicial Year 68, issued on November 1, 2001; Appeal No. 7253 of Judicial Year 61, issued on July 2, 2001; Appeal No. 11341 of Judicial Year 68, issued on November 23, 2000; Appeal No. 4575 of Judicial Year 65, issued on February 12, 2000, and published in Volume 51 of the Technical Office Book, page 167, Case No. 31; Appeal No. 15144 of Judicial Year 64, issued on January 24, 2000, and published in Volume 51 of the Technical Office Book, page 73, Case No. 11; Appeal No. 23107 of Judicial Year 67, issued on December 14, 1999, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page 680, Case No. 151; Appeal No. 2526 of Judicial Year 69, issued on September 19, 1999; Appeal No. 11286 of Judicial Year 67, issued on May 10, 1999, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 50, page 290, Case No. 68; Appeal No. 19120 of Judicial Year 66, issued on December 1, 1998, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1353, Case No. 194; Appeal No. 20107 of Judicial Year 66, issued on November 3, 1998, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1190, Case No. 164; Appeal No. 4291 of Judicial Year 66, issued on March 8, 1998, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page 368, Case No. 51; Appeal No. 7767 of Judicial Year 63, issued on January 8, 1998, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page 63, Case No. 7; Appeal No. 5858 of Judicial Year 65, issued on May 4, 1997, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page 493, Case No. 72; Appeal No. 17463 of Judicial Year 64, issued on September 29, 1996, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page 909, Case No. 129; Appeal No. 16287 of Judicial Year 64, issued on September 10, 1996, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page 857, Case No. 124; Appeal No. 19551 of Judicial Year 64, issued on April 6, 1995, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page 677, Case No. 102; Appeal No. 3048 of Judicial Year 63, issued on February 12, 1995, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page 353,

Case No. 52; Appeal No. 11173 of Judicial Year 62, issued on December 4, 1994, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page 1059, Case No. 167; Appeal No. 7618 of Judicial Year 62, issued on April 5, 1994, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page 473, Case No. 75; Appeal No. 23075 of Judicial Year 61, issued on November 15, 1993, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page 988, Case No. 154; Appeal No. 3279 of Judicial Year 62, issued on October 18, 1993, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page 838, Case No. 129; Appeal No. 6301 of Judicial Year 61, issued on June 9, 1993, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page 585, Case No. 87; Appeal No. 2510 of Judicial Year 61, issued on December 3, 1992, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 43, page 1110, Case No. 173; Appeal No. 16256 of Judicial Year 60, issued on February 4, 1992, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 43, page 191, Case No. 19; Appeal No. 54 of Judicial Year 60, issued on January 15, 1991, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 42, page 67, Case No. 12; Appeal No. 29282 of Judicial Year 59, issued on January 1, 1991, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 42, page 9, Case No. 2، Appeal No. 1563 of Judicial Year 58, issued on April 30, 1989, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page 553, Case No. 91; Appeal No. 4060 of Judicial Year 57, issued on February 10, 1988, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page 269, Case No. 35; Appeal No. 4578 of Judicial Year 57, issued on January 4, 1988, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 39, page 70, Case No. 4; Appeal No. 3861 of Judicial Year 57, issued on December 27, 1987, and published in Volume 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page 1156, Case No. 211; Appeal No. 5951 of Judicial Year 56, issued on March 1, 1987, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page 353, Case No. 54; Appeal No. 1011 of Judicial Year 54, issued on November 26, 1984, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page 829, Case No. 187; Appeal No. 258 of Judicial Year 54, issued on October 9, 1984, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page 651, Case No. 142; Appeal No. 6727 of Judicial Year 53, issued on February 28, 1984, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page 213, Case No. 44; Appeal No. 6062 of Judicial Year 53, issued on February 14, 1984, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page 149, Case No. 30; Appeal No. 577 of Judicial Year 53, issued on June 1, 1983, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page 714, Case No. 144; Appeal No. 6780 of Judicial Year 52, issued on May 12, 1983, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 34, page 630, Case No. 127; Appeal No. 1656 of Judicial Year 52, issued on May 11, 1982, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page 591, Case No. 119; Appeal No. 1265 of Judicial Year 52, issued on May 5, 1982, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page 547, Case No. 112; Appeal No. 1242 of Judicial Year 52, issued on April 29, 1982, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page 540, Case No. 110; Appeal No. 1599 of Judicial Year 52, issued on April 20, 1982, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page 513, Case No. 104; Appeal No. 5533 of Judicial Year 51, issued on March 6, 1982, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page 295, Case No. 61; Appeal No. 2147 of Judicial Year 51, issued on December 17, 1981, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page 1131, Case No. 202; Appeal No. 597 of Judicial Year 50, issued on December 25, 1980, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page 1126, Case No. 217; Appeal No. 397 of Judicial Year 50, issued on June 8, 1980, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page 731, Case No. 141; Appeal No. 1158 of Judicial Year 49, issued on December 13, 1979, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page 932, Case No. 200; Appeal No. 294 of Judicial Year 49, issued on June 14, 1979, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page 685, Case No. 146; Appeal No. 2034 of Judicial Year 48, issued on May 21, 1979, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page 598, Case No. 127; Appeal No. 1692 of Judicial Year 48, issued on February 8, 1979, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page 226, Case No. 45; Appeal No. 1326 of Judicial Year 48, issued on December 10, 1978, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page 910, Case No. 189; Appeal No. 781 of Judicial Year 48, issued on December 7, 1978, and published in Volume 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page 871, Case No. 181، Appeal No. 301 of 48 Q, issued on June 19, 1978, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 29, Page 625, Rule 121; Appeal No. 78 of 48 Q, issued on April 10, 1978, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 29, Page 393, Rule 75; Appeal No. 638 of 47 Q, issued on November 6, 1977, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 28, Page 909, Rule 189; Appeal No. 577 of 47 Q, issued on October 17, 1977, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 28, Page 865, Rule 179; Appeal No. 829 of 46 Q, issued on January 3, 1977, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 28, Page 25, Rule 4; Appeal No. 886 of 46 Q, issued on December 27, 1976, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page 1004, Rule 225; Appeal No. 896 of 46 Q, issued on December 27, 1976, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page 1021, Rule 230; Appeal No. 842 of 46 Q, issued on December 19, 1976, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page 948, Rule 215; Appeal No. 1481 of 45 Q, issued on January 5, 1976, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 27, Page 33, Rule 4; Appeal No. 1305 of 45 Q, issued on December 21, 1975, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 26, Page 839, Rule 185; Appeal No. 1285 of 45 Q, issued on December 7, 1975, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 26, Page 821, Rule 181; Appeal No. 1093 of 45 Q, issued on October 26, 1975, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 26, Page 622, Rule 139; Appeal No. 319 of 45 Q, issued on May 4, 1975, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 26, Page 375, Rule 86; Appeal No. 1766 of 44 Q, issued on January 12, 1975, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 26, Page 31, Rule 8; Appeal No. 867 of 44 Q, issued on November 18, 1974, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 25, Page 750, Rule 162; Appeal No. 486 of 44 Q, issued on May 26, 1974, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 25, Page 514, Rule 110; Appeal No. 378 of 44 Q, issued on April 28, 1974, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 25, Page 430, Rule 92; Appeal No. 1268 of 43 Q,

The accused’s failure to insist on hearing witnesses constitutes an implicit waiver of hearing them.[2931]

This means that if the witness cannot appear before him, their testimony is read out so that it can be the subject of discussion between the prosecution and the defense, and so that the accused is aware that it is being presented against them as evidence against him. If the issued on February 3, 1974, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 25, Page 91, Rule 20; Appeal No. 1164 of 43 Q, issued on December 31, 1973, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 1309, Rule 267; Appeal No. 1018 of 43 Q, issued on December 16, 1973, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 1236, Rule 251; Appeal No. 996 of 43 Q, issued on December 10, 1973, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 1191, Rule 242; Appeal No. 241 of 43 Q, issued on June 3, 1973, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 696, Rule 144; Appeal No. 409 of 43 Q, issued on May 28, 1973, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 684, Rule 142; Appeal No. 190 of 43 Q, issued on April 16, 1973, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 525, Rule 109; Appeal No. 40 of 43 Q, issued on March 4, 1973, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 293, Rule 64; Appeal No. 926 of 42 Q, issued on November 19, 1972, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 23, Page 1224, Rule 275; Appeal No. 929 of 42 Q, issued on November 19, 1972, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 23, Page 1240, Rule 277; Appeal No. 942 of 42 Q, issued on November 12, 1972, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 23, Page 1179, Rule 267; Appeal No. 303 of 42 Q, issued on May 8, 1972, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 23, Page 661, Rule 149; Appeal No. 259 of 42 Q, issued on April 30, 1972, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 23, Page 632, Rule 142; Appeal No. 66 of 42 Q, issued on March 5, 1972, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 23, Page 291, Rule 68; Appeal No. 666 of 41 Q, issued on December 6, 1971, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 22, Page 713, Rule 173; Appeal No. 583 of 41 Q, issued on November 15, 1971, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 22, Page 659, Rule 160; Appeal No. 1811 of 40 Q, issued on January 11, 1971, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 22, Page 45, Rule 12; Appeal No. 1342 of 40 Q, issued on December 14, 1970, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 21, Page 1221, Rule 295; Appeal No. 571 of 40 Q, issued on June 8, 1970, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 21, Page 848, Rule 200; Appeal No. 125 of 40 Q, issued on March 2, 1970, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 21, Page 344, Rule 86; Appeal No. 1594 of 39 Q, issued on December 1, 1969, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 1367, Rule 278، Appeal No. 1584 of 39 Q, issued on November 24, 1969, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 1321, Rule 269; Appeal No. 1238 of 39 Q, issued on November 3, 1969, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 1212, Rule 242; Appeal No. 1392 of 39 Q, issued on October 20, 1969, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 1129, Rule 222; Appeal No. 1391 of 39 Q, issued on October 13, 1969, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 1069, Rule 210; Appeal No. 960 of 39 Q, issued on June 30, 1969, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 976, Rule 193; Appeal No. 61 of 39 Q, issued on April 28, 1969, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 587, Rule 121; Appeal No. 522 of 39 Q, issued on April 28, 1969, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 616, Rule 126; Appeal No. 2202 of 38 Q, issued on April 7, 1969, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 449, Rule 95; Appeal No. 1771 of 38 Q, issued on January 13, 1969, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 100, Rule 22; Appeal No. 1915 of 38 Q, issued on January 6, 1969, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 29, Rule 7; Appeal No. 1723 of 38 Q, issued on October 14, 1968, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 19, Page 835, Rule 165; Appeal No. 612 of 38 Q, issued on June 3, 1968, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 19, Page 622, Rule 124; Appeal No. 706 of 37 Q, issued on June 5, 1967, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 18, Page 753, Rule 150; Appeal No. 1879 of 36 Q, issued on May 16, 1967, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 18, Page 659, Rule 129; Appeal No. 424 of 37 Q, issued on April 10, 1967, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 18, Page 509, Rule 97; Appeal No. 182 of 37 Q, issued on April 4, 1967, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 18, Page 496, Rule 94; Appeal No. 2082 of 36 Q, issued on February 27, 1967, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 18, Page 287, Rule 56; Appeal No. 1436 of 36 Q, issued on October 24, 1966, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 17, Page 1011, Rule 189; Appeal No. 735 of 36 Q, issued on May 9, 1966, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 17, Page 582, Rule 104; Appeal No. 1019 of 33 Q, issued on January 20, 1964, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 15, Page 66, Rule 14; Appeal No. 2647 of 32 Q, issued on April 29, 1963, and published in Part 2 of the Technical Office Book No. 14, Page 359, Rule 72; Appeal No. 3 of 33 Q, issued on March 26, 1963, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 14, Page 254, Rule 52; Appeal No. 2599 of 32 Q, issued on February 5, 1963, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 14, Page 97, Rule 21; Appeal No. 2169 of 32 Q, issued on January 29, 1963, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 14, Page 58, Rule 13; Appeal No. 1473 of 30 Q, issued on December 26, 1960, and published in Part 3 of the Technical Office Book No. 11, Page 954, Rule 186; Appeal No. 1615 of 28 Q, issued on January 5, 1959, and published in Part 1 of the Technical Office Book No. 10, Page 1, Rule 1.

---

([2931]) Appeal No. 2030 of 38 Q issued in the session of January 6, 1969 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 38, Rule No. 9, Appeal No. 612 of 38 Q issued in the session of June 3, 1968 and published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 19, page No. 622, Rule No. 124.

purpose of reading out the testimony is to alert the accused to defend himself, then if the accused is aware of the testimony and discusses it in the session, they may not take the mere fact that it was not read out as a reason to challenge the judgment issued against them based on it.[2932]

If the court does not hear the witnesses, it must justify in its ruling the reason for not hearing them with valid reasons.[2933]

The court's disregard for the defendant's request in both stages of litigation to hear prosecution witnesses, stating that it was useless because the incident had become clear to it and was sufficient in its current state to form its belief in ruling on the subject matter, constitutes an error in the law and a violation of the right to defense.[2934]

The mere presence of the two prosecution witnesses outside the country does not constitute a reason for the court's decision to dispense with hearing their statements, as long as it has not been proven to the court that it was unable to do so after it had taken all possible legal means to achieve the defendant's defense by summoning the two prosecution witnesses and hearing their statements. The court's decision to dispense with hearing them and begin the pleadings has placed the defendant's attorney in a difficult position that would make them excused if they pleaded in the case and did not adhere to their request after the decision to reject it and insist on hearing the case, which made the defender compelled to accept what the court saw as hearing the case without hearing the two prosecution witnesses. The conduct of the trial procedures in this manner does not achieve the meaning intended by the legislator when they authorized the court to decide to read the testimony if it was impossible to hear the witness for any reason or the defendant or their defense accepted that.[2935]

The mere departure of the prosecution witness from the country to a known location is not sufficient in itself as a reason for the court's decision to dispense with hearing her testimony, as long as it has not been proven to the court that it was unable to do so after it had taken all possible legal means to achieve the defendant's defense by summoning the prosecution witness and hearing their testimony.[2936]

However, if the witness is proven dead, it becomes impossible to hear their testimony, and their statements must be read if requested by the accused or their defense attorney.[2937]

There is no blame on the court if it decides to postpone the case to hear the prosecution witness and to include the status register and then changes its mind, because this decision issued by the court in the field of preparing the case and collecting evidence is nothing more than a preparatory decision that does not generate rights for the parties that inevitably require working to implement it in order to protect these rights.[2938]

If the defense insists on the request to hear the prosecution witnesses, but the court orders them to plead, which puts the accused's lawyer in a difficult position that makes them excused if

---

([2932]) Appeal No. 380 of 10 Q issued in the session of February 26, 1940 and published in the first part of the collection of legal rules, fifth year, page No. 121, rule No. 70.

([2933]) Appeal No. 3386 of 79 Q issued in the session of December 3, 2009 and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, Page No. 530, Rule No. 69.

([2934]) Appeal No. 638 of 47 Q issued in the session of November 6, 1977 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 28, page No. 909, rule No. 189.

([2935]) Appeal No. 3091 of 77 Q issued in the session of June 4, 2011 (unpublished).

([2936]) Appeal No. 15076 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 7, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 326, rule No. 53.

([2937]) Appeal No. 1734 of 50 Q issued in the session of January 26, 1981 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 79, rule No. 12.

([2938]) Appeal No. 14963 of 86 Q issued in the session of March 14, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1103 of 78 Q issued in the session of June 2, 2009 and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, Page No. 262, Rule No. 36.

they pleads in the case and does not re-adhere to their request after the decision to reject it and insist on hearing the case, which makes the defender forced to accept what the court decided to consider the case without hearing witnesses, then this does not achieve the course of the trial procedures in this manner, the meaning intended by the legislator in Article 289 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and is considered a violation of the right to defense.[2939]

Since the right of defense - which the accused enjoys - entitles them to present their requests for investigation as long as the door to pleading is still open, the defendant's defense attorney's withdrawal - initially - upon hearing the witnesses and continuing the pleading does not prevent them from retracting this withdrawal nor does it deprive them of their right to return to adhering to the request to hear them, which in this manner is considered a decisive request that the court is obligated to answer when it turns to a ruling other than acquittal. This is not detracted from by the fact that the last thing the defender concluded their defense with was a request for acquittal, as long as the second defender concluded the pleading with a request to hear the first prosecution witness, then their request in the context in which it was stated - after they joined their colleague in their arguments - is to adhere to this request with which they concluded the pleading.[2940]

If the defendant's defense attorney or the Public Prosecution does not insist on hearing the prosecution witnesses and requests that their statements be read only, then the court is not to be blamed if it decides the case without hearing their testimony, and it has not made a procedural error or violated the right to defense.[2941]

The defendant's attorney's failure to re-adhere to the request to hear witnesses in the last pleading session indicates that they have abandoned this request.[2942]

It is stipulated that the request that the court of subject matter is obligated to answer or respond to is the decisive request that its submitter insists upon and does not cease to adhere to and insist upon in their final requests.[2943]

([2939]) Appeal No. 8322 of 75 Q issued in the session of May 16, 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 628, rule No. 67, Appeal No. 17097 of 62 Q issued in the session of January 6, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 61, rule No. 6, Appeal No. 15076 of 59 Q issued in the session of February 7, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 41, page No. 326, rule No. 53, Appeal No. 3154 of 54 Q issued in the session of November 21, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 804, rule No. 181, Appeal No. 874 of 50 Q issued in the session of November 5, 1980 and published In the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 957, rule No. 185, appeal No. 259 for year 42 Q issued in the session of April 30, 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 23, page No. 632, rule No. 142, appeal No. 424 for year 37 Q issued in the session of April 10, 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 18, page No. 509, rule No. 97, appeal No. 2421 for year 30 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1961 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 12, page No. 304, rule No. 57.

([2940]) Appeal No. 4476 of 81 Q issued in the session of July 4, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31092 of 73 Q issued in the session of March 8, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4917 of 69 Q issued in the session of April 3, 2002 and published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 577, Rule No. 94, Appeal No. 16256 of 60 Q issued in the session of February 4, 1992 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 43, page No. 191, Rule No. 19, Appeal No. 1656 of 52 Q issued in the session of May 11, 1982 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page No. 591, Rule No. 119, Appeal No. 842 of 46 Q issued in the session of 19 From December 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, page No. 948, rule No. 215.

([2941] Appeal No. 7205 of 85 Q issued in the session of June 1, 2016 (unpublished).

([2942]) Appeal No. 4773 of 66 Q issued in the session of February 17, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19840 of 65 Q issued in the session of October 19, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 48, page No. 1123, rule No. 169, Appeal No. 4407 of 59 Q issued in the session of November 20, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 1006, rule No. 162, Appeal No. 1164 of 43 Q issued in the session of December 31, 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 1309, rule No. 267, Appeal No. 1879 of 36 Q issued in the session of May 16, 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 18 Page No. 659 Rule No. 129.

The request that the court of subject matter is obligated to respond to, or state the reason for its rejection, is the decisive request that is submitted to it in a decisive form, and that strikes the court's ear, and indicates the determination of its owner to it, and relies on it as a basis to prove what they claim regarding it.

If the accused is forced to waive hearing the prosecution witness, they must prove this before closing the pleadings and reserving the case for judgment, and they must record this violation in a written request before issuing the judgment, otherwise it will not be permissible to argue against it later before the Court of Cassation on the basis of its negligence in what it should have recorded.[2944]

The court's order to continue the defendant's detention until the session to which the case was adjourned in order to hear the witnesses, in exercise of the right granted to it, does not prevent the defense from its right to request that the case be adjourned in order to hear the witnesses, and does not constitute coercion to waive hearing the witnesses.[2945]

The principle is that the second-degree court rules based on the documents and does not conduct investigations except as it deems necessary to conduct, and is not obligated to hear witnesses except as the first-degree court should have heard, and is not obligated to hear witnesses who should have been heard before the first-degree court if it does not see a need to hear them on its part.[2946]

([2943]) Appeal No. 2402 of 78 Q issued in the session of March 8, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13613 of 71 Q issued in the session of December 28, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20524 of 69 Q issued in the session of December 20, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11341 of 68 Q issued in the session of November 23, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3048 of 63 Q issued in the session of February 12, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 46, page No. 353, rule No. 52, Appeal No. 7618 of 62 Q issued in the session of April 5, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45, page No. 473, rule No. 75, Appeal No. 1265 of 52 Q issued in the session of May 5, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page No. 547, rule No. 112, Appeal No. 597 of 50 Q issued in the session of December 25, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 31, page No. 1126, rule No. 217, Appeal No. 301 of 48 Q issued in the session of June 19, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 625, rule No. 121.

([2944]) Appeal No. 26823 of 83 Q issued in the session of October 8, 2015 (unpublished).

([2945]) Appeal No. 16771 of 65 Q issued in the session of May 16, 2004 and published in Technical Office Book No. 55, Page No. 510, Rule No. 71.

([2946]) Appeal No. 13703 of 84 Q issued in the session of May 6, 2015 and published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page No. 437, Rule No. 61, Appeal No. 9778 of 66 Q issued in the session of April 20, 2006, Appeal No. 1027 of 64 Q issued in the session of March 2, 2003 and published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page No. 325, Rule No. 34, Appeal No. 20185 of 62 Q issued in the session of March 21, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7253 of 61 Q issued in the session of July 2, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15144 of 64 Q issued in the session of January 24, 2000 and published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page No. 73, Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 1563 of 58 Q issued in the session of April 30, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 40, page No. 553, rule No. 91, Appeal No. 3861 of 57 Q issued in the session of December 27, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 1156, rule No. 211, Appeal No. 6727 of 53 Q issued in the session of February 28, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 213, rule No. 44, Appeal No. 5533 of 51 Q issued in the session of March 6, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 33, page No. 295, rule No. 61, Appeal No. 2147 of 51 Q issued in the session of December 17, 1984 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 1131, rule No. 202, appeal No. 1158 for year 49 Q issued in the session of December 13, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page No. 932, rule No. 200, appeal No. 1692 for year 48 Q issued in the session of February 8, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 30, page No. 226, rule No. 45, appeal No. 1326 for year 48 Q issued in the session of December 10, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 910, rule No. 189, appeal No. 781 for year 48 Q issued in the session of December 7, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 871, rule No. 181, Appeal No. 78 of 48 Q issued in the session of April 10, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 29, page No. 393, Rule No. 75, Appeal No. 638 of 47 Q issued in the session of November 6, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 28, page No. 909, Rule No. 189, Appeal No. 886 of 46 Q issued in the session of December 27, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 27, page No. 1004, Rule No. 225, Appeal No. 1093 of 45 Q issued in the session of October 26, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 26, page No. 622, Rule No. 139, Appeal No. 867 of 44 Q issued in the

However, the right of the court of second instance not to hear witnesses is restricted by the necessity of observing the right of defense. The law has obliged it, in accordance with Article 413 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to hear, by itself or through one of the judges - whom it delegates for this purpose - the witnesses whose hearing the court of first instance did not respond to the request - and if it does not do so, its ruling will be tainted by a deficiency in reasoning, in addition to violating the right of defense.[2947]

If the witness appears and declares that they no longer remember a fact, the part of their testimony that they acknowledged during the investigation or their statements in the evidence collection report that relates to this fact may be read out. The same applies if the witness's testimony that they gave in the session conflicts with their previous testimony or statements.[2948]

Reciting the witness's statements about the facts that they no longer remember is one of the permissions, and it is not obligatory unless the accused or their defense lawyer requests it.[2949]

20-1-17 Appeal against judgments issued against witnesses

It is permissible to appeal the rulings issued against witnesses by the investigating judge for their refusal to attend, testify, or take an oath.[2950]

The rules and conditions stipulated in the law shall be observed in this regard. [2951]

The convicted person may appeal the ruling issued against them due to the invalidity of the excuse of illness that prevented them from attending, by way of opposition or appeal.[2952]

20-1-18 Witness Expenses

The investigator shall estimate, upon the request of the witnesses, the expenses and compensation they are entitled to due to their attendance to give testimony.[2953]

20-1-19 Taking the statements of one accused against another

It has been decided that it is permissible to accept the statements of one accused against another, as it is established that the statements of one accused against another are in fact testimony that the court may rely on in convicting when it trusts it and is comfortable with it, and the court of subject matter may accept the statements of an accused against himself and against other accused when it is satisfied with their truthfulness and conformity to reality.[2954]

---

session of November 18, 1976 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 25, page No. 750, rule No. 162, Appeal No. 409 for the year 43 Q issued in the session of May 28, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 684, rule No. 142, Appeal No. 190 for the year 43 Q issued in the session of April 16, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 525, rule No. 109.

([2947]) See in this regard: Appeal No. 10834 of the 65th year of the Civil Procedure Code, issued in the session of February 20, 2006, and published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 288, Rule No. 30.

([2948]) Article No. 290 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2949]) Appeal No. 1487 of 33 Q issued in the session of December 9, 1963 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 14, page No. 910, rule No. 164, Appeal No. 876 of 22 Q issued in the session of January 26, 1953 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 4, page No. 418, rule No. 160, Appeal No. 406 of 22 Q issued in the session of June 10, 1952 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 3, page No. 1089, rule No. 407.

([2950]) Articles Nos. 117 and 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2951] Article No. 120 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2952]) Article 121 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2953]) Articles Nos. 122 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

([2954]) Appeal No. 48600 of 85 Q issued in the session of December 21, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 37284 of 85 Q issued in the session of November 28, 2016 and published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page No. 864, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 16483 of 85 Q issued in the session of February 6, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2774 of 82 Q issued in the session of October 22, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9361 of 79 Q issued in the session of September 19, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1593 of 77 Q issued in the session of March 8, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 76701 of 75 Q issued in the session of

The court of subject matter may accept the statements of one accused over another, even if they were included in the police report, as long as it is satisfied of their truthfulness and conformity to reality, even if they were changed in other stages of the investigation. [2955]

It is not true to say that the statements of one accused against another cannot be accepted unless they are supported by evidence or a presumption that strengthens them, since there is nothing in the law that prevents the court from accepting the statements of another accused against one accused if it is satisfied with them, even if there is no evidence to prove anything else. Saying otherwise would affect the judge's authority to assess the evidence and their freedom to be convinced and form their belief from any evidence presented before them.[2956]

20-2 Within the Framework of International Conventions

Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the right to call witnesses on their behalf and to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him. In exceptional circumstances, restrictions may be imposed on the right of the defense to examine prosecution witnesses.

November 26, 2012 2006 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page No. 913, Rule No. 102, Appeal No. 50614 for the year 74 Q issued in the session of December 7, 2005 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 56, page No. 691, Rule No. 105, Appeal No. 580 for the year 66 Q issued in the session of October 5, 2005 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 56, page No. 468, Rule No. 70, Appeal No. 37227 for the year 73 Q issued in the session of December 16, 2004 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 55, page No. 824, Rule No. 124, Appeal No. 29339 for the year 70 Q issued in the session of January 17, 2002 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, page No. 125, Rule No. 23, Appeal No. 26293 for the year 67 Q issued in the session of March 13, 2000 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 51, page No. 288, rule No. 53, Appeal No. 24806 for year 67 Q issued in the session of February 6, 2000 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 51, page No. 117, rule No. 21, Appeal No. 19120 for year 66 Q issued in the session of December 1, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 49, page No. 1353, rule No. 194, Appeal No. 17106 for year 64 Q issued in the session of September 25, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 47, page No. 878, rule No. 127, Appeal No. 25471 for year 62 Q issued in the session of December 12, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45 Page No. 1129 Rule No. 178, Appeal No. 12752 for the year 62 Q issued in the session of June 2, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 45 Page No. 696 Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 4207 for the year 61 Q issued in the session of December 21, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 43 Page No. 1181 Rule No. 185, Appeal No. 6840 for the year 60 Q issued in the session of October 3, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42 Page No. 958 Rule No. 133, Appeal No. 1425 for the year 57 Q issued in the session of October 21, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 38 Page No. 829 Rule No. 150, Appeal No. 543 for the year 57 Q issued in the session of May 12, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 38, page No. 677, rule No. 118, appeal No. 7098 for year 55 Q issued in the session of March 18, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 37, page No. 419, rule No. 86, appeal No. 1011 for year 54 Q issued in the session of November 26, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 35, page No. 829, rule No. 187, appeal No. 2612 for year 50 Q issued in the session of April 6, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 32, page No. 334, rule No. 59, appeal No. 356 for year 44 Q issued in the session of April 22, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 25 Page No. 425 Rule No. 91, Appeal No. 13 of Year 43 Q issued in the session of March 4, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24 Page No. 284 Rule No. 62, Appeal No. 391 of Year 36 Q issued in the session of June 7, 1966 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 17 Page No. 771 Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 9 of Year 35 Q issued in the session of May 3, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 16 Page No. 415 Rule No. 85, Appeal No. 987 of Year 33 Q issued in the session of December 9, 1963 and published in the third part of the Technical Office Book No. 14 Page No. 894 Rule No. 163, Appeal No. 15 of Year 15 Q issued in the session of January 15, 1965 1945 and published in Technical Office Book No. 6, Part No. 1, Page No. 593, Rule No. 455.

([2955]) Appeal No. 25900 of 66 Q issued in the session of May 21, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28073 of 75 Q issued in the session of February 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7897 of 60 Q issued in the session of October 22, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 42, page No. 1017, rule No. 141, Appeal No. 176 of 47 Q issued in the session of June 13, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 28, page No. 759, rule No. 159, Appeal No. 1041 of 42 Q issued in the session of January 1, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 24, page No. 1, rule No. 1, Appeal No. 335 of 39 Q issued In the session of April 7, 1969, published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 20, page No. 476, rule No. 100.

([2956]) Appeal No. 83 of 24 Q issued in the session of March 11, 1954 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Book No. 5, page No. 415, Rule No. 139, Appeal No. 16 of 14 Q issued in the session of January 10, 1944 and published in the first part of the Legal Rules Collection No. 6, page No. 375, Rule No. 285.

These restrictions, measures taken to protect the rights and safety of witnesses, the requirements of justice and the principle of equal opportunity must be respected. Victims and witnesses have the right to access information and to enjoy appropriate protection.

20-2-1 The right to summon and question witnesses

One of the main pillars of the principle of equal opportunity between the defense and the prosecution, and the right to defense, is the right of the accused to summon and interrogate witnesses.[2957]

This right guarantee "the accused the same legal powers to summon witnesses and to examine or cross-examine any accused person presented by the prosecution" [2958]

The right to examine witnesses for the prosecution by the accused (or by a third party) ensures the defense has an opportunity to refute the evidence presented against the accused. Likewise, the right to call and examine witnesses on behalf of the accused is part of the right to defense. The examination of witnesses, by both the prosecution and the defense, which should as a rule take place in a public hearing attended by the accused, provides the court with the opportunity to hear the evidence and the statements that refute it, and to test the credibility of the witnesses. It also enhances the right to the presumption of innocence and strengthens the chances that a verdict will be based on all relevant evidence.

Some international standards allow witnesses to give evidence via electronic media, usually through video links, which allow them to be seen and heard in the courtroom.[2959]

However, preference remains, in general, for direct testimony. While it remains essential that all witnesses are examined in the same manner, consideration should be given to any distinctions that arise in the context of the trial, such as, for example, most prosecution witnesses testifying in the courtroom, while most defense witnesses testify via video link.[2960]

The drafters of international standards that use the phrase "examine witnesses himself or through others" have taken into account the differences in judicial systems, some of which permit litigants to examine witnesses (refute the statements of the opponent) and some of which give the judiciary the authority to examine witnesses (interrogate them).[2961]

The wording also covers questions asked by a court or an independent person other than the accused or their or her lawyer, for example when a judge or psychologist asks questions on behalf of the defense to a child victim. But the accused's right to question the prosecution witnesses and to summon and question defense witnesses in a public session is not absolute and unlimited.

([2957]) Article 14(3)(e) of the International Covenant, Article 40(2)(b)(iv) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18(3)(e) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 16(5) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(3)(d) of the European Convention, Section N(6)(f) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67(1)(e) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(c) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, Article 21(4)(e) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for the Former Yugoslavia.

([2958]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §39.

([2959]) See Article 36(2)(b) of the European Convention on Child Sexual Abuse, Article 56(1)(i) of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, Article 68(2) of the Rome Statute, Rule 67 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Court, Rule 75 of the Rules of the Rwanda Tribunal, and Rule 75 of the Rules of the Yugoslavia Tribunal.

([2960]) See, Prosecutor v. Hatigimana (ICTR-00-55B-R11bis, Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Decision on the Prosecutor's Appeal against a Decision to Refer Under Rule 11bis, (4 December 2008) Section. IV. B. 26.

([2961]) See M. Nowak, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: A Commentary on the Provisions of the Covenant, Second Revised Edition, Engel, 2005, p. 342. §68.

20-2-2 The right of the defense to question witnesses

Anyone accused of committing a criminal act has the right to examine, personally or through third parties, the witnesses for the prosecution in the course of the trial proceedings.[2962]

The right of the accused to have adequate time and facilities to prepare their defense includes the right to be prepared to examine the prosecution witnesses. There is therefore an implied obligation on the prosecution to give the defense sufficient advance notice of the names of witnesses it intends to call in court.[2963]

The right to such information may be subject to court orders to maintain the confidentiality of the witness's identity or other restrictions.[2964]

However, the defense should request an adjournment when the prosecution calls a new witness during the trial who has not been named before, to ensure that it has adequate time and facilities to prepare.[2965]

The refusal to disclose previous statements made by a key witness for the prosecution was considered a violation of the right to cross-examine witnesses.[2966]

All evidence must normally be presented in the presence of the accused at a public hearing, so that the reliability of the evidence itself and the credibility and integrity of the witnesses can be challenged.

Therefore, questioning by both the prosecution and the defense should normally take place during trial sessions in which the accused is present. However, this condition may be met if the questioning takes place when the witness is giving their statement, including during the pre-trial proceedings, or in the stages thereafter.)[2967]

Although there are exceptions to this principle, the exceptions must not affect the rights of defense.[2968]

In a case where the conviction was based decisively on pre-trial witness statements which the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine, and which the court had not cross-examined at any time, the European Court held that the accused's rights to cross-examination and to a fair trial had been violated.[2969]

([2962]) Article 14(3)(e) of the International Covenant, Article 40(2)(b)(iv) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18(3)(e) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 8(2)(f) of the American Convention, Article 16(5) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(4)(d) of the European Convention, Section N(6)(f) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda, Article 21(4)(e) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court for Yugoslavia, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §39.

([2963]) Section N(6)(f)(1) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, and Rule 76 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Court.

([2964]) Rules 76 and 81(4) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Court, see Prosecutor v. Katanga and Ngudjolo, (ICC-01/04-01/07) OA5 ICC Appeals Chamber, Judgment on the Appeal of Mr. Mathieu Ngudjolo against the Decision of Pre-Trial Chamber I entitled “Decision on the Prosecution’s Request for Authorization to Redact Witnesses 4 and 27” (9 May 2008) §30-§38 (allowing victims of sexual crimes not to be identified prior to the confirmation of charges hearing).

([2965]) Adams v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, 1994 / UN CCPR/C/58/D/607. 3/ §8(1996).

([2966]) Burt v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, UN CCPR C/54/D/464/1991 and 1991/482 (5/11-4/§11 (1995).

([2967]) Al-Khawaja and Taheri v. the United Kingdom (26766/05 and 222228/06), Grand Chamber of the European Court (2011) §118 and §127.

([2968]) Section N(6)(f)(3) of the Principles on Expeditious Trial in Africa, Van Mechelen and Others v. The Netherlands (21363/93, 21364/93, 93/22056 and 93/21427), European Court § 51 (1997).

([2969]) Tal v. Estonia (13249)/02, European Court §31-§36 (2005); see, European Court: Balsan v. Czech Republic (1993)/02, (2006) §31-§35, Lucca v. Italy (33354)/06, §41-§45 (2001).

First: Limits of interrogating prosecution witnesses

The accused's right to cross-examine witnesses himself or through others may be restricted to ensure a fair trial and to avoid obstruction.[2970]

The right of the accused to examine witnesses may also be restricted if the witness is no longer available (due to death or missing), or when there are reasonable grounds for the witness to fear retaliation, or when the witness is particularly vulnerable. Examples of these children and victims of gender-based violence include :[2971]

Before allowing any restrictions to be imposed, the court must decide whether such restrictions are objectively necessary. Restrictions should only be allowed to the extent required by the situation. Restrictions must be proportionate and consistent with the rights of the accused and the requirements of a fair trial. The court must ensure that the difficulties this creates for the defense are balanced by procedures that allow for a fair and appropriate assessment of the reliability of the evidence.[2972]

Where the accused is excluded from the courtroom or absent from following the proceedings, their lawyer has the right to be present and to question witnesses. If the accused does not have a legal representative, the court must ensure that they have a lawyer to defend them (of their choice or appointed by it) and who is present to represent them and to examine witnesses.[2973]

The Human Rights Committee found that ordering the accused to leave the courtroom during the questioning of an undercover security agent wearing a mask, who was one of two key prosecution witnesses, while refusing to allow the accused to cross-examine the witness, violated the accused's right to cross-examine witnesses.[2974]

Second: Unknown witnesses

Relying on the testimony of anonymous witnesses (i.e. those whose identity is unknown to the defense) violates the accused's right to cross-examine witnesses, because it deprives them of information necessary for them to challenge the reliability of the witness and the credibility of their testimony. The greater the importance of evidence given by anonymous witnesses, the greater the risk of unfairness.

Amnesty International has opposed the use of anonymous witness statements on the grounds that it is inconsistent with the principle of presumption of innocence, the right of the accused to challenge evidence, and the ability of the court to reach its decision based on all relevant evidence that all parties to the dispute have had the opportunity to challenge.[2975] ([2972]) See, for example, the European Court: A. As. v. Finland (40156)/07), §55 (2010), Khawaja and Taheri v. United Kingdom (26766)/05 and 222228/06), Grand Chamber of the European Court §147 (2011).

([2970]) Prosecutor v. Prlic et al. (IT-04-74-AR73. 2) Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Decision on the Joint Interlocutory Appeal of the Defense against the Trial Chamber's Oral Decision of 8 May 2006 Concerning the Questioning by the Defense and its Linkage to the Defense Counsel's Request for Leave to Submit a Briefing as Amicus Curiae, (4 July 2006).

([2971]) Section N(6)(f)(3) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2973]) Section N(6)(f)(4) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2974]) Koriba v. Belarus, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR. 5/ §7 (2010) C/100/D/1390/2005.

([2975]) See, for example, Amnesty International: The International Criminal Court: The Right Choices – Part II – Organizing the Court and Ensuring Fair Trials, IOR 40/011/1997, pp. 59–61; Singapore: The Death Penalty – Concealed Number of Executed Persons, IOR 36 (2004), pp. 14; United States of America: Obstruction of Justice and Denial of Remedy – Trials under the Military Commissions Act, IOR 51/044/2007, pp. 42–43.

Some international standards and evidence from international jurisprudence allow witnesses to conceal their identity while giving their testimony, but only in exceptional cases and strictly defined circumstances, and according to special conditions.[2976]

These restrictions were imposed in view of the prejudice to the rights of the defense and the risk that the use of evidence from anonymous witnesses would render the trial unfair.

For example, the principles of fair trial in Africa allow anonymous witnesses to testify in trials only in exceptional circumstances, in the interests of justice, taking into account the nature and circumstances of the crime, and the needs to protect the security of witnesses.[2977]

The European Court and international criminal courts have exceptionally allowed the use of anonymous witnesses, including in criminal cases relating to terrorism, drug trafficking, organized crime and crimes under international law. However, these courts have also made it clear that the use of such witnesses must be exceptional and strictly limited, given the prejudice it poses to the rights of the defense.

The European Court said that the court hearing the case should reject a request to conceal the identity of witnesses unless there is objective evidence of the importance of the matter.[2978]

It requires the court to examine the request and review alternatives to concealing the identity of witnesses. The Court has repeatedly stressed that convictions should not be based exclusively or conclusively on anonymous statements.[2979]

Therefore, the question of whether the evidence of the anonymous witness is the sole or decisive basis against the accused should be kept under constant review by the court hearing the case, while it remains for the appellate court to decide the matter. If this evidence is the decisive factor, extreme caution should be exercised before accepting it. If it is accompanied by other evidence against the accused, then the weight of the supporting evidence must be evaluated. Ultimately, if the court decides to grant a witness's request not to show their identity while giving their testimony, sufficient compensatory measures must be taken to protect the rights of the accused and the integrity of the proceedings.[2980]

Among the factors considered by the European Court:

Whether the witness made their statement in a manner that allowed the judge, jury and lawyers to observe their actions as they spoke ;[2981]

The amount of information relevant to the credibility and reliability of the witness and their testimony that they disclosed to the defense while maintaining the confidentiality of their identity;

([2976]) Section N(6)(f)(4) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Guideline 9(3)(3)-(4) of the Council of Europe Guidelines on Human Rights and the Fight against Terrorism, Rule 75(b)(1)(d) of the Yugoslavia Tribunal Rules, and Rule 75(b)(1)(d) of the Rwanda Tribunal Rules.

([2977]) Section N(6)(f)(4) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa.

([2978]) European Court: Alice, Sims and Martin v. United Kingdom (46099/06 and 46699/06) (inadmissibility) Decision (76-§§§75 (2012, Krasniqi v. Czech Republic (51277)/99) (86-§§76 (2006, Van Mechelen and Others v. Netherlands (21363)/93, 21364/93, 21427/93 and 22056/93), European Court (61-§§60 (1997, Dorsen v. Netherlands §71 (1996), (92/20524).

([2979]) European Court: Van Mechelen and Others v. The Netherlands (21363)/93, 21364/93, 21427/93 and 22056/93), § § 55 (1997) and 60-61, Dorsen v. The Netherlands (20524)/92), § 76 (1996, cited with approval by the Grand Chamber in A and Others v. The United Kingdom (3455)/05), § 208 (2009, Visser v. The Netherlands (26668)/95), § 49-§ 47 (2002); but see Alice, Sims and Martin v. The United Kingdom (46099)/06 and 46699/06) decision (inadmissibility). 76- § §75 (2012).

([2980]) See Guideline 9(4) of the Council of Europe Guidelines on Human Rights and the Fight against Terrorism, European Court: Alice, Sims and Martin v. United Kingdom (46099/06 and 46699/06) (inadmissibility) decision (78-§§76 (2012), Krasniqi v. Czech Republic (51277)/99) (86-§§75 (2006).

([2981]) Vindic v. Austria (12489)/06, European Court §29 (1990); see Kostovsky v. Netherlands (11454)/85, European Court (1989). §43.

The extent to which the defense is able to question the witness and test their reliability and credibility;

The extent to which the court adheres to the necessity of subjecting its decision to grant confidentiality and its acceptance of the evidence presented to review. In addition, the European Court considered the measures used to ensure that evidence given by an anonymous witness was treated with particular caution and care, including through the directions given to the jury, if any.[2982]

The ICC follows the same procedure as the European Court in its handling of requests by witnesses (including victims) to conceal their identity when giving evidence. The ICC has stressed that "utmost caution must be exercised before allowing the participation of unidentified victims, particularly when the rights of the accused are involved." "The greater the scope and significance of the proposed participation, the more the Chamber should require the victim to disclose their or her identity, " the court said.[2983]

The Human Rights Committee expressed concerns about a law in the Netherlands that allows the identities of certain witnesses to be concealed from the defense for reasons of national security. While the defense was allowed to ask questions of these witnesses through the investigating judge, it was not always allowed to attend their interrogation.[2984]

Given the challenges facing the defense from using anonymous witnesses, alternative witness protection measures have been adopted, including witnesses giving evidence via video link.

Third: Absent witnesses

The use of evidence-based on the testimony of witnesses who are not present in court (absent witnesses) poses special challenges for the defense. Unlike anonymous witnesses, the identity of absent witnesses is known. So, the defense can investigate their credibility. However, it is not possible to put their testimony to the test before the judge (and jury, if any) by questioning them, because they are not in the courtroom.

Therefore, recourse to such evidence should be exceptional, and measures should be taken to allow for a fair assessment of the reliability of the evidence and to protect the rights of the defense.

The ICC Rules of Procedure and Evidence allow the pre-recorded statement of an absent witness to be admitted as evidence in a case, provided that the Prosecutor and the Defense are able to question the witness at the time the testimony is recorded.[2985]

The European Court has confirmed that the admission of evidence from an absent witness whom the defense has not had the opportunity to question should remain a last resort.[2986]

In its decision on the fairness of trials in which absentee witness statements were admitted as evidence, the European Court examined three matters:

Are there convincing reasons for the witness' absence and for accepting their statements?

Is this the only or decisive evidence against the accused?

([2982]) Alice, Sims and Martin v. United Kingdom (46099)/06 and 46699/06) European Court decision (inadmissibility) §82-§89 (2012).

([2983]) Prosecutor v. Lubanga (1119) - 06/01 - 04/ICC-01), Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Court, Decision on Victims' Participation (18 January 2008) §130-§131.

([2984]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Netherlands, UN Doc. §13 (2009) CCPR/C/NLD/CO/4.

([2985]) Rule 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Court.

([2986]) Al-Khawaja and Taheri v. United Kingdom (26766/05 and 222228/06), Grand Chamber of the European Court §125 (2011).

Did the court take sufficient measures to balance this to allow for a fair assessment of the reliability of the evidence and to ensure the rights of the defense (such as giving adequate warnings to the jury, for example)?

According to the European Court, fear of threats or reprisals by the accused or persons acting on their behalf (or with their knowledge and consent) is considered a "valid reason" for the absence of a witness. If there are sufficient factors to weigh the reliance on the testimony of such a witness, its admission as evidence, even if it is the only or decisive evidence in the case, does not constitute a violation of the right to a fair trial. She considered that excluding such evidence was inconsistent with the rights of the witness, and would allow the accused to undermine the fairness of the proceedings.[2987]

However, before accepting the testimony of a witness absent due to fear, the court must investigate whether their fear is objectively justified and supported by evidence. Even in such cases, the court must decide whether other alternative measures, including protective measures, would be more appropriate or practicable.[2988]

Applying these standard tests, the European Court held that:

The admission of the police testimony of a deceased woman, one of several alleged victims of a vicious assault by a doctor, as evidence of guilt did not violate their rights to a fair trial.

The supporting evidence (from friends the victim had spoken to and from other victims who testified at the trial) and the judge's warning to the jury were considered sufficient safeguards to counterbalance the absence of the witness.[2989]

The admission of testimony by a single alleged eyewitness to a stabbing with a sharp object, and their refusal to testify in court, even from behind a curtain, violated the defendant's right to a fair trial. The European Court concluded that the prejudice caused by the admission of this crucial evidence, which had not been tested by cross-examination, had not been adequately balanced by the court hearing the case, when it warned the jury of the risks of relying on untested evidence.[2990]

The European Court found that a violation of the accused's rights had occurred when a court based its decision on reports provided by an undercover police officer, written records of intercepted telephone calls, and statements made by the accused when shown the records. The accused was not given the opportunity to examine or challenge the records, or to put the undercover officer's statements to the test.[2991]

The European Court concluded that relying on the testimony of the accused's co-defendant during the investigation as the sole evidence against the accused constituted a violation of their right to a fair trial. Where the partner used their right to remain silent during the trial. The European Court noted that the authorities had not sought to provide evidence, and that the Court of Appeal had rejected the defendant's request to question their co-accused.[2992]

([2987]) Al-Khawaja and Taheri v. United Kingdom (26766/05 and 222228/06), Grand Chamber of the European Court §123 (2011).

([2988]) Al-Khawaja and Taheri v. United Kingdom (26766/05 and 222228/06), Grand Chamber of the European Court §125 (2011).

([2989]) Khawaja and Taheri v. United Kingdom (26766/05 and 222228/06), Grand Chamber of the European Court §§153-§158 (2011); see, European Court: Gosa v. Poland (47986/99), §57-§65 (2007), Artner v. Austria (13161/87), §20-§24 (1992).

([2990]) Khawaja and Taheri v. United Kingdom (26766)/05 and 222228/06), Grand Chamber of the European Court §§159-§165 (2011); see Mirilashvili v. Russia (6293)/04), European Court §§217-§229 (2008).

([2991]) European Court: Lodi v. Switzerland, (12433)/86, (1992) §40-§50, see Saidi v. France, (14647)/89, §44 (1993).

([2992]) Belchan v. Czech Republic (1993)/02, European Court (2006) §22-§35; see Lucca v. Italy (33354)/06), §39-§43 (2001); see also Lutsenko v. Ukraine (30663)/04, European Court §42-§53 (2009).

20-2-3 The right to summon and question witnesses on the defense

Anyone charged with a criminal offence has the right to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on their behalf "under the same conditions as witnesses for the prosecution" ([2993]

Granting criminal courts the right to summon witnesses for the defense "under the same conditions" as witnesses for the prosecution does not mean that this right is unlimited; rather, it is merely a discretionary power to determine which witnesses should be summoned. However, in exercising this discretion, judges must not violate the principles of justice and equality of opportunity between the prosecution and the defense.[2994]

Before refusing any request to call a defense witness, a court should assess the relevance of that witness to the defense's arguments.[2995]

If the court rejects such a request, it must provide its reasons.[2996]

The Human Rights Committee concluded that the court's refusal to order the testimony of a forensic expert in a rape case violated article 14(h) of the International Covenant, given that such testimony was of crucial importance to the defense.[2997]

It also found that a violation had occurred when the court refused the defense's request to summon public officials who could have provided information relevant to the defendant's claim that they had been tortured into "confessing" [2998]

The Human Rights Committee has particularly stressed the importance of respecting this right in cases where the death penalty may be imposed. In a murder case where the witness was willing to testify that the accused was absent from the scene of the crime at the time of the crime but was unable to reach the court due to lack of transportation, the Committee found that a violation had occurred; it attributed the witness's inability to appear in court to the misconduct of the authorities, who could have postponed the hearing or arranged transportation for her.[2999]

The American agreement is broader in this regard. It guarantees the right of the defense to cross-examine witnesses present in court, and to request that experts or other relevant persons give their testimony, if this sheds light on the facts.[3000]

20-2-4 Rights of victims and witnesses

International standards, human rights bodies and jurisprudence accumulated over the years have consistently affirmed the duty of States and courts to respect and protect the rights of victims of crime and other witnesses. This includes, as appropriate, family members, their dependents and individuals who suffered harm when they intervened to assist victims. The

---

([2993]) Article 14(3)(e) of the International Covenant, Article 18(3)(e) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 16(5) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(3)(d) of the European Convention, Section N(6)(f) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67(1)(e) of the Rome Statute, Article 20(4)(e) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Article 21(4)(e) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia; see Article 40(2)(b)(iv) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

([2994]) European Court: Vidal v. Belgium (12351)/86), §33 (1992), Popov v. Russia §177 (2006).

([2995]) Section N(6)(e)(ii) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §39; Popov v. Russia. §177 (2006).

([2996]) Vidal v. Belgium (12351)/86), §34 (1992).

([2997]) Fuenzalida v. Tajikistan, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR. 5/ §9 (1996) C/57/D/480/1991.

([2998]) Ediyev v. Tajikistan, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR. 6/ §9 (2009) C/95/D/1276/2004.

([2999] Grant v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR. 5/ §8 (2009) C/50/D/353/1988.

([3000]) Article 8(2)(f) of the American Convention.

standards require that the authorities ensure that everyone, including victims, has equal access to the courts without discrimination.[3001]

International standards require that the authorities take the necessary measures and organize the criminal proceedings necessary to ensure the safety and well-being of victims and witnesses, and respect for their rights, including their right to privacy. [3002]

Measures taken to protect the rights of victims and witnesses must be consistent with the rights of the accused and the requirements of a fair trial. [3003]

Measures that should be taken by the authorities and courts include providing victims and witnesses with information regarding their rights and ways to access and exercise this information, as well as access to information related to investigations and findings, and the conduct of the trial, in a timely manner. [3004]

Authorities should also provide assistance, including interpretation, where appropriate.[3005]and advice, to ensure that the doors of the courts are effectively knocked on, as well as legal assistance, where appropriate.[3006]

([3001]) See General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §9; Concluding Observations of the CEDAW Committee, Rwanda, 6/§23-§24 (2009) UN Doc. CEDAW/C/RWA/C0.

([3002]) Among other standards, article 13 of the Convention against Torture, articles 12(1) and 12(4) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearance, articles 24-25 of the Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, articles 6-7 of the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Human Beings, sections 6-10 of the Basic Principles on Reparation, the Declaration on Justice for Victims of Crime, principles 15-16 of the Principles on the Investigation of Arbitrary Executions, articles 56-57 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, and articles 54(1)(b) and 68 of the Rome Statute.

CEDAW General Recommendation 19, §24 (b), (k) and (r); CERD General Recommendation 31, §17 and §17; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc. 289/2011. A/66) §44-§46, 60-73, 77 and 100-101, Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism: 14/§35-§45 (2012) UN Doc. A/HRC/20, 67 (c) and (e-i); Joint Study of the United Nations Mechanisms on Secret Detention, 42/§292 (2010) UN Doc. A/HRC/13 (k); Myrna Mac Chang v. Guatemala, Inter-American Court § 199 (2003); Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Kosovo, § 12 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/UNK/CO/1; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Bosnia, / UN Doc. CAT/C §17 (2010) BiH/CO/2-5, Indonesia, 2008) UN Doc. CAT/C/IND/CO/2) §31; Recommendation No. 8) Rec)2006 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, §4- §6; Prosecutor v. Haradinaj et al. (IT-04-84-A), ICTY Appeals Chamber (19) July 2010) §35- §36 and 48 - 49.

Among [3003]others, article 24 (2) of the Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, article 27 of the Basic Principles of Reparation, principle 6(b) of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, principles 4 and 5 and guideline 7 of the Principles of Legal Aid, article 30 (4) of the European Convention on Sexual Abuse of Children and section P(f) (2) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa; see article 7(3) of the Convention against Torture and article 11 (3) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearance.

European Court: §55 (2010) ,(07/40156) A. S. finland, Perez v. France (47287) / 99), Grand Chamber §70- §72 (2004); Recommendation No. R(97)13 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, § §2 and 6; Special Rapporteur on Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism: 14 / §42 (2012) UN Doc. A/HRC/20 and 67 (g); see Prosecutor v. Milosevic (54) -IT-02), ICTY Trial Chamber, Decision on Prosecution Request for Interim Protection Measures Pursuant to Rule 69 (19) February §23 (2002).

([3004]) Among others, article 24 (2) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearances, guidelines 7 and 8 of the Principles of Legal Aid, principles 4 and 6 of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, principle 11 (c) of the Basic Principles of Reparation, guideline 7 of the Guidelines on Child Victims and Witnesses, sections p(j), (f) (1) and (m) (2) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and article 56 (1) (c) of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women.

General Comment 12 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, §64; Recommendation No. Rec(2006)8 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, 6- § §4; see, European Court: Vimukin v. United Kingdom (29178) / 95), §71 (2003) and§ 82 - § 83, Zontol v. Greece (12294/ 07), §110- §112 (2012), Gül v. Turkey (22676/ 93), §93 (2000), Uğur v. Turkey (21594) / 93), 92 § (1999); González et al. ("Cotton Field") v. Mexico, Inter-American Court 424 § (2009).

([3005]) Rosendo Canti et al. v. Mexico, Inter-American Court §184- §185 (2010); see Recommendation No. 8(Rec)2006 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, 2/ §6.

See Articles 56 (1[3006]) (h) and 57 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, Principles 4 and 5 and Guideline 49§ 8 (d) of the Principles of Legal Aid.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §9- §10; UN General Assembly Resolution 65/228, §12; CEDAW Concluding Observations, India, §22 (2010) UN Doc. CEDAW/C/IND/C0/SP. 1 and 24 (c); Recommendation No. 13) R)97 of

The Principles of Legal Aid state that legal aid should be provided to victims and witnesses where appropriate, without derogating from the rights of the accused. Examples include where the witness faces the risk of self-incrimination, where there is a risk to the safety or well-being of the individual, and people with particular vulnerabilities. Child victims and witnesses should receive appropriate legal assistance as appropriate.[3007]

Under international law, witness protection is not an option but a duty of the state.[3008]

Forms of protection for victims and witnesses include witness protection programs that provide them with physical protection and psychological support before, during and after the trial. [3009]

Witnesses and victims participating in court hearings include, where necessary and where appropriate, giving testimony by electronic or other private means, or closing certain court hearings to the public.

In this context, the European Court stated that where the interests of witnesses may be endangered, in terms of preserving their life, liberty or security, the State must organize the hearing of the criminal case in such a way as to ensure that these interests are not unduly endangered. [3010]

In its ruling on the case of a woman extrajudicially executed during a military intelligence operation in Guatemala, the Inter-American Court ruled that to ensure due process, States must protect victims and witnesses and their immediate relatives, as well as others involved in the criminal justice process. The court found that reprisals hindered the investigations and subsequent criminal proceedings, in particular the killing of an investigating officer, and the receipt of death threats by witnesses and victims' families.[3011]

Criminal proceedings should allow victims to present their concerns before the court, and these concerns should be considered at the appropriate stages in a manner that does not harm their personal interests, and without prejudice to the rights of the accused.[3012]

International standards and international jurisprudence have recognized that there can increasingly be a need for special measures to be taken in the investigation, prosecution and adjudication of criminal offences, when the particular characteristics of the victim or the offence entail special risks for the victim or witnesses. Such crimes include crimes against children and gender-based violence crimes of the victim. Victims of factional violence and those who fear the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, §22; see also Yola v. Belgium (07/45413), European Court §28- §40 (2009).

---

([3007]) Principles 4, 5 and Guidelines §50- §51 8, 49 (c), 52) § 9(c) and 48) § 7(b) of the Principles of Legal Aid.

([3008]) Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc. §62 (2011) A/66/289.

([3009]) Among others, Principles 10-12 of the Basic Principles of Reparation, Article 36 (2) of the European Convention on Sexual Abuse of Children, Section P of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Guiding Principles 6 and 7(6) of the Council of Europe Guidelines for the Eradication of Impunity.

CEDAW Committee: Concluding observations: India, / UN Doc. CEDAW/C/IND § §23 (2010) C0/SP. 1 and 24 (e); Recommendation No. 8) Rec)2006 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, §4- §6 and 10 - 12; Recommendation No. 13) R)97 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, §2; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, §60- §73 (2011) UN Doc. A/66/289; see 2003/2). T. v Hungary) CEDAW Committee (4/ § §8 (2005) and 9/3.

([3010]) Dorsson v. The Netherlands (20524) / 92) European Court §70 (1996)..

([3011]) Myrna McChang v. Guatemala, Inter-American Court (2003) §199.

Among [3012]others, Article 6(b) of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, Guiding Principle 48 (§ 7) (e) of the Principles of Legal Assistance, Article 25 (3) of the Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, Article 6(2) (b) of the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Human Beings, Section P(f) (2) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Article 68 (3) of the Rome Statute.

Prosecutor v. Lubanga (1432) - 06/01 - 04 / ICC-01), ICC Appeals Chamber, Decision on the Appeals of the Prosecutor and the Defense against the Trial Chamber I Decision on Victim Participation of 18 January 2008, (11) July 2008) §98- §100 and 104; see also Principle 19 of the Updated Principles on Impunity.

reprisals may be reluctant to testify. Those responsible for such investigations, as well as judges, prosecutors and lawyers, should be specialists in this field or trained for this purpose.[3013]

Witness protection

Article 32 of the United Nations Convention against Corruption provides for the protection of witnesses, experts and victims, stating that: “The protection of witnesses, experts and victims

Each State Party shall take appropriate measures in accordance with its domestic legal system and within its means to provide effective protection from potential retaliation or intimidation for witnesses and experts who give testimony concerning offences established in accordance with this Convention and, where appropriate, for their relatives and other persons close to them.

The measures contemplated in paragraph 1 of this article may include, without prejudice to the rights of the defendant, including the right to due process:

Establish procedures for the physical protection of such persons, such as, to the extent necessary and feasible, relocating them and permitting, where appropriate, non-disclosure or limitations on the disclosure of information concerning their identity and whereabouts;

Providing evidentiary rules that allow witnesses and experts to testify in a manner that ensures the safety of such persons, such as permitting testimony to be given using communications technology, such as video links or other appropriate means.

States Parties shall consider entering into agreements or arrangements with other States for the relocation of persons referred to in paragraph 1 of this article.

The provisions of this article shall also apply to victims if they are witnesses.

Each State Party shall, subject to its domestic law, enable the views and concerns of victims to be presented and considered at appropriate stages of criminal proceedings against offenders, in a manner not prejudicial to the rights of the defense. ”

Article 33, entitled Protection of whistle-blowers, states: “Each State Party shall consider incorporating into its domestic legal system appropriate measures to provide protection against any unjustified transaction for any person who, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, reports to the competent authorities any facts relating to offences established in accordance with this Convention.”[3014]

The Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session under agenda item 105, states in item 27: " We decide to develop, where appropriate, national, regional and international action plans to support crime, such as mediation and restorative justice mechanisms, and decide that 2002 shall be the target date for States to review their practice in this regard, continue to develop victim support services, organize awareness campaigns on victims' rights, and consider the establishment of funds for victims, in addition to developing and implementing witness protection policies."

Among [3013]other criteria, article 4(1) of the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and articles 34, 35 (c) and 36 (1) of the European Convention on Sexual Abuse of Children; see article 8 of the Protocol to the African Charter on the Rights of Women in Africa and section P(m) (3) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Japan, / UN Doc. CCPR/C §14 (2008) JPN/CO/5, Madagascar, 2007) UN Doc. CCPR/C/MDG/CO/3) §11; CEDAW concluding observations: India, / UN Doc. CEDAW/C/IND §24 (2010) C0/SP. 1 (c) and(f); Principle 10 (c) of the Yogyakarta Principles; Recommendation CM/Rec(2010)5 of the Council of Europe, §a(3).

([3014]) Egypt joined it by virtue of Presidential Decree No. 307 of 2004 issued on September 11, 2004 and published in the Official Gazette on February 08, 2007.

Article 18 of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, under the heading of mutual legal assistance, states: "... 27. Without prejudice to the application of paragraph 12 of this article, a witness, expert or other person who, at the request of the requesting State Party, consents to give evidence in a proceeding or to assist in an investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding in the territory of the requesting State Party shall not be prosecuted, detained, punished or subjected to any other restriction of their or her personal liberty in that territory in respect of any act, omission or conviction that has previously left the territory of the requested State Party. This guarantee shall terminate if the witness, expert or other person remains voluntarily in the territory of the requesting State Party after having had the opportunity to leave within a period of fifteen consecutive days, or any period agreed upon by the States Parties, from the date on which they or she has been officially informed that their or her presence is no longer required by the judicial authorities, or if they or she returns voluntarily to the territory after having left it...".[3015]

The Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly under agenda item 97 (b) of the forty-seventh session on the basis of the report of the Third Committee (A / 47/678 / Add. 2) On February 12, 1993, in Article 13 thereof, provided that:

Each State shall ensure that anyone with knowledge or a legitimate interest who alleges that a person has been subjected to enforced disappearance has the right to report the facts to a competent and independent authority within the State conducting a prompt, full and impartial investigation into their complaint. Whenever there are reasonable grounds to believe that an enforced disappearance has been committed, the State shall without delay refer the matter to that authority for such investigation, even if no formal complaint has been submitted. No measures shall be taken to shorten or obstruct such investigation.

Each State shall ensure that the competent authority has the necessary powers and resources to carry out the investigation effectively, including powers to compel witnesses to appear and produce relevant documents, and to proceed immediately to inspect the sites.

Measures shall be taken to ensure that all those involved in the investigation, including the complainant, counsel, witnesses and those conducting the investigation, are protected from ill-treatment, threat or retaliation.

All persons concerned shall be allowed, upon their request, to view the results of the investigation, unless this is detrimental to the progress of the ongoing investigation.

Special provisions shall be made to ensure that any ill-treatment, threat, reprisal or other form of interference, occurring at the time of the lodging of a complaint or during the course of an investigation, is appropriately sanctioned.

It should always be possible to conduct an investigation, in accordance with the aforementioned methods, for as long as the fate of the victim of enforced disappearance remains unclarified. ”

Article 7 (18) of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances states: "... 18. No witness, expert or other person who consents to give evidence in a proceeding or to assist in investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings in the territory of the requesting Party shall be prosecuted, detained, punished or subjected to any other form of restriction of their or her personal liberty in the territory of that Party in respect of an act, omission or conviction prior to their or her departure from the territory of the requested (3015) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 294 of 2003 issued on 04 November 2004 and published in the Official Gazette on 09 September 2004.

Party. Traffic safety shall terminate if the witness, expert or other person remains of their own free will in the territory, after having had the opportunity to depart within a period of fifteen consecutive days or any period agreed upon by the parties as of the date on which they is informed that their presence is no longer required by the judicial authorities or if they returns to the territory of their own free will after having left it...". [3016]

Article 13 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment states: "Each State Party shall guarantee to any individual alleged to have been subjected to torture in any territory under its jurisdiction the right to complain to its competent authorities and to have their case promptly and impartially examined by those authorities. Steps should be taken to ensure that the complainant and witnesses are protected from all ill-treatment or intimidation as a result of their complaint or any evidence provided".[3017]

Article 32 of the Arab Guidance Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters stipulates that: " Every witness or expert, regardless of their nationality, shall be summoned by the competent judicial authority in the requested State, and shall appear voluntarily for this purpose before the judicial bodies of the applicant. They shall enjoy legal protection against taking criminal measures against him, arresting him, or imprisoning them for acts or executing judgments prior to their entry into the territory of the requesting party.

The requesting party shall notify the witness or expert in writing of this protection before they attend for the first time.

The protection of the witness or expert shall cease after the lapse of thirty days from the date of their notification to dispense with their presence in its territory without leaving it, if nothing prevents this for reasons beyond their control or if they return to it voluntarily after leaving[3018] it.

Article 12 of the Arab Guidance Law to Combat Trafficking in Persons Crimes stipulates that: "The competent authorities shall take measures to protect the victim, those who report the crimes stipulated in this law, those affected by them, witnesses, experts and members of their families."

Article 3 of the Arab Convention for the Suppression of Terrorism stipulates that: "The Contracting States undertake not to organize, finance, commit terrorist acts or participate in them in any way whatsoever. In order to prevent and combat terrorist crimes in accordance with their respective domestic laws and procedures, they shall work to:..

Second: Control Measures:

Arrest and prosecute perpetrators of terrorist crimes in accordance with national law or extradite them in accordance with the provisions of this agreement or bilateral agreements between the requesting and requested countries.

Ensuring effective protection for criminal justice personnel.

Ensuring effective protection of sources of information on terrorist crimes and witnesses to them.

Providing the necessary assistance to victims of terrorism.

([3016]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 568 of 1990 issued on 23 December 1991 and published in the Official Gazette on 27 June 1991.

([3017]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 154 of 1986 issued on 06 April 1986 and published in the Official Gazette on 07 January 1988.

([3018]) Adopted by the Council of Arab Ministers of Justice at its twenty-second session by Resolution No. 653-D 22 - 29/11/2006.

Establish effective cooperation between relevant agencies and citizens to counter terrorism, including appropriate safeguards and incentives to encourage the reporting of terrorist acts, provide information that helps to detect them, and cooperate in apprehending the perpetrators...". [3019]

Article 35 stipulates that:

No penalty or measure involving coercion may be imposed on a witness or expert who has not complied with the summons to appear, even if the summons to appear includes a statement of the penalty for failure.

If the witness or expert voluntarily attends the territory of the requesting State, they shall be assigned to attend in accordance with the provisions of the internal legislation of this State. "

Article 36 stipulates that:

A witness or expert shall not be subject to trial, imprisonment or restriction of their freedom in the territory of the requesting State for acts or judgments prior to their departure from the territory of the requested States, regardless of their nationality. As long as their appearance before the judicial authorities of that State is based on a summons to appear.

It is not permitted to try, imprison or subject to any restriction on their freedom in the territory of the requesting State any witness or expert, regardless of their nationality, who attends before the judicial authorities of that State on the basis of a summons to appear for other acts or judgments not referred to in the summons to attend and preceded their departure from the territory of the requested State.

The immunity provided for in this article shall lapse if the witness or expert sought remains in the territory of the requesting State for thirty consecutive days despite their ability to leave it after their presence has become no longer required by the judicial authorities or if they return to the territory of the requesting State after their departure. "

Article 37 also stipulates that:

The requesting State undertakes to take all necessary measures to ensure the protection of the witness or expert from any publicity that endangers him, their family or their property resulting from their testimony or experience, in particular:

Ensuring the confidentiality of the date and place of their arrival in the requesting State and the means thereof.

Guaranteeing the confidentiality of their place of residence, their movements, and their whereabouts.

Ensuring the confidentiality of their statements and information they makes before the competent judicial authorities.

The requesting State undertakes to provide the necessary security protection required by the situation of the witness or expert and their family, the circumstances of the case in which they is required, and the types of risks expected. "

Article 7 of the Arab Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances under the heading of mutual legal and judicial cooperation stipulated: "... 15. No witness, expert or other person who consents to testify in a proceeding or to assist in investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings in the territory of the Requested Party shall be prosecuted, detained, punished or subjected to any other form of restriction of their or her personal liberty in the territory of that Party in connection with their or her commission of an offence or conviction prior to their or her departure from the territory of the Requested Party. Traffic safety shall terminate if the witness, expert or other person remains of their own free will in the territory after having had the opportunity to depart within a period of fifteen consecutive days or any period agreed upon by the parties as of the date on which they was informed that their presence is no longer required by the judicial authorities or in the event of their return to the territory of their own free will after they has left it...".

---

([3019]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 279 of 1998 issued on 12 August 1998 and published in the Official Gazette on 06 May 1999.

Article 22 of the Riyadh Arab Agreement for Judicial Cooperation, under the title of Immunity of Witnesses and Experts, stipulates that: "Every witness or expert, whatever their nationality, shall be declared to appear before the Contracting Parties and to attend voluntarily for this purpose before the judicial authorities of the requesting Contracting Party, shall enjoy immunity against taking penal measures against him, arresting him, or imprisoning them for acts or executing judgments prior to their entry into the territory of the requesting Contracting Party.

The body that declared the witness or expert must notify them in writing of this immunity before their first appearance

This immunity shall cease for the witness or expert after the lapse of 30 days from the date on which the judicial bodies of the requesting Contracting Party dispense with their presence in its territory without leaving it, provided that nothing prevents this for reasons beyond their control or if they return to it of their own free will after leaving it. " [3020]

In the field of bilateral agreements, the Agreement on Legal and Judicial Cooperation between the Government of the United Arab Emirates and the Arab Republic of Egypt, which was signed on February 5, 2000, devoted Chapter Four to the attendance of witnesses and experts in penal matters. Article 23 of it, under the title of immunity of witnesses and experts, stipulates that: "A witness or expert who has not attended despite being notified of the summons may not be subject to any penalty or restrictive measure, even if this assignment includes a penalty clause. If the witness or expert refuses to attend, the requested party shall inform the requesting party of this.

It is not permitted to prosecute, detain, or restrict the personal freedom of a witness or expert - whatever their nationality - who has appeared on a summons to appear before the judicial authorities of the requesting party in the territory of that party for criminal acts or convictions prior to their departure from the territory of the requested party, nor may they be prosecuted, detained, or punished because of their testimony or expert report submitted by them.

The immunity granted to the witness and the expert stipulated in the preceding two paragraphs shall terminate if a period of thirty consecutive days has elapsed from the date of their notification by the entity that assigned them to attend that their presence is no longer desirable and they had the opportunity to leave and nevertheless remained in the territory of the requesting party, or left it and then returned to it of their own free will. This period does not include the periods during which the witness or expert was unable to leave the territory of the requesting party for reasons beyond their control.[3021]

Article 21 of the Agreement on Legal and Judicial Cooperation concluded between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the State of Bahrain signed on 17 May 1989 stipulates that: "Every witness or expert - regardless of their nationality - shall be declared to be present in one of the

---

([3020]) It was joined by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 278 of 2014 issued on 19 August 2014 and published in the Official Gazette on 04 December 2014.

([3021]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 464 of 2000 issued on 09 August 2000 and published in the Official Gazette on 03 May 2001.

Contracting States and shall attend voluntarily for this purpose before the judicial authorities of the requesting State. No criminal measures may be taken against him, or they shall be arrested or imprisoned for acts or in implementation of provisions prior to their entry into the country of the requesting State.

The notice of attendance shall not include any threat of coercive means in the event of non-compliance with the notice.

This immunity shall cease for the witness or expert after the lapse of thirty days from the date on which the judicial authorities in the requesting State dispense with their presence without leaving it, provided that there is nothing to prevent this for reasons beyond their control or if they return to it of their own free will after leaving it. The authorities that have declared the witness or expert shall notify them in writing of this immunity before their first appearance. "([3022]).

Article 32 of the Judicial Cooperation Agreement between the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan and the Arab Republic of Egypt, signed on October 26, 1986, stipulates that: "Every witness or expert who is declared to appear before the judicial authority in one of the contracting countries has the right to appear voluntarily for this purpose and enjoys immunity against taking any penal measures against him, arresting him, imprisoning them for acts or executing previous judgments issued against them by the judicial authority of the requesting party. This immunity shall cease after the lapse of 30 days from the date on which the judicial bodies dispense with their presence in its territory" [3023].

Article No. 20 of the Agreement on Legal and Judicial Cooperation in Civil, Commercial, Criminal and Personal Status Matters between the Governments of the Arab Republic of Egypt and the State of Kuwait, signed on 6 April 1977, stipulates that: "Every witness or expert - regardless of their nationality - shall be declared to be present in one of the Contracting States and shall attend voluntarily for this purpose before the judicial authorities of the requesting State. No penal measures may be taken against him, or they shall be arrested or imprisoned for acts or in implementation of provisions preceding their entry into the country of the requesting State. The notice of attendance shall not include any threat of coercive means in the event of non-compliance with the notice.

This immunity shall cease for the witness or expert after the lapse of fifteen days from the date on which the judicial authorities in the requesting State dispense with their presence without leaving it, with nothing to prevent this for reasons beyond their control or if they return to it after leaving it.

The authority that declared the witness or expert shall notify them in writing of this immunity before they testify for the first time"[3024].

Article 20 of the Convention on Legal and Judicial Cooperation in Civil, Commercial and Penal Matters signed between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the Republic of Tunisia on January 9, 1976 stipulates that: "Every witness or expert, whatever their nationality, shall be declared to be present in any of the Contracting States and of their own free will for this purpose before the authorities of the requesting State. No penal measures may be taken against him, nor shall they be arrested or imprisoned for acts or in implementation of provisions prior to entering the country of the requesting State. The notice of attendance shall not include any threat of coercive means in the event of non-compliance with the notice.

([3022]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 260 of 1989 issued on 17 May 1989 and published in the Official Gazette on 14 December 1989.

([3023]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 103 of 1987 issued on 23 March 1987 and published in the Official Gazette on 20 August 1987.

([3024]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 293 of 1977 and published on January 19, 1978.

This immunity shall cease for the witness or expert after the lapse of thirty days from the date on which the judicial authorities in the requesting State dispense with their presence without leaving it, with nothing preventing them from doing so for reasons beyond their control or if they return to them after they leaves it. The authority that declared the witness or expert shall notify them in writing of this immunity before they testify for the first time" [3025].

Article 11 of the Agreement on Mutual Judicial Assistance in Criminal Matters between the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt and the Government of the Republic of South Africa signed on 22 October 2001 under the title of the possibility for other persons to testify or assist in investigations in the requesting State provided that they agree that: "1- A request for assistance may be made to facilitate the possibility for a person to assist in an investigation or appear as a witness in proceedings relating to a crime committed in the requesting State, unless that person is the subject of the investigation or accused of committing the crime.

2. The requested State, if it ascertains that appropriate arrangements are in place for the safety of the person by the requesting State, shall request that person to consent to assist in the investigation or appear as a witness in the proceedings and shall take all necessary steps to facilitate the request.[3026]

Article 12 of the Agreement on Mutual Judicial Assistance in the Field of Civil, Commercial and Family Cases between the Governments of the Arab Republic of Egypt and the Russian Federation, signed on 23 September 1997, stipulates that:

If, during the judicial proceedings in the territory of a Contracting Party, the need arises for the presence of a witness in person or the assignment of an expert in the territory of the other Contracting Party, the notification request shall be addressed to a corresponding authority of that Party.

The notice shall not contain any penalties relating to the failure of the addressee to announce attendance.

A witness or expert, whatever their nationality, who voluntarily attends in person on the basis of a summons to appear before the counterpart of the other party, shall not be prosecuted for any crime committed in the territory of that party. they may not be detained or punished for a crime committed before they cross the borders of the State of that party. Such persons may not be prosecuted for any crime, detained or punished for testifying or expressing their point of view as experts or in connection with a crime that is the subject of proceedings.

This immunity shall be waived if the witness or expert fails to leave the territory of the requesting Contracting Party within fifteen days from the date of notification by the authority that notified them that their presence is no longer necessary. This period does not include any period during which the witness or expert is unable to leave the territory of the requesting Contracting Party for reasons beyond their control.

Witnesses and experts who come to the territory of the other Contracting Party at its request shall have the right to be reimbursed by the requesting authority for their travel expenses and costs related to their stay abroad, as well as for the lost earnings. Experts shall also have the right to remuneration for their examination work. The request for summons shall include information on the payments to which the requested persons are entitled. The requesting Contracting Party shall record before their data in the request the advance payment paid to them to cover their expenses.

([3025]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 407 of 1976 and published on 06 January 1977.

([3026]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 77 of 2003 issued on 22 March 2003 and published in the Official Gazette on 08 January 2004.

A witness or expert who, at the request of judicial assistance, is represented before a judicial authority of the requesting Contracting Party, may refrain from giving their testimony or performing work that they is required to perform if the law of one of the Contracting Parties so permits.

When necessary, the requesting contracting party may attach to the request for assistance a copy of the law that determines the rights and duties of the witness or expert[3027].

Article 9 of the Convention on Judicial Assistance in Criminal Matters and Extradition and Transfer of Sentenced Persons between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the Republic of Hungary, signed on 13 December 1987, stipulates that: "No penalty or measure involving its repetition may be imposed before the witness or expert who has not complied with the summons to appear, even if the summons to appear includes a statement of the penalty for default, unless they voluntarily goes to the territory of the claimant State, provided that they is then reassigned to attend again."

Article 11 also stipulates that:

A witness or expert shall not be subject to trial, imprisonment or restriction of their freedom in the territory of the requesting State for acts or judgments prior to their departure from the territory of the requested State, regardless of their nationality, as long as their appearance before the judicial authorities of that State is based on a summons to appear.

It is not permitted to try, imprison, or subject to any restriction on their freedom in the territory of the requesting State, any person, regardless of their nationality, who is brought to trial before the judicial authorities of that State on the basis of a summons to appear for other acts or judgments not referred to in the summons to appear paper and prior to their departure from the territory of the requested State.

3.The immunity stipulated in this article shall lapse if the witness, expert or person sought remains in the territory of the requesting State for 15 consecutive days despite their ability to leave after their presence has become not required by the judicial authorities, if they return to the territory of the requesting State after leaving it[3028].

Article 21 of the Convention on Judicial Declarations and Letters Rogatory in Civil and Commercial Matters, Personal Status and Judicial Cooperation in the Field of Legal Studies concluded between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the Italian Republic signed on April 20, 1974 stipulates that:

If a witness or expert attends to testify, whatever their nationality, based on a declaration by the court of the requested Contracting Party, before the bodies of the requesting Contracting Party, in civil and commercial matters or in personal status matters, criminal proceedings may not be taken against them or arrested for a punishable act committed before they crossed the borders of the requesting Contracting Party. A previous judgment of conviction may not be executed against him. It is also not permissible to initiate any proceedings against these persons for other legal violations committed before they crossed the borders of the State, nor to carry out previous procedures issued for these violations.

The witness or expert who gives their testimony shall lose the immunity provided for in the preceding paragraph if they does not leave the territory of the requesting Contracting Party within fifteen days from the date of their notification that there is no longer a need for their stay, and the time during which they is unable to leave the territory of the Contracting Party for reasons beyond their control shall not be included in the calculation of this period.

---

([3027]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 104 of 1998 issued on 14 April 1998 and published in the Official Gazette on 28 November 2002.

([3028]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 129 of 1988 issued on 26 March 1988 and published in the Egyptian Chronicle on 22 June 1988.

If the person imprisoned in the territory of the Contracting Party declares by proxy by a court of the other Contracting Party to appear as a witness or expert to testify as if they were obliged to move for this purpose, they shall be entitled to the immunity guaranteed to them under the first and second paragraphs of this Article[3029] .

Witnesses, child victims and victims of gender-based violence

International standards and jurisprudence of human rights courts have established a broad spectrum of measures (complementary to those listed in 22/4 above, or more specifically) to protect the rights of child victims and victims of gender-based violence and human trafficking, both during investigations and in the context of criminal proceedings.

For example, many international standards aim to protect the privacy of child victims of crime, child witnesses and victims of gender-based violence and human trafficking [3030].

Treatment of child victims and witnesses in criminal proceedings must be consistent with the child's right to be heard and with the principle of the best interests of the child [3031].

Claims involving child victims and witnesses must respect the child's right to be heard, the best interests of the child, and the child's right to a private life [3032].

Contact between the accused and victims of gender-based violence, as well as child victims, should be avoided in police stations and courts, where possible. Interviews should be videotaped and conducted by specially trained persons [3033].

The rules of evidence should allow for the adoption of such recordings into evidence, without prejudice to the rights of the accused, and victims should be able to make their voices heard in the courtroom without necessarily being present in person, or without having to, at least, see the accused [3034].

Parents or relatives, if appropriate, as well as legal representatives or social workers, should be present when child victims or witnesses are questioned by the police, and the questioning of children should be considered through intermediaries [3035].

Trials involving children may be held behind closed doors.

Limitations may be placed on the scope and manner of investigation of victims of gender-based violence or child victims [3036].

([3029]) Approved by the Arab Republic of Egypt by Presidential Decree No. 1653 of 1974 and published on July 13, 1978.

([3030]) Among others, Article 8(1) (e) of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 36 (2) of the European Convention on Sexual Abuse of Children, Articles 11 and 30 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, Guidelines 12-10 of the Guidelines on Child Victims and Witnesses, Section A(3) (f) (1) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Article 68 (2) of the Rome Statute.

[3031]See Committee on the Rights of the Child: General Comment 12 §32- §34, General Comment 13 §63.

Guidelines [3032]on Child Victims and Witnesses, General Comment 12 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, §63- §65 and 68.

([3033]) Among others, Guidelines 12 (34) (a), 11 (31) and 5(14,130) of the Guidelines on Child Victims and Witnesses, and Section O(p) of the Fair Trial Principles in Africa.

Among others, articles 36-35 (2[3034]) (b) of the European Convention on Sexual Abuse of Children, article 56 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, guideline 11 (31) of the Guidelines on Child Victims and Witnesses, section O(p) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, article 68 (2) of the Rome Statute, UN Security Council, Rule of Law and Transitional Justice in Conflict and Post-Conflict Societies: Report of the Secretary-General, UN Doc §25 ,S/2004/616.

([3035]) Among other criteria, Article 35 (1) (f) of the European Convention on Sexual Abuse of Children, and Section O(p) (1)and(5) of the Fair Trial Principles in Africa.

These restrictions must be adequately balanced by measures to protect the rights of the defense[3037].

For example, evidence relating to a victim's sexuality, disposition or behaviors should be allowed to be discussed only when it is relevant and necessary for what is being researched [3038].

In its consideration of cases involving child victims of sexual abuse, the European Court affirmed that justice requires that the accused be given the opportunity to observe the interview with the child witness, for example via a video link or from behind a one-way mirror, or later by watching a videotape of the interview. The accused has the right to direct their questions to the child, either directly or indirectly, or during the first interview or later [3039].

However, the court reiterated that courts should treat evidence obtained from a witness when they cannot guarantee the rights of the defense with caution [3040].

Applying these principles, the court ruled that the rights of the accused were violated when a pre-recorded testimony of the victim constituted the decisive evidence of guilt without the defense having the opportunity to hold the victim accountable, either directly or indirectly [3041].

The defendant's complaints that the fairness of the trial had been punched were ostensibly unfounded, when a videotape of the interrogation of child victims of sexual abuse constituted decisive evidence in their conviction. The accused, the defense lawyer and the investigating judge were present behind a porous mirror during the interrogation, while the accused could ask specific questions to witness through the investigating judge [3042].

Measures must be taken to prevent the publication of any personal information or data that could lead to the identification of the child victim or witness, including within the operative part of court rulings, or in the media [3043].

Chapter Twenty-One: The Right to an Interpreter and Translation

21-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

The language of the courts is Arabic, and the court must hear the statements of litigants or witnesses who are ignorant of them by an interpreter after taking the oath.

Sections n (6[3036]) (f) (3-5) and o(p) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa; see Articles 26, 54 and 56 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women.

Guideline 31 (b[3037]) of the Guidelines on Child Victims and Witnesses, article 30 (4) of the European Convention on Sexual Abuse of Children, sections n(6) (f) (3-5) and o(p) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and article 68 (1) of the Rome Statute.

([3038]) Article 54 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women, and Section O(p) (12) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

([3039]) European Court: §56 (2010) ,(07/40156) A. S. v Finland, Akardi et al. v. Italy (30598/ 02), Inadmissibility Decision (2005), W. S. Poland (21508/ 02), (64- §61 (2007).

([3040]) S. N. v Sweden (96/34209), ECtHR §47- §53 (2002).

([3041]) European Court: §453- §68 (2010) ,(07/40156) A. S. v Finland, Damski v. Poland (22695/ 03), §38- §47 (2008), Bocos-Coestav. The Netherlands (54789/ 00), §64- §74 (2005).

([3042]) Akardi et al. v. Italy (30598 / 02), European Court: Inadmissibility Decision (2005).

([3043]) Among others, article 14 (1) of the International Covenant, Guideline 10 of the Guidelines on Child Victims and Witnesses, Guideline 54§ 10 of the Principles of Legal Aid, and Section O(p) (4) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

The necessary number of translators shall be attached to each court, and whoever appoints a translator shall be required to appoint a clerk and improve the answer in a written and oral exam in Arabic and one of the foreign languages. Those who hold specialized degrees in one of the foreign languages shall be exempted from the requirement of the exam. This exam shall be taken by the committee formed in the Ministry of Justice from the Undersecretary of the Ministry of the Director General of the Courts Department and the Director General of Administrative Affairs, joined by the Head of the Translation Registry in the Ministry. The appointment, transfer, promotion and granting of bonuses shall be by a decision of the Minister of Justice after reviewing the proposal of this committee[3044].

The original principle is that the trial shall be conducted in the official language of the state, which is Arabic, unless one of the investigation or trial authorities is unable to initiate the investigation procedures without the assistance of an intermediary who performs the translation or the accused requests it and their request is subject to its discretion - it is not defective for the investigation procedures that the authority in charge of it has hired a translator to undertake the translation work, as it is related to its circumstances and requirements, and it is always subject to the discretion of the one who performs it[3045].

The court's failure to use an interpreter does not invalidate the trial proceedings [3046].

If the court has relied on what it relied on in convicting the accused on a report written in English that has not been translated into Arabic, this has no effect on the integrity of its judgment as long as this report in its condition was among the case papers before the court, and the accused did not appear to it that they needed to translate it to know and discuss it [3047].

However, if the accused insists that it is not correct to hold them accountable based on reports in the lawsuit written in English, yet the court convicted them on the basis of these reports without translating them, this is a defect in the procedures that requires the reversal of its judgment [3048].

The investigation procedures are not flawed if the entity in charge of it has used a representative from the embassy who attended with the accused and agreed to be its translator without the translator assigned by the Public Prosecution from the Information Authority or the Foreign Correspondents Department to carry out the translation work [3049].

([3044]) Articles 19, 138 and 156, 157 of the Judicial Authority Law.

([3045]) Appeal No. 20640 of 67 S issued at the 25th session of March 2007 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 58, page No. 311, rule No. 59, Appeal No. 10015 of 63 S issued at the 19th session of January 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 46, page No. 211, rule No. 30, Appeal No. 5822 of 61 S issued at the 24th session of December 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 43, page No. 1222, rule No. 190, Appeal No. 5522 of 59 S issued at the 25th session of December 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 40 page 1313 rule No. 213, Appeal No. 152 of 59 S issued at the 4th session of April 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 40 page 491 rule No. 81, Appeal No. 3172 of 57 S issued at the 24th session of February 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 39 page No. 5, Appeal No. 3053 of 54 S issued at the 14th session From March 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 36 page No. 403 rule No. 69, Appeal No. 698 of 49 s issued in the session of 17 October 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 30 page No. 762 rule No. 160, Appeal No. 175 of 43 s issued in the session of 9 April 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 24 page No. 510 rule No. 106, Appeal No. 2821 of 32 s issued in the session of 13 May 1963 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 14 page No. 392 rule No. 77.

([3046]) Appeal No. 3053 of 54 S issued at the hearing of March 14, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 403 rule No. 69.

([3047]) Appeal No. 188 of 13 S issued on December 28, 1942 and published in the first part of the set of legal rules, sixth year, page No. 77, rule No. 56.

([3048]) Appeal No. 1204 of 18 S issued at the session of December 20, 1948 and published in the first part of the set of legal rules, seventh year, page No. 679, rule No. 725.

([3049]) Appeal No. 10015 of 63 S issued at the session of January 19, 1995 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 46 page No. 211 rule No. 30.

It is also not a defect in the investigation procedures that the party conducting it has used two mediators, one of which translated the defendant's statements from Hindi into English and then the other transferred them from English to Arabic, as it is related to the circumstances and requirements of the investigation and is always subject to the discretion of the person who carries it out [3050].

They requested the assistance of an interpreter related to the interest of the accused, so they may waive their use [3051].

If it is not clear from the minutes of the trial hearings that the accused requested the assistance of an expert to translate the data that the accused mourns for the judgment not to seek the assistance of an expert to translate - they shall not be entitled to appeal to the court for its failure to conduct an investigation that was not requested of it or to respond to a defense that was not raised before it [3052].

It is not permissible to claim that the interpreter used by the prosecution witness and the Public Prosecution was not familiar with the language of the accused for the first time before the Court of Cassation [3053].

The accused has no interest in challenging the trial procedures if the papers submitted in the lawsuit are written in a foreign language and some of them have not been translated and the civil plaintiff waives adhering to the part that has not been translated and the court does not rely on any role of the court on any of these papers [3054].

The expert - the translator - is not obligated to take the oath before hearing their statements before the court as an expert and not a witness, as long as they have taken an oath when taking their job, which dispenses with their oath in every case in which they appears before the courts[3055].

21-2 Within the Framework of International Covenants

Whoever is accused of a criminal act has the right to the assistance of a specialized translator free of charge, if they do not understand or speak the language used in court, and whoever is accused of a criminal act has the right to have the documents translated.

21-2-1 Interpretation and Translation

If the accused does not speak, understand or read the language used by the court, or finds it difficult to do so, they has the right to obtain an accurate and clear interpretation, from the

---

([3050]) Appeal No. 3172 of 57 S issued in the session of February 24, 1988 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 39 page No. 5.

([3051]) Appeal No. 5822 of 61 s issued at the session of 24 December 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 43 page No. 1222 rule No. 190, Appeal No. 3053 of 54 s issued at the session of 14 March 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 36 page No. 403 rule No. 69, Appeal No. 175 of 43 s issued at the session of 9 April 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 24 page No. 510 rule No. 106, Appeal No. 2821 of 32 s issued at the session of 13 May 1963 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 14 page No. 392 rule No. 77.

([3052]) Appeal No. 5288 of 52 S issued at the session of November 14, 1982 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 33 page No. 879 rule No. 181, Appeal No. 1923 of 8 S issued at the session of October 31, 1938 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 4 p No. Part 1 page No. 317 rule No. 262.

([3053]) Appeal No. 15049 of 59 S issued at the session of February 20, 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 page No. 397 rule No. 64.

([3054]) Appeal No. 1057 of 47 S issued on May 1, 1930 and published in the first part of the set of legal rules, the second year, page No. 29, rule No. 36.

([3055]) Appeal No. 1096 of 29 S issued at the session of November 17, 1959 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 10 page No. 896 rule No. 190.

language of the court to the language of the accused and vice versa, as well as to have a translator prepare edited copies of the documents in the relevant language, as they are of crucial importance in ensuring the fairness of the proceedings. These functions are fundamental to the realization of the right to legal aid, to the provision of adequate facilities for the accused, to prepare their defense, and to the principle of equality of opportunity between the prosecution and the defense before the law and the courts.

Without this kind of assistance, the accused may be unable to understand what is going on in court and cannot fully and effectively participate in the preparation of their defense and in the trial. Because documents can contain essential information for the preparation of a defense, and in the face of the possibility that the accused may be asked about the content of some documents, the right to translation remains a necessity for the right to a fair trial.

The right to such assistance extends to the provision of facilities to persons with disabilities whose disability may prevent them from communicating orally or in writing, or from reading the relevant documents in the language or format in which they were prepared [3056].

The enforcement of these rights requires the authorities to ensure the availability of sufficient numbers of qualified interpreters and document translators[3057].

21-2-2 The right to use a competent interpreter

Every person accused of a criminal act has the right to be assisted by an interpreter, free of charge, if they does not understand or speak the language used in court [3058].

Failure to provide interpretation to the accused who does not speak or understand the language used in court constitutes a violation of the accused's right to a fair trial [3059].

The right to an interpreter applies at all stages of criminal proceedings, including during police questioning of a suspect, preliminary examinations or inquiries, challenges to the legality of detention, as well as during detention or imprisonment [3060].

It also applies, where appropriate, to communication between the accused and their lawyer at all stages of the investigation and the pre-trial and trial period)[3061].

See [3056]Guidelines 42§ 2 (d) and 43§ 3 (f) of the Principles of Legal Aid, Articles 9 and 13 of the Convention on Persons with Disabilities, Article 2(3) of EU Directive 2010/64 (2010) on the right to interpretation and translation of documents in criminal proceedings.

([3057]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, §17 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/MKD/CO/2; CERD Concluding Observations: Romania, UN Doc §19 (2010) CERD/C/ROU/CO/16-19, Cameroon, / UN Doc. CERD/C. §17 (2010) CMR/CO/15-18.

([3058]) Article 14 (3) (f) of the International Covenant, Article 40 (2) (b) (iv) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Articles 18 (3) (f) and 16 (8) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 8(2) (a) of the American Convention, Article 16 (4) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(3) (e) of the European Convention, Guideline 43§ 3 (f) of the Principles of Legal Aid, Section N(4) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Principle 5 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, Article 67 (1) (f) of the Rome Statute, Article 20 (4) (f) of the Statute of the Rwanda Tribunal, and Article 21 (4) (f) of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal.

Bozbeh [3059]v. Turkmenistan, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR 2/ §7 (2010) C/100/D/1530/2006; Kevin Mgwanga Goneme et al. v. Cameroon (266) / 03), African Commission (130- § §129 (2009); Report on Terrorism and Human Rights, Inter-American Commission, (2002) (III)H (3) , §235 III)D (1). 16)f(§ IV)H) , §400.

([3060]) Article 16 (8) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Principle 14 of the Body of Principles, Guideline 43§ 3 (f) of the Principles on Legal Aid, Section n(4) (c) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, and Principle 5 of the Principles relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas.

European Court, Hermé v. Italy (18114) / 02), Grand Chamber §69 (2006), Diallo v. Sweden (13205) / 07), in the decision on inadmissibility, (25- §23 (2010); see Human Rights Committee, General Comment 32, §32, Singarasa v. Sri Lanka, 2001-2004 (UN CCPR/C/81/D/1033) 2/ §7; Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, Spain, §26- §27 (2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/10/3/Add. 2; Article 2 of EU Directive 2010/64 (2010) on the right to an interpreter and to the translation of documents in criminal proceedings.

The right to free assistance by an interpreter must be available to all persons who do not speak or understand the language of the court, both citizens and non-citizens [3062].

As the guardian of integrity in criminal cases, courts remain responsible for ensuring that competent interpretation is provided to those who need it [3063].

The accused should have the right to appeal any decision that deprives them of the assistance of an interpreter [3064].

In deciding whether or not to appoint an interpreter, the court shall not only consider the extent of the accused's knowledge of the language, but shall also take into account the complexity of the issues raised in the case and any correspondence or documents issued by the authorities. If the accused speaks and understands the language used to some extent, the complexity of the legal and factual issues should be taken into account in deciding whether or not to use an interpreter[3065].

The International Criminal Court has emphasized that, in case of doubt, the option of providing an interpreter should prevail [3066].

The Human Rights Committee concluded that in cases where it is ascertained that the accused speaks and understands adequately the language used by the court, there is no obligation for the authorities to provide the accused with an interpreter to assist them free of charge, even if the accused prefers to use another language [3067].

However, States are encouraged to allow criminal proceedings to be conducted in regional or minority languages, or for individuals to use such languages in court when requested to do so by one of the parties to the dispute. This can be facilitated by interpreters [3068].

For this right to be meaningful, the interpreter must be competent and accurate. The accused must be able to understand what is being done, and the court must be able to understand the statements made in another language [3069].

It should draw the attention of the authorities, and therefore the court, to the importance of issues such as the efficiency of the translator and the quality of the translation, which the court must ensure adequately [3070].

Interpreters should be provided to those who do not understand or speak the language used in court free of charge, regardless of the outcome of the trial [3071].

([3061]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §32.
([3062]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §40; General Recommendation 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, §30; Hermé v. Italy (18114) / 02), Grand Chamber of the European Court §72 (2006); Kevin Mgwanga Goneme et al. v. Cameroon (266) / 03), African Commission, Annual Report 26. §130 (2009).
([3063]) Coscani v. United Kingdom (32771) / 96), European Court. §39 (2002).
See [3064]Article 2(5) of EU Directive 2010/64 (2010) on the right to an interpreter and to the translation of documents in criminal proceedings.
([3065]) Hermi v. Italy (18114) / 02), Grand Chamber of the European Court. §71 (2006).
Prosecutor [3066]v. Katanga (07) /01-04/ ICC-01), ICC Appeals Chamber 27 May §61 (2008).
([3067]) Section N(4) (b) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.
Human Rights Committee, Goma v. Australia, / UN CCPR 3/ §7 (2003) C/78/D/984/2001, Goisdon v. France, . 3/10-2/ §10 (1990) UN CCPR/C/39/D/219/1986.
([3068]) Article 9(1) (a) of the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.
Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Romania, §19 (2010) UN Doc. CERD/C/ROU/CO/16-19, Guatemala, UN Doc §8 (2010) CERD/C/GTM/CO/12-13, Australia, / UN Doc. CERD/C/AUS. §19 (2010) CO/15-17.
Section n (4[3069]) (1) (f) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa; see Article 67 (1) (f) of the ICC Statute.
European [3070]Court, Kamasinski v. Austria (9783) / 82), (1989) §74 and§ 83; Hasioglu v. Romania (2573) / 03), §89- § 99 (2011); Griffin v. Spain, Human Rights Committee, 1992/95 (UN CCPR/C/53/D/493) . 5/ §9.
([3071]) Section N(4) (f) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

21-2-3 Right to obtain translation of documents

Some standards explicitly provide for the accused to be provided with an interpreter to assist them and with the written translation of documents free of charge [3072].

Moreover, they understood that the right to be assisted by an interpreter, as stated in other treaties, includes the right of the accused to obtain translation of the relevant documents free of charge and within a reasonable period of time to enable them to prepare their defense and present it before the court [3073].

However, the right to free translation of documents is not unlimited. It covers the documents necessary for the accused to understand these documents or to place them in the language used by the court in a way that ensures the fairness of the trial [3074].

Documents that should be translated free of charge include, without limitation, the indictment and/or the operative counts, decisions regarding detention, and judgments [3075].

Noting that the International Covenant and the European Convention explicitly guarantee the right to an interpreter (and not to an interpreter of documents), both the Human Rights Committee and the European Court considered that the “translations” of some documents (including by the defense lawyer or through an interpreter) may be sufficient to guarantee the right, provided that this does not prejudice the rights of the defense.[3076]

If the accused needs translation of the relevant documents, he/she should request their translation. The defendant's ability to understand the language in which the document was written remains a matter of fact (and has nothing to do with what the defendant prefers).[3077]

The decision on the capabilities of the accused and the need for translation should remain within the jurisdiction of the Court itself. However, the decision to reject translation requests should also remain subject to appeal [3078].

Lidice and Balkassm and Koch v. Germany (6210/73; 6877/75; 75/7132), EC §42 (1978).

([3072]) Article 8(2) (a) of the American Convention, Guideline 43§ 3 (f) of the Principles on Legal Aid, Principle 5 of the Principles on Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, Section n(4) (d-f) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, Article 67 (1) (f) of the Rome Statute, Rule 3 of the ICTR Rules, Rule 3 of the ICTY Rules, Article 3 of EU Directive 2010/64 (2010) on the right to an interpreter and to the translation of documents in criminal proceedings.

([3073]) European Court: Hermé v. Italy (18114) / 02), Grand Chamber §69- §70 (2006), Diallo v. Sweden (13205) / 07), in the decision on inadmissibility, §23 - §25(2010), Lidecke, Belkacem and Koch v. Germany (73/6210; 75/6877; 75/7132), European Court §42 (1978).

([3074]) Section n(4) (d) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Article 67 (1) (f) of the Rome Statute.

European Court: Lideke, Belkacem and Koch v. Germany (6210/73; 75/6877; 75/7132), EC 48 § (1978), Kamasinsky v. Austria (9783) / 82), §74 (1989), Diallo v. Sweden (13205) / 07), in the decision on inadmissibility, §23 (2010).

([3075]) Rule 47 of the ICTR Rules, and rule 47 of the ICTY Rules.

Human [3076]Rights Committee: Harward v. Norway, / UN CCPR 5/9-2/ §9 (1994) C/51/D/451/1991, Haseoglu v. Romania (2573) / 03, European Court §88-§92 (2011); see Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §33.

The [3077]Prosecutor v. Tolimir (IT-05-88/2-AR73. 1), ICTY Appeals Chamber, Decision on Interlocutory Appeal against Pre-Trial Judge's Decision of 11 December 2007, (28) March §14- §15 (2008).

([3078]) Article 3(5) of EU Directive 2010/64 (2010) on the right to an interpreter and to the translation of documents in criminal proceedings.

Chapter Twenty-Two: The Right to Announce Judgments

22-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

The pronouncement of the judgment shall be in a public session.[3079]

The judgment shall be issued in the public hearing, even if the lawsuit is considered in a secret hearing, and it must be recorded in the minutes of the hearing and signed by the president of the court and the clerk.

The court may order the necessary means to prevent the accused from leaving the hearing room before the judgment is pronounced or to ensure his presence at the hearing for which the judgment is postponed, even if this is by issuing an order to detain him if the incident is one in which preventive detention is permitted.[3080]

The publicity of the pronouncement of the judgment is a fundamental rule that must be observed in order to achieve the goal envisaged by the street that it must be public in all trial proceedings, except for what has been explicitly excluded, which is to strengthen confidence in the judiciary and trust in it. Article 331 of the Code of Criminal Procedure entails nullity on the non-observance of the provisions of the law relating to any substantive procedure, and since the foregoing, the minutes of the hearing and the judgment paper were among the documents of the lawsuit that reveal the progress of the trial proceedings until the issuance of the judgment and it was not useful that the judgment was issued in a public hearing, which is defective in the judgment of nullity.[3081]

On the other hand, the law did not provide for nullity in the event of the verdict being pronounced in a session other than the session specified for that, when it was pronounced in a public session.[3082]

22-2 Within the Framework of International Covenants

Judgements in trials - by civil and criminal courts, and at the stages of trial and appeal - must be issued publicly.[3083]

The ICCPR allows one exception to this requirement in criminal cases in order to protect the interests of children under the age of 18. This is in line with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which guarantees the accused child full respect for his privacy at all stages of the trial.[3084]

([3079]) Article 187 of the Constitution.
([3080]) Article 303 of the Criminal Procedure Law.
([3081]) Appeal No. 43411 of 59 S issued at the session of 27 November 1996 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 47 page No. 1260 rule No. 183, Appeal No. 988 of 31 S issued at the session of 27 February 1962 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 13 page No. 195 rule No. 51.
([3082]) Appeal No. 1168 of 46 S issued at the session of February 28, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 28 page No. 310 rule No. 66, Appeal No. 853 of 46 S issued at the session of December 19, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 27 page No. 952 rule No. 216, Appeal No. 482 of 34 S issued at the session of November 17, 1964 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 15 page No. 687 rule No. 136.
([3083]) Article 14/1 of the International Covenant, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Section A(3) (j) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Articles 74 (5) and 76 (4) of the Rome Statute, Article 22 (2) of the Statute of the Rwanda Tribunal and Article 23 (2) of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal; see Article 8(5) of the American Convention.
([3084]) Article 40 (2) (b) (vii) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Article 8 of the American Convention requires trials to be public except as necessary to protect the interest of justice, which includes the best interests of the child. This condition extends to the judgments issued by the court.[3085]

The principle of the publicity of judgments aims to ensure that the application of justice is made public and subject to public scrutiny.

The verdict may be announced orally at a court hearing open to the general public or in written form.

The operative part of the written judgment should be presented to the parties to the dispute and made available to others, including through court records.[3086]

The requirement to make the reasons for judgments public applies (except in exceptional circumstances) to all judgments, even when the public has been excluded from the proceedings of the trial.[3087]

Some sentences are published in a coded form, when this is necessary to maintain the confidentiality of protected information relating to victims or witnesses, including children.[3088]

If the accused does not speak or understand the language used in the court, the verdict should be orally transmitted to them in the language he understands, and ideally by translating it in writing into a language he understands.[3089]

The right to a trial within a reasonable period of time includes the right to receive the merits of the judgment issued by the court of first instance and the various stages of the appeal within a reasonable period of time.[3090]

Chapter Twenty-Three: The Right to Know the Rationale of the Judgment

23.1 Under Egyptian Law

23-1-1 Reasoning of the Judgment

The judgment must include the reasons on which it was based, and every conviction must include a statement of the punishable fact and the circumstances in which it occurred and refer to the text of the law under which it was ruled.[3091]

First: The reasons on which the judgment was based

The judgment - whether issued by conviction or acquittal - must include the reasons on which it was based.[3092]

([3085]) See Palamara-Eribarniv. Chile, Inter-American Court (2005) §165- §168; Advisory Opinion 1002/OC-17 of the Inter-American Court §134.

([3086]) Sater v. Switzerland (8209) / 78), ECt §31- § 34(1984).

([3087]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §29.

([3088]) in the case against Vojislav Šešelj (IT-03-67-R77. 2-A), ICTY Appeals Chamber Decision (General Revised Version), Appeals Chamber, (19) May §32 (2010).

[3089]See Concluding Observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Italy, §8 (2008) UN Doc. CERD/C/ITA/CO/15; Kamasinski v. Austria (82/9783), European Court § §74 (1989) and 84-85..

Opinion [3090]No. 21/2004 of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (concerning Morales Hernández v. Colombia), 7/2006 / UN Doc. E/CN. 4 2004) Add. 1) pp. 6 ,8, 11 and 14; Lenford Hamilton v. Jamaica, Human Rights Commission, 1988/3/ § §8 (1994) UN Doc. CCPR/C/50/D/333 and 9/1..

([3091]) Article 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The importance of the reasoning of the judgment is highlighted in that it reveals the extent to which the court adheres to the guarantees of a fair trial. It is the mirror of the extent to which the rules and procedures stipulated by the law are followed, the extent to which the guarantees it imposed are respected, and the extent to which the court properly applies the law. Through the reasoning of the judgment, the parties to the lawsuit are protected from the judge's control because he is charged with revealing in the reasons for their judgment the reason for the judiciary and the procedures that ended with it to this judiciary. The reasons for the judgment show the court's logical process of judicial reasoning. All other defects that reveal the unavailability of a fair trial appear through this reasoning.

Judgments in criminal articles must foretell certainty and certainty on the reality that is proven by the considered evidence and is not based on suspicion, probability and abstract considerations.[3093]

Therefore, the street is obligated in Article 310 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to include the judgment - even if it was issued with acquittal - on the grounds on which it was based, otherwise it is invalid, and the reasoning considered to be to determine the grounds and arguments on which it is based and produced is for it, whether in terms of the incident or in terms of the law. In order to achieve its purpose, it must be in a clear detailed statement so that it is possible to determine the justifications for what it has ruled on. As for emptying the judgment in general terms or placing it in an anonymous form, it does not achieve the purpose that the street intended to respond to the reasoning of the judgments, and the Court of Cassation cannot monitor the validity of the application of the law to the incident as it has been proven in the judgment.[3094]

([3092]) Article 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3093]) Appeal No. 21819 of 85 S issued at the hearing of December 3, 2015 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 6505 of 4 S issued at the hearing of January 26, 2014 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5266 of 83 S issued at the hearing of November 4, 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5973 of 82 S issued at the hearing of March 25, 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64, page No. 422, rule No. 57, Appeal No. 4822 of 82 S issued at the 6th session of February 2013 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64, page No. 200, rule No. 21, Appeal No. 24010 of 64 S issued at the 16th session of December 1996 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 47, page No. 1355, rule No. 195, Appeal No. 19054 of 63 S issued at the 21st session of November 1995 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 46, page No. 1232, rule No. 184, Appeal No. 6574 of 78 S issued at the 27th session of December 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 63, page No. 900 Rule No. 162, Appeal No. 5941 of 78 S issued at the 8th session of March 2010, Appeal No. 4933 of 72 S issued at the 18th session of September 2003 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 54 page 829 Rule No. 111, Appeal No. 22830 of 69 S issued at the 17th session of January 2002, Appeal No. 10055 of 62 S issued at the 7th session of November 2001 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 52 page 828 Rule No. 158.

([3094]) Appeal No. 2322 of 87 Q, issued on April 5, 2018 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 111 of 86 Q, issued on March 24, 2018 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 33194 of 86 Q, issued on November 4, 2017 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 5402 of 86 Q, issued on April 20, 2017 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 21864 of 86 Q, issued on March 14, 2017 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 33163 of 85 Q, issued on December 7, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 884, Rule No. 109; Appeal No. 50733 of 85 Q, issued on November 22, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 812, Rule No. 101; Appeal No. 6343 of 85 Q, issued on October 15, 2016; Appeal No. 50979 of 85 Q, issued on June 1, 2016; Appeal No. 6829 of 85 Q, issued on April 2, 2016; Appeal No. 2526 of 85 Q, issued on March 5, 2016; Appeal No. 30180 of 84 Q, issued on February 28, 2016; Appeal No. 23038 of 4 Q, issued on February 27, 2016; Appeal No. 15321 of 85 Q, issued on February 3, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 153, Rule No. 21; Appeal No. 11386 of 85 Q, issued on January 13, 2016; Appeal No. 2611 of 85 Q, issued on January 9, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 58, Rule No. 7; Appeal No. 16992 of 85 Q, issued on December 9, 2015, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 833, Rule No. 124; Appeal No. 21819 of 85 Q, issued on December 3, 2015; Appeal No. 22647 of 84 Q, issued on November 18, 2015, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 802, Rule No. 120; Appeal No. 33425 of 84 Q, issued on July 25, 2015; Appeal No. 27017 of 84 Q, issued on February 11, 2015; Appeal No. 21598 of 84 Q, issued on January 13, 2015; Appeal No. 6505 of 4 Q, issued on January 26, 2014; Appeal No. 8090 of 4 Q, issued on November 9, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 891, Rule No. 137; Appeal No. 5266 of 83 Q, issued on November 4, 2013; Appeal No. 9091 of 4 Q, issued on July 3, 2013; Appeal No. 10769 of 82 Q, issued on June 13, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 675, Rule No. 97; Appeal No. 6614 of 82 Q, issued on June 1, 2013, Appeal No. 256 of 82 Q, issued on April 6, 2013; Appeal No. 5973 of 82 Q, issued on March 25, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 422, Rule No. 57; Appeal No. 8039 of 81 Q, issued on February 13, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 267, Rule No. 27; Appeal No. 4822 of 82 Q, issued on February 6, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 200, Rule No. 21; Appeal No. 5334 of 82 Q, issued on January 13, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 90, Rule No. 12; Appeal No. 5334 of 82 Q (duplicated), issued on January 13, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 90, Rule No. 12; Appeal No. 3618 of 82 Q, issued on January 13, 2013; Appeal No. 4488 of 82 Q, issued on January 5, 2013; Appeal No. 6574 of 78 Q, issued on December 27, 2012, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 63, Page 900, Rule No. 162; Appeal No. 53254 of 75 Q, issued on December 25, 2012; Appeal No. 2032 of 81 Q, issued on February 6, 2012, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 63, Page 170, Rule No. 22; Appeal No. 5941 of 78 Q, issued on March 8, 2010; Appeal No. 577 of 79 Q, issued on November 15, 2009; Appeal No. 498 of 79 Q, issued on September 29, 2009; Appeal No. 5216 of 78 Q, issued on November 6, 2008; Appeal No. 17567 of 68 Q, issued on February 5, 2008; Appeal No. 62351 of 76 Q, issued on February 26, 2007, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 58, Page 171, Rule No. 36; Appeal No. 5381 of 70 Q, issued on July 27, 2006; Appeal No. 5664 of 69 Q, issued on March 13, 2006; Appeal No. 20346 of 67 Q, issued on January 19, 2006; Appeal No. 13642 of 65 Q, issued on September 20, 2005; Appeal No. 930 of 68 Q, issued on May 26, 2005; Appeal No. 10390 of 66 Q, issued on May 5, 2005, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 56, Page 292, Rule No. 43; Appeal No. 23694 of 67 Q, issued on March 3, 2005 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 478 of 66 Q, issued on February 23, 2005; Appeal No. 7541 of 66 Q, issued on February 7, 2005, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 56, Page 126, Rule No. 15; Appeal No. 9521 of 66 Q, issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 21864 of 65 Q, issued on January 26, 2005 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 109 of 67 Q, issued on January 18, 2005; Appeal No. 23013 of 67 Q, issued on January 6, 2005 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 21138 of 68 Q, issued on November 10, 2004 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 5831 of 68 Q, issued on July 11, 2004 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 12161 of 66 Q, issued on May 20, 2004 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 6237 of 68 Q, issued on April 19, 2004 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 7154 of 67 Q, issued on March 3, 2004; Appeal No. 24433 of 67 Q, issued on February 19, 2004; Appeal No. 15586 of 67 Q, issued on December 22, 2003; Appeal No. 1588 of 65 Q, issued on December 18, 2003; Appeal No. 22810 of 65 Q, issued on November 20, 2003; Appeal No. 22918 of 65 Q, issued on November 20, 2003; Appeal No. 20936 of 65 Q, issued on November 6, 2003 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 13770 of 64 Q, issued on October 20, 2003; Appeal No. 6866 of 65 Q, issued on October 16, 2003 (unpublished)); Appeal No. 23842 of 63 Q, issued on September 23, 2003; Appeal No. 4933 of 72 Q, issued on September 18, 2003, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, Page 829, Rule No. 111; Appeal No. 10592 of 64 Q, issued on April 20, 2003, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, Page 577, Rule No. 72; Appeal No. 629 of 68 Q, issued on April 14, 2003; Appeal No. 16329 of 65 Q, issued on February 6, 2003; Appeal No. 579 of 64 Q, issued on January 16, 2003, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, Page 108, Rule No. 10; Appeal No. 21188 of 63 Q, issued on December 19, 2002; Appeal No. 13028 of 65 Q, issued on November 25, 2002, Appeal No. 5753 of 65 Q, issued on November 17, 2002, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, Page 1124, Rule No. 188; Appeal No. 13214 of 62 Q, issued on November 10, 2002, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, Page 1088, Rule No. 180; Appeal No. 18561 of 64 Q, issued on September 17, 2002; Appeal No. 10409 of 62 Q, issued on March 5, 2002, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, Page 362, Rule No. 64; Appeal No. 22830 of 69 Q, issued on January 17, 2002; Appeal No. 223 of 62 Q, issued on January 5, 2002, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, Page 32, Rule No. 5; Appeal No. 3692 of 62 Q, issued on November 12, 2001; Appeal No. 2332 of 62 Q, issued on November 12, 2001; Appeal No. 10055 of 62 Q, issued on November 7, 2001, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, Page 828, Rule No. 158; Appeal No. 4263 of 64 Q, issued on May 14, 2001; Appeal No. 16162 of 63 Q, issued on April 9, 2001; Appeal No. 3610 of 65 Q, issued on February 26, 2001, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, Page 305, Rule No. 47; Appeal No. 1927 of 64 Q, issued on February 15, 2001, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, Page 852, Rule No. 163; Appeal No. 17340 of 62 Q, issued on January 9, 2001, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 52, Page 108, Rule No. 14; Appeal No. 19702 of 60 Q, issued on October 12, 1999; Appeal No. 8218 of 63 Q, issued on March 11, 1999, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 50, Page 171, Rule No. 38; Appeal No. 9897 of 60 Q, issued on January 17, 1999, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 50, Page 53, Rule No. 9; Appeal No. 4544 of 60 Q, issued on January 14, 1999, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 50, Page 48, Rule No. 8; Appeal No. 24010 of 64 Q, issued on December 16, 1996, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 47, Page 1355, Rule No. 195; Appeal No. 9020 of 64 Q, issued on April 4, 1996, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 47, Page 461, Rule No. 65; Appeal No. 43605 of 59 Q, issued on February 28, 1996, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 47, Page 281, Rule No. 41; Appeal No. 63405 of 59 Q, issued on January 9, 1996, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 47, Page 40, Rule No. 4; Appeal No. 19054 of 63 Q, issued on November 21, 1995, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 46, Page 1232, Rule No. 184; Appeal No. 13315 of 59 Q, issued on November 3, 1991, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 42, Page 1088, Rule No. 152; Appeal No. 12243 of 59 Q, issued on January 22, 1991, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 42, Page 160, Rule No. 19; Appeal No. 22432 of 59 Q, issued on February 1, 1990, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 41, Page 259, Rule No. 45; Appeal No. 1912 of 58 Q, issued on December 20, 1989, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 40, Page 1255, Rule No. 202; Appeal No. 2812 of 59 Q, issued on November 2, 1989, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 40, Page 849, Rule No. 140; Appeal No. 3955 of 57 Q, issued on June 16, 1988, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 39, Page 816, Rule No. 122; Appeal No. 4902 of 55 Q, issued on November 25, 1987, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 38, Page 1030, Rule No. 186; Appeal No. 3449 of 55 Q, issued on December 19, 1985, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 36, Page 1138, Rule No. 211; Appeal No. 868 of 54 Q, issued on January 29, 1985, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 36, Page 5, Rule No. 1; Appeal No. 6578 of 53 Q, issued on

It is decided that the judgment should not be tainted in general or vague, which makes it impossible to determine the validity of the judgment from its corruption in the legal application to the fact of the lawsuit, and it is so whenever its reasons are summarized or vague in what it has proven or denied of the facts, whether they are related to the statement of the availability of the elements or circumstances of the crime or in response to important aspects of defense or are related to the elements of conviction in general, or its reasons are tainted by the turmoil that indicates the imbalance of its idea in terms of its focus on the subject of the lawsuit and the elements of the incident, which cannot be deduced, whether related to the fact of the lawsuit or its legal application, and therefore the Court of Cassation is unable to properly control it.[3095]

On the other hand, although the trial court has the right to deduce the fact of the case from its evidence and other elements, but this is conditional on a reasonable conclusion and that the evidence on which it relies is modest to the results it has arranged without arbitrariness in conclusion and does not contradict the judgment of reason and logic.[3096]

It is decided that the trial court may derive its conviction to prove the crime from any evidence it is satisfied with as long as this evidence has its correct take from the papers, and that it may extract from the statements of witnesses and all other elements on the table of research the correct form of the incident of the lawsuit according to its conviction and put forward other contrary forms as long as their extraction is reasonable based on evidence acceptable in reason and logic and has its origin in the papers.[3097]

It is decided that the judgments must be based on the evidence from which the judge is convinced of the guilt or innocence of the accused, issued in this regard by a belief obtained by them from the investigation he conducts independently in their collection of this belief himself, which is not shared by others and is not valid in the law to enter into the formation of their belief in the validity of the incident on which he established their signature or invalidity as a judgment for others.[3098]

It is decided that the judge may rule on the lawsuit according to the doctrine that he has formed in full freedom without external influence, regardless of its source.[3099]

March 13, 1984, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 35, Page 267, Rule No. 55; Appeal No. 2602 of 53 Q, issued on December 15, 1983, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 34, Page 1056, Rule No. 211; Appeal No. 6799 of 52 Q, issued on April 19, 1983, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 34, Page 572, Rule No. 112; Appeal No. 2625 of 51 Q, issued on January 19, 1982, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 33, Page 46, Rule No. 7; Appeal No. 2618 of 51 Q, issued on January 19, 1982, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 33, Page 46, Rule No. 7; Appeal No. 2559 of 51 Q, issued on January 12, 1982, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 33, Page 26, Rule No. 4; Appeal No. 537 of 51 Q, issued on December 3, 1981, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 32, Page 1045, Rule No. 184; Appeal No. 1487 of 50 Q, issued on December 24, 1980, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 31, Page 1113, Rule No. 215; Appeal No. 1956 of 48 Q, issued on March 26, 1979, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 30, Page 394, Rule No. 81; Appeal No. 805 of 45 Q, issued on June 22, 1975, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 26, Page 528, Rule No. 123; Appeal No. 624 of 45 Q, issued on April 27, 1975, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 26, Page 358, Rule No. 83; Appeal No. 981 of 43 Q, issued on December 3, 1973, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 1131, Rule No. 232; Appeal No. 743 of 43 Q, issued on November 12, 1973, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 964, Rule No. 201; Appeal No. 1429 of 42 Q, issued on January 29, 1973, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 114, Rule No. 27; Appeal No. 1306 of 42 Q, issued on January 8, 1973, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 24, Page 72, Rule No. 17; Appeal No. 954 of 42 Q, issued on November 12, 1972, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 23, Page 1184, Rule No. 268; Appeal No. 1591 of 40 Q, issued on March 1, 1971, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 22, Page 175, Rule No. 42; Appeal No. 533 of 39 Q, issued on May 12, 1969, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 20, Page 706, Rule No. 142.

([3095]) Appeal No. 30094 of 86 S issued at the session of January 18, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 18543 of 85 S issued at the session of February 6, 2016 (unpublished)

([3096]) Appeal No. 2322 of 87 S issued on April 5, 2018 (unpublished)

([3097]) Appeal No. 16560 of 85 S issued at the 25th session of February 2018 (unpublished)

([3098]) Appeal No. 2322 of 87 S issued on April 5, 2018 (unpublished)

([3099]) Appeal No. 41192 of 85 S issued on February 7, 2018 (unpublished)

It is established that the judge in criminal matters relies in establishing the legal facts on the basis of evidence that he is convinced of alone, and he may not base their judgment on the opinion of others[3100].

It is decided that the evidence on which the court is based and a statement of its meaning in the judgment must be sufficiently stated and stated in a sufficient manner to show the extent of its support for the incident as convinced by the court and the amount of its consistency with the rest of the evidence until it is clear how to infer it.[3101]

The court is obligated to include the content of each piece of evidence on which it relied and stated its content in a clear and detailed statement. It is not enough to merely refer to it, but the content of each evidence and its content should be adequately listed, indicating the extent of its support for the incident as convinced by the court and the amount of its consistency with the rest of the evidence that it took, otherwise the judgment will be deficient.[3102]

It is decided that the guilty verdict must show the content of each piece of evidence and state its significance until the evidence is clear and the integrity of the evidence is taken to enable the Court of Cassation to monitor the correct application of the law to the incident as it has been proven in the verdict.[3103]

It is scheduled that the trial court is not obliged to rule on innocence, to respond to each piece of evidence of the accusation, because in its omission to talk about it, it inevitably indicates that it

---

([3100]) Appeal No. 25248 of 86 S issued on March 28, 2017 (unpublished)

([3101]) Appeal No. 18543 of 85 S issued on February 6, 2016 (unpublished)

([3102]) Appeal No. 5334 of 82 S issued at the session of January 13, 2013 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 64 page No. 90 rule No. 12, Appeal No. 1933 of 82 S issued at the session of January 6, 2013 (unpublished)

([3103]) Appeal No. 35728 of 85 S issued at the hearing of February 15, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 34073 of 77 S issued at the hearing of November 4, 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 6499 of 82 S issued at the hearing of February 24, 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 4371 of 79 S issued at the hearing of November 14, 2011 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 62, page No. 374, rule No. 63, Appeal No. 2413 of 80 S issued at the hearing of October 1, 2011 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 25318 of 77 S issued at the hearing of February 17, 2011 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 6584 of 79 S issued at the hearing of January 26, 2011 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 7486 of 78 S issued at the hearing of October 25, 2009 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 18783 of 71 S issued at the hearing of February 22, 2009 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 938 of 68 S issued at the hearing of May 26, 2005 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 18025 of 65 S issued at the hearing of December 2 For the year 2004 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 41142 of 74 S issued at the session of November 4, 2004 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 26226 of 72 S issued at the session of February 23, 2004 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 29204 of 70 S issued at the session of February 19, 2004 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 34465 of 69 S issued at the session of October 27, 2003 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 10228 of 71 S Issued at the hearing of November 15, 2001 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 52 Page No. 861 Rule No. 165, Appeal No. 6007 of 58 S issued at the hearing of December 8, 1988 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 39 Page No. 1261 Rule No. 195, Appeal No. 6360 of 56 S issued at the hearing of April 2, 1987 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 38 Page No. 545 Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 2365 of 51 S issued at the hearing of January 3, 1982 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 33 Page No. 11 Rule No. 1, Appeal No. 950 of 46 S issued at the 10th session of January 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 57 rule No. 12, Appeal No. 103 of 46 S issued at the 25th session of January 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 27 page No. 456 rule No. 99, Appeal No. 1147 of 43 S issued at the 30th session of December 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 24 page No. 1288 rule No. 262, Appeal No. 880 of 42 s issued at the 23rd session of October 1972 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 23 page 1077 Rule No. 241, Appeal No. 675 of 42 s issued at the 1st session of October 1972 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 23 page 969 Rule No. 215, Appeal No. 670 of 41 s issued at the 12th session of December 1971 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 22 page 730 Rule No. 177, Appeal No. 1895 of 39 S issued at the session of January 26, 1970 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 21 Page 184 Rule No. 45, Appeal No. 1291 of 37 S issued at the session of November 13, 1967 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 18 Page 1099 Rule No. 228, Appeal No. 1300 of 34 S issued at the session of January 18, 1965 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 16 Page 65 Rule No. 16, Appeal No. 2785 of 32 S issued at the session of April 22, 1963 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 14 Page 342 Rule No. 68, Appeal No. 741 of 25 S issued at the session of November 28, 1955 and published in the fourth part of the Technical Office book No. 6 Page 1394 Rule No. 411.

put them away and did not see in them what the conviction reassures them when it has surrounded the case with sight and insight.[3104]

The legislator did not require that the acquittal include certain matters or data similar to the conviction, and it is sufficient that the judgment has reviewed the evidence of the case out of sight and foresight and found nothing in it that leads to the conviction of the accused, and that it is sufficient in criminal trials for the trial court to question the validity of attributing the charge to the accused in order to acquit them.[3105]

It is scheduled that the trial court, although it may rule acquittal when it doubts the validity of the charge against the accused or the lack of evidence, but this is conditional on the adherence of the facts established in the papers and that its judgment includes evidence that it examined the case and took into account its circumstances and the evidence of the evidence on which the accusation was based out of sight and insight and balanced it with the evidence of the denial, so that the defendant's defense prevailed or within it suspicion in the validity of the elements of proof.[3106]

It is established that the principle in criminal trials is the conviction of the judge based on the evidence presented. he may have their belief from any evidence or presumption to which he is comfortable unless the law restricts them to specific evidence stipulated in it, and it was not required that the evidence on which the judgment was based be such that each evidence foretells and cuts in each part of the case.[3107]

It is decided that according to the judgment, in order to be pampered and their judiciary to provide the produced evidence that he has corrected on what he deduced from the occurrence of the crime attributed to the accused and he does not have to track them in each part of their defense because the statement that he turned away from it that he threw it.[3108]

It is decided that the trial court may extract from the statements of witnesses and other elements before it the correct picture of the incident of the lawsuit as its conviction leads to and present sother contrary forms as long as their extraction is reasonable based on evidence acceptable in reason and logic and has its origin in the papers, and in this it is not required to take direct evidence, but rather it may extract the image of the lawsuit as it was characterized in its conscience by inference and extrapolation and all mental possibilities.[3109]

([3104]) Appeal No. 2582 of 86 S issued on April 3, 2018 (unpublished)

([3105]) Appeal No. 6548 of 4Q issued on July 3, 2013 (unpublished)

([3106]) Appeal No. 2611 of 85 S issued at the session of January 9, 2016 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 67, page No. 58, rule No. 7, Appeal No. 655 of 85 S issued at the session of June 4, 2015 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 66, page No. 511, rule No. 71, Appeal No. 35134 of 77 S issued at the session of December 10, 2013 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 64, page No. 1034, rule No. 154, Appeal No. 8090 of 4 S issued at the session of November 9, 2013 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 64, page No. 891, rule No. 137.

([3107]) Appeal No. 4042 of 87 S issued at the session of January 20, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 48600 of 85 S issued at the session of December 21, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5657 of 84 S issued at the session of March 19, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 1140 of 84 S issued at the session of January 8, 2015 (unpublished)

([3108]) Appeal No. 324 of 83 S issued on June 1, 2013 (unpublished)

([3109]) Appeal No. 31078 of 85 S issued at the 2nd session of February 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 10175 of 85 S issued at the 14th session of January 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5967 of 82 S issued at the 27th session of January 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5040 of 82 S issued at the 2nd session of January 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 3283 of 81 S issued at the 4th session of November 2012 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 1169 of 82 S issued at the 17th session of October 2012 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5346 of 81 S issued at the hearing of April 15, 2012 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 69966 of 76 S issued at the hearing of June 1, 2011 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 9060 of 80 S issued at the hearing of December 26, 2010 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 29277 of 72 S issued at the hearing of December 14, 2009 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 19305 of 75 S issued at the hearing of September 22, 2005 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 3850 of 65 S Issued at the session of October 4, 2003 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 29553 of 63 S issued at the session of May 27, 2003 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 8406 of 60 S issued at the session of October 1, 1991 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 page No. 948 rule No. 132.

In the principles of inference, it is necessary that the evidence on which the judgment is based leads to the results it has arranged without arbitrariness in conclusion or discordance in reason and logic.[3110]

It is scheduled for the trial court to derive its conviction to prove the crime from any evidence it is satisfied with as long as this evidence has its correct take from the papers, and the original is that crimes of all kinds - except those excluded by a special text - may be proven by all legal means, including evidence and circumstantial evidence.[3111]

The legislator did not restrict the criminal judge in criminal trials to a certain quorum in the testimony but left them the freedom to form their faith from any evidence that reassures them as long as he has their correct take in the papers.[3112]

The trial court is scheduled to include in its judgment sufficient evidence to justify its conviction of the fact, as long as it is satisfied with this evidence and relies on it in forming its belief.[3113]

After that, the court, while investigating the reality in the lawsuit, does not have to follow the defense in every suspicion it establishes or draws a conclusion from the circumstances of the incident and the statements of witnesses or respond to it.[3114]

It is decided that the court is not obliged to speak in its judgment except about the evidence that has an impact on the formation of its faith, and it was also decided that the evidence in the criminal materials persuaded him, and the court may turn away from the evidence of the exile, even if it bears official papers, as long as it is true in the mind that it is incompatible with the truth that it was satisfied with from the rest of the evidence in the case.[3115]

It is not legally necessary to include the full text of the statements of the witness on which the judgment relied, but it is sufficient to mention their content and the obituary is not accepted for the court to drop some of the witness's statements because what it reported from it and relied on means that it subtracted what it did not refer to it, because the court has the freedom to divide the evidence, take what it is comfortable with, and pay attention to what it does not see adopted, as long as it has surrounded the witness's statements and exercised its authority in their division without amputating their content or distorting them in a way that diverts them from their meaning or deviates them from their positions[3116]

([3110]) Appeal No. 6505 of 4S issued at the session of January 26, 2014 (unpublished)

([3111]) Appeal No. 1390 of 85 S issued at the session of 19 December 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 37205 of 85 S issued at the session of 25 November 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 11748 of 82 S issued at the session of 2 April 2013 (unpublished)

([3112]) Appeal No. 1248 of 82 S issued on November 4, 2013 (unpublished)

([3113]) Appeal No. 10072 of 85 S issued at the 25th session of November 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 19721 of 86 S issued at the 28th session of December 2016 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 961, rule No. 120, Appeal No. 15321 of 85 S issued at the 3rd session of February 2016 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 153, rule No. 21, Appeal No. 1696 of 85 S issued at the 2nd session of December 2015 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 66, page No. 817, rule No. 123.

([3114]) Appeal No. 20698 of 75 S issued at the 6th session of February 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64 page No. 191 rule No. 20.

([3115]) Appeal No. 21722 of 85 S issued at the hearing of November 11, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 29658 of 86 S issued at the hearing of June 7, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 14249 of 83 S issued at the hearing of February 13, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 20325 of 84 S issued at the hearing of February 21, 2015 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 708 of 84 S issued at the hearing of November 23, 2014 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 126 of 83 S issued at the hearing of May 5, 2013 (unpublished)

([3116]) Appeal No. 23018 of 86 S issued at the 24th session of November 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 832, rule No. 103, Appeal No. 21787 of 85 S issued at the 7th session of November 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 791, rule No. 97, Appeal No. 22909 of 85 S issued at the 10th session of January 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 78, rule No. 9, Appeal No. 5708 of 83 S issued at the 10th session of June 2014 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 65, page No. 520, rule No. 62.

There is nothing in the law that prevents the trial court from including in its judgment the evidential evidence as contained in the evidential list submitted by the Public Prosecution as long as it is convinced of its sufficiency to carry its conclusion.[3117]

It is decided that the judgment is not flawed to refer in the statement of the testimony of witnesses to the statements of another witness as long as their statements are consistent with what the judgment relied on, and that the trial court is not obligated to recount the accounts of all witnesses - that is, multiple - and to indicate the face of taking them with what it is convinced of, but rather to mention what it reassures and put forward other things. This consideration does not affect the difference of witnesses in some details that the judgment did not mention. This is that the trial court, in order to form its doctrine, fragment the witness's statements and takes from them what it reassures and throw away other things without this being considered a contradiction in its judgment)[3118]

There is nothing in the law that prevents the court from including in its judgment the statements of the prosecution witnesses as contained in the list of evidence submitted by the Public Prosecution, as long as it is fit in itself to establish its conviction.[3119]

The trial court may present the statement of the witnesses of the defense as long as it does not trust what they testified to, and it is not obligated to refer to their statements as long as they are not based on them, and in its judgment of conviction for the evidence of proof that it mentioned, an indication that it did not trust the statements of these witnesses, so I dismissed them.[3120]

The non-reporting of the full text of the expert's report does not affect the integrity of the conviction[3121].

It is decided that the evidence in the criminal articles is supportive and complementary to each other, and from them collectively the doctrine of the judge is formed. No specific evidence is considered for discussion separately without the rest of the evidence, but it is sufficient that the evidence in its entirety as a unit leads to what the judgment intended and is productive in convincing the court and reassuring it of what it has reached.[3122]

However, the evidence in the criminal articles are supportive attachments that strengthen each other, and from them collectively, the doctrine of the judge is formed so that if one of them falls or is excluded, it is not possible to identify the amount of impact that this invalid evidence had in the opinion that the court concluded, or what it would have ruled had it realized that this evidence does not exist.[3123]

([3117]) Appeal No. 32849 of 83 S issued at the session of June 5, 2014 (unpublished)
([3118]) Appeal No. 1665 of 83 S issued on June 10, 2014 (unpublished)
([3119]) Appeal No. 15382 of 85 S issued at the session of 19 March 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 2909 of 84 S issued at the session of 8 February 2016 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 67 page No. 210 rule No. 24.
([3120]) Appeal No. 13025 of 84 S issued on April 12, 2015 (unpublished)
([3121]) Appeal No. 2518 of 87 s issued at the hearing of November 9, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 28565 of 86 s issued at the hearing of May 6, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 10034 of 84 s issued at the hearing of March 28, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 44270 of 85 s issued at the hearing of October 22, 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 735, rule No. 94, Appeal No. 2927 of 85 s issued at the hearing of January 14, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 126 of 83 s issued at the hearing of May 5, 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 4734 of 82 s issued at the hearing of April 6, 2013 (unpublished)
([3122]) Appeal No. 5292 of 87 S issued at the session of November 1, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 29658 of 86 S issued at the session of June 7, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 50008 of 85 S issued at the session of January 24, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 48600 of 85 S issued at the session of December 21, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 31078 of 85 S issued at the session of February 2, 2016 (unpublished)
([3123]) Appeal No. 4042 of 87 S issued at the session of January 20, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 3642 of 84 S issued at the session of June 4, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 6007 of 58 S issued at the session of December 8, 1988 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 39 page No. 1261 rule No. 195.

Estimating the evidence for each accused is the responsibility of the trial court alone, and it is free to form its belief according to its discretion and reassurance to it for the accused and its lack of reassurance to the same evidence for the other accused.[3124]

It is decided that the contradiction that is defective in the judgment is the one that falls between its reasons so that some of them deny what others prove and do not know which of the two things the court intended.[3125]

It is decided that the doctrine of the court is based on purposes and meanings and not on words and buildings.[3126]

And the sufficiency of the judgment in the statement of evidence by referring to the record of the seizure of the incident without stating its content and directing its inference to the proof of the crime with all its legal elements is flawed by the deficiencies.[3127]

Second: A statement of the punishable fact and its circumstances in the convictions

Each conviction must include a statement of the punishable fact and the circumstances in which it occurred.[3128]

It is decided that the law has required in each conviction to include a clear statement of the fact warranting the penalty, a clear statement of the elements of the crime, the circumstances in which it occurred and the evidence from which the court extracted its evidence from the accused, and that it is obligated to include the performance of the evidence from which the conviction was extracted until it is clear how it was inferred and the safety of its outlet, otherwise the judgment is a minor. It is also decided that the statement of the fact of the case required by Article 310 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in each conviction is intended for the trial judge to prove in their judgment all the acts and purposes that make up the elements of the crim.[3129]

([3124]) Appeal No. 9100 of 80 S issued at the session of July 31, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 4042 of 87 S issued at the session of January 20, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 37205 of 85 S issued at the session of November 25, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 1203 of 86 S issued at the session of March 14, 2017 (unpublished)

([3125]) Appeal No. 41192 of 85 S issued at the 7th session of February 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 37205 of 85 S issued at the 25th session of November 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 29658 of 86 S issued at the 7th session of June 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 30213 of 84 S issued at the 3rd session of January 2016 (unpublished)

([3126]) Appeal No. 9100 of 80 BC issued at the session of July 31, 2018 (unpublished)

([3127]) Appeal No. 22570 of 4S issued at the session of January 15, 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66 page No. 157 rule No. 14, Appeal No. 4834 of 4S issued at the session of December 16, 2013 (unpublished)

([3128]) Article 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3129]) Appeal No. 33713 of 86 Q, issued on January 19, 2019 (unpublished); Appeal No. 9671 of 87 Q, issued on December 22, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 5979 of 88 Q, issued on November 21, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 4745 of 88 Q, issued on November 4, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 20355 of 86 Q, issued on October 13, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 23766 of 87 Q, issued on June 23, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 17482 of 87 Q, issued on May 10, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10303 of 86 Q, issued on April 19, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 17948 of 86 Q, issued on April 8, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 111 of 86 Q, issued on March 24, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 39725 of 85 Q, issued on February 24, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 19430 of 85 Q, issued on February 13, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 30094 of 86 Q, issued on January 18, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 5939 of 87 Q, issued on January 4, 2018 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1390 of 85 Q, issued on December 19, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10072 of 85 Q, issued on November 25, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 34016 of 86 Q, issued on November 11, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 33194 of 86 Q, issued on November 4, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 5292 of 87 Q, issued on November 1, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 33693 of 86 Q, issued on October 8, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 33268 of 86 Q, issued on July 31, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 5402 of 86 Q, issued on April 20, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 29551 of 85 Q, issued on March 28, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 25248 of 86 Q, issued on March 28, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10034 of 84 Q, issued on March 28, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 27216 of 86 Q, issued on March 14, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1203 of 86 Q, issued on March 14, 2017 (unpublished); Appeal No. 5352 of 86 Q, issued on December 26, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 48600 of 85 Q, issued on December 21, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 50733 of 85 Q, issued on November 22, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 812, Rule No. 101; Appeal No. 6343 of 85 Q, issued on October 15, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 50979 of 85 Q, issued on June 1, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 48311 of 85 Q, issued on June 1, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 45046 of 85 Q, issued on May 4, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 17275 of 84 Q, issued on April 20, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 448, Rule No. 53; Appeal No. 8230 of 84 Q, issued on April 12, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 39474 of 85 Q, issued on April 2, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 6829 of 85 Q, issued on April 2, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 17446 of 85 Q, issued on March 19, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 21951 of 85 Q, issued on March 19, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 33713 of 86 Q, issued on January 19, 2019 (unpublished); Appeal No. 23044 of 4 Q, issued on February 27, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10148 of 85 Q, issued on February 14, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 228, Rule No. 27; Appeal No. 21399 of 84 Q, issued on February 13, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 2564 of 84 Q, issued on February 13, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 14249 of 83 Q, issued on February 13, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 25776 of 84 Q, issued on February 7, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 35309 of 84 Q, issued on February 7, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 8665 of 85 Q, issued on February 6, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 11130 of 85 Q, issued on February 6, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 34835 of 85 Q, issued on February 6, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 15321 of 85 Q, issued on February 3, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 153, Rule No. 21; Appeal No. 22492 of 85 Q, issued on January 16, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 2927 of 85 Q, issued on January 14, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10175 of 85 Q, issued on January 14, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 11386 of 85 Q, issued on January 13, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 17805 of 85 Q, issued on January 9, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 32799 of 84 Q, issued on January 9, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 25689 of 85 Q, issued on January 5, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 3029 of 85 Q, issued on January 5, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 39, Rule No. 4; Appeal No. 12589 of 83 Q, issued on January 2, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, Page 13, Rule No. 1; Appeal No. 11629 of 85 Q, issued on December 17, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 914, Rule No. 130; Appeal No. 16992 of 85 Q, issued on December 9, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 833, Rule No. 124; Appeal No. 21819 of 85 Q, issued on December 3, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 33737 of 84 Q, issued on November 2, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 7369 of 79 Q, issued on October 10, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 668, Rule No. 98; Appeal No. 2964 of 5 Q, issued on September 28, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 610, Rule No. 88; Appeal No. 27686 of 84 Q, issued on June 11, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 26687 of 84 Q, issued on June 7, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 27686 of 84 Q, issued on May 18, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 480, Rule No. 66; Appeal No. 26006 of 84 Q, issued on May 17, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 468, Rule No. 65; Appeal No. 22781 of 84 Q, issued on May 9, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 447, Rule No. 63; Appeal No. 29649 of 4 Q, issued on April 23, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 417, Rule No. 57; Appeal No. 20242 of 84 Q, issued on April 2, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 26061 of 4 Q, issued on March 26, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 345, Rule No. 48; Appeal No. 32224 of 83 Q, issued on February 12, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 22570 of 4 Q, issued on January 15, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, Page 157, Rule No. 14، c، Appeal No. 30575 of 3 Q, issued on April 16, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 256 of 82 Q, issued on April 6, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20179 of 2 Q, issued on March 23, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 400, Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 9225 of 82 Q, issued on March 20, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3330 of 82 Q, issued on March 3, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6530 of 82 Q, issued on February 24, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 986 of 82 Q, issued on February 9, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 237, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 5532 of 82 Q, issued on February 7, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20698 of 75 Q, issued on February 6, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 191, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 1278 of 82 Q, issued on January 28, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 171, Rule No. 18, Appeal No. 5334 of 82 Q, issued on January 13, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, Page 90, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 6643 of 82 Q, issued on January 6, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20346 of 67 Q, issued on January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20936 of 65 Q, issued on November 6, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6578 of 53 Q, issued on March 13, 1984, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 35, Page 267, Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 3736 of 82 Q, issued on January 1, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4061 of 82 Q, issued on January 1, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4280 of 82 Q, issued on January 1, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3561 of 82 Q, issued on December 27, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6461 of 82 Q, issued on December 24, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3638 of 82 Q, issued on December 16, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 122 of 81 Q, issued on November 18, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, Page 724, Rule No. 129, Appeal No. 23236 of 75 Q, issued on November 17, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, Page 706, Rule No. 126, Appeal No. 18292 of 75 Q, issued on November 13, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, Page 678, Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 1382 of 82 Q, issued on November 5, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2773 of 82 Q, issued on October 22, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2774 of 82 Q, issued on October 22, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2637 of 82 Q, issued on October 8, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 33 of 81 Q, issued on October 8, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, Page 445, Rule No. 76, Appeal No. 1896 of 81 Q, issued on May 28, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 268 of 82 Q, issued on May 19, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6515 of 81 Q, issued on April 23, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 516 of 79 Q, issued on March 6, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, Page 268, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 6071 of 80 Q, issued on February 21, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 918 of 80 Q, issued on December 24, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1938 of 81 Q, issued on November 19, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9785 of 80 Q, issued on June 5, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4819 of 79 Q, issued on April 14, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2929 of 78 Q, issued on March 9, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11248 of 79 Q, issued on February 17, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28189 of 73 Q, issued on September 22, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 57101 of 73 Q, issued on April 22, 2010, published in Technical Office Book No. 61, Page 328, Rule No. 44, Appeal No. 28252 of 72 Q, issued on November 19, 2009 (unpublished),Appeal No. 2402 of 78 Q, issued on March 8, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28680 of 77 Q, issued on April 3, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 54681 of 74 Q, issued on October 16, 2007 (unpublished),

It is established that the law did not prescribe a special form or pattern in which the judgment formulates the statement of the incident warranting the penalty and the circumstances in which it occurred. Whenever the total of what the judgment stated was sufficient to understand the incident with its elements, circumstances and evidence - as concluded by the court - this was in accordance with the rule of law as stipulated in Article 310 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.[3130]

Appeal No. 34868 of 75 Q, issued on February 17, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4911 of 67 Q, issued on October 9, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 53603 of 75 Q, issued on June 11, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, Page 726, Rule No. 74, Appeal No. 11545 of 75 Q, issued on March 1, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, Page 373, Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 13954 of 70 Q, issued on February 2, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 757 of 66 Q, issued on May 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18791 of 65 Q, issued on March 6, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, Page 176, Rule No. 25, Appeal No. 15011 of 69 Q, issued on April 8, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11906 of 63 Q, issued on February 18, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, Page 292, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 7981 of 70 Q, issued on February 8, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, Page 243, Rule No. 39, Appeal No. 5040 of 82 Q, issued on January 2, 2013 (unpublished).

([3130]) Appeal No. 9835 of 87 Q, issued on November 27, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12197 of 87 Q, issued on October 27, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12700 of 87 Q, issued on October 27, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5655 of 88 Q, issued on March 20, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32627 of 86 Q, issued on December 26, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5979 of 88 Q, issued on November 21, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25067 of 86 Q, issued on November 12, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13565 of 87 Q, issued on July 4, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17105 of 86 Q, issued on June 23, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16811 of 86 Q, issued on May 10, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 37214 of 85 Q, issued on December 28, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 41799 of 85 Q, issued on November 25, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 48539 of 85 Q, issued on November 21, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25558 of 86 Q, issued on November 11, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21722 of 85 Q, issued on November 11, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 34016 of 86 Q, issued on November 11, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6416 of 87 Q, issued on October 21, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21877 of 85 Q, issued on October 21, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 33693 of 86 Q, issued on October 8, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1895 of 87 Q, issued on October 3, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21508 of 86 Q, issued on June 8, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2 of 2016 Q, issued on April 2, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10034 of 84 Q, issued on March 28, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23613 of 86 Q, issued on March 18, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15910 of 85 Q, issued on March 14, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1203 of 86 Q, issued on March 14, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 44115 of 85 Q, issued on January 22, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23147 of 85 Q, issued on December 26, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, page 945, ruling No. 118; Appeal No. 48600 of 85 Q, issued on December 21, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 20454 of 84 Q, issued on December 3, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 13489 of 85 Q, issued on November 27, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, page 846, ruling No. 105; Appeal No. 345 of 86 Q, issued on October 8, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, page 673, ruling No. 85; Appeal No. 44160 of 85 Q, issued on May 9, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, page 511, ruling No. 58; Appeal No. 33295 of 4 Q, issued on February 18, 2016, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 67, page 248, ruling No. 29; Appeal No. 14249 of 83 Q, issued on February 13, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 23540 of 85 Q, issued on January 28, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10175 of 85 Q, issued on January 14, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 30213 of 84 Q, issued on January 3, 2016 (unpublished); Appeal No. 24983 of 4 Q, issued on December 5, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 2788 of 5 Q, issued on September 5, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 29381 of 84 Q, issued on June 14, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 27808 of 84 Q, issued on June 2, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 27686 of 84 Q, issued on May 18, 2015, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66, page 480, ruling No. 66; Appeal No. 26692 of 4 Q, issued on April 19, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 26692 of 4 Q, issued on April 19, 2015, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66, page 394, ruling No. 52; Appeal No. 21117 of 84 Q, issued on March 8, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 18867 of 84 Q, issued on March 2, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 24027 of 4 Q, issued on February 21, 2015 (unpublished); Appeal No. 11182 of 84 Q, issued on December 22, 2014, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 65, page 994, ruling No. 134; Appeal No. 16583 of 4 Q, issued on October 23, 2014, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 65, page 739, ruling No. 93; Appeal No. 28470 of 83 Q, issued on June 5, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 12314 of 83 Q, issued on May 13, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 24701 of 83 Q, issued on May 13, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 24488 of 83 Q, issued on May 13, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 18824 of 83 Q, issued on April 7, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 20905 of 83 Q, issued on April 7, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 3314 of 82 Q, issued on March 3, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 4099 of 82 Q, issued on February 9, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10055 of 83 Q, issued on January 12, 2014 (unpublished); Appeal No. 20627 of 5 Q, issued on November 28, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page 949, ruling No. 146; Appeal No. 3388 of 4 Q, issued on October 27, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page 866, ruling No. 132; Appeal No. 324 of 83 Q, issued on June 1, 2013 (unpublished); Appeal No. 7455 of 81 Q, issued on May 5, 2013 (unpublished); Appeal No. 2452 of 4 Q, issued on April 21, 2013 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10890 of 82 Q, issued on April 7, 2013 (unpublished); Appeal No. 28875 of 3 Q, issued on March 25, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page 417, ruling No. 56; Appeal No. 2287 of 4 Q, issued on March 17, 2013 (unpublished); Appeal No. 6961 of 82 Q, issued on March 10, 2013 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1278 of 82 Q, issued on January 28, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page 171, ruling No. 18; Appeal No. 5172 of 82 Q, issued on January 6, 2013, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 64, page 45, ruling No. 5; Appeal No. 3736 of 82 Q, issued on January 1, 2013 (unpublished); Appeal No. 4061 of 82 Q, issued on January 1, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4280 of 82 Q issued on January 1, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3561 of 82 Q issued on December 27, 2012, Appeal No. 6461 of 82 Q issued on December 24, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3324 of 82 Q issued on December 23, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3638 of 82 Q issued on December 16, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4228 of 82 Q issued on December 9, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 122 of 81 Q issued on November 18, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 724, ruling No. 129, Appeal No. 23236 of 75 Q issued on November 17, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 706, ruling No. 126, Appeal No. 18292 of 75 Q issued on November 13, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 678, ruling No. 121, Appeal No. 53085 of 74 Q issued on November 7, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 611, ruling No. 110, Appeal No. 1382 of 82 Q issued on November 5, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 73369 of 74 Q issued on November 1, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 580, ruling No. 102, Appeal No. 2773 of 82 Q issued on October 22, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2774 of 82 Q issued on October 22, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1592 of 82 Q issued on October 15, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2637 of 82 Q issued on October 8, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 33 of 81 Q issued on October 8, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 445, ruling No. 76, Appeal No. 1653 of 78 Q issued on July 5, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 351, ruling No. 57, Appeal No. 8050 of 81 Q issued on July 1, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1896 of 81 Q issued on May 28, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 462 of 80 Q issued on May 28, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 268 of 82 Q issued on May 19, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8660 of 81 Q issued on April 26, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6515 of 81 Q issued on April 23, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7743 of 81 Q issued on April 2, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5260 of 81 Q issued on March 5, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 257, ruling No. 39, Appeal No. 3830 of 80 Q issued on February 21, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4033 of 81 Q issued on January 1, 2012, and published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 33, ruling No. 3, Appeal No. 4767 of 80 Q issued on October 26, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9098 of 79 Q issued on October 19, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13429 of 80 Q issued on October 3, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 428 of 80 Q issued on March 13, 2011, and published in Technical Office Book No. 62, page 165, ruling No. 26, Appeal No. 8249 of 78 Q issued on March 9, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3523 of 78 Q issued on March 9, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 322 of 79 Q issued on March 1, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5406 of 79 Q issued on February 10, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10118 of 78 Q issued on November 21, 2009, and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page 477, ruling No. 64, Appeal No. 1137 of 78 Q issued on July 29, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1646 of 79 Q issued on July 2, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1103 of 78 Q issued on June 2, 2009, and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page 262, ruling No. 36, Appeal No. 43799 of 77 Q issued on January 17, 2009, and published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page 52, ruling No. 7, Appeal No. 86065 of 76 Q issued on November 24, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 44566 of 74 Q issued on September 7, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 37224 of 73 Q issued on January 3, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14617 of 71 Q issued on December 6, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17930 of 77 Q issued on October 22, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19241 of 67 Q issued on July 30, 2007, and published in Technical Office Book No. 58, page 485, ruling No. 98, Appeal No. 18740 of 68 Q issued on April 19, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 48891 of 76 Q issued on March 1, 2007, and published in Technical Office Book No. 58, page 195, ruling No. 40, Appeal No. 30230 of 67 Q issued on November 23, 2006, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page 901, rule No. 101; Appeal No. 49438 of 72 Q issued on November 19, 2006, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page 875, rule No. 97; Appeal No. 13754 of 67 Q issued on November 16, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 1057 of 67 Q issued on July 27, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 24092 of 67 Q issued on July 25, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 18982 of 66 Q issued on July 2, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 31671 of 70 Q issued on June 6, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 6074 of 67 Q issued on May 18, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 3453 of 67 Q issued on April 6, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 21109 of 66 Q issued on April 6, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 25761 of 66 Q issued on March 2, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 892 of 74 Q issued on February 26, 2006, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page 320, rule No. 36; Appeal No. 26089 of 66 Q issued on February 2, 2006 (unpublished); Appeal No. 63909 of 74 Q issued on January 26, 2006, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 57, page 157, rule No. 19; Appeal No. 1709 of 66 Q issued on December 16, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 22740 of 66 Q issued on December 15, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 18984 of 65 Q issued on December 1, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 44025 of 74 Q issued on February 21, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 942 of 66 Q issued on February 17, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 17773 of 70 Q issued on December 7, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10361 of 65 Q issued on September 30, 2004, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 55, page 660, rule No. 98; Appeal No. 24306 of 65 Q issued on June 1, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 14697 of 65 Q issued on April 5, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 17435 of 70 Q issued on March 22, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 12976 of 65 Q issued on March 11, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 12216 of 65 Q issued on January 22, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 27661 of 72 Q issued on December 22, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 8862 of 65 Q issued on December 2, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 8862 of 65 Q issued on December 2, 2003, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page 1149, rule No. 158; Appeal No. 8215 of 65 Q issued on November 10, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 3568 of 64 Q issued on July 24, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10917 of 72 Q issued on March 24, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 2403 of 64 Q issued on March 24, 2003, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page 486, rule No. 54; Appeal No. 17552 of 64 Q issued on March 20, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 13960 of 69 Q issued on March 10, 2003 (unpublished); Appeal No. 42490 of 72 Q issued on March 5, 2003, and

However, if the judgment is limited to a description of the indictment assigned by the Public Prosecution to the defendants and lists the evidence it has presented to prove the incident before them without indicating the fact of the case and directing its citation of such evidence to indicate how they committed the incident and their role in it, it shall be revealing its deficiency in the statement of the incident warranting the penalty, a statement that verifies the elements of published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page 333, rule No. 35; Appeal No. 19142 of 68 Q issued on January 5, 2003, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 54, page 67, rule No. 3; Appeal No. 21359 of 63 Q issued on December 19, 2002 (unpublished); Appeal No. 10890 of 63 Q issued on October 3, 2002 (unpublished); Appeal No. 15546 of 69 Q issued on May 16, 2002 (unpublished); Appeal No. 29890 of 63 Q issued on May 7, 2002, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, page 721, rule No. 121; Appeal No. 3783 of 63 Q issued on April 4, 2002 (unpublished); Appeal No. 8074 of 62 Q issued on March 6, 2002, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, page 379, rule No. 68; Appeal No. 29339 of 70 Q issued on January 17, 2002, and published in the Technical Office Book No. 53, page 125, rule No. 23, Appeal No. 17364 of 69 Q issued on January 17, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2593 of 71 Q issued on October 16, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 724, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 39674 of 73 Q issued on October 11, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20387 of 68 Q issued on July 2, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13108 of 61 Q issued on June 12, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 582, Rule No. 105, Appeal No. 21022 of 62 Q issued on January 9, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 112, Rule No. 15, Appeal No. 18833 of 68 Q issued on December 13, 1999, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 661, Rule No. 148, Appeal No. 6338 of 69 Q issued on December 7, 1999, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 636, Rule No. 143, Appeal No. 10405 of 60 Q issued on May 10, 1999, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 285, Rule No. 67, Appeal No. 14723 of 63 Q issued on February 22, 1999, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 140, Rule No. 30, Appeal No. 20107 of 66 Q issued on November 3, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1190, Rule No. 164, Appeal No. 29342 of 59 Q issued on November 3, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1174, Rule No. 162, Appeal No. 2370 of 62 Q issued on October 18, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1117, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 20999 of 66 Q issued on October 8, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1039, Rule No. 140, Appeal No. 26214 of 63 Q issued on September 30, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 968, Rule No. 130, Appeal No. 17255 of 66 Q issued on September 24, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 944, Rule No. 124, Appeal No. 14606 of 66 Q issued on July 20, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 895, Rule No. 116, Appeal No. 9941 of 66 Q issued on May 7, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 655, Rule No. 84, Appeal No. 256 of 66 Q issued on February 3, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 170, Rule No. 25, Appeal No. 9886 of 65 Q issued on December 2, 1997, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 1324, Rule No. 202, Appeal No. 171 of 63 Q issued on December 20, 1994, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 1201, Rule No. 188, Appeal No. 23523 of 62 Q issued on November 8, 1994, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 976, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 19565 of 59 Q issued on November 23, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 1060, Rule No. 162, Appeal No. 21264 of 60 Q issued on September 16, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 721, Rule No. 112, Appeal No. 6860 of 59 Q issued on February 16, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 187, Rule No. 22, Appeal No. 3303 of 61 Q issued on December 13, 1992, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 43, page 1147, Rule No. 179, Appeal No. 171 of 60 Q issued on February 17, 1991, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 342, Rule No. 46, Appeal No. 28486 of 59 Q issued on November 19, 1990, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 1037, Rule No. 187, Appeal No. 3508 of 57 Q issued on February 21, 1989, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 291, Rule No. 45, Appeal No. 209 of 58 Q issued on December 6, 1988, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 1227, Rule No. 190, Appeal No. 3197 of 55 Q issued on November 26, 1987, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 1041, Rule No. 188, Appeal No. 3116 of 55 Q issued on October 28, 1987, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 878, Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 65 of 55 Q issued on February 18, 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 267, Rule No. 45, Appeal No. 851 of 54 Q issued on January 28, 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 170, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 1325 of 53 Q issued on October 4, 1983, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 799, Rule No. 157, Appeal No. 564 of 53 Q issued on June 13, 1983, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 759, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 6450 of 52 Q issued on February 23, 1983, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 265, Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 2454 of 52 Q issued on November 10, 1982, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 859, Rule No. 177, Appeal No. 1319 of 49 Q issued on January 3, 1980, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 25, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 1320 of 49 Q issued on January 3, 1980, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 25, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 574 of 47 Q issued on October 31, 1977, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 28, page 897, Rule No. 186, Appeal No. 180 of 41 Q issued on May 3, 1971, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 22, page 390, Rule No. 95, Appeal No. 1094 of 26 Q issued on December 3, 1956, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 7, page 1231, Rule No. 341, Appeal No. 1171 of 24 Q issued on December 6, 1954, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 6, page 255, Rule No. 87..

---

the crime and the circumstances in which it occurred, and in a statement of the performance of the evidence of proof, a sufficient statement that shows the extent of its support for the incident as the court was convinced of it, so it remained flawed)[3131]

The integrity of the judgment is not affected by the failure to include the text of the technical and medical reports in all their parts as long as it contains enough of them to justify the court's conviction and achieves the street goal that it required in Article 310 of the Code of Criminal Procedure from the claim to indicate the evidence on which the conviction is based.[3132]

The form of accusation set out in the judgment is considered part of it, so it is sufficient in the statement of the incident to refer to it, and there is nothing in the law that prevents the Criminal Court from including in its judgment the evidence as included in the list of evidence submitted by the Public Prosecution as long as it is fit in itself to establish its conviction.[3133]

Third: Statement of the text of the law under which the convictions were sentenced

Each guilty verdict must refer to the text of the law under which it was ruled.[3134]

Every conviction must refer to the text of the law under which it was ruled, which is a fundamental statement required by the rule of legality of crimes and punishment.[3135]

Whereas the Code of Criminal Procedure requires the judgment to state the text of the law under which it was ruled, but the law did not prescribe a form in which the judgment formulates this statement.[3136]

It is scheduled that the law did not include a provision requiring the statement of the articles of accusation, and the texts of punishment in the minutes of the sessions.[3137]

It is decided that the articles of indictment that the prosecution requested to be applied are not among the statements that must be included in the preamble of the judgment.[3138]

([3131]) Appeal No. 27216 of 86 S issued on March 14, 2017 (unpublished)

([3132]) Appeal No. 13018 of 87 S issued at the session of 13 November 2019 (unpublished)

([3133]) Appeal No. 12197 of 87 S issued at the 27th session of October 2019 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 24331 of 86 S issued at the 14th session of November 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 24101 of 86 S issued at the 13th session of November 2018 (unpublished)

([3134]) Article 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3135]) Appeal No. 35728 of 85 S issued at the hearing of February 15, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 27365 of 86 S issued at the hearing of March 14, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 23532 of 84 S issued at the hearing of February 2, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 195 of 83 S issued at the hearing of July 9, 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 52510 of 76 S issued at the hearing of February 19, 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64, page 299, rule No. 31.

([3136]) Appeal No. 8236 of 88 S issued at the session of April 11, 2019 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 61 of 88 S issued at the session of November 25, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 2353 of 87 S issued at the session of May 14, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 45337 of 85 S issued at the session of January 18, 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 2291 of 85 S issued at the session of October 4, 2015 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 18867 of 84 S issued at the 2 nd session of March 2015 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 19466 of 4 S issued at the 21 st session of December 2014 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 65 Page 988 Rule No. 133, Appeal No. 22124 of 83 S issued at the 11th session of May 2014 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 65 Page 363 Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 1859 of 78 S issued at the 2 nd session of October 2013 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64 Page 790 Rule No. 118, Appeal No. 2287 of 4 S Issued at the hearing of March 17, 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 4046 of 82 s issued at the hearing of March 12, 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5172 of 82 s issued at the hearing of January 6, 2013 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64, page 45, rule No. 5, Appeal No. 36522 of 72 s issued at the hearing of October 21, 2009 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 50587 of 72 s issued at the hearing of April 16, 2003 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 54, page 554, rule No. 68, Appeal No. 23910 of 65 s issued at the hearing of January 8, 1998 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 49, page 71, rule No. 8, Appeal No. 23129 of 59 s issued at the hearing of March 5, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 41, page 473, rule No. 79.

([3137]) Appeal No. 29658 of 86 S issued on 7 June 2017 (unpublished)

([3138]) Appeal No. 13018 of 87 S issued at the session of November 13, 2019 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 13018 of 87 S issued at the session of November 13, 2019 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 35309 of 84 S issued at the session of February 7, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 3373 of 82 S issued at the session of March 4, 2013 (unpublished)

The nullity of the conviction for omitting to refer to the text of the law under which it was ruled is limited to not referring to the texts of the substantive law as it is one of the essential statements required by the rule of legality of crimes and penalties. As for omitting to refer to the texts of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it does not invalidate the judgment.[3139]

Fourth: Adjudication of requests submitted by litigants

The court must decide on the requests submitted to it by the litigants and indicate the reasons on which they are based.[3140]

The principle is that the court is not obligated to follow up the accused in their various aspects of defense, but it must include in its judgment evidence that it faced the elements of the lawsuit and familiarized with them in a way that reveals that it understood them and balanced them.[3141]

The court is not obligated to track the accused in the aspects of their objective defense, so reassure her of the evidence relied upon to the effect that she put forward all the considerations raised by the defense to induce her not to take them into account.[3142]

The court is not obligated to respond explicitly to the substantive defenses because the response to them is derived from the conviction based on the evidence it has adopted.[3143]

It is decided that the request that the court is obligated to answer or respond to is the firm request that knocks the hearing of the court and includes a statement of what it aims at, and the applicant insists on it and continues to adhere to it and insists on it in its final requests.[3144]

([3139]) Appeal No. 7954 of 86 S issued at the 10th session of December 2016 (unpublished)

([3140]) Article 311 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3141]) Appeal No. 4683 of 54 s issued at the session of June 6, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 762 rule No. 134, Appeal No. 1931 of 48 s issued at the session of April 12, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 30 page No. 474 rule No. 99.

([3142]) Appeal No. 399 of 54 S issued at the session of January 16, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 82 rule No. 9.

([3143]) Appeal No. 977 of 47 s issued at the session of January 29, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 108 rule No. 19, Appeal No. 47 of 35 s issued at the session of October 26, 1965 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 16 page No. 756 rule No. 142.

([3144]) Appeal No. 42222 of 85 S issued at the session of February 25, 2018 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5219 of 54 S issued at the session of June 5, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 36, page No. 752, rule No. 132, Appeal No. 157 of 25 S issued at the session of May 2, 1955 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 6, page No. 935, rule No. 279

The Court of Cassation ruled that: When the lawyers of the appellants had adhered to the lie of the victim in their decision that the first appellant fired a shot and that after being hit by the gunshot, he was behind them and was able to catch up with him, and the defense shown by the appellants about the ability of the victim to run after being hit by the gunshot that hit the abdomen and back was a fundamental defense in the form of the lawsuit and affected its fate as its investigation may result in a change of opinion in it, which is one of the purely technical issues that the court cannot make its way to it itself To express its opinion on it, it had to take the means it saw fit to achieve it until the end of the matter in it, through the technician, which is the forensic doctor, but it did not do so, it has replaced itself with the technical expert in a technical issue, and since the contested judgment was based, among other things, in the conviction of the appellants on the statements of the victim, which they oppose, without being concerned with responding to the appellants' substantive defense or working to achieve it through the technician, which is the forensic doctor, the judgment turns This procedure violates the right of the appellants, and it is not possible in this regard to silence the defense of the request to invite the people of art explicitly, as raising this defense in relation to the incident in question includes in itself the firm demand to achieve it or respond to it.], Appeal No. 1999 for the year 48 S issued in the session of April 2, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 30 page No. 422 rule No. 89

It also ruled that: [Whereas the defense of the appellants had denied the occurrence of the incident in the place where the victim's body was found and evidenced by evidence, including what the inspection proved that there were no traces of blood in its place, although the victim had been injured by many bullets that did not settle in their body, and the contested judgment had omitted the significance of this, which is in the form of the lawsuit, a substantial defense of what would be based on it if the statements of the witnesses of evidence were true, which required the court to perceive them and care about their investigation or respond to them in what he denies, but having omitted it altogether, its judgment is flawed by the deficiencies

It is decided that the defense must respond to the request to hear the witnesses of the incident, even if they are not mentioned in the list of prosecution witnesses or the accused declares them, and that the right of the defense enjoyed by the accused entitles them to submit whatever requests he may have from the investigation - as long as the door of the pleading is open - and does not deprive them of their right to withdraw initially from a specific request from it, their right to withdraw from that request and return to upholding this request as long as the pleading is still in progress.[3145]

However, it is not obligatory for the court after that, while investigating the reality in the lawsuit, to follow the defense in every suspicion it assesses or a conclusion it deduces from the circumstances of the incident and the statements of witnesses or respond to it.[3146]

However, it is decided that when the court is faced with a purely technical issue, it must take whatever means it deems necessary to achieve it until the end of the matter.[3147]

---

that require their cassation.], Appeal No. 1650 of 48 Q issued at the session of January 29, 1979 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 30, page No. 186, rule No. 36

It also ruled that: [Since it was clear from reviewing the minutes of the trial session that the defense of the appellants had raised the inability of the victim to speak after their injury, as evidenced by the preliminary medical report of the victim's poor condition due to cutting the arteries of their neck, which cannot be asked and that he remained in this condition until their death, which refutes the decision of the victim's brother and the detective officer that the victim told them the names of the perpetrators. Whereas the judgment responded to the part of the defense by saying: "As for the decision of the defense of the defendants that the victim cannot speak after the incident and therefore cannot give the names of the defendants in order to cut the blood veins in their neck, which loses the ability to speak, the court considers taking the statements of the victim's brother........ ... That the victim decided, after the incident, the names of the accused, as well as taking the statements of the captain .... In investigations that the victim .... It has been decided for them the names of the defendants who assaulted them and excludes the statements of the ambulance driver............ That the victim was speechless and unable to speak because the court was not satisfied with their statements, especially as he decided that he did not know the name of the victim who transferred him, which the court considers that the victim, despite their injuries, has spoken and decided the names of the accused for each of their brother .... And the captain .... This is supported by the court that the names of the defendants decided by the victim before their death are the names that the witness of the visitation at the time of the accident decided their names and then the court puts the defendants' defense in this regard aside and sees with certainty that the victim spoke despite the cutting of some of the arteries of the neck before their death because this cutting did not affect their ability to speak according to what the court considers the statements of the witnesses .... ". The judgment was based, among other things, on the conviction of the appellants on the basis that the victim had spoken after their injury and revealed the names of the perpetrators to the two witnesses who quoted them and relied, among other things, on the formation of their faith on the statements of these two witnesses without being concerned with achieving this essential defense through the technician, who is the forensic doctor. The judgment's attention to this procedure violates the defense of the appellants. This does not mean that the defense of the request to invite the people of art is silent explicitly, as raising this defense in relation to the incident at hand includes in itself the firm demand to achieve it or to respond to what refutes it. This defect does not raise the reasoning behind the judgment from the response of a minor, that is, if the principle is that the court has full authority to assess the evidential power of the elements of the lawsuit before the court, which is the supreme expert in all that it can decide by itself or with the assistance of an expert whose opinion is subject to its assessment. However, this is conditional on the fact that the matter at hand is not a purely technical matter on which the court itself cannot make its way to render an opinion, as is the case in this case.], Appeal No. 277 of 48 S issued at the session of April 9, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 388 rule No. 74.

([3145]) Appeal No. 289 of 47 S issued on June 12, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 28 page No. 753 rule No. 158

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [If it is established that the lawsuit was reserved for judgment for a specific hearing with the permission of the accused to submit a memorandum of their defense, and this seizure was not preceded by the completion of the defendant's defense verbally. In the specified period, he submitted a memorandum of defense in which he ended up requesting the assignment of an expert to know the work of the workers referred to in the subject of the charge and to determine the type of protective clothing that can be disbursed to them, and whether the clothes actually disbursed by the company are sufficient to prevent or not. However, the Court of Appeal ruled to convict without responding to this request, although it is one of the essential requests that the court is obligated to answer or respond to it in a way that justifies its rejection. The omission of this response makes the judgment tainted with deficiencies that require cassation], Appeal No. 2338 of 30 BC issued at the session of March 28, 1961 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 12, page No. 382, rule No. 73.

([3146]) Appeal No. 20698 of 75 S issued at the 6th session of February 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64 page No. 191 rule No. 20.

However, the delay in presenting the defense inevitably does not indicate its lack of seriousness as long as it is a product that would rush the charge or change the point of view in the lawsuit, and the accused's use of their legitimate right to defend himself in the Judicial Council can never be characterized as lack of seriousness nor to be described as late because the trial is the appropriate time in which the law guarantees every accused person's right to make the investigation requests and aspects of the defense and obliges the court to consider and investigate it as long as it is a manifestation of the truth and a guide to the right.[3148]

The court is not obligated to draw the defendant the way he takes in their defense, and as long as the defense does not argue that the court has prevented them from presenting evidence, he is not entitled afterwards to complain to it about violating their right to defense.[3149]

The request to hear witnesses on behalf of the defendant is a substantive defense that must be, like all other substantive defenses, manifestly related to the subject matter of the lawsuit, that is, that the adjudication of it is necessary to adjudicate on the same subject, otherwise the court is free from non-response to it, and it is not obligated to respond to it explicitly in its judgment.[3150]

([3147]) Appeal No. 449 of 44 S issued at the session of May 19, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 25, page No. 474, rule No. 101

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [It is decided that the plea of the inability of the victim to speak following their injury is a fundamental defense in the case because it is related to the investigation of the evidence presented therein. Since the defender of the appellant has raised the inability of the victim to speak after their injury, as shown by reference to the included vocabulary that the report of the anatomical characteristic has been devoid of reference to the ability of the victim or their inability to speak after their injury, the court, as it did not perceive the appellant's defense and did not pay them their right and concerned with achieving an achievement to the end of the matter, but was silent about them in return for them and in response to him, its judgment is flawed], Appeal No. 181 of 43 s issued at the session of March 4, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 25 page No. 214 rule No. 48.

([3148]) Appeal No. 79 of 48 s issued at the session of April 24, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 29 page No. 442 rule No. 84, Appeal No. 125 of 43 s issued at the session of April 1, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 24 page No. 456 rule No. 93

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [Whereas the defense presented by the appellant in the lawsuit in question contradicted the time specified by the two witnesses to the accident with what was stated in the anatomical report on the state of stiffness is a fundamental defense because of its attachment to the evidence presented therein, which is derived from the statements of the witnesses of evidence, which is a defense that may be based on it if the face of the opinion in the lawsuit changes, which required the court to face the issue of determining the time of death, which is a purely technical issue to take the means it deems necessary to achieve it until the end of the order to achieve this essential defense through the technician, which is the forensic doctor, but it did not, its ruling is defective in addition to the violation of the right of defense], Appeal No. 123 of 43 Q issued at the session of April 1, 1973 and published in Part II of the Technical Office's book No. 24, page No. 451, rule No. 92

It also ruled that: [When the defense of the first appellant was based on the denial of the occurrence of the incident in the place where the victim's body was found and evidenced by evidence, including what the inspection proved that there were no traces of blood in its place, despite the fact that the victim suffered several cuts on the head and face, and the contested judgment had overlooked the significance of this, and it is in the form of the lawsuit a substantive defense, for what would be based on it if the statements of the witnesses of the proof were true, what required the court to discern them and care about their investigation or respond to them in what he denies. Having omitted to respond to it altogether, its judgment is flawed by the deficiencies], Appeal No. 1345 of 42 S issued at the session of January 22, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 24, page No. 87, rule No. 21

It ruled that: [If the defense of the appellants has adhered to the minutes of the session that the victim and the two witnesses agreed that the weapon used is of the stubborn type and that the shooting took place with the victim sitting in any direction from top to bottom, in which they were opposed by the forensic medical report that proved that one of the injuries was from an ordinary unstubbed weapon and that the direction of the injuries was from bottom to top, then this statement by the appellants' lawyers is considered a substantive defense that requires the court to respond in a special way that lifts the alleged contradiction between the verbal evidence and the technical evidence. If it does not do so, its ruling is deficient in the statement and violates the right of defense, which is defective and requires its cassation.], Appeal No. 470 of 25 Q issued at the hearing of 14 June 1955 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 6, page 1140, rule No. 332.

([3149]) Appeal No. 1341 of 45 S issued on December 28, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 26 page No. 877 rule No. 193.

([3150]) Appeal No. 706 of 43 BC issued at the session of December 16, 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 24 page No. 1223 rule No. 248.

In addition, although the law has obligated the defendant to hear and investigate the aspects of the defense, the court, if the lawsuit has been clarified or if the matter to be investigated is not productive, may present it, provided that the reason for its rejection of this request is shown.[3151]

It is decided that if the defender of the opponent submits what shows their excuse for not attending, the court must mean to respond to him, whether by acceptance or rejection, then the omission of the judgment to refer to this affects the right of the appellant to defend, which disadvantages them and requires their cassation.[3152]

It is also decided that when the court orders the closure of the pleading in the case and detains it for judgment, it is not yet obligated to respond to the investigation request made by the accused in their memorandum submitted during the period of detention of the case for judgment or to respond to it, whether it is submitted with its permission or without a permit, as long as it is not requested at the trial session and before the closure of the pleading in the case.[3153]

Fifth: Statement of the penalty imposed in the event of a conviction

The judgment shall be self-aware of the amount of the sentenced penalty and shall not be supplemented by any statement outside it.[3154]

Sixth: Notes on the judgment issued by the Second Instance Court

The ruling on the inadmissibility of the appeal in its result meets with the judiciary to reject the appeal, which means that the objection to the wrong judgment in the application of the law is futile due to its ruling on the inadmissibility of the appeal.[3155]

The ruling that the appeal is not accepted in a form to be decided after the deadline is not flawed by the omission of the statement of the fact of the case, its circumstances, the evidence of conviction and the punishment materials because this statement is only necessary for the convictions issued in the subject matter of the case.[3156]

The mere postponement of the case by the court to investigate the defendant's defense by assigning an expert in it without having decided on the appeal order in terms of form is not considered an implicit decision by the law to accept the appeal as a form and does not legally

---

([3151]) Appeal No. 1616 of 42 S issued in the session of February 25, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 24 page No. 243 rule No. 54.

([3152]) Appeal No. 6931 of 54 S issued on November 6, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 984 rule No. 178.

([3153]) Appeal No. 5724 of 55 S issued at the session of December 19, 1985 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 36 page No. 1151 rule No. 213, Appeal No. 826 of 48 S issued at the session of February 6, 1978 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 29 page No. 136 rule No. 25

However, when the defendant of the appellants concludes their pleading of their original request for the judiciary to acquit them and in the alternative to summon the detective officer to discuss it, this is a firm request that the court is obligated to answer when going to the judiciary without innocence, the judgment, as it ruled to convict the appellants, is only based on the statements of the officer in the investigations and what he proved in their record without responding to the request to hear it, is tainted by a violation of the right of defense. he is not interceded for because he has relied in their judgment in addition to the above on other evidence, Appeal No. 1452 of 48 BC issued at the session of December 28, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 980 rule No. 203.

([3154]) Appeal No. 10769 for the year 82 S issued in the session of June 13, 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64 page No. 675 rule No. 97.

([3155]) Appeal No. 4556 of 60 S issued at the session of May 12, 1996 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 47 page No. 619 rule No. 86.

([3156]) Appeal No. 1680 of 55 S issued on October 8, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 824 rule No. 146.

prevent it, when issuing its judgment, from reconsidering the form of the appeal and ruling that it is not accepted in form if it is proven that the report was after the legal deadline)[3157]

Also, if the court, when considering the appeal, heard and discussed the defendant's defense, and then postponed the case to hear the witnesses without having decided on the appeal order in terms of form, this is not considered an implicit chapter in the form of the appeal and does not legally prevent it, when issuing its judgment, from considering the form of the appeal and ruling that it is inadmissible because it was found that the date of the report exceeded the legal deadline)[3158]

23-1-2 Editing and signing the judgment

It is decided that the original in the judgments shall be fully edited with their reasons before pronouncing them, so that the court does not pronounce the judgment unless it is fully convinced of what it wants to decide and is also convinced of the reasons on which it is based.[3159]

The law permits the writing of the judgment with its reasons in full within eight days from the date of its issuance as far as possible, and it is signed by the president and the clerk of the court, and if there is an objection to the president, it is signed by one of the judges who participated with them in its issuance.

If the judgment is issued by the individual consultant or the magistrate court and the judge who issued it has put their reasons in their handwriting, the president of the Court of Appeal or the president of the Court of First Instance, as the case may be, may personally sign the original copy of the judgment or assign one of the judges to sign it based on those reasons.

If the judge has not written the reasons in their handwriting, the judgment shall be invalidated for lack of reasons.

The signature of the judgment may not be delayed from the prescribed eight days except for strong reasons.

In any case, the judgment shall be null and void if thirty days have elapsed without a signature unless it is issued with an acquittal; and the clerk's office shall give the person concerned, at their request, a certificate not to sign the judgment within the aforementioned date.[3160]

This means that Article 312 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates that criminal judgments must be drawn up and signed within thirty days of their pronouncement, otherwise, they are invalid, and acquittals are excluded from that invalidity.[3161]

([3157]) Appeal No. 1680 of 55 S issued on October 8, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 824 rule No. 146.

([3158]) Appeal No. 1397 of 29 S issued at the session of January 25, 1960 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11 page No. 100 rule No. 18.

([3159]) Appeal No. 10803 of 68 S issued at the session of April 5, 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 351, rule No. 45.

([3160]) Article 312 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

([3161]) Appeal No. 28584 of 70 S issued at the session of 5 May 2008 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 59 page No. 273 rule No. 47, Appeal No. 22875 of 67 S issued at the session of 18 December 2006 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 57 page No. 980 rule No. 116, Appeal No. 19012 of 66 S issued at the session of 20 March 2005 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 211 rule No. 32, Appeal No. 8134 of 68 S issued at the hearing of April 15, 2004 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 55 Page 407 Rule No. 54, Appeal No. 12206 of 60 S issued at the hearing of June 6, 1999 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 50 Page 372 Rule No. 87, Appeal No. 9141 of 60 S issued at the hearing of January 19, 1997 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 48 Page 118 Rule No. 17, Appeal No. 42339 of 59 S issued at the hearing of April 18, 1995 and published in Part First of Technical Office Letter No. 46 Page No. 749 Rule No. 110, Appeal No. 10139 of 59 S issued at the session of February 15, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 41 Page No. 379 Rule No. 61, Appeal No. 2623 of 57 S issued at the session of June 16,

The judgment shall also be null and void if it is devoid of its reasons.[3162]

The absence of the signature of the judge who issued the judgment renders it null and void, and their paper is considered in relation to the data and reasons it contained, which do not exist legally.[3163]

This invalidity extends to all parts of the judgment, including its operative part.[3164]

The effect of this invalidity extends to the appeal judgment in favor of the primary judgment for its reasons. It is considered as if it is devoid of reasons and does not change the matter that the contested judgment has established for itself special reasons as long as it has referred to the operative part of the invalid appeal judgment, which leads to the extension of the invalidity to it as well)[3165]

The provisions of the law stipulate that the judgment may be edited on its grounds in the eight days following its issuance. This is such as to facilitate the judge and the clerk of the hearing in recording and signing the judgment. It is not acceptable for the accused to say that the court prepared the judgment in advance before issuing it, as long as this was done after the court issued its decision to close the pleading, and at a stage in which the lawsuit was in the hands of the court for examination and deliberation.[3166]

1988 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 39 Page No. 812 Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 3408 of 57 S issued at the hearing of November 15, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 38 page No. 968 rule No. 176, Appeal No. 5966 of 56 S issued at the hearing of February 18, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 38 page No. 298 rule No. 42, Appeal No. 2380 of 49 S issued at the hearing of April 21, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 page No. 527 rule No. 100, Appeal No. 135 of 50 S issued at the hearing of March 10, 1980 and published in the first part of the letter Technical Office No. 31 Page 361 Rule No. 66, Appeal No. 761 of 49 S issued at the 22nd session of October 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 30 Page No. 773 Rule No. 163, Appeal No. 1314 of 47 S issued at the 27th session of February 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 29 Page No. 196 Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 442 of 47 S issued at the 5th session of June For the year 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 702 rule No. 147, Appeal No. 93 of 47 s issued at the session of 9 May 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 578 rule No. 121, Appeal No. 2 of 47 s issued at the session of 17 April 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 491 rule No. 103, Appeal No. 1030 of 46 s issued at the session of 16 January 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 Page No. 80 Rule No. 17, Appeal No. 509 of 46 S issued at the session of October 17, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 27 Page No. 754 Rule No. 171, Appeal No. 1148 of 45 S issued at the session of November 3, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 26 Page No. 683 Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 1024 of 43 S issued at the session of December 16, 1973 and published in the third part of Technical Office Letter No. 24 Page No. 1246 Rule No. 253, Appeal No. 11 of 43 S issued at the session of March 4, 1973 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 24 Page No. 279 Rule No. 61, Appeal No. 336 of 39 S issued at the session of April 7, 1969 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 20 Page No. 484 Rule No. 101, Appeal No. 2007 of 38 S issued at the session of February 10, 1969 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 20 Page No. 237 Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 1982 of 38 s issued at the session of February 3, 1969 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 20 page No. 198 Rule No. 43, Appeal No. 2540 of 32 s issued at the session of March 4, 1963 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 14 page No. 142 Rule No. 31.

([3162]) Appeal No. 1411 of 38 S issued at the session of December 30, 1968 and published in Part III of the Technical Office's book No. 19 page No. 1121 rule No. 229, Appeal No. 1400 of 37 S issued at the session of November 6, 1967 and published in Part III of the Technical Office's book No. 18 page No. 1077 rule No. 221, Appeal No. 1525 of 45 S issued at the session of January 12, 1976 and published in Part I of the Technical Office's book No. 27 page No. 63 rule No. 12.

([3163]) Appeal No. 551 of 48 BC issued at the session of October 29, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 744 rule No. 149.

([3164]) Appeal No. 10139 of 59 S issued in the session of February 15, 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 page No. 379 rule No. 61.

([3165]) Appeal No. 10139 of 59 S issued at the session of February 15, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 41 page No. 379 rule No. 61, Appeal No. 551 of 48 S issued at the session of October 29, 1978 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 29 page No. 744 rule No. 149.

([3166]) Appeal No. 10803 of 68 S issued at the session of April 5, 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 351, rule No. 45.

The signing of the judgment paper by the president of the court is a testimony of what happened so that it does not remain after its pronouncement except to formulate the reasons on the basis of what was decided in the deliberation.[3167]

The purpose of signing the judgment is to fulfill the legal form in which it acquires its evidential power, and that it is sufficient to achieve this purpose that the signature is from any judge who participated in issuing it, either to stipulate the competence of the head of the body that issued the judgment to sign, it was intended to organize and unify the work. If he is presented with a coercive impediment - after the issuance of the judgment and before the signing of the reasons that were the subject of the deliberation of all members - the judgment was signed on their behalf by the oldest of the other two members, it is not valid to mourn that procedure for nullity because it is based on a rule established in the law, which does not require a special proxy or permission to conduct it)[3168]

It is decided that the law requires the signature of the head of the body that issued the judgment on their paper and the clerk of the session.[3169]

The omission to sign the minutes of the sessions has no effect on the validity of the judgment.[3170]

The law required that the president of the court and the clerk of the hearing sign only the judgment itself, not its draft, and therefore there is no need to rely on the request for the nullity of the criminal judgment by not signing the draft by the head of the authority that issued it.[3171]

The text of Article 312 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is intended to sign the judgment itself and not its draft. There is no need to rely on it in requesting the nullity of the criminal judgment because the head of the authority that issued it did not sign its draft. As for what is approved by Article 170 of the Code of Civil and Commercial Procedure, which requires the signature of the head of the authority and the judges on the draft judgment, there is no need to rely on it in the criminal articles to which the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure apply.[3172]

The law did not require the signature of all members of the body that issued the judgment on their paper, and the signature of its chairman and the clerk of the session is sufficient.[3173]

([3167]) Appeal No. 17149 of 60 S issued at the session of 23 April 1992 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 43 page No. 442 rule No. 67.

([3168]) Appeal No. 32060 of 85 S issued at the 2nd session of December 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 1847 of 36 S issued at the 30th session of January 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 18, page No. 108, rule No. 19.

([3169]) Appeal No. 52510 of 76 S issued at the session of February 19, 2013 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 64 page No. 299 rule No. 31, Appeal No. 33146 of 73 S issued at the session of March 4, 2010 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 61 page No. 197 rule No. 26, Appeal No. 12806 of 64 S issued at the session of January 28, 2001 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 52 page No. 174 rule No. 27.

([3170]) Appeal No. 8264 of 54 S issued at the session of February 13, 1985 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 36 page No. 250 rule No. 41, Appeal No. 7274 of 53 S issued at the session of May 29, 1984 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 35 page No. 538 rule No. 121.

([3171]) Appeal No. 33218 of 73 S issued at the 4th session of March 2010 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 37970 of 74 S issued at the 24th session of February 2010 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 1184 of 74 S issued at the 15th session of March 2009 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 8264 of 54 S issued at the 13th session of February 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 36 page No. 250 rule No. 41, Appeal No. 1618 of 37 S issued at the 27th session of November 1967 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 18 page No. 1163 rule No. 244.

([3172]) Appeal No. 23979 for the year 73 S issued at the session of March 16, 2010 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 65114 for the year 73 S issued at the session of March 8, 2010 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 62352 for the year 76 S issued at the session of March 20, 2007 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 58 Page No. 265 Rule No. 54, Appeal No. 8250 for the year 58 S issued at the session of January 14, 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 Page No. 129 Rule No. 17.

([3173]) Appeal No. 41799 of 85 S issued at the 25th session of November 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 29658 of 86 S issued at the 7th session of June 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 18824 of 83 S issued at the 7th session of April 2014

It is also scheduled that the law did not arrange for the nullity to not only be signed by the clerk of the session on its minutes and judgment, but have their legal basis by the signature of the president of the session on them.[3174]

It is sufficient for the judgment to be signed by the president of the court, so it is not required that all the judges of the court sign it, and the signature of the president of the court on the judgment is an acknowledgment of what happened.[3175]

The signing of the judgment was intended to fulfill the legal form of the judgment, which acquires its evidential power, and it is sufficient for this purpose that the signature be from any judge who participated in issuing it. As for stipulating the competence of the head of the body that issued the judgment to sign, it was intended to organize and unify the work. If he was presented with a coercive impediment - after the issuance of the judgment and before the signing of the reasons that were the subject of the deliberation of all members - the judgment was signed on their behalf by the oldest of the other two members, it is not valid to mourn that procedure for nullity because it is based on a rule established in the law, which does not require a special proxy or permission in its conduct.[3176]

If the appealed judgment has upheld the primary judgment for the reasons for which it was disclosed, without creating for itself reasons, it may have referred to the reasons for the appealed judgment, which was devoid of its reasons, it may have referred to the reasons for a judgment that does not exist.[3177]

The lesson in the judgment is in its original copy, which is written by the writer and signed by the judge and kept in the case file and be the reference in taking the executive picture and in the appeal against it from the concerned parties, and it is not supported in this that the draft reasons for that judgment have been deposited in the case file signed by the judge, the draft judgment is only a project of the court full freedom to change it and to do what it deems necessary regarding the facts and reasons, so that the rights of the litigants are not determined at the will of the appeal.[3178]

(unpublished)), Appeal No. 29658 of 86 S issued at the 7th session of June 2017 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 26964 of 4 S issued at the 9th session of May 2015 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 66 pages No. 443 Rule No. 62, Appeal No. 18824 of 83 S issued at the session of April 7, 2014 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 5967 of 78 S issued at the session of October 13, 2011 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 12206 of 60 S issued at the session of June 6, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 50, page No. 372 Rule No. 87, Appeal No. 50912 of 59 S issued at the session of March 21, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 47, page No. 383 Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 23580 of 59 S issued at the 27th session of February 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 45, page No. 320, rule No. 46, Appeal No. 514 of 51 S issued at the 16th session of December 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 32, page No. 1111, rule No. 198.

([3174]) Appeal No. 52510 of 76 S issued at the session of February 19, 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64 page No. 299 rule No. 31, Appeal No. 48101 of 59 S issued at the session of July 21, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50 page No. 411 rule No. 97, Appeal No. 12336 of 60 S issued at the session of January 25, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 46 page No. 272 rule No. 36.

([3175]) Appeal No. 6470 of 82 S issued on October 3, 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66, page No. 622, rule No. 92.

([3176]) Appeal No. 12619 of 65 s issued at the session of 29 September 1997 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 48 page No. 958 rule No. 145, Appeal No. 12547 of 63 s issued at the session of 6 April 1995 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 46 page No. 670 rule No. 101.

([3177]) Appeal No. 10890 of 59 S issued at the session of March 11, 1991 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 42 page No. 486 rule No. 68, Appeal No. 17846 of 59 S issued at the session of December 17, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 41 page No. 1109 rule No. 200.

([3178]) Appeal No. 10890 of 59 S issued at the session of March 11, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 42 page No. 486 rule No. 68, Appeal No. 17846 of 59 S issued at the session of December 17, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 41 page No. 1109 rule No. 200, Appeal No. 1158 of 49 S issued at the session of December 13, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 30 page No. 932 rule No. 200, Appeal No.

The Court of Cassation ruled that it is not necessary to draft the judgment unless there is an objection on the part of the partial judge to sign the judgment after it is issued.[3179]

The principle is that the law does not require editing the draft judgment in the judge's handwriting.[3180]

However, it excludes a unique case, which is the case where there is an impediment for the partial judge to sign the judgment after it is issued. In this case, the president of the court or the judge he assigns may not sign the judgment unless the judge who issued it puts their reasons in their handwriting.[3181]

In criminal judgments, it is not necessary for the judges who issued the judgment to sign its draft, but it is sufficient for the judgment to be written and signed by the president and the clerk of the court, and if there is an objection to the president, it is signed by one of the judges who participated with them in issuing it.[3182]

Codes of judgment must be written in legible writing. Codes of judgment must be written in illegible writing that does not achieve the purpose intended by the street to respond to the reasoning of judgments. The Court of Cassation cannot monitor the validity of the application of the law to the incident as it has been proven by the judgment.[3183]

Editing the judgment on a printed form does not require its nullity and as long as it is established that the judgment has fulfilled its formal conditions, and the essential data stipulated by the law.[3184]

In order for the appellant to adhere to the nullity of the judgment for not signing it within the thirty days following its issuance, he must obtain from the clerk's office an indicative certificate that

---

146 of 35 S issued at the session of May 17, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 16 page No. 479 rule No. 97.

([3179]) Appeal No. 1889 of 40 S issued at the session of 31 January 1971 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 22 page No. 122 rule No. 31.

([3180]) Appeal No. 26964 of 4S issued at the 9th session of May 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66, page No. 443, rule No. 62, Appeal No. 33146 of 73S issued at the 4th session of March 2010 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 61, page No. 197, rule No. 26, Appeal No. 12806 of 64S issued at the 28th session of January 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52, page No. 174, rule No. 27.

([3181]) Appeal No. 12007 of 79 S issued at the session of 16 February 2011 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 514 of 51 S issued at the session of 16 December 1981 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 32 page No. 1111 rule No. 198.

([3182]) Appeal No. 951 of 49 s issued at the session of 3 December 1979 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 30 page No. 882 rule No. 188, Appeal No. 111 of 49 s issued at the session of 7 June 1979 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 30 page No. 640 rule No. 137.

([3183]) Appeal No. 9091 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 3 July 2013 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 930 of 68Q issued at the hearing of 26 May 2005 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 109 of 67Q issued at the hearing of 18 January 2005 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 6866 of 65Q issued at the hearing of 16 October 2003 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 629 of 68Q issued at the hearing of 14 April 2003 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 21188 of 63Q Issued at the session of 19 December 2002 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 13028 of 65 S issued at the session of 25 November 2002 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 21435 of 63 S issued at the session of 2 May 2002 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 3692 of 62 S issued at the session of 12 November 2001 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 2332 of 62 S issued at the session of 12 November 2001 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 43605 of 59 S issued at the session of 28 February 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 47 Page No. 281 Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 13315 of 59 S issued at the session of November 3, 1991 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 Page No. 1088 Rule No. 152, Appeal No. 1487 of 50 S issued at the session of December 24, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 Page No. 1113 Rule No. 215, Appeal No. 743 of 43 S issued at the session of November 12, 1973 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 24 Page No. 964 Rule No. 201, Appeal No. 1591 of 40 S issued at the session of March 1, 1971 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 22 Page 175 Rule No. 42.

([3184]) Appeal No. 7274 of 53 S issued at the session of 29 May 1984 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 35 page No. 538 rule No. 121, Appeal No. 514 of 51 S issued at the session of 16 December 1981 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 32 page No. 1111 rule No. 198, Appeal No. 11 of 43 S issued at the session of 4 March 1973 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 24 page No. 279 rule No. 61.

the judgment was not, at the time of its writing, deposited the lawsuit file signed by them despite the lapse of that deadline. If he does not submit it, he shall not accept the objection to the nullity judgment.[3185]

The negative certificate proving the delay in signing the judgment within the period of thirty days is the certificate issued by the Registry at the request of the concerned party, which states that the judgment is not deposited within that period.[3186]

The Court of Cassation ruled that the testimony that it is correct to infer that the judgment was not concluded on the legal date should be negative, that is, an indication that the judgment was not signed by the pen of the book at the time of its issuance.[3187]

The court may take the photocopy of the negative certificate as evidence of the non-filing of the judgment, the case file signed by the head of the body that issued it, whenever it is satisfied with it.[3188]

This negative certificate does not dispense with any other evidence except that the judgment remains free of signature until the time of appeal. This certificate is only evidence of the failure to carry out this procedure, which is required by law and considered a condition for the existence of the judgment. If the judgment has not deposited the case file during the consideration of the appeal, it is null and void, and this nullity inevitably results whether the appellant submits a negative certificate or not. This evidence eliminates the need for the judgment to remain free of signature until the appeal is considered or what was stated in the letter of the Criminal Cassation Prosecution that the reasons for the judgment were not issued until the date of the appeal.[3189]

([3185]) Appeal No. 7678 of 87 S issued at the hearing of June 26, 2019 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 4404 of 63 S issued at the hearing of March 19, 1995 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 46 Page 580 Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 4207 of 61 S issued at the hearing of December 21, 1992 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 43 Page 1181 Rule No. 185, Appeal No. 17149 of 60 S issued at the session of April 23, 1992 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 43 page No. 442 rule No. 67, Appeal No. 2384 of 49 S issued at the session of April 21, 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 534 rule No. 102, Appeal No. 1158 of 49 S issued at the session of December 13, 1979 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 30 page No. 932 rule No. 200, Appeal No. 761 of 49 S issued at the session of October 22, 1979 and published in the first part From the Technical Office Letter No. 30 Page No. 773 Rule No. 163, Appeal No. 102 of 48 s issued at the session of April 24, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 29 Page No. 451 Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 146 of 35 s issued at the session of May 17, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office Letter No. 16 Page No. 479 Rule No. 97.

([3186]) Appeal No. 1020 of 41 s issued at the session of December 12, 1971 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 22 page No. 752 rule No. 181.

([3187]) Appeal No. 716 of 40 BC issued at the session of June 22, 1970 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 21 page No. 911 rule No. 215.

([3188]) Appeal No. 1621 of 53 S issued at the session of November 9, 1983 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 34 page No. 931 rule No. 185.

([3189]) Appeal No. 4404 of 63 S issued at the session of 19 March 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 46 page No. 580 rule No. 86, Appeal No. 30641 of 59 S issued at the session of 16 March 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 46 page No. 560 rule No. 81, Appeal No. 9732 of 63 S issued at the session of 18 December 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 45 page No. 1185 rule No. 186, Appeal No. 10139 of 59 S issued at the session of February 15, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 page 379 rule No. 61, Appeal No. 843 of 59 S issued at the session of November 29, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 page 1062 rule No. 192, Appeal No. 10139 of 59 S issued at the session of February 15, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 page 379 rule No. 61, Appeal No. 3268 For the year 55 S issued at the session of October 9, 1985 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 36 page No. 831 rule No. 148, Appeal No. 2198 of the year 52 S issued at the session of March 2, 1983 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 34 page No. 307 rule No. 59, Appeal No. 1487 of the year 50 S issued at the session of December 24, 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 1113 rule No. 215, Appeal No. 135 of 50 S issued at the session of March 10, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 page No. 361 rule No. 66, Appeal No. 761 of 49 S issued at the session of October 22, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 30 page No. 773 rule No. 163, Appeal No. 93 of 47 S issued at the session of May 9, 1977 and published in the first

The certificate in which it is established that the judgment was deposited within a certain period is not considered a negative certificate because the Code of Criminal Procedure in Article 312 of it did not make the Registry competent to indicate the date of the judgment in the place of the request to annul it, but rather limited its competence to merely proving the existence of the judgment or its absence in the aforementioned pen, editing its reasons signed by those who issued it at the time of writing the certificate.[3190]

The negative certificate also does not change the existence of the draft judgment in the case file and that the original copy of the judgment was signed by the president of the hearing on the legal date, but the clerk of the hearing had not deposited the case file until the request for the certificate, as the law required that the signature and deposit be together within the thirty-day period.[3191]

It is decided that marking the judgment as depositing the case file at a date subsequent to the date of thirty days following its issuance does not help in denying that this deposit took place on the legal date - that is, it is not considered a negative certificate.[3192]

The nullity does not change the deposition of the draft reasons for the judgment signed by the head of the department that issued it, as the lesson in the judgment is in its original copy, which is written by the writer and signed by the judge and kept in the case file and be the reference in taking the executive copies and in the appeal against it by the concerned parties. As for the draft judgment, it is only a project of the court full freedom to change it and to do what it deems necessary regarding the facts and reasons, which does not determine the rights of the litigants at the will of the appeal.[3193]

Also, the certificate that includes depositing the reasons in the case file and referring to it by the Chief Prosecutor and then sending it to the Attorney General is not considered a negative certificate, and it does not serve to deny that the judgment was signed and deposited within the legal time limit.[3194] part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 578 rule No. 121, Appeal No. 2 of 47 S Issued at the session of April 17, 1977 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 28 page No. 491 rule No. 103.

---

([3190]) Appeal No. 3268 of 55 S issued at the session of October 9, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 831 rule No. 148, Appeal No. 716 of 40 S issued at the session of June 22, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 21 page No. 911 rule No. 215

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [When the appellant had submitted a certificate from the Registry of the Zagazig Prosecution Office, it was inferred that the judgment was not concluded on the legal date of March 16, 1975, to the effect that the judgment issued by the Zagazig Criminal Court on February 6, 1975 was received by the Registry on March 9, 1975. The judgment of this court was that the certificate that can be inferred that the judgment was not concluded on the legal date should be negative, any indication that the judgment was not in the pen of the book signed at the time of its issuance, the certificate in which it is established that the judgment was received by the court on March 9, 1975 does not benefit, because the Code of Criminal Procedure in Article 312 of it did not make the Registry competent to indicate the date of receipt of the judgment in the place of the request to invalidate it, but limited its jurisdiction to merely proving the existence of the judgment or its absence in the said pen, editing its reasons signed by who issued it at the time of writing the certificate] Appeal No. 852 of 46 s issued at the session of January 16, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 28 page No. 72 rule No. 15.

([3191]) Appeal No. 1030 of 46 S issued at the session of January 16, 1977 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 28 page No. 80 rule No. 17.

([3192]) Appeal No. 1179 of 42 S issued on January 1, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 24 page No. 19 rule No. 5.

([3193]) Appeal No. 1314 of 47 S issued at the session of February 27, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 196 rule No. 35.

([3194]) Appeal No. 1020 of 41 s issued at the session of December 12, 1971 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 22 page No. 752 rule No. 181.

The law did not invalidate the delay of the signature unless thirty days elapsed without the signature. As for the date of the eight days referred to in it, the street recommended signing the judgment during it without the invalidity being disregarded.[3195]

The Court of Cassation ruled at the expense of the thirty-day period - scheduled for the filing of the judgment - in full from the day following the date on which the judgment was issued. Its ruling also established that the certificate on which the invalidity of the judgment is based is issued after the expiry of the thirty days prescribed by law, as the issuance of the certificate on the thirtieth day does not negate the filing of the judgment on that day, even if the certificate was issued at the end of working hours, because determining the date of work in the pens of the book does not mean that these pens are prohibited from performing work after the expiry of the deadline.[3196]

The exception to the provisions issued for acquittal from nullity because it was not signed within the period of thirty days following the date of its pronouncement does not go to the judgments issued in the civil lawsuit filed by association with the criminal lawsuit. The reason for this is that the accused whose innocence is ruled not to be harmed for a reason in which he has nothing to do with it - is that the street has tended to deprive the Public Prosecution, which is the only opponent of the accused in the criminal lawsuit, of challenging the acquittal judgment if its reasons are not signed within the time specified by law. As for the parties to the civil lawsuit, this exception is excluded from them, and the judgment for them remains subject to the general principle prescribed in Article 312 of the Criminal Procedure Law, and it is null and void if thirty days pass without obtaining its signature.[3197]

([3195]) Appeal No. 70653 of 76 s issued at the session of March 23, 2008 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 59 Page 234 Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 1508 of 58 s issued at the session of April 30, 1989 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 40 Page 547 Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 240 of 44 s issued at the session of April 1, 1974 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 25 Page 361 Rule No. 78, Appeal No. 1542 of 41 s issued at the session of April 3, 1972 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 23 Page 518 Rule No. 114, Appeal No. 1484 of 41 s issued at the session of February 27, 1972 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 23 Page 219 Rule No. 54.

([3196]) Appeal No. 1024 of 43 s issued at the session of December 16, 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 24 page No. 1246 rule No. 253, Appeal No. 100 of 43 s issued at the session of March 19, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 24 page No. 362 rule No. 77, Appeal No. 1179 of 42 s issued at the session of January 1, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 24 page No. 19 rule No. 5.

([3197]) Appeal No. 8134 of 68 S issued at the session of April 15, 2004 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 55 page No. 407 rule No. 54, Appeal No. 12206 of 60 S issued at the session of June 6, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50 page No. 372 rule No. 87, Appeal No. 63415 of 59 S issued at the session of January 21, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 47 page No. 104 rule No. 14, Appeal No. 4332 of 62 s issued at the session of 13 December 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 1141 rule No. 180, Appeal No. 49022 of 59 s issued at the session of 17 April 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 527 rule No. 85, Appeal No. 49022 of 59 s issued at the session of 17 April 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 527 rule No. 85, Appeal No. 62409 of 59 s Issued at the session of March 21, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 421 rule No. 62, Appeal No. 62720 of 59 S issued at the session of October 13, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 44 page No. 797 rule No. 123, Appeal No. 11403 of 59 S issued at the session of April 12, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 page No. 617 rule No. 105, Appeal No. 96 of 51 S issued at the 25th session of May 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 32 page No. 555 rule No. 97, Appeal No. 2380 of 49 S issued at the 21st session of April 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 page No. 527 rule No. 100, Appeal No. 1114 of 49 S issued at the 27th session of December 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 30 page No. 985 rule No. 212, Appeal No. 442 of 47 S issued at the 5th session From June 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 28 page No. 702 rule No. 147, Appeal No. 509 of 46 s issued in the session of October 17, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 27 page No. 754 rule No. 171, Appeal No. 227 of 45 s issued in the session of May 11, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 26 page No. 401 rule No. 92, Appeal No. 1024 of 43 s issued in the session of December 16, 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 24 page No. 1246 rule No. 253, Appeal No. 1932 of 38 s issued in the session of December 9, 1968 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 19 page No. 1073 rule No. 219, Appeal No. 1728 of 34 s

Failure to file the judgment - even if it was issued with acquittal - within thirty days from the date of its issuance is not considered for the civil rights plaintiff an excuse that results in an extension of the time limit specified by the law to appeal in cassation and provide reasons, as he could have adhered to this reason alone as a face to invalidate the judgment provided that he submits it within the time limit set by the law, which is sixty days - and this is not the case with the Public Prosecution in relation to acquittal provisions that do not invalidate this cause in relation to the criminal case.[3198]

Article 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure also excluded the judgments issued in the crime of defamation against a public official or a person of public prosecutorial capacity or assigned to a public service, so it required that the pronouncement of the judgment be accompanied by its reasons, which means that the legislator has arranged for the invalidity of the violation of the obligatory that the pronouncement of the judgment be accompanied by its reasons, in the crime of defamation by publication against a public official or a person of public prosecutorial capacity or assigned to a public service as a fundamental procedure that results in invalidity if the provisions of the law relating to it are not observed in accordance with the text of Article 331 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.[3199]

The absence of the preamble of the judgment from the statement of the name of the court from which the judgment was issued, as well as the absence of the minutes of the session from this statement, leads to ignorance and makes it as if it does not exist.[3200]

The judgment paper must also include a statement of the date of its issuance, and the purpose for which the law required that the judgment paper include a statement of the date of its issuance, which is that the judgment as a declaration of the judicial will of the judge has many important effects that run from the date of its pronouncement, which is reliable in calculating the periods of execution or lapse of the sentence, the statute of limitations of the criminal case or the civil lawsuit related to it, or the statute of limitations of the civil rights in which the judgment was decided - whichever is considered - and the date of the judgment authorizes the opening of the appropriate appeal in the judgment and the entry into force of its deadline - if there is a place - as well as its importance in determining the time when the authority of the res judicata applies. Therefore, the date statement was an important element of the existence of the judgment paper itself. There is no doubt that the appeal against the nullity of the judgment to overturn in this statement is open to anyone who has an interest of the litigants.[3201]

However, with regard to the acquittals and with regard to the Public Prosecution, which is the only opponent of the accused in the criminal case, its obligatory appearance in all trial procedures indicates its certain knowledge of the judgment issued in the criminal case, whether in terms of what the judgment ruled or in terms of the date of its issuance, and in this knowledge it sings at the will to appeal the judgment and in calculating the date of the appeal and in other effects that the law has on it. Therefore, the omission to indicate the date of the judgment in its paper does not affect the Public Prosecution's right and does not harm it, so it adheres to it and issued in the session of April 19, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 16 page No. 363 rule No. 74.

---

([3198]) Appeal No. 11184 of 62 S issued at the session of January 15, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52, page No. 129, rule No. 19, Appeal No. 6016 of 59 S issued at the session of April 2, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42, page No. 575, rule No. 83, Appeal No. 7003 of 53 S issued at the session of April 17, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 35, page No. 434, rule No. 96.

([3199]) Appeal No. 12771 of 69 S issued at the 22nd session of October 2003 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 54 page No. 1016 rule No. 138.

([3200]) Appeal No. 16984 of 61 S issued on 21 October 1998 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 49 page No. 1137 rule No. 155.

([3201]) Appeal No. 2074 of 48 S issued in the session of February 4, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page No. 172 rule No. 35.

the case is - towards the person who is acquitted of the nullity of the judgment despite the fact that the purpose envisaged by the law is not lost on the affirmation of the inclusion of the judgment in this statement is not based on a real and significant interest, but rather based on a purely theoretical interest that is not acceptable for lack of interest in it.

In addition, the Code of Criminal Procedure has excluded the provisions of acquittal from the invalidity prescribed as a penalty for not signing the criminal judgments within the legally prescribed period, and the reason for this is that the acquitted person is not harmed because their will is not involved in it, which means that the Public Prosecution, which is the only opponent of the accused in the criminal case, has tended to deprive them of appealing the invalidity of the acquittal judgment if it is not signed within the legally prescribed time limit.

Whereas, the aforementioned reason was available in the Public Prosecution's challenge to the nullity of the acquittal judgment if their paper does not bear the date of its issuance - as in the case at hand - because the acquitted has nothing to do with the lack of this statement in the judgment paper and he was not able to prevent it, the same result must result from that reason for the similarity between the nullity in both cases. Because it is established that things are measured according to their likenesses and analogues, and that similarity in attributes requires - in the absence of text - similarity in judgments.

In view of the foregoing, there is no dispute about the decline in the right of the Public Prosecution to challenge the contested judgment for nullity for supporting the appealed judgment of acquittal for its reasons, despite the lack of a statement of the date of its issuance.[3202]

23-2 Within the Framework of International Covenants

The right to publicity of the judgment requires the courts to clarify the reasons for their judgments.[3203]

The right to the merits of the judgment is fundamental to the rule of law, especially in order to ensure protection against arbitrariness.[3204]

In criminal cases, the reasoning of the verdicts allows the accused and the public to know the reason on which the conviction or acquittal of the accused was based. Moreover, the convict must exercise their right to appeal.[3205]

The merits of the judgment usually include the basic data of the case, evidence, legal reasons and conclusions.[3206]

When considering a case in which a military court sentenced a number of individuals to death for participating in acts of sabotage, without giving the reasons behind its rulings, and without granting them the right to appeal the verdict, the African Commission confirmed that it has always expressed its condemnation of the lack of mention of the reasons behind the legal

---

([3202]) Appeal No. 2074 of 48 S issued in the session of February 4, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page No. 172 rule No. 35.

Section A (2[3203]) (1) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Article 74 (5) of the Rome Statute; see Article 22 (2) of the ICTR Statute, and Article 23 (2) of the ICTY Statute.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §29.

([3204]) Abetz Barbera et al. v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court (2008 §78.

Section N (3[3205]) (e) (7) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Greece (12945/ 87), European Court (1992) 33 §; see Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, §15 (2008) UN Doc. A/63/223;García-Asto andRamírez-Rojas v. Peru, Inter-American Court §155 (2005

([3206]) Sections a(2) (1) and n(3) (e) (vii) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Article 74 (5) of the Rome Statute.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §29; see Abitz-Barbera et al. v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court §90 (2008 decisions, or the inadequacy of what is mentioned of them, as a violation of the right to a fair[3207] trial.

The way the reasons are stated and the extent to which they are published, in each of the judgments, varies depending on the nature of the decision and on whether the case has been considered by a judge or decided by a jury.[3208]

The test in assessing whether the merits of the sentence are sufficiently reasoned is the extent to which it provides information to exclude the risk of arbitrariness, and to ensure that the accused is able to understand the justification for the sentence.

For example, the decision not to accept the appeal on the grounds contained in the judgment of the lower court may be sufficient if the decision of this court states the basic facts and the legal basis on which the judgment was based.[3209]

In cases considered and decided by "professional" judges instead of ordinary juries, the judgment must address the facts and basic issues on the basis of which it was decided to decide on each aspect of the case, although there is no need to provide a detailed answer to each argument raised.[3210]

Particular care must be taken to evaluate witness testimonies that identify the alleged perpetrator.[3211]

In cases decided by panels of jurors who are not required or allowed to give the reasons behind their verdicts, the fairness of the trial requires safeguards that exclude the risk of arbitrariness and allow the accused to understand the basis of the decision. These may include the judge giving impartial guidance or guidance on legal aspects or evidence and asking the jury precise and unambiguous questions that collectively form the general framework of the verdict.[3212]

The Human Rights Committee has stressed the need to provide such guidance and guidance to ensure impartiality, so as to present fairly the arguments presented by the prosecution and the defense on an equal footing.[3213]

The European Court emphasized that the directions or questions to be put to the jury must be sufficiently precise and oriented to the aspects of the case at hand. Moreover, it should be clear from the indictment, from the questions to the jury and their answers, to which aspects of the evidence and circumstantial facts the jury based their verdict. In a case in which a jury convicted a defendant of murder and attempted murder, the European Court ruled that the verdict did not provide sufficient grounds for their conviction or explain why the court considered the convicted man's responsibility for the crime to be greater than that of some of the other seven defendants. The questions put to the jury did not enable the accused to know what evidence and circumstances the basis for their conviction were, even when reviewed in conjunction with the indictment in the case.[3214]

([3207]) Wich Okunda Kusu et al. v. Democratic Republic of the Congo (2003/281), African Commission §89 (2008

([3208]) Taxquet v. Belgium (926) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §91- §92 (2010

([3209]) García Ruiz v. Spain (30544 / 96), ECt §26 and§ 29- § 30 (1999

Taxquet [3210]v. Belgium (926) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §91 (2010); Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for Yugoslavia: Prosecutor v. Kvočka et al. (28) , IT-98-30/1-A February 2005) §23, Prosecutor v. Hadžihasanović and Kubura (22) , IT-01-47-A April §13 (2008 Prosecutor [3211]v. Kvočka et al. (28) , IT-98-30/1-A Feb. §24 (2005

([3212]) Taxquet v. Belgium (926) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court. §92 (2010

[3213]Pinto v. Trinidad and Tobago, Human Rights Committee, / UN CCPR 3/12-3/ §12 (1990) C/39/D/232/1987; see Clifton Wright v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, 1989/3/8-2/ §8 (1992) UN CCPR/C/45/D/349.

([3214]) Taxquet v. Belgium (926) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §85- §100 (2010); see Goktepe v. Belgium (50372) / 99), European Court §23- § 31(2005

Conversely, one of the defendants was convicted of crimes against humanity in the context of the Second World War following a trial in which the court asked the jury to answer 768 questions to reach its verdict. The European Court considered these questions, which were jointly formulated by the defense and the prosecution, accurate enough and formed the framework for the verdict of the jury and ruled out the suspicion that the jury had omitted to mention the reasons behind their decision.[3215]

Challenges to the content of the reasons contained in the operative part of the judgment, and the scope of these reasons, should identify the material aspects or data derived from the issues considered, as well as clarify the importance of these aspects and data.[3216]

Chapter Twenty-Four: Penalties

24-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

If the criminal law is consistent with other laws in its attempt to regulate the relations of individuals, whether among themselves or through their ties with their society, but the criminal law is different in its use of punishment as a tool to evaluate their actions that prevent them from committing them. It thus seeks to determine - from a social perspective - the manifestations of their behavior that are not tolerated, and to control them by socially acceptable means, to the effect that the punishment for their actions is justified only if it is useful from a social point of view. If it exceeds those limits that are not necessary with it, it will be contrary to the Constitution.[3217]

24-1-1 Punishment Objectives

The punishment aims to affect human behavior within society so that it is consistent with the social orders and prohibitions contained in the rules of criminalization. It aims to affect the behavior of all individuals addressed to the provisions of the law, by threatening them with a certain seriousness, which is called public deterrence. It also aims, when applied by the judiciary, to affect the behavior of the convict so that it conforms to the rules of the law in the future, which is called private deterrence, reform, or social rehabilitation. This goal requires that the convict has a certain criminal danger, that is, a willingness to commit a future crime. If this danger is reduced or absent, this goal is less relevant.

Private deterrence does not mean dropping public deterrence from consideration, but rather retreats with it to the second place. Choosing punishment in order to reform the criminal means relying on the absolute personality of the criminal, who alone is subject to reform. As for public deterrence, it is implicitly achieved through the pain benefited from the punishment imposed on the criminal, whatever his fate or how.

In some cases, public deterrence may take priority over private deterrence. One manifestation of this is denying the judge the application of mitigating circumstances or preventing him from ruling punitive alternatives, such as suspending execution or increasing punishment, for example, crimes against state security from the inside or outside.

([3215]) Baboun v. France (54210/ 00), Decision of the European Court (15) November 2011) Law §6 (f.

[3216]See Prosecutor v. Kvočka et al. (IT-98-30/1-A), ICTY Appeals Chamber (28) Feb. §25 (2005

([3217]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 48 of 18 S. Issued at the session of September 15, 1997, the date of publication is September 25, 1997, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 854, rule No. 57.

It is also noted that the death penalty depends mainly on the idea of general deterrence, because the effect of that punishment is to control the behavior of others and therefore it is usually imposed only as a counterbalance to very serious crimes.

The purpose of criminal punishment is to punish the criminal for what he has committed and to deter others to make those who may have committed the crime refrain from committing it. [3218]

Each criminal sanction has a direct effect that returns to its nature, which is to deprive a person of his right to life, freedom or property, and it was logical, therefore, for civilized countries to evaluate their penal legislation on fixed bases, ensuring the adoption of sound legal means, whether in its substantive or procedural aspects, to ensure that the sanction is not a stormy tool of freedom, suppressing or restricting it in violation of the values that democratic countries believe in in their association with contemporary standards of the concept of sanction, and through the manifestations of their various behavior, and it was necessary in the light of this trend, for progressive constitutions to determine the restrictions they deem on the authority of the legislator in the field of criminalization, as an expression of their belief that human rights and freedoms may not be sacrificed in a manner that is dictated by a social interest they consider, and recognizing that freedom in its full dimensions is inseparable from the sanctity of life, and that the bitter facts that humanity has experienced throughout its development impose an integrated system that guarantees the vital interests of the group, and protects within its objectives the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual, in a way that prevents the misuse of punishment for its purposes. The penalty imposed by the legislator regarding a crime, the elements of which he identified, crystallizes a concept of justice that is determined in the light of the social purposes that it targets, under which the group's desire or eagerness to quench its thirst for revenge and revenge does not fall, or its endeavor to be oppressive to the accused in order to atone for what he has done, and if it can be said in general that what is considered a criminal penalty, it may not be less in scope than what is necessary to get the individual to follow a normal path, the crime is not an entrance to it, and its commission in his estimation - if he resolves to it - is more useful than avoiding it.[3219]

If the goal of criminalization in the past was just to punish the perpetrator for the crime he committed, this goal has evolved in modern legislation to become the prevention of crime, whether it is to prevent or deter others from committing similar crimes. The contemporary trends of criminal policy in various countries - as indicated by the successive United Nations conferences on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders - tend to the importance of taking preventive measures for the occurrence of crime, enacting texts that ensure the punishment of society, criminalizing participation in criminal associations and developing international cooperation to combat organized crime. However, the legitimacy of texts taken as a means to achieve these goals is based on their compatibility with the provisions of the Constitution and its agreement, principles and requirements. Therefore, the legislator - in this regard - must strike a careful balance between the interest of society and concern for its security and stability on the one hand and the freedoms and rights of individuals on the other hand.[3220]

Many jurists compare two types of deterrence, The Penal Goal of Deterrence, one of which is a general deterrence, which is represented in the punishment imposed by the legislator regarding the acts he has committed, specifying their punishment, and graduating with their impact in light of their seriousness, to carry through their burden potential offenders to refrain from doing so.

([3218]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 114 of 21 S issued in the session of June 2, 2001, the date of publication is June 14, 2001, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 986, rule No. 119.

([3219]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 37 of 15 S issued at the session of August 3, 1996, the date of publication of August 15, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([3220]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 114 of 21 S issued in the session of June 2, 2001, the date of publication is June 14, 2001, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 986, rule No. 119.

The second is a special deterrence that is achieved with regard to a crime that has been committed and attributed to a specific person, so that a judge determines the scope of his responsibility for it Offender level Of blameworthiness, and estimates its punishment uniquely when judging it The individualized consideration of sendingencing to ensure that it is proportional to the crime he has committed, and as a reaction to it A proportionate response to the crime. Hence, this type of deterrence is not related to the possibility of criminal seriousness, but to acts committed by actual seriousness.[3221]

Private deterrence is nothing more than an expression of the concept of punishment - from a social perspective - as a fair punishment estimated by a judge for a specific person for a crime he has committed. It does not specify its punishment arbitrarily, but rather through a logical relationship that directly links it to the perpetrator, to meet the limits of his criminal responsibility for it, and to its extent, which confirms its reasonableness. The heart of the retribution rationale is that a criminal sentence must be directly related to the personal culpability of the criminal offender[3222].

24-1-2 Legality of Punishment

The principle of legitimacy depends on the legislative authority in determining crimes and penalties, as the legislative authority represents society as a whole, and the Constitution has recognized that principle in Article 95 of it by stipulating that: "Punishment is personal, no crime and no punishment except on the basis of a law, and no punishment shall be imposed except by a judicial decision, and no punishment except for acts subsequent to the date of entry into force of the law."[3223]

Within the framework of the principle of the rule of law, the role of the legislative authority must be determined in comparison with the role of the executive authority. Each of them has the authority to approve legal rules in the form of legislation for the legislative authority, and in the form of regulations for the executive authority. However, the distribution of competence between them takes place only within the framework of the principle of legality, that is, the rule of law. According to this principle, all authorities are subject to the Constitution. The executive authority is also subject in the regulations it enacts to the legislation approved by the legislative authority. This means that the hierarchy between legal rules is a feature of legality, that is, the rule of law. The legislative authority is obligated to respect constitutional rules, and the required guarantee of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution. The executive branch is committed to enabling individuals to exercise and ensure respect for their public rights and freedoms.

The Constitution did not confer on the executive authority any competence to regulate anything that affects the rights guaranteed by the Constitution in the foregoing, and that this regulation must be assumed by the legislative authority with the laws it issues whenever this is the case. The judiciary of this court has ruled that if the Constitution assigns the regulation of a right to the legislative authority, it may not take away from its jurisdiction and refer the entire matter to the executive authority without restricting it to general controls and main bases within which it is obligated to work. If the legislator deviates from this, and the executive authority assigns the regulation of the right in its foundation, it shall be relinquished from its original jurisdiction established in the Constitution.[3224]

([3221]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 37 of 15 S issued at the session of August 3, 1996, the date of publication of August 15, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([3222]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 37 of 15 S issued at the session of August 3, 1996, the date of publication of August 15, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([3223]) Article 95 of the Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt.

([3224]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 243 of 21 S, issued at the session of November 4, 2000, date of publication, November 16, 2000, published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 9, page No. 777, rule No. 93

However, this does not preclude that the law itself includes a mandate to the authority charged with enacting implementing regulations in determining crimes and determining penalties. The Constitution permits the law to entrust the executive authority with issuing regulatory decisions specifying some aspects of criminalization or punishment, for considerations determined by the legislative authority and within the limits and under the conditions specified by the law issued by it. Decisions issued by the body appointed by the legislator to exercise this jurisdiction are not considered delegated regulations, nor are they included under the executive regulations.[3225]

Criminal punishment is not assumed, nor is punishment without a text imposed by it.[3226]

The Constitution, by stipulating that there is no crime or punishment except on the basis of a law, has indicated that the principle is that the legislative authority itself - through a law in the strict sense approved in accordance with the Constitution - shall determine the crimes and indicate their penalties. It is therefore not permissible for it to completely abandon this mandate, by entrusting it in its entirety to the executive authority, and if it is sufficient for it to set a general framework for the conditions of criminalization and the corresponding penalty, for the executive authority to separate some of its aspects, then its intervention in the penal field is considered only in accordance with the terms and conditions regulated by the law, to the effect that the legal texts alone - in their generality and the absence of their personality - are the ones with which criminalization revolves, and it is not imagined to arise away from them. This does not mean that the executive authority has a reserved area in which it is unique in regulating the conditions of criminalization, as its role is still subordinate to the legislative authority, and determined in the light of its laws, so it does not assume it on its own initiative, which is not supported by an existing law.[3227]

Criminalization of acts per se is carried out only through a criminal penalty that represents the penalty of the legislator's ability when they are committed. This penalty - and that is its nature - is not considered a financial compensation for the crime designated by the legislator, but rather a part of it that is inseparable from it. No crime is without punishment or punishment except for an act or omission that violates the values of the group or its reversal and has become a sin to ensure its preservation. Crimes - of any kind - are not compensated with compensation that is equivalent to the damage resulting from them, but their punishment is determined by the extent of their seriousness and impact. It is not exceeded to the extent of the social necessity that it requires nor a reality without its requirements. As for the tax, it does not correspond to an offence and the resulting revenue is not supposed to be derived from it from an illegal source. It is also not intended to be a pain for those entrusted with it, but its burden falls on their money as citizens who contribute justly to bear their share of development and the development of their society in a way that confirms their solidarity. Neither the contested fine imposed by the

---

In that ruling, the court said that: [Delegating the Minister of Interior to determine the conditions for granting the passport and authorizing him to refuse to grant or renew the passport, as well as withdrawing it after giving it, results in the legislator's disavowal of laying the general foundations that regulate the subject of passports in its entirety, despite the fact that they are the only means to enable citizens to leave their country and return to it, and this is closely linked to the rights guaranteed by the Constitution].

([3225]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 17 of 11 S issued at the session of April 6, 1991, date of publication April 27, 1991, published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 4, page No. 311, rule No. 38, Case No. 43 of 7 S issued at the session of March 7, 1992, date of publication April 2, 1992, published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 5, page No. 214, rule No. 25, Case No. 5 of 15 S issued at the session of May 20, 1995, date of publication June 8, 1995, published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 6, page No. 686, rule No. 43.

([3226]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 24 of 18 S issued at the session of July 5, 1997, the date of publication July 19, 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 709 rule No. 47.

([3227]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 24 of 18 S issued at the session of July 5, 1997, the date of publication July 19, 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 709 rule No. 47.

legislator is not to be a penalty without the crime that prevents it from being committed and eliminated through its criminal punishment.[3228]

First: The Death Penalty

It is established that the penalty is for the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution. The Constitution permits the violation of the essence of the right or freedom under certain conditions. The legislator may set the conditions and guarantees of the penalty in accordance with the Constitution. The Penal Code permits the death penalty, which is considered a violation of the essence of the right to life. However, this violation derives its origins from the Constitution itself, which stipulates in its article 2 that the principles of Islamic Sharia are the main source of legislation. According to the Islamic Sharia, the death penalty may be imposed for each of the crimes of hudud, qisas (retribution) and tazi.[3229]

The legislator has approved several guarantees when imposing the death penalty, as the text of Article 381 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not allow the Criminal Court to issue its death sentence unless it sends the papers to the Mufti of the Republic. If his opinion does not reach the court within the ten days following the sending of the papers to him, it shall rule on the case, and the opinion of the Mufti of the Egyptian Diyar in this case must be taken to express his opinion within the scope of the provisions of the Islamic Sharia, whose principles are a main source of legislation, according to the Constitution.[3230]

The law intended when it required the court to take the opinion of the mufti on the death penalty before it was imposed; that the judge be aware of whether the provisions of Sharia allow the death sentence in the criminal incident in which the fatwa is requested before sentencing this penalty without being obligated to take it according to the fatwa. The referendum is not intended to define the opinion of the mufti in adapting the act attributed to the perpetrator and giving him the legal description. However, the court decided that the opinion of the Mufti of the Republic must be consulted before sentencing to death as a prerequisite for the validity of the sentence required by law. No It dispenses with the precedent taken in the first trial, because the cassation of the judgment returns the case to the Court of Repeat in its condition before the issuance of the overturned judgment. If the Court of Repeat decides to rule on the death penalty, it must send the case papers to the Mufti of the Republic to seek his opinion so that it can be reassured that its ruling conforms to the provisions of the Islamic Sharia, as it is a new ruling body that has not previously considered the case, and the opinion then went to the judgment of executing the accused, and it has not previously sought his opinion to reassure its conscience that its ruling conforms to the provisions of the Islamic Sharia, in addition to the fact that this procedure reassures the accused that the court Al-Jadida has consulted the opinion of the Mufti of the Republic before the ruling, as required by law, and so that the public opinion is aware of this, which are necessary purposes worthy of respect, in addition to the fact that there is something new in the second trial, in addition to the fact that the composition of the court has become different, it is how to determine the new that requires taking the opinion of the Mufti of the Republic and the old that does not.[3231]

If the judgment is issued in presence to punish the accused with the death penalty without the court taking the opinion of the Mufti, the judgment is null and void, and it is not inconceivable

---

([3228]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 42 of 19 S. Issued at the session of February 7, 1998, the date of publication of February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 1087, rule No. 131.

([3229]) Article 2 of the Constitution.

([3230]) Article 381 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3231]) Appeal No. 56449 of 76 S issued at the 4th session of February 2007 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 58, page No. 113, rule No. 20, Appeal No. 49390 of 75 S issued at the 12th session of November 2006 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 51, page No. 4, rule No. 1.

that the Criminal Court in the first trial has consulted the opinion of the Mufti before issuing its death sentence, which was overturned, because the requirement to overturn this judgment is that the case be returned to the Repatriation Court in its condition before the issuance of the overturned judgment to decide it again, which requires the return of the procedures before it, and therefore entails consulting the opinion of the Mufti before issuing its death sentence, considering this procedure a prerequisite for the validity of the sentence to be imposed by the law itself, as it did not restrict the court to a result that is indispensable in the first trial.[3232]

The law required the Criminal Court to take the opinion of the Mufti of the Republic before sentencing to death, but the opinion poll of the Mufti is only a measure necessary for the validity of the death sentence, to the effect that it is a procedure prior to the issuance of the judgment, but it is not a judgment that ends the lawsuit, and therefore it is not permissible to appeal it by way of cassation.[3233]

Also, if the judgment proves that the opinion of the Mufti was consulted before it was issued, it is not important to prove that the ten-day deadline for expressing his opinion was met.[3234]

Moreover, although the law requires the Criminal Court to take the opinion of the Mufti before issuing its death sentence, there is nothing in the law that requires the court to state the opinion of the Mufti or to refute it. There is no harm to the court if it does not state this opinion in its judgment, as there is nothing in the law that requires the court, when sentencing to death after taking the opinion of the Mufti, to state this opinion in its judgment.[3235]

The legislator also established several guarantees for the authority of the court in imposing the death penalty, requiring unanimity of the views of the members of the court when imposing that penalty.[3236]

The provision of unanimity of opinions in relation to the pronouncement of the death sentence is a prerequisite for the validity of the issuance of that sentence. The street, if the unanimity is required for the issuance of the death sentence, indicates the direction of its desire that the unanimity be contemporary to the issuance of the sentence and not subsequent to it because this is what achieves the wisdom of its legislation. Therefore, the provision of unanimity of opinions in relation to the pronouncement of the death sentence is a prerequisite for the validity of the sentence. If the lesson in the judgments is what the judge pronounces in the public session after hearing the case, it is not enough that the reasons for the judgment include what indicates the convening of the unanimity as long as it is not proven in the judgment paper that these reasons were read publicly in the pronouncement session with the operative part.[3237]

([3232]) Appeal No. 12044 of 64 s issued at the session of January 10, 1995 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 46 page No. 112 rule No. 12, Appeal No. 24526 of 59 s issued at the session of May 28, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 41 page No. 780 rule No. 135.

([3233]) Appeal No. 14725 of 62 S issued at the session of January 17, 1994 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 45 page No. 115 rule No. 17.

([3234]) Appeal No. 6174 of 58 S issued at the session of January 9, 1989 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 40 page No. 21 rule No. 3.

([3235]) Appeal No. 2269 of 55 S issued at the session of January 23, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 37 Page 137 Rule No. 29, Appeal No. 1587 of 55 S issued at the session of June 12, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 36 Page 772 Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 263 of 51 S issued at the session of October 28, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 32 Page 775 Rule No. 134, Appeal No. 1003 of 29 S issued at the session of March 15, 1960 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 11 Page 242 Rule No. 51.

([3236]) Article 381 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3237]) Appeal No. 7463 of 61 s issued at the session of 13 December 1992 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 43 page No. 1154 rule No. 180, Appeal No. 265 of 38 s issued at the session of 25 March 1968 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 19 page No. 368 rule No. 70.

The legislator has linked the principle of unanimity with taking the opinion of the Mufti. The death sentence is conditional on the completion of these two procedures, so that if one or both of them fails to abrogate the judgment, if the operative part of the judgment is devoid of any evidence that it was issued unanimously, it is invalid, and the reasons for the judgment that the court unanimously decided to seek the opinion of the Mufti are not invalid, due to the fact that it is decided that the provision of consensus on the death sentence is a necessary condition for the validity of the sentence.[3238]

However, the Mufti's opinion poll does not require the provision of unanimity, as the street necessitated the convening of the consensus when issuing the death sentence as an organized procedure for its issuance and a necessary condition for its validity - in deviation from the general rule in the judgments issued by the majority of opinions - but this was in appreciation of the seriousness of the penalty in the death penalty, and in order to ensure that it is surrounded by a procedural guarantee that ensures that its pronouncement is limited in cases where it is due - to near certainty - to be in accordance with the law. The street was interrogated to precede the issuance of the judgment in conjunction with the unanimity condition. Another measure is to take the opinion of the Mufti of the Republic, so he cut off the independence of each of the two procedures from the other, as this was, and it was decided that it is not permissible to deviate from the text when the meaning of the statement intended, and the aforementioned text did not require unanimity except when issuing the death sentence, so it is not necessary to be available in the procedure preceding the judgment, which is taking the opinion of the Mufti.[3239]

However, it is not defective for the judgment not to stipulate the method of execution because this is an act of the execution authority and has nothing to do with its authority to rule.[3240]

The legislator stipulates that there must be unanimity when issuing the death sentence, but this is only one of the procedures regulating the issuance of the death sentence, which is a condition of its validity, but it does not affect the basis of the right to impose the death penalty itself and does not affect the crimes that are punishable by this penalty by abolition or amendment and does not create for their perpetrators circumstances that change the nature of those crimes and the punishment prescribed for them, but rather is limited to regulating the sentence of this penalty. If the sentence is sentenced to life imprisonment after its implementation of Article 17 of the Penal Code instead of the death penalty prescribed for this crime without providing for unanimity in the judgment, it is correct in what it was ruled.[3241]

The legislator obligated the Public Prosecution, when sentencing the death penalty in presence, to submit the case to the Court of Cassation, accompanied by a memorandum of its opinion on the judgment, to verify the validity of the application of the law, within forty days from the date of issuance of the judgment.[3242]

However, exceeding the aforementioned deadline does not result in the non-acceptance of the prosecution's offer, because the street merely wanted to establish a regulatory rule, not to leave the door open indefinitely, and to expedite the presentation of the death sentences to the Court

---

([3238]) Appeal No. 6777 of 62 S issued at the session of November 3, 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 919 rule No. 144.

([3239]) Appeal No. 63 of 60 S issued at the session of April 1, 1991 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 42 page No. 557 rule No. 81, Appeal No. 6174 of 58 S issued at the session of January 9, 1989 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 40 page No. 21 rule No. 3.

([3240]) Appeal No. 22443 of 59 S issued in the session of February 7, 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 page No. 330 rule No. 54.

([3241]) Appeal No. 2040 of 49 S issued at the session of March 9, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page No. 343 rule No. 64.

([3242]) Article 46 of Law No. 57 of 1959 on the cases and procedures of appeal before the Court of Cassation.

of Cassation in all cases when the judgment is issued in presence. In any case, the Court of Cassation communicates the lawsuit as soon as it is presented to it and decides on it to see - on its own - what errors or defects may have been tainted by the judgment, whether the Public Prosecution submitted a memorandum of its opinion or not, and whether this memorandum was submitted before or after the deadline for appeal.[3243]

The accused who is under 18 years of age at the time of the commission of the crime shall not be sentenced to death, life imprisonment, or aggravated imprisonment. If a child over 15 years of age commits a crime punishable by death, life imprisonment, or aggravated imprisonment, he shall be sentenced to imprisonment. If the crime is punishable by imprisonment, he shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a period no less than three months.

In lieu of a custodial sentence, the court may sentence him to placement in a social welfare institution.

However, if a child over the age of fifteen years commits a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, the court may, instead of ruling the punishment prescribed for it, rule one of the following measures:

Judicial probation;

Work for the public benefit in a manner that does not harm the health or psychology of the child. The executive regulations of this law shall specify the types of such work and its controls.

Placement in a social welfare institution.[3244]

Second: Penalties Depriving of Liberty

These penalties include a violation of personal freedom. Therefore, the constitutional legislator stipulates several guarantees that must be enjoyed by anyone who is imprisoned or whose freedom is restricted in a manner that preserves human dignity, while not physically or morally harming him. Article 55 of the Constitution stipulates that: "Whoever is arrested, imprisoned, or whose freedom is restricted must be treated in a manner that preserves his dignity, and it is not permissible to torture, intimidate, coerce, or physically or morally harm him, and his detention or imprisonment shall only be in places designated for that appropriate human and health. The state is obligated to provide means of access to persons with disabilities.

Violation of any of this is a crime that shall be punished in accordance with the law... ".[3245]

In fact, the pain of a person sentenced to a custodial sentence may not exceed the minimum level of human rights. The pain of a convicted person must not turn into an affront to his dignity or torture of his humanity, but rather is merely a means of reforming the criminal and returning him to society. If the prisoner is deprived of his human rights, he will be completely deprived of the means he needs in order to develop his personality, which loses the potential of an honorable life within society. To this end, democratic countries adopt a system of judicial supervision over the implementation of the punishment, as the judge is the natural guardian of freedoms. In Egypt, the Public Prosecution, as a division of the judicial authority, supervises the implementation. The Child Court supervises the implementation of the judgments issued against child defendants in the court circuit in application of the Child Law.

([3243]) Appeal No. 150 of 56 S issued in the session of April 3, 1986 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 37 page No. 453 rule No. 93.

([3244]) Articles 101 and 111 of the Child Law.

([3245]) Article 55 of the Constitution.

Third: Penalty of Confiscation

The Constitution explicitly prohibits certain penalties, as it prohibits the general confiscation of funds because of its harmful effects on the person and his family, which affects the right to property and executes him. The Constitution stipulates that: “The general confiscation of funds is prohibited.

Private confiscation is not permissible, except by a judicial ruling[3246].

The Constitution, in order to further protect private property and protect it from unjust attack, prohibits public confiscation absolutely, and requires that private confiscation be a judicial ruling and not an administrative decision, so that the right holder has access to litigation procedures and guarantees that negate the suspicion of abuse and scandals, and therefore the Constitution prohibits private confiscation of funds except by a judicial ruling - absolutely from each restriction until he generalizes his judgment to include private confiscation in all its forms.[3247]

This is supported by the fact that confiscation is either a public confiscation that deals with the positive elements of the entire financial liability of a specific person or a common share in it, and these may not be signed at all or that they are subject to a specific thing or things in themselves. This is a private confiscation that may not be signed except by a judicial ruling, even if it is a civil penalty, as this confiscation deals with individual rights that have a financial value that the Constitution guarantees to preserve and therefore may not be affected except through the right of litigation so that its essential guarantees, topped by the right of defense, do not recede from them so that these rights can be adjudicated - whether by proving or denying them in the light of a neutral view surrounding them, and according to the standards and controls specified by the legislator in advance.

Also, the general text of Article 40 of the Constitution stipulates that the suspension of the private confiscation is not limited to cases in which such confiscation is a punishment decided by a criminal text, but the judicial ruling is necessary in all its forms and therefore required, even if it is a civil penalty.[3248]

The legislator therefore strictly forbade public confiscation, and specified the tool by which private confiscation is carried out and required that it be a judicial ruling and not an administrative decision, in order to preserve private property from being confiscated except by a judicial ruling in order to provide - within its framework - the right holder with litigation procedures and guarantees that negate the suspicion of arbitrariness and infringements on this right, and to emphasize the principle of separation between the judicial authority and the legislative and executive authorities, as the judicial authority is the original authority established by the Constitution on the affairs of justice and specializes in its disposal so that it is unique to what falls within its jurisdiction, including the signature of confiscation.[3249]

([3246]) Article 40 of the Constitution.

([3247]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 105 of 24 S issued at the session of March 7, 2004, the date of publication of March 18, 2004, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11, page No. 485, rule No. 79.

([3248]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 6 of 17 S issued at the session of May 4, 1996, the date of publication of May 16, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7, page No. 574, rule No. 34.

([3249]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 17 of 11 S issued at the session of April 6, 1991, the date of publication April 27, 1991, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 4, page No. 311, rule No. 38, Case No. 23 of 3 S issued at the session of May 15, 1982, the date of publication May 27, 1982, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 2, page No. 40, rule No. 8, Case No. 28 of 1 S issued at the session of January 3, 1981, the date of publication January 22, 1981, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 1, page No. 156, rule No. 2.

24-1-3 Personality of the penalty and its proportionality to the crime

First: The Personality of the Punishment

The principle of the personality of punishment is linked to two important principles. First: the personality of criminal responsibility. The punishment is the penalty of responsibility, and therefore it is imposed only on those who are legally responsible for its disobedience, in light of their role in the crime, their criminal intentions, and the resulting harm. The punishment of the perpetrators for their crime is only in accordance with their choice.

It is decided that the character of the punishment and its proportionality to the crime in question are linked to who is legally responsible for committing it in the light of a course in it and its intentions that compared it and the harm caused by it so that the penalty for it is in accordance with his options in regard to it.[3250]

It is established that the judiciary is governed by a basic principle to which there is no exception, which is the principle of the personality of the punishment, and this requires that the principle of the inadmissibility of punishment is only for those for whom the elements of the crime have been achieved, so it is not permissible to sentence a penalty except for those who committed the crime or participated in it in accordance with the principle of the personality of the punishment, as the crimes are not taken into account for their crimes other than their paradises, and the penalties are purely personal and are not implemented except in the same of those imposed by the judiciary.[3251]

The origin of the crime is that its punishment is borne only by those who were convicted of it as responsible for it, and it is after a punishment whose impact must be balanced with the nature of the crime in question. This means that the person only visits his bad work. Hence, the personality of the punishment - crystallized by the Islamic Sharia in its supreme value or confirmed by the Constitution in its articles - assumes the personality of criminal responsibility in a way that confirms their correlation. The person is not responsible for the crime and its punishment is imposed on him only as a perpetrator or partner in it.[3252]

([3250]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 49 of 22 S issued at the session of February 3, 2001, date of publication October 18, 2001, published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 9, page No. 857, rule No. 103, Case No. 64 of 19 S issued at the session of May 9, 1998, date of publication May 21, 1998, published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 8, page No. 1315, rule No. 99, Case No. 130 of 18 S issued at the session of September 1, 1997, date of publication September 11, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 8, page No. 839, rule No. 54.

([3251]) Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 24480 of 64 S issued at the session of May 28, 2003 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 54 page No. 698 rule No. 89, Appeal No. 559 of 55 S issued at the session of March 6, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 334 rule No. 57, Appeal No. 1074 of 49 S issued at the session of January 6, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page No. 39 rule No. 7, Appeal No. 48 of 42 S issued at the session of May 14, 1972 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 23 page No. 696 rule No. 156, Appeal No. 583 of 47 S issued at the session of November 20, 1930 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 2 p No. 1 page No. 106 rule No. 104.

([3252]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 124 of 25 S, issued at the session of January 14, 2007, the date of publication, January 28, 2007, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 12, page No. 194, rule No. 21

In that ruling, the court ruled that it was unconstitutional to stipulate the responsibility of the owner of the shop for rationing crimes and punish him with a fine, although it was proven that due to his absence or the impossibility of monitoring, he was unable to prevent the violation, assuming that he was aware of the occurrence of the violation and his responsibility for it simply because he is the owner of the shop and the license was issued in his name, and therefore the legislator established an arbitrary presumption that is not based on objective grounds, as the alternative fact that he chose does not nominate in most cases to consider the fact of knowledge of the violation as established by law and therefore has no logical relationship to it, but that what is established – according to the text – is impossibility, and therefore this act of the legislator is a criminal penalty that is determined as an abuse of a violation of an impossible assignment, that does not achieve any social interest, exceeds the scales of moderation, and does not have a logical relationship to its purpose, which takes it out of the constitutional legitimacy, and is contrary to the principle of the personality of punishment that undermines the presumption of innocence, and violates

This principle expresses criminal justice in its true concept, and reflects some of its most advanced forms, but this is not strange from the Islamic faith, but rather confirmed by its supreme values, as the Almighty says - in the arbitrator of his verses - " Say: Do not be asked about what we have committed, and we are not asked about what you are doing." Man has nothing but what he has sought, and the fullest reward is only his work, and he was the child of his free will, connected to its purposes.[3253]

In essence, criminal justice is the one that must be guaranteed through precisely and fairly defined rules in the light of which it is decided whether the accused is convicted or innocent. This presupposes a balance between the interest of the group in the stability of its security and the interest of the accused in the absence of imposing on him a penalty that has nothing to do with an act committed by him or lacks evidence of this link. Thus, criminal justice may not be separated from its elements that guarantee each accused a minimum of rights that may not be waived or compromised, nor shall it prejudice the need for criminalization to remain linked to the final purposes of penal laws.[3254]

Second: The principle of individualization of punishment - proportionality of punishment to crime and equality before the judiciary

The character of the punishment is related to the act to which the offender has been brought under the control of necessity and proportionality, and is called legislative uniqueness.

On the other hand, the personality of the punishment has an additional dimension through judicial application, which is the personality of the criminal, and it is linked to the final goals to be achieved from the imposition of the punishment, not just stipulating it. Through application, the legal status of the accused is determined in a way that enables the judge to exercise his discretion, and it is called judicial uniqueness, which is determined in the light of the legal status of the accused and in the light of his criminal personality that the judge extracts.

The Supreme Constitutional Court has distinguished between legislative uniqueness and judicial uniqueness. Legislative uniqueness is in the place of criminalization and punishment and is necessitated by social necessity, and the punishment must be commensurate with the harmful act committed by the perpetrator. As for judicial uniqueness, it is in the place of the judge's enforcement of the provisions of punishment against the perpetrator, and this is in the exercise of the discretionary power of the judge and includes another factor, which is the personality of the perpetrator, which makes judicial uniqueness of the punishment a guarantee in the face of criminalization and punishment.

The person does not visit except his bad work, and that the character of the punishment and its proportionality to the crime in question requires that its characteristics be balanced with the impact of its punishment. This meant that the legislator would assign each crime the punishment that suits it, but what penalty would be appropriate for the crime itself should be determined in the light of its degree of seriousness and the type of interests it is linked to, taking into account the right to the jurisdiction of the judiciary and its right to assess the evidence and the notation of the crime attributed to the accused.

---

See: Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 296 of 25 S issued at the session of April 9, 2006, date of publication May 6, 2006, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11, page No. 2432, rule No. 388, Case No. 59 of 18 S issued at the session of February 1, 1997, date of publication February 13, 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 286, rule No. 19, Case No. 49 of 17 S issued at the session of June 15, 1996, date of publication June 27, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7, page No. 739, rule No. 48.

([3253]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 59 of 18 S. Issued at the session of February 1, 1997, the date of publication of February 13, 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 286, rule No. 19.

([3254]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 49 of 17 S. Issued at the hearing of June 15, 1996, the date of publication is June 27, 1996, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7, page No. 739, rule No. 48.

that the criminal penalty is not contrary to the Constitution unless the parity is manifestly disproportionate between its extent and the nature of the crime to which it relates.[3255]

When criminal punishment is a punishment that necessarily falls within a social framework and is often implied - through the power of deterrence - to restrict personal freedom and is prescribed for a specific purpose in order to fulfill values and social interests that have weight; the origin of the punishment is its reasonableness, so interference with it is only insofar as it is far from being an unjustified pain that confirms its cruelty without necessity ([3256]unnecessary cruelty and pain

The origin of punishment is its individualization, not its generalization, and the establishment of an exception to this principle - whatever its purposes - to the effect that all sinners are homogenous and that their punishment must be one in which there is no variation, which means inflicting a penalty unnecessarily - and in an abstract manner - to drag out painfully unjustified colors of suffering. Having lost the penalty commensurate with the weight of the crime and its circumstances, which unduly restricts personal freedom.[3257]

The legality of the penalty - criminal, civil or disciplinary - is mandated to be commensurate with the acts completed by the legislator, their prohibition or restriction of their exercise. The origin of the penalty is its reasonableness. Whenever the criminal penalty is abhorrent, offensive or related to acts that do not justify criminalization or manifestly deviate from the limits with which it is commensurate with the seriousness of the acts completed by the legislator, it loses its raison d 'être and its restriction of personal freedom becomes arbitrary.[3258]

The estimation of the elements of proportionality falls within the framework of the essential characteristics of the judicial function, which means that depriving the judge of his authority in the field of individualization of punishment in a way that harmonizes the formula in which it was emptied with the requirements of its application in a particular case, which necessarily means that penal texts lose their connection to their reality so that they do not vibrate with life and their enforcement is only an abstract act that isolates them from their environment, indicating their cruelty or exceeding the limit of moderation.

Defendants may not be treated as a fixed pattern or viewed as a single image that unites them to pour them into its mold, which means that the origin of the punishment is its uniqueness, not its generalization, and the establishment of a legislative exception from this origin - whatever its purposes - to the effect that all offenders conform to their circumstances and that their punishment must be one that does not vary, which means inflicting an unnecessary penalty that loses the punishment commensurate with the weight of the crime, its circumstances and the personal circumstances of the perpetrator, and in a way that restricts personal freedom without the requirement that the legitimacy of the punishment - from a constitutional point of view - mandates that each judge exercise his authority in the field of gradation and divide it in appreciation of it within the limits prescribed by law. This alone is the way to its reasonableness

---

([3255]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 48 of 18 S. Issued at the session of September 15, 1997, the date of publication is September 25, 1997, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 854, rule No. 57.

([3256]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 28 of 17 S, issued at the session of December 2, 1995, the date of publication, December 21, 1995, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7, page No. 262, rule No. 15.

([3257]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 120 of 27 S issued at the session of 12 March 2006, the date of publication 5 April 2006, published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 11, page No. 2369, rule No. 378, Case No. 64 of 19 S issued at the session of 9 May 1998, the date of publication 21 May 1998, published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 8, page No. 1315, rule No. 99, Case No. 37 of 15 S issued at the session of 3 August 1996, the date of publication 15 August 1996, published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([3258]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 114 of 21 S issued at the session of 2 June 2001, the date of publication 14 June 2001, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 986, rule No. 119, Case No. 33 of 16 S issued at the session of 3 February 1996, the date of publication 17 February 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7, page No. 393, rule No. 22.

and humanity by force to provoke the crime from a fair perspective related to it and its perpetrator.[3259]

The legality of the penalty from a constitutional point of view is vested in each judge to exercise his authority in the field of its hierarchy and division, in appreciation of it, within the limits prescribed by law. That alone is the way to its reasonableness and humanity, to force the effects of the crime from an objective perspective, so that it is attached to it and its perpetrator.[3260]

Criminal punishment may not be applied indiscriminately or automatically, as its uniqueness is inseparable from contemporary concepts of criminal policy that refuse to impose a penalty imposed by the legislator in an abstract manner - like all legal rules - on the crime in question and the uniqueness of the punishment - and under which the order to stop it - is the one that takes it out of its deaf molds and returns it to a penalty that coexists with the crime and its perpetrator and is connected to it by a decision.[3261]

Whereas, the decision in the jurisprudence of this court is that the principle of punishment is its uniqueness, not its generalization, and therefore the decision to make an exception to this principle - whatever the purposes it is intended for - is to recognize that the circumstances of the perpetrators have been similar to what requires the unification of the penalty imposed on them, which violates the proportionality of the punishment to the amount of the crime, its circumstances, and the personal characteristics of the perpetrator. If the most important elements of the legality of punishment - from a constitutional point of view - are that each judge exercises his authority in the field of graduation and division within the limits prescribed by law, there is no room for the judge to withhold from exercising this discretion and deprive him of exercising his right to rule on the punitive alternatives that he deems appropriate for each case separately.[3262]

Whether the penalty imposed by the legislator - and in view of its social objectives - aims to achieve a special deterrence, or whether it is an expression of an evolving concept of punishment as a fair punishment for persons who have committed acts that the legislator has criminalized, its estimation through its individualization relates to objective factors related to the crime itself, and to personal elements that belong to the perpetrator, which means that there is an inevitable relationship between the judge's authority to individualize the punishment and its proportionality to the crime, and their association with the exercise of the judicial function in connection with the essence of its characteristics. Therefore, it is not permissible for the legislator to restrict the scope of this function by interfering with its components, in recognition

---

([3259]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 49 of 22 S issued at the session of February 3, 2001, date of publication October 18, 2001, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 857, rule No. 103, Case No. 42 of 19 S issued at the session of February 7, 1998, date of publication February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 1087, rule No. 131, Case No. 133 of 18 s issued in the session of 15 November 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 921 rule No. 63, Case No. 130 of 18 s issued in the session of 1 September 1997 date of publication 11 September 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 839 rule No. 54, Case No. 24 of 18 s issued in the session of 5 July 1997 date of publication 19 July 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 709 rule No. 47.

([3260]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 120 of 27 S issued at the hearing of March 12, 2006, the date of publication of April 5, 2006, published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 11, Page No. 2369, Rule No. 378, Case No. 64 of 19 S issued at the hearing of May 9, 1998, Date of publication May 21, 1998, published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 1315, Rule No. 99, Case No. 133 of 18 S issued at the hearing of November 15, 1997, published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 921, Rule No. 63, Case No. 37 of 15 S issued at the hearing of August 3, 1996, Date of publication August 15, 1996, published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 8, Page No. 67, Rule No. 3.

([3261]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 42 of 19 S. Issued at the session of February 7, 1998, the date of publication of February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 1087, rule No. 131.

([3262]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 326 of 23 S. Issued at the session of May 12, 2002, the date of publication is May 25, 2002, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 10, page No. 375, rule No. 59.

that the crimes do not unite in their seriousness, and because the defendants do not have the characteristics of their heterogenous composition and their environment is not determined, but rather they are distinguished in particular in terms of their education and culture, their intelligence and independence, and their criminal tendency is graduated between softness, moderation, fetishism or penetration.[3263]

The authority exercised by the judge in the field of suspending the execution of the sentence, is a branch of its uniqueness, in recognition that the uniqueness is inseparable from contemporary concepts of criminal policy, and relates to the direct application of a penalty imposed by the legislator in an abstract manner, as are all legal rules, and that its "provision" on the criminal incident in question is contrary to its suitability for all its circumstances and circumstances, and what the judge deems justified for his belief that the convicted person will not return in the future to the violation of the law - whether in view of his age, creation, past, or the nature of the crime he committed, and its circumstances - is based on realistic elements that he examines for their truth, It does not take them away, but observes and evaluates them on pillars of clues and the eyes of the papers, in order to be able to determine, in the light of all of them, their punishment - whether in type or value - and without prejudice to the limits prescribed by law for them, and the implementation of the sentenced punishment, or the order to stop it, which enters into determining its "amount", but that its implementation - not just its type or duration - is the one that achieves the intended pain, to prepare for its application the risk of contacting other offenders who may have been more abusive and more severe criminality, including the fact that the authority to individualize the punishment - and the order to stop it - is the one that It takes it out of its deaf molds, and returns it to a punishment that coexists with the crime and its perpetrator, is inseparable from its reality, and is connected to it by a decision.[3264]

Whereas, the discretionary authority exercised by the judge in the field of individualization of the penalty is included in the order to suspend it as one of its axes based on taking into account the personality of the offender, as the burden of the penalty on the convicted person does not depend only on its type or duration, but also depends on whether the deterrent is achieved by its implementation or by suspending its implementation, when this is the case, and the order to suspend the execution of the fine penalty avoids its defects as it is more insistent on those who are overcome by the delicacy of the situation, and therefore its proportionality regarding a crime in itself to its reality and the condition of the perpetrator must be entrusted to the discretionary authority of the judge who can choose - according to objective grounds - between ordering the implementation of this penalty or suspending its implementation.[3265]

([3263]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 37 of 15 S issued at the session of August 3, 1996, the date of publication of August 15, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([3264]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 120 of 27 S issued at the hearing of March 12, 2006, the publication date of April 5, 2006, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11, page No. 2369, rule No. 378, Case No. 49 of 22 S issued at the hearing of February 3, 2001, the publication date of October 18, 2001, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 857, rule No. 103, Case No. 64 of 19 S, issued at the session of 9 May 1998, the date of publication 21 May 1998, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1315, rule No. 99, case No. 133 of 18 S, issued at the session of 15 November 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 921, rule No. 63, case No. 130 of 18 S, issued at the session of 1 September 1997, the date of publication 11 September 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 839, rule No. 54, Case No. 24 of 18 s issued at the session of July 5, 1997, the date of publication July 19, 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 709, rule No. 47, Case No. 37 of 15 s issued at the session of August 3, 1996, the date of publication August 15, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([3265]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 326 of 23 S. Issued at the session of May 12, 2002, the date of publication is May 25, 2002, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 10, page No. 375, rule No. 59.

Defendants are considered each other's counterparts, whether in their type of crime, motives or background. It is only a violation of the condition of sound legal means, in whose absence it is inconceivable that the right to life, or freedom, has a value that they have to consider.[3266]

The uniqueness of the penalty of the fine - which is more flexible than the uniqueness of the penalty of deprivation of liberty - avoids its disadvantages as it is heavier on the poor than on the rich. The imposition of its proportionality in respect of a crime itself was fair to its reality and the condition of its perpetrator is achieved by multiple means, under which the judge must make a differentiation - according to objective grounds - between ordering its implementation or suspension. Although the contested text permitted this with regard to the prison sentence, it robbed the judge of this same authority with regard to the fine penalty, which is not commensurate with the freedom-restricting punishment in its underestimation of man's destiny and its violation of his humanity, but it is a criminal offence, which means - within the scope of the present dispute - violating the characteristics of the judicial function, and its strength with regard to the crime subject of the criminal lawsuit, estimating the punishment that suits it, as this is a preliminary assumption, a constitutional requirement to preserve the objectivity of its application. A constitutional prerequisite to the proportionate imposition of penalty.

It is not permissible for the state - in the exercise of the power to impose punishment in order to preserve its social system - to undermine the minimum level of those rights in the absence of which the accused is not assured of a fair trial aimed at the effective administration of criminal justice in accordance with its requirements set out in the Constitution.[3267]

The punishment is commensurate with the crime and its perpetrator, in fairness to its reality and the situation of the perpetrator, achieved by multiple means, including those conducted by the judge - in each individual incident - between the order to implement or stop it.[3268]

Whereas it is not permissible for the state - in the field of exercising its authority to impose punishment in order to preserve its social system - to prejudice the minimum right of the accused to a legal trial during which he is assured of the availability of the guarantees stipulated in the Constitution, including the personality of the punishment and its proportionality to the crime and its association with the person of the perpetrator, his intention and the harm resulting from it, until the penalty is received in accordance with what he has done, and the assessment of all these elements was assumed by the judge by virtue of his authority in the field of singling out the punishment, then depriving him of this violates the aforementioned guarantees and leads to the purpose of the penal texts.[3269]

([3266]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 37 of 15 S issued at the session of August 3, 1996, the date of publication of August 15, 1996, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 67, rule No. 3.

([3267]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 49 of 22 S issued at the session of February 3, 2001, date of publication October 18, 2001, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 857, rule No. 103, Case No. 42 of 19 S issued at the session of February 7, 1998, date of publication February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 1087, rule No. 131, Case No. 133 of 18 s issued in the session of 15 November 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 921 rule No. 63, Case No. 130 of 18 s issued in the session of 1 September 1997 date of publication 11 September 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 839 rule No. 54, Case No. 37 of 15 s issued in the session of 3 August 1996 date of publication 15 August 1996 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 67 rule No. 3.

([3268]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 120 of 27 S issued at the session of 12 March 2006, the date of publication 5 April 2006, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11, page No. 2369, rule No. 378, Case No. 64 of 19 S issued at the session of 9 May 1998, the date of publication 21 May 1998, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1315, rule No. 99.

([3269]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 120 of 27 S issued at the session of March 12, 2006, date of publication April 5, 2006, published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 11, page No. 2369, rule No. 378, Case No. 326 of 23 S issued at the session of May 12, 2002, date of publication May 25, 2002, published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 10, page No. 375, rule No. 59, Case No. 133 of 18 S issued at the session of November 15, 1997, published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 8, page No. 921, rule No. 63.

It is decided that the character of the punishment and its proportionality to the crime in question are linked to those who are legally responsible for committing it in the light of a cycle in it and its intentions that I compared and the resulting harm so that the penalty for it is in accordance with his choices in regard to it whenever this is the case and the appreciation of all these elements is within the framework of the essential characteristics of the judicial function. Depriving those who exercise that function of their authority in the field of individualization of punishment in a way that harmonizes the formula in which it was emptied with the requirements of its application in each particular case necessarily means that the penal texts lose their connection with their reality, so that they do not vibrate with life, and their enforcement is only an abstract act that isolates them from their environment as an indication of their cruelty or exceeding the limit of moderation, rigid and crude contrary to the values of truth and justice.[3270]

It was never permissible for penal texts to lose contact with their surroundings in order to ensure the objectivity of their application. Their enforcement is not indicative of their rigid cruelty, contradictory to the values of truth and justice, confirming their anomalies or exceeding the limits of moderation, with which the judge should have the last word on their suspension. His deprivation of this jurisdiction is only an aggression against the judicial function in a way that violates its components.[3271]

24.2 Within the Framework of International Covenants

Punishments may not be imposed on an accused unless he is convicted after a fair trial. Sanctions must conform to international standards, and may not violate their provisions. Prison conditions must respect the inherent dignity of the human person.

24-2-1 Fair Trial Rights - Penalties

The right to a fair trial includes, inter alia, the ways in which sanctions (also called “sanctions” in international law) are determined and which sanctions may be imposed.[3272]

A measure that is not considered a sanction in the national law of a country can be considered a sanction under international law. Associated factors include the way in which this measure is described in national law, its nature and purpose, the procedures related to it and the extent of its severity.[3273]

The penalties provided for by law may be imposed only on defendants who are convicted after fair trials that meet the requirements of international standards of justice.

([3270]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 120 of 27 S issued at the hearing of March 12, 2006, the publication date of April 5, 2006, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11, page No. 2369, rule No. 378, Case No. 49 of 22 S issued at the hearing of February 3, 2001, the publication date of October 18, 2001, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 857, rule No. 103, Case No. 64 of 19 S, issued at the session of 9 May 1998, the date of publication 21 May 1998, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1315, rule No. 99, Case No. 42 of 19 S, issued at the session of 7 February 1998, the date of publication 19 February 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 1087, rule No. 131, Case No. 24 of 18 S, issued at the session of 5 July 1997, the date of publication 19 July 1997, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 Page No. 709 Rule No. 47, Case No. 37 of 15 S. Issued at the session of August 3, 1996, the date of publication is August 15, 1996, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 Page No. 67 Rule No. 3.

([3271]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 42 of 19 S. Issued at the session of February 7, 1998, the date of publication of February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 9, page No. 1087, rule No. 131.

([3272]) T. United Kingdom (24724/ 94), Grand Chamber of the European Court §108 (1999).

([3273]) European Court: Welch v. United Kingdom (17440) / 90), §28 and§32 (1995), Kavkaris v. Cyprus (21906) / 04, Grand Chamber §10 (2008).

For example, detention without a legal basis following the final acquittal of criminal charges, or the completion of the prison term for which he was sentenced, amounts to arbitrary detention.[3274]

Sanctions should be pronounced publicly, unless otherwise permitted by international standards, such as when the accused is a child.[3275]

24-2-2 Penalties that may be imposed

The penalties imposed by the court on the accused, after his conviction, shall be specified by law.

Where the principle of legality - that is, the requirement that the content of the decision be precisely specified in the law and that the law be available to all - applies to penalties.[3276]

Punishment for the offence may only be imposed on the person who has been convicted of it; international standards prohibit the imposition of collective punishments, even in states of emergency.[3277]

This extends to the prohibition of punishing parents for crimes committed by their children.[3278]

The penalties imposed by the court on the accused, following his conviction, must be commensurate with the gravity of the crime and the circumstances of the offender.[3279]

The punishment itself, or the manner in which it is inflicted, shall not violate international standards. Penalties that are disproportionate in severity as well as penalties for acts that should not originally be criminalized are in violation of international standards. Examples include prison sentences for libel and defamation, which human rights bodies and mechanisms and Amnesty International have called for not to be criminalized.[3280]

At the other end of the spectrum, punishments such as those imposed on police officers convicted of torture or other ill-treatment violate international standards equally, since they do

---

([3274]) Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, 47 / UN Doc. A/HRC/16 2011 pp. 8-23 (a); see UN Security Council Resolution 1949, Guinea-Bissau,. §10.

([3275]) Article 40 (2) (vii) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 76 (4) of the Rome Statute; see Article 14 (1) of the International Covenant, Article 8(5) of the American Convention, Article 6(1) of the European Convention, Sections A(3) (j), O(h) and(n) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Article 22 (2) of the Statute of the Rwanda Tribunal, and Article 23 (2) of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal.

([3276]) Kavkaris v. Cyprus (21906/ 04), Grand Chamber of the European Court §140 (2008).

([3277]) Article 7(2) of the African Charter, and Article 5(3) of the American Convention.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 29, §11; Human Rights Committee Concluding Observations: Libya, §20 (2007) UN Doc. CCPR/C/LBY/CO/4; UN Security Council Resolution 65/225, North Korea, §1 (a) (i).

([3278]) General Comment 10 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, §55.

([3279]) See: Rules 3/2, 3/2 and 8/1 of the Tokyo Rules, Article 40 (4) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 7 of the Convention on Enforced Disappearances, Articles 23-26 of the European Convention on Trafficking in Human Beings, and Articles 45-48 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women.

([3280]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment §47 ,34, Concluding Observations, Italy, §19 (2005) UN Doc. CCPR/C/ITA/CO/5; see, e.g., Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, Nicaragua, UN Doc. A/HRC/4/40/Add. 3 §102(2006) (c) (penalties for drug offences).

Special Rapporteur on freedom of expression: 23/2010) UN Doc. A/HRC/14) §81 (2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/4/27, §83; Resolution 169 (2010) of the African Commission; Concluding observations of the Commission on Human Rights: The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, §6 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/MKD/CO/2; Office of the OAS Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression, press release 32/11.

Among other documents, see Amnesty International, Turkey: Decriminalize Dissenting Opinion, Document No.: 2013/001 / EUR 44, p. 14.

not reflect the gravity of the crime committed and may lead to impunity for perpetrators of human rights violations.[3281]

Decisions on gender-sensitive judgments should also be made for the convicted person, taking into account, for example, the stress of exposure to violence on survivors of gender-based violence, the responsibilities of pregnant or breastfeeding women, and the special needs of transgender people.[3282]

Considerations related to the status of migrant workers, including their right to reside and work, should also be taken into account when sanctioning them for crimes committed by themselves or their family members.[3283]

Discrimination in sentencing laws or practices can be reflected in the unfair imbalance in representation rates against certain ethnic minorities or social groups in prisons, in relation to the total number of prisoners, or through lenient penalties in a manner prejudicial to crimes of violence against women, including rape, domestic violence, "honor crimes" and human trafficking.[3284]

Sanctions involving deprivation of liberty should be imposed only to serve an urgent social need, and should be proportionate to that need.[3285]

The time spent by the accused in pre-trial detention should also be taken into account in the issuance of any sentence, whether imprisonment or otherwise, and this period should be calculated and deducted from any prison term imposed on the accused.[3286]

The Inter-American Court concluded that the criminal law that bases its penalties on the “future danger” of the guilty person is inconsistent with the principle of legality.[3287]

Concluding [3281]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Austria, UN Doc §11 (2007) CCPR/C/aut/CO/4, Grenada, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/GRD §15 (2009) CO/1; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: United States of America, 26 § (2006) UN Doc. CAT/C/USA/CO/2; European Court: Duran v. Turkey (42942) / 02), §66 - § 69(2008, Gavgin v. Germany (22978) / 05), Grand Chamber §121 - § 124(2010, Kopylov v. Russia (3933) / 04), §140 - § 142(2010, Inukidze and Guergliani v. Georgia §268- §278 (2011) ,(07/2509); see observations of the Arab Human Rights Committee: Jordan § §10 (2012) and 33; Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances: Colombia, §63- §69 (2006) UN Doc E/CN. 4/2006. Add/1..

([3282]) Rules 57, 58, 61 and 64 of the Bangkok Rules.

Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc §102 (2001) A/66/289; Special Rapporteur on torture, UN Doc. §41 (2008) A/HRC/7/3.

([3283]) Article 19 (2) of the Migrant Workers Convention.

Working [3284]Group on Enforced Disappearances, South Africa, §87 (2005) UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/7/Add. 3; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: New Zealand, 2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/NZL/CO/5) §12; Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Hungary, UN Doc 81 § (1998) A/54/44; Concluding observations of the CEDAW Committee: Canada, UN Doc §33- §34 (2008) CEDAW/C/54/D/473/1991; Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Australia, UN Doc. CERD/C/304/Add. 101 §16 (2000), USA, 18 / §395 (2001) UN Doc. A/56; CERD General Recommendation 31,§34- §37

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Bosnia and Herzegovina, §12 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/BiH/CO/1, Japan, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/JPN §15 (2008) CO/5; Opuz v. Turkey (33401) / 02), European Court (2009) §169- §170 and 199 - 200; see 98/39272) M. C. v Bulgaria), European Court 153 § (2003).

See Article 42 of the Council of Europe Convention on Violence against Women.

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Yemen, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/§12 (2005) CO/84/YEM; see CEDAW Concluding Observations: Lebanon, §27 (2008) UN Doc. CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/3, Jordan, UN Doc . 24- §§23 (2007) CEDAW/C/JOR/CO/4.

([3285]) Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, / UN Doc. E §63 (2005) ‹CN. 4/2006/7..

([3286]) Rule 33 of the European Rules for Pre-Trial Detention, article 78 (2) of the Rome Statute.

Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: South Africa, 22 § (2006) UN Doc. CAT/C/ZAF/CO/1; Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, §72- §74 (2005) ,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/7/Add. 3 and 87, §96 (2000) ,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2001/14.

([3287]) Fermín Ramírez v. Guatemala, Inter-American Court 96 § (2005).

There is a growing consensus on the importance of alternatives to imprisonment. The Tokyo Principles, adopted by the UN General Assembly in 1990, reinforce the trend towards the use of non-custodial punitive measures. Recommendations for appropriately and proportionately adjudicating non-custodial measures focused in particular on non-criminal misdemeanors, for pregnant women, indigenous people, and in order to alleviate prison overcrowding.[3288]

It should also be considered for people who support minor children.[3289]

24-2-3 Retroactive application of lighter penalties

The penalty imposed by the courts may not be more severe than the penalty stipulated by law at the time of the commission of the crime.[3290]

However, if the penalty is commuted in a legislative amendment subsequent to the time of its commission, the state must retroactively commute the sentences issued under the old penalty.[3291]

The right to apply the lighter penalty retroactively is implicitly guaranteed in Article 7 of the European Convention.[3292]

The lighter penalty should be applied to any offence:

If the law changes before the final judgment is pronounced, or before the expiry of the sentence, according to the standards of the African Commission; or.[3293]

If the accused has been sentenced to a penalty that cannot be reversed, such as the death penalty, the maximum penalty, or life imprisonment.[3294]

The right to benefit from the lighter penalty applies where the criminal laws that punish an act or omission are repealed.[3295]

24.2.4 Prohibition of Sanctions Violation of International Standards

The sanction shall not violate itself or the manner in which it signifies international standards.

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is absolutely prohibited.[3296]

([3288]) See Resolution 65/230 of the United Nations General Assembly, §51.
Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Tajikistan, UN Doc. §14 (2004) CCPR/C/CO/84/TJK Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Poland, / UN Doc. CCPR/C §17 (2010) Pol/CO/6, Croatia, 2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/HRV/CO/2) §13; CERD General Recommendation 31, §36; Orchowski v. Poland (17885) / 04), EC 153 § (2009).

([3289]) The Tokyo Rules, Rules 64, 57-58 and 60-63 of the Bangkok Rules, Article 10 (2) of ILO Convention 169, Guideline 37 of the Robben Island Guidelines, and Section (9) (e) (1-2) of the Fair Trial Principles in Africa.
Resolution 65/229 of the United Nations General Assembly, §9, Resolution 65/213, §11; Resolution 10/2 of the Human Rights Council, §13; General Report 11 of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture:. CPT/Inf2001(16، §28.
Eser [3290]Wazirik v. Turkey (29295/ 95 and 29363/ 95), European Court §31- §37 (2001).

([3291]) Article 11 of the Universal Declaration, Article 15 (1) of the International Covenant, Article 19 (1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 9 of the American Convention, Article 15 of the Arab Charter, Article 7(1) of the European Convention, Section n(7) (a) - (b) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Article 24 (2) of the Rome Statute; see Article 7(2) of the African Charter.

([3292]) Scopola v. Italy (No. 2) (10249) / 03), Grand Chamber of the European Court §109 (2009).

([3293]) Section N(7) (b) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

([3294]) M. Nowak, The United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: A Commentary on the International Covenant, 2nd Revised Edition, Engel 2005 20 § - §19 pp. 366 - p. 367.
Cochet [3295]v. France, Commission on Human Rights, / UN Doc. CCPR . 4/7-3/ §7 (2010) 2008/C/100/D/1760.

([3296]) Article 5 of the Universal Declaration, Article 7 of the International Covenant, the Convention against Torture, Article 5 of the African Charter, Article 5(2) of the American Convention, Article 8 of the Arab Charter, Article 3 of the European

However, the definition of torture in Article 1 of the Convention against Torture explicitly excludes pain and suffering caused by legal penalties or necessarily accompanying them - those punishments that are legitimate under national law and are also consistent with the provisions of international law.[3297]

Although a sanction may be lawful under national law, it becomes a prohibited sanction if it violates international standards, including the absolute prohibition of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Any other interpretation would nullify the purpose of the prohibition imposed by international standards.[3298]

Sanctions deemed to violate international standards include all forms of corporal punishment, exile, and imprisonment for inability to repay a debt.[3299]

The re-education through labor system, used in China, has been classified among the sanctions that violate international standards.[3300]

Additional penalties such as expelling foreign nationals from the country following their conviction or depriving prisoners of voting rights must be consistent with international standards.[3301]

The Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism has raised concerns about subjecting persons to probation following the completion of their sentence, since this additional punishment can mean that a convicted person is punished for the same offence twice.[3302]

24.2.5 Corporal Punishment

Corporal punishments, which include whipping, beating with bamboo sticks or with a whip, amputation of limbs and marking, are prohibited under international law, as they violate the absolute prohibition on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[3303]

Convention, Articles 2-3 of the Declaration against Torture, Principle 6 of the Set of Principles, and Article 26 of the American Declaration.

([3297]) Special Rapporteur on Torture, 7/1997 / 1997) UN Doc. E/CN. 4) §26- §28 (2005) UN Doc. A/60/316، §8..

[3298]See Special Rapporteur on Torture, 17/1988 / UN Doc. E/CN. 4 Rodley and (1992) 593§ ؛ UN Doc. E/CN. 4/1993/26 ,44- § §42 (1988) Pollard, Treatment of Prisoners under International Law, 3rd Edition, Oxford 2009 ,University Press.

([3299]) Human Rights Committee, General Comment 20, Osborne v. Jamaica, 1/ § §9 (2000) UN Doc. CCPR/C/68/D/759/1997 and 11; Special Rapporteur on Torture, Nigeria, §56- §60 (2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/7/3/Add. 4.

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Monaco, UN Doc. §12 (2008) CCPR/C/MCO/CO/2, Greece, / UN Doc. CCPR. §13 (2005) CO/83/GRC.

Special [3300]Rapporteur on Torture, UN Doc. A/HRC/13. 39/Add. 5. §71 (2010).

Concluding [3301]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Italy, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/§18 (2005) ITA/CO/5; Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: United States of America, 2008) UN Doc. CERD/C/USA/CO/6) §27; Human Rights Committee General Comment 25, §14; Hurst v. United Kingdom (74025) / 01), Grand Chamber of the European Court §72- § 85(2005); see Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: United States of America, §35 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/USA/CO/3/Rev. 1; Scopola v. Italy (No. 3) (126) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §103- §110 (2012).

([3302]) Special Rapporteur on Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism, Australia,. §40 (2006) UN Doc. A/HRC/4/26/Add. 3.

([3303]) See: Article 1 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas; see Rule 31 of the Standard Minimum Rules, and Rule 3/60 of the European Prison Rules

Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Sudan, UN Doc §9 (1997) CCPR/C/79/Add. 85; Special Rapporteur on Torture, Nigeria, §56 (2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/7/3/Add. 4; Iraq, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/79 Add. 84, HRC 12 § (1997); Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Saudi Arabia, 5/ UN Doc. CAT/C/CR/28 §4 (2002) (b).

Human Rights Committee: General Comment § 5,20; Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Sudan, 1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 85) §9; Iraq, §12 (1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 84; Libya, UN Doc §16 (2007) CCPR/C/LBY/CO/4, Tanzania, UN Doc. CCPR/C/TZA/CO/4 §16 (2009), Botswana, §19 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/BWA/CO/1, Osborne v. Jamaica, 1997/1/ § §9 (2000) UN Doc. CCPR/C/68/D/759 and 11, Suklal v. Trinidad, 2000/2001) UN Doc. CCPR/C/73/D/928) 6/ §4; Special Rapporteur on Torture, 316/2005) UN Doc. A/60) UN Doc. ،60- §§56 (2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/7/3/Add. 4 ،28- §§18 §6 (1997) E/CN. 4/1997/7; African Commission: Doppler v. Sudan §42 (2003)

24-2-6 Life imprisonment without opportunity for parole

The European Court emphasized that any sentence of life imprisonment should, in order to be consistent with the European Convention, leave open the possibility of its review by the authorities, and the chance that the prisoner will one day be released. Reviews should take place periodically and consider the appropriateness of commutation of sentence, discharge, suspension of sentence or conditional release of the prisoner, in the light of his progress towards rehabilitation. This is because the continued imprisonment of a person without the possibility of release, when his continued imprisonment is no longer justified for punitive reasons, is incompatible with article 3 of the European Convention.[3304]

While the Rome Statute provides for life imprisonment, on the other hand, it stipulates that such provisions must be reviewed by the Court after 25 years to decide whether the period should be reduced.[3305]

The imposition of a sentence of life imprisonment without the opportunity of a conditional pardon on individuals under the age of 18 at the time of the commission of the offence is prohibited.

Amnesty International opposes the imposition of life sentences without the possibility of a conditional pardon because it is inconsistent with the prohibition on cruel, inhuman or degrading punishments and with the principle that incarceration should include, among its purposes, the social rehabilitation of the prisoner.

Mandatory life sentences without conditional pardon means depriving the person sentenced to them of having their particular case and circumstances taken into account.

24-2-7 Sentences of Indefinite Imprisonment

Sentences to indefinite imprisonment include a punitive component (a fixed prison term, sometimes called a "tariff") and a preventive component aimed at ensuring the safety of the public. In some countries, such provisions are referred to as preventive detention and protective provisions.

While indefinite imprisonment, as such, was not considered a violation of the International Covenant or the European Convention, the Human Rights Committee and the European Court have emphasized that:

The tariff must be determined by an independent court (an independent body from all parties and from the executive authority);[3306].

The preventive component should be justified for unavoidable reasons and should remain subject to regular review by a judicial body with the power to order release upon expiry of the tariff period;[3307].

,(2000/236), Concluding Observations: Botswana 31 § (2010); César v. Trinidad and Tobago, Inter-American Court 70 § (2005); Tarer v. United Kingdom (5856) / 72), European Court §37 - § 39(1978); see, UN General Assembly Resolution 65/226: Iran 4 § (2010) (a) and(d).

([3304]) Venter et al. v. United Kingdom (66069) / 09 , 130/10, 3896/10) Grand Chamber of the European Court §103- §122 (2013); see, Council of Europe Recommendation 22 (2003)REC, §4(a); CPT: Malta, 5(2011)CPT/Inf §121; CPT: Actual/Real Life Sentences (2007) CPT (2007) 55.

([3305]) Articles 77 (1) (b) and 110 (3) of the Rome Statute.

([3306]) T. v. United Kingdom (24724/ 94), Grand Chamber of the European Court §109- §113 (1999).

Human [3307]Rights Committee: Rameka et al. v. New Zealand, UN Doc 4/7-3/ §7 (2003) CCPR/C/79/D/1090/2002; Dean v. New Zealand, UN Doc 4/7-3/ §7 (2009) CCPR/C/95/D/1512/2006; Grand Chamber of the European Court: T. United Kingdom (24724/ 94), Grand Chamber of the European Court §118 (1999), Stafford v. United Kingdom (46295/ 99), §87- §90 (2002).

It has been found that orders for the continuous detention of persons based on their risk (especially in psychiatric institutions after the detainee has completed the prescribed period, for example for persons convicted of sexual violence) constitute a violation of the right to liberty.[3308]

24-2-8 Conditions in prisons

International standards require that prisoners be guaranteed their human rights, except for the proportionate restrictions imposed by law and necessitated by the necessity of depriving them of their liberty.[3309]

The treatment of prisoners and prison conditions and systems shall respect and protect the rights of individuals in custody.

International standards have set out guiding principles for the treatment of prisoners. It requires prison systems to respect the human rights of prisoners, to impose restrictions only those necessitated by the necessities of imprisonment, and not to aggravate the suffering implied by deprivation of liberty per se.[3310]

It also requires that the prison system reduce to a minimum the differences between prison life and life in freedom.[3311]

The treatment of prisoners shall be aimed at their rehabilitation and reintegration into the wider society.[3312]

It is not permissible to prejudice the duty of the state even if it contracts with the private sector to assume responsibility for the management of penal institutions.[3313]

At a minimum, the conditions in which convicts are imprisoned must be consistent with international human rights standards.[3314]

It is the duty of States to treat imprisoned persons humanely and to respect the inherent dignity of the human person without discrimination, regardless of the extent of available material resources.[3315]

It also prohibits torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[3316]

Vardon [3308]v. Australia, Human Rights Commission, / UN Doc. CCPR 4/7-3/ §7 (2010) C/98/D/1629/2007; M. Germany (19359/ 04), European Court §92- § 105(2009); see Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: France, §16 (2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/FRA/CO/4.

([3309]) Rule 5 of the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, Principle 8 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and Rule 2 of the European Prison Rules.

([3310]) Rule 57 of the Standard Minimum Rules, and rule 102 (2) of the European Prison Rules.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 21,§2- § 3.

([3311]) Rule 60 of the Standard Minimum Rules; see article 106 of the Rome Statute.

([3312]) Article 10 (3) of the International Covenant, Article 17 (4) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 5(6) of the American Convention, Article 20 (3) of the Arab Charter, Rules 58 and 65 of the Standard Minimum Rules, Sections n(9) (a) and(e) (5) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Rule 6 of the European Prison Rules.

Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, Nicaragua, UN Doc §102 (2006) A/HRC/4/40/Add. 3 (c)..

Concluding [3313]observations of the Human Rights Committee: New Zealand, UN Doc §11 (2010) CCPR/C/NZL/CO/5; General Comment 2 of the Committee against Torture, §17; see Cabal and Pasini Bertrand v. Australia, Human Rights Committee, . 2/ §7 (2003) UN Doc. CCPR/C/78/D/1020/2001.

([3314]) Guideline 33 of the Robben Island Guidelines..

([3315]) General Comment 21 of the Committee against Torture, §4; European Court: Diabiko v. Albania (41153) / 06), 50 § (2007), Mamedova v. Russia §63 (2006) ,(05/7064).

([3316]) Article 5 of the Universal Declaration, Articles 7 and 10 of the International Covenant, Article 17 (1) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Articles 2 and 16 of the Convention against Torture, Article 5 of the African Charter, Article 5(2) of the American Convention, Articles 8 and 20 (1) of the Arab Charter, Article 3 of the European Convention, Section M(7) (a) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Principle 1 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and Rules 1/5 and 102 of the European Prison Rules.

Based on the fact that imprisoned persons are in the custody of the State, the State is responsible for their physical and psychological integrity. They shall be provided with adequate food, water, medical care and attention (including necessary treatment), as well as conditions of hygiene, health, shelter and appropriate accommodation.[3317]

Prisoners should be allowed to spend sufficient hours outside open-air cells and given the opportunity to participate in meaningful activities.[3318]

The prison system should also take into account and respect the cultural norms and religious rites of prisoners.[3319]

The Human Rights Committee has concluded that preventing a Muslim prisoner from growing a beard and practicing his religion has been elevated to the level of violating his right to freedom of thought, conscience and religious belief.[3320]

International standards require the authorities to detain convicted prisoners in a separate place from those arrested pending judicial proceedings, and to detain convicted children in separate places from adults, unless this is against the best interest of the child.[3321]

Residence should be separated between men and women who are imprisoned.[3322]

Male guards should not be assigned to supervise places adjacent to women's prisons;)[3323]

Prisoners should in no way be assigned to guard other prisoners.[3324]

States should also take appropriate measures to protect the rights of LGBTI women, men, transgender and intersex persons sentenced to[3325] imprisonment.

International standards restrict the use of force and handcuffs such as handcuffs, handcuffs and chains.

Instruments should not, in any way, be used as a form of punishment.[3326]

International standards further restrict the use of solitary confinement, which can amount to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[3327]

([3317]Malawi African Society et al. v. Mauritania (54) / 91, 61/91, 98/93, 167/97 to 196/97 and 210/98), African Commission, Annual Report 13 122 § (2000); Kurbanov v. Tajikistan, Commission on Human Rights, 8/ §7 (2003) UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/D/1096/2002; European Court: Dybeku v. Albania (41153/ 06), 41 § (2007), Hamatov v. Azerbaijan (03/9852 and 13413/ 04), § 104- §122 (2007) (..

[3318]See also Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: United States of America, §32 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/USA/CO/3/Rev. 1; see, CPT Report 10,CPT/Inf2000 (13, §25.

([3319]) General recommendation 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, §5 and§38 (a).

Bodo [3320]v. Trinidad and Tobago, Human Rights Commission, UN Doc . 6/ §6 (2002) CCPR/C/74/D/721/1996.

([3321]) Among others, article 10 (2) of the International Covenant, article 37 (c) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, article 17 (2) of the Migrant Workers Convention, articles 5(4) and 5 (5) of the American Convention, articles 20 (2) and 17 of the Arab Charter, principle 19 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and rule 8/18 of the European Prison Rules.

([3322]) Among others, Section M(7) (c) of the Principles for a Fair Trial in Africa, Principle 19 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and Rule 8/18 of the European Prison Rules.

Concluding observations (of the Human Rights Committee) of the Committee against Torture: Cameroon, §21 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/CMR/CO/4.

([3323]) See Principle 20 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas.

Concluding observations of the CEDAW Committee: Canada, / UN Doc. CEDAW/C/CAN . 34- §§33 (2008) CO/7.

([3324]) Concluding observations of the African Commission: Benin, 30 § (2009).

Special [3325]Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, UN Doc §81- §82 (2001) A/6/289 and 102; see Supplement to Recommendation 5 (CM/Rec, 2010) of the Council of Europe, I (A) (4) §; Principle 9 of the Yogyakarta Principles.

Rule [3326]33 of the Standard Minimum Rules, Second General Report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, (3) §53 ,CPT/Inf 92.

The Special Rapporteur on torture has called for the prohibition of solitary confinement as a judicial punishment following conviction.[3328]

Concerns have been raised about tight security systems in prisons and conditions in prisons with high security measures that include isolation and denial of human contact, which can amount to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[3329]

Prisoners should be allowed to receive visits and communicate with their families, in line with respect for the right to private and family life and should be provided with a window to the outside world.[3330]

The only basis for restrictions should be the maintenance of security and the control of resources.[3331]

Decisions made in the location where a person is imprisoned should take into account their rights to private and family life, and to contact their lawyer.[3332]

Foreign nationals who are imprisoned also have the right to be provided with facilities allowing them to communicate with and receive visits from representatives of the governments of their countries, and this must be arranged for them. If they are refugees or are under the protection of an intergovernmental organization, they have the right to contact and receive visits from representatives of that organization or of the State in which they reside. The authorities must inform them of this right. If a national of a foreign state requests the authorities to contact such personnel, the authorities should respond to his or her request without delay. However, it should only do so at his request.[3333]

Given the protection that such communications can add to prisoners' protection, Amnesty International is of the view that such forms of communication should be ensured to individuals who are nationals of both the custodial state and the foreign state. If the person has the nationality of two or more foreign countries, he should have the right to communicate and communicate with the representatives of each of these countries, and to receive visits from them, if he so chooses, and should be provided with facilities for this purpose.

Overcrowded prisons can cause conditions that violate international standards and the rights of prisoners.[3334]

Concluding [3327]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Japan, / UN Doc. CCPR/C §21 (2008) JPN/CO/5; see also Polay Campos v. Peru, Human Rights Committee, 1994/7/8-6/ §8 (1997) UN Doc. CCPR/C/61/D/577; Castillo Petruzzi et al. v. Peru (52) / 1999), Inter-American Court (1999) . 199- §§189.

Special [3328]Rapporteur on Torture, 268 / §84 (2001) UN Doc. A/66; see Report 21 of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 28) §56 ,CPT/Inf2001 (a).

([3329]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: United States of America, §36 (2006) ,UN Doc. CAT/C/USA/CO/2, Hungary. UN Doc §18 (2006) ‹CAT/C/HUN/CO/4..

([3330]) Recommendation 12 (2010) Rec of the Council of Europe, Annex §22.

Second [3331]General Report of the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, 3) §51 ,CPT/Inf92; Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Israel, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/ISR. §21 (2010) CO/3.

([3332]) Article 17/5 of the Migrant Workers Convention, Rules 4 and 43 of the Bangkok Rules, Rules 37 and 79 of the Standard Minimum Rules, and Rules 17 and 24 of the European Prison Rules.

See Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism: Spain, §20 (2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/10/3/Add. 2..

([3333]) Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, rule 38 of the Standard Minimum Rules, rule 2(1) of the Bangkok Rules, article 10 of the Declaration on Non-Citizens, principle 5 of the Principles on Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas, and rule 37 of the European Prison Rules; see article 17 (2) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearances.

Recommendation 12) Rec)2010 of the Council of Europe, Annex 4/1 §24 - §25.

[3334]See Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Argentina, §17 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/ARG/CO/4; see Kalashnikov v. Russia (99/47095), ECtHR §92- § 103(2002); CPT General Report 7, 10) §12- §13 ,CPT/Inf97.

Prisoners should be informed of their rights under the law and of the rules of the institution in which they are placed immediately upon admission, as well as of the mechanisms for lodging complaints, including about their situation and the treatment they receive. They should have access to legal assistance to make complaints; requests regarding their treatment and conditions; when facing a serious disciplinary charge; as well as to help them apply for pardon and parole, and during court hearings.[3335]

24-2-9 Capital Punishment

Amnesty International opposes the death penalty in all circumstances, as it represents the height of cruel, inhuman or degrading punishments, and a violation of the right to life. International human rights standards guarantee persons accused of capital offences the right to the highest degree of strict adherence to all fair trial guarantees and certain additional guarantees. However, these additional safeguards are no justification for retaining the death penalty.

First: Abolition of the Death Penalty

Amnesty International opposes the death penalty in all circumstances, as the height of cruel, inhuman or degrading punishments, and represents a violation of the right to life. International standards, jurisprudence and decisions of the international community increasingly reflect this view. Arbitrary deprivation of life is absolutely prohibited, at all times and under all circumstances.[3336] as well as torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[3337]

States are prohibited from limiting or derogating from their treaty obligations to respect these rights.[3338]

These prohibitions are the embodiment of the rules of customary international law and may not be derogated from in any way.[3339]

The imposition of the death penalty following an unfair trial constitutes a violation of the right to life and of the prohibition of inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[3340]

Some international human rights treaties require the abolition of the death penalty, in peacetime, or at all times.[3341]

Other international standards encourage the progressive restriction of punishment and its eventual abolition.[3342]

([3335]) Guideline 47§6 (c) of the Principles of Legal Aid.

([3336]) Article 6 of the International Covenant, article 4 of the African Charter, and article 4 of the American Convention; see article 3 of the American Declaration, and article 6 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions: §14 ,2012 ,UN Doc. A/67/275.

([3337]) Among other criteria, Article 5 of the Universal Declaration, Article 7 of the International Covenant, Article 5 of the African Charter, Article 5 of the American Convention, Article 8 of the Arab Charter, and Article 3 of the European Convention.

([3338]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (2) of the European Convention.

([3339]) General comment 24 of the Human Rights Committee, §8; see, Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, 275/2012 ,UN Doc. A/67, §11; General Comment 2 of the Committee against Torture, §1.

([3340]) Öcalan v. Turkey (46221) / 99), Grand Chamber of the European Court. 169- §§166 (2005).

([3341]) The Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant, the Protocol to the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights to Abolish the Death Penalty, Protocol 6 and Protocol 13 to the European Convention.

([3342]) Article 6(2) and(6) of the International Covenant; see Article 4(2) and(3) of the American Convention.

See Resolution 65/206 of the United Nations General Assembly, §3 (c); Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: United States of America,. §29 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/USA/CO/3/Rev. 1.

States parties to treaties aiming at the abolition of the death penalty are prohibited from extraditing, deporting or forcibly transferring a person to the jurisdiction of a State for the purpose of prosecution, if there are substantial grounds for believing that there is a real risk that he or she will face the death penalty.

This includes States parties to the protocols listed in section A in the footnote, all States parties to the European Convention, and parties to the International Covenant that have abolished the death penalty.[3343]

All States should refuse requests for the extradition of anyone at risk of the death penalty, in the absence of credible, effective and binding assurances that the death penalty will not be sought or applied against them.[3344]

The international community, regional non-governmental organizations, courts, experts and United Nations bodies, including the African Commission, encourage the abolition of the death penalty.[3345]

States that have not yet abolished the death penalty have called for a moratorium on executions as a first step towards this end.[3346]

International criminal tribunals established by the international community may not impose the death penalty, although the jurisdiction of these tribunals includes the most heinous crimes, including genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes.[3347]

The Council of Europe has made the abolition of the death penalty a condition of its membership and organizes campaigns worldwide for the abolition of the death penalty.[3348]

In 2010, the European Court noted that the death penalty could be considered inhuman and degrading treatment and concluded that Article 2 of the European Convention (Right to life) had been amended with a view to outlawing the death penalty.[3349]

The American Convention expressly prohibits the reintroduction of the death penalty after its[3350] abolition.

([3343]) Al-Qadi v. Canada, Human Rights Commission, / UN Doc. CCPR 6/ §10 (2002) C/78/D/829/1998; Al-Saadoun and Mufdhi v. United Kingdom (61498) / 08), European Court §115- § 145(2010) and 160-166; Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions, UN Doc . 75- §§74 (2010) A/67/275.

([3344]) Article 9 of the Inter-American Convention on Extradition; see Article 11 of the European Convention on Extradition, Article 4(3) of the Protocol amending the European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism, Article 21 of the European Convention on the Prevention of Terrorism, and Article 16 of the Council of Europe Convention on Illicit Traffic by Sea.
OHCHR Resolution 2005/59, §10.

United [3345]Nations General Assembly: Resolution 32 / §1 ,61, Resolution 67/176, § §1, 3 and 4-6; Resolution 2005/59 of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, §5 (a); Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Chad, 2009 (UN Doc. CCPR/C/TCD/CO/1) §19, Cameroon, §14 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/CAM/CO/4, Russian Federation, §12 (2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/RUS/CO/6; see Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion §57 (1983) 83/OC-3, Da Costa Cadogan v. Barbados, 49 § (2009); African Commission: Resolution 136, 3 § (2008), International Rights and Others v. Botswana (240) / 2001), 52 § (2003); Council of Europe Fact Sheet on the Death Penalty (2007).

([3346]) Section N(9) (d) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.
United Nations General Assembly: Resolution 67 / §4 ,176 (e), Resolution §3 , 206/65 (d), Resolution 62 / §2 149 (d); Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights: Resolution §5 ,59/2005 (a), Resolution 1997 / §5 ,12; African Commission: Resolution §2 ,136, International Rights Organization et al. v. Botswana (240) / 2001), 52 § (2003); Concluding Observations: Uganda, Third Periodic Report (. §V)h(،(2009.

UN [3347]Security Council: Resolution 827 (1993), Resolution 955 (1994); see UN Secretary-General, 616 / §64 (2004) UN Doc. S/2004d.

Council [3348]of Europe Fact Sheet on the Death Penalty (2007).

([3349]) Al-Saadoun and Mufdhi v. United Kingdom (61498) / 08), European Court § §115 (2010) and 120; see Special Rapporteur on Torture, . 6- §§5 (2012) UN Doc. A/67/279.

([3350]) Article 4(3) of the American Convention.

The Special Rapporteurs on extrajudicial executions and on torture consider them to be in violation of the provisions of the International Covenant.[3351]

The United Nations General Assembly also called on States that have abolished the penalty not to re-impose it.[3352]

The American Convention also explicitly prohibits the expansion of the scope of the death[3353] penalty.

The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions considers this contrary to the purposes of article 6 of the International Covenant.[3354]

The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee and the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions have called on States that apply the death penalty not to expand its application.[3355]

The circumstances in which the death penalty can be applied in States that still apply it remain extremely restrictive. The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions has stressed that "extrajudicial executions carried out outside these borders are unlawful killings".[3356]

Second: Prohibition of the mandatory death penalty

Mandatory imposition of the death penalty is prohibited, even for the most serious crimes.[3357]

Mandatory death sentences negate the ability of courts to consider relevant evidence and circumstances that could mitigate punishment when sentencing a person convicted of a criminal offence. It prevents the court from taking into account the different degrees of moral responsibility. The human rights treaty monitoring bodies, experts and the Inter-American Court have noted that such sentences also make it inevitable to sentence people to death even though the punishment is disproportionate to the circumstances of the crime; this is inconsistent with the right to life. What is required is that sentencing be built on an individual basis to prevent arbitrary deprivation of life.[3358]

There is nothing to alleviate the illegality of the mandatory death penalty: there is no possibility that the charge will be reduced from a mandatory death penalty to a lighter penalty (from murder

---

Special [3351]Rapporteur on Torture, 279 / §76 (2012) UN Doc. A/67, USA, 1998) ,UN Doc. E/CN4. /1998/68/Add. 3) §19; Special Rapporteur on Torture, 44/2009) UN Doc. A/HRC/10). §30.

([3352]) Resolution 67/176 of the United Nations General Assembly, §5.

([3353]) Article 4(2) of the American Convention.

See Advisory Opinion 83 / OC-3, Inter-American Court,. §67- §76.

([3354]) Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, United States of America, 1998) UN Doc. E/CN. 4/1998/68/Add. 3) §19; see Preliminary Observations of the Commission on Human Rights: Peru, UN Doc. §15 (1996) CCPR/C/79/Add. 67.

Resolution [3355]2005/59 of the Commission on Human Rights, §5 (b); Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Central African Republic, UN Doc §13 (2006) CCPR/C/CAF/CO/2; Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, United States of America, UN Doc §156 (1998) E/CN. 4/1998/68/Add. 3 (d).

([3356]) Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions,. §50 (2010) UN Doc. A/HRC/14/24.

Special [3357]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions: §51 (2010) UN Doc. A/HRC/14/24 (d), 20/2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/4) 56- § §55; Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Botswana, UN Doc §13 (2008) CCPR/C/BWA/CO/1; Special Rapporteur on Torture,. §59 (2012) UN Doc. A/67/279.

Special [3358]Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions, UN Doc. A/HRC/4/20 ،64- §§63 (2004) UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2005/7 §55- §66 (2007); Commission on Human Rights: Thompson v. Saint Vincent, 2/ §8 (2000) UN Doc. CCPR/C/70/D/806/1998, Kennedy v. Trinidad and Tobago, 1998/3/ §7 (2002) UN Doc. CCPR/C/74/D/845, Carpo et al. v. Philippines, 2002/3/ §8 (2003) UN Doc. CCPR/C/77/D/1077, Larrañaga v. Philippines, 2005/2 / §7 (2006) UN Doc. CCPR/C/87/D/1421, Mwamba v. Zambia, 2006/3 / §6 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/98/D/1520; Inter-American Court: Hilaire, Constantin, Benjamin et al. v. Trinidad and Tobago, §84- § 109(2002); Boyce et al. v. Barbados, (- §47 (2007) 63; Raxcaco-Reyes v. Guatemala, §73- § 82(2005); Jacob v. Grenada (12). 158), U.S. Commission §70- §71(2002).

to manslaughter, for example), and there is no procedure for seeking and granting mercy, which can correct the illegality of this penalty.[3359]

Third: The penalty may not be applied retroactively with the right to benefit from legislative reforms

The death penalty may only be imposed for the most serious crimes, per the legislation in force at the time of the commission of the crime.[3360]

This is consistent with the prohibition of imposing a heavier penalty than the penalty applicable in law at the time of the commission of the crime.[3361]

Moreover, a person accused or convicted of a major crime must benefit from amendments to laws that impose a lighter penalty for that crime following his indictment or conviction.[3362]

When the death penalty is abolished, all death sentences shall be commuted. The new provisions must respect international standards and should take into account the period of time spent on death row by the convicted person.[3363]

Fourth: Scope of Crimes Punished by Death

The death penalty may only be imposed for the most serious crimes.[3364]

The Human Rights Committee considers that “the phrase 'most serious crimes' should be understood in the strict sense that the death penalty should be a very exceptional measure”.[3365]

Under the death penalty safeguards, crimes punishable by death should not exceed “intentional crimes with lethal or other extremely grave consequences”.[3366]

Based on an extensive study of the jurisprudence of United Nations bodies, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions clarified, in 2007, that the phrase "the most serious crimes" should be understood to mean limiting the crimes punishable by death to those that have the intent to kill, and lead to loss of life.[3367]

In 2012, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions reiterated that "the death penalty may only be imposed for murder...".[3368]

Concerns continue to be raised about laws leading to the imposition of the death penalty for crimes not covered by the description of the "most serious".[3369]

([3359]) Inter-American Court: Boyce et al. v. Barbados, (2007) 60- § §59, DaCosta Cadogan v. Barbados, 57 § (2009); Thompson v. St. Vincent, Commission on Human Rights, 1998 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/70/D/806 . 2/ §8 (2000).

([3360]) Article 6(2) of the International Covenant, Article 7(2) of the African Charter, Article 4(2) of the American Convention, Article 6 of the Arab Charter, Article 2(1) of the American Convention, Paragraph 2 of the Death Penalty Safeguards, and Section N(9) (b) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

([3361]) Article 11 (2) of the Universal Declaration, Article 15 (1) of the International Covenant, Article 9 of the American Convention, Article 15 of the Arab Charter, Article 7 of the European Convention, and Section N(7) (a) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa; see Article 7 of the African Charter.

Paragraph [3362]2 of the death penalty safeguards; see article 15 (1) of the International Covenant, article 9 of the American Convention, article 15 of the Arab Charter, and section n(7) (b) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Scopola v. Italy (No. 2) (10249) / 03), Grand Chamber of the European Court §109 (2009).

Concluding [3363]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Rwanda, UN Doc §14 (2009) CCPR/C/RWA/CO/3, Tunisia, UN Doc. CCPR/C/TUN/CO/5. §14 (2008).

([3364]) Article 6(2) of the International Covenant, Article 4(2) of the American Convention, Article 6 of the Arab Charter, Paragraph 1 of the Death Penalty Safeguards, and Section N(9) (b) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

([3365]) General Comment 6 of the Human Rights Committee, §7.

([3366]) Paragraph 1 of the death penalty safeguards.

Special [3367]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, § §53 (2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/4/20 and 65.

([3368]) Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions,. §67 (2012) UN Doc. A/67/275.

Such as burglary with the use of violence.[3370]

kidnapping and abduction;[3371]

and economic crimes such as bribery;[3372]

and drug-related offenses;[3373]

Crimes related to consensual sexual activities;[3374]

and another related to religion;[3375]

and political crimes such as treason and membership of political groups.[3376]

The American Convention explicitly prohibits the imposition of the death penalty for political crimes or related crimes of public affairs.[3377]

Fifth: Categories of persons who may not be executed

International standards restrict the imposition of the death penalty on persons belonging to particular groups.

The American Committee clarified that the American Convention requires a procedure that allows the accused to make interventions on the prohibition of the death penalty in his case, and on any extenuating circumstances in it. The sentencing court must have the discretion to consider these factors when deciding whether to impose the death penalty or another more appropriate penalty.[3378]

1. Juveniles under the age of 18

The death penalty may not be imposed on persons who were not yet eighteen years of age at the time of their commission of the crime, not to mention that they may not be executed, regardless of their age at the time of their trial or sentence.[3379]

If there is doubt about whether a person is under the age of 18, they should be presumed to be a child, unless the allegation proves otherwise.[3380]

([3369]) United Nations Secretary-General, 29/2012) UN Doc. A/HRC/21) 30- § §24; Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions,. §51 (2007) UN Doc. A/HRC/4/20.

([3370]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Kenya,. §10 (2012) UN Doc. CCPR/C/KEN/CO/3)AV.

([3371]) Raxcaco-Reyes v. Guatemala, Inter-American Court, (2005) §71- §72.

Special [3372]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §556 UN Doc. E/CN. 4/1996/4; Special Rapporteur on Torture, China, §82 (2006) UN Doc. A/CN. 4/2006/6/Add. 6 (r); Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Madagascar, 2007) ,UN Doc. CCPR/C/MDG/CO/3). §15.

Concluding [3373]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Thailand, / UN Doc. CCPR §13 (2005) ,CO/84/tha; Special Rapporteur on Torture, UN Doc. §66 (2009) A/HRC/10/44.

Concluding [3374]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Sudan, UN Doc §8 (1997) ,CCPR/C/79/Add. 85, Islamic Republic of Iran, §8 (1993) ,UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 25; Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, Nigeria, UN Doc. A/HRC/8/3/Add. 3 §76 - §77 (2008).

([3375]) The Secretary-General of the United Nations, §19, §28- §29 and§30 (2012) UN Doc. A/HRC/21.

([3376]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: United Kingdom (Turks and Caicos Islands), §37 (2001) ,UN Doc. CCPR/CO/73/UKOT, Libya,. §24 (2007) UN Doc. CCPR/C/LIB/CO/4.

([3377]) Article 4(4) of the American Convention.

([3378]) Jacob v. Grenada (12). 158), U.S. Commission §70- § 71(2002).

([3379]) Article 6(5) of the International Covenant, Article 37 (a) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 5(3) of the African Charter on the Rights of the Child, Article 4(5) of the American Convention, Rule 2/17 of the Beijing Rules, Paragraph 3 of the Death Penalty Safeguards, Article 68 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, Article 77 (5) of Protocol I and Article 6(4) of Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions.

Resolution 63/241 of the United Nations General Assembly, §43 (a); Resolution 10/2 of the Human Rights Council, §11; Johnson v. Jamaica, Commission on Human Rights, . 4/10-3/ §10 (1998) UN Doc. CCPR/C/64/D/592/1994.

([3380]) Resolution 19/37 of the Human Rights Council, §55.

However, the wording of Article 7 of the Arab Charter seems to allow for an exception to this prohibition if the law in force at the time of the commission of the offence so permits. However, all States parties to the Arab Charter are prohibited from applying the death penalty to any person under the age of 18 at the time of the commission of the crime, as they are also parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which is more stringent in protecting juveniles.[3381]

The Human Rights Committee and the Inter-American Commission consider the prohibition on the execution of children to be a peremptory norm of customary international law, binding on all States, and are not permitted to derogate from its provisions.[3382]

2. The Elderly

The American Convention prohibits the execution of persons over the age of seventy.[3383]

The United Nations Economic and Social Council has recommended that States should set "an age limit beyond which a person may not be sentenced to death or executed".[3384]

The Human Rights Committee has raised concerns about the execution of older persons.[3385]

3. Persons with mental or intellectual disabilities or disorders

States shall not impose the death penalty on or execute persons suffering from mental disabilities, disorders or low IQs. This includes people who have developed mental disorders after being sentenced to death.[3386]

The Inter-American Court held that the failure to conduct a psychological assessment of the accused or to inform him of his right to make such an assessment, when the accused's mental abilities were in question in a case in which he could be sentenced to death, violated his right to a fair trial.[3387]

4. Pregnant and lactating women

The death penalty may not be imposed on a pregnant woman.[3388]

This prohibition is considered a categorical rule of customary international law.[3389]

Similarly, the death penalty may not be carried out on a mother of young children.[3390]

([3381]) Article 43 of the Arab Charter.

([3382]) General Comment 24 of the Human Rights Committee, §8; Michael Dominguez v. United States (12). 285), U.S. Commission § §84 (2002) and 85; see Amnesty International, Exemption of Child Offenders from the Death Penalty under Public International Law, Document No.: 2003/004 /. ACT 50.

([3383]) Article 4(5) of the American Convention.

[3384]Resolution 1989/64 of the Economic and Social Council, §1 (c).

([3385]) Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Japan, UN Doc. §16 (2008) CCPR/C/JPN/CO/5.

([3386]) Paragraph 3 of the death penalty safeguards.

Resolution 2005/59 of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, §7 (c); Human Rights Committee: Concluding Observations: United States of America, UN Doc §7 (2006) CCPR/C/USA/CO/3/Rev. 1, Japan, / UN Doc. CCPR/C §16 (2008) JPN/CO/5, Sahadath v. Trinidad and Tobago, UN Doc 2/ §7 (2000) CCPR/C/78/D/684/1986; Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions, 457 / §115- §116 (1996) UN Doc. A/51.

([3387]) Da Costa Cadogan v. Barbados, Inter-American Court (2009) §87- §90.

([3388]) Article 6(5) of the International Covenant, Article 4(2) of the Protocol on the Rights of Women in Africa, Article 4(5) of the American Convention, Article 7(2) of the Arab Charter, Paragraph 3 of the Death Penalty Safeguards, Section n(9) (c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Article 76 (3) of Protocol I, and Article 6(4) of Protocol II.

([3389]) General Comment 24 of the Human Rights Committee, §8.

([3390]) Article 4(2) of the Protocol on the Rights of Women in Africa, Article 7(2) of the Arab Charter, Paragraph 3 of the Death Penalty Safeguards, Section N(9) (c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Article 76 (3) of Protocol I, and Article 6(4) of Protocol II.

Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, § §115 (1996) UN Doc. A/51/457; resolution 2005/59 of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, §7 (b).

The Arab Charter sets a minimum period of two years for the time period of child custody and breastfeeding and specifically stipulates that the best interest of the child shall be a primary consideration.

Sixth: Strict adherence to all fair trial rights

Since the death penalty is irreversible, proceedings in cases involving the death penalty must strictly adhere to all relevant international standards protecting the right to a fair trial, no matter how heinous the crime.[3391]

The proceedings shall conform to the highest standards of independence, competence, objectivity and impartiality that judges and juries should possess. All individuals at risk of the death penalty must benefit from the services of a competent lawyer to defend them at all stages of the proceedings.[3392]

They must be presumed innocent until proven guilty on the basis of clear and convincing evidence that leaves no room for an alternative interpretation of the facts, and on the strict application of the highest standards of evidence-gathering and evaluation of probative evidence. Furthermore, all mitigating factors must be taken into account. The proceedings shall also ensure the right to a review by a higher tribunal of the facts and legal aspects of the case, so as to include judges who have not participated in the hearing of the case at first instance. Those facing the death penalty must be guaranteed the right to seek pardon and commutation (commutation of the sentence with a lighter penalty) and to seek clemency.[3393]

Since it is never possible to restrict the right to life, this applies equally to emergency situations, including armed conflict.[3394]

Amnesty International adopts the position that all executions constitute a violation of the right to life.

Although this view has not yet prevailed worldwide, international bodies and United Nations human rights experts, along with regional human rights courts, all agree that the execution of a person after an unfair trial is a clear violation of the right to life.[3395]

Imposition of the death penalty based on criminal proceedings contrary to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is a violation of the right to life.[3396]

The Human Rights Committee, the African Commission, the Inter-American Court and the Inter-American Commission have all found that violations of the right to life have been committed in a number of cases, including major crimes in which fair trial provisions were violated.[3397]

[3391]See paragraph 5 of the Death Penalty Safeguards.
Human Rights Committee: General Comment 6 §7, General Comment 32 §59.

[3392]See Human Rights Committee: Pinto v. Trinidad and Tobago, UN Doc 5/ §12 (1990) CCPR/C/39/D/232/1987, Kelly v. Jamaica, UN Doc . 10/ §5 (1991) CCPR/C/41/D/253/1987.

([3393]) Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions,. §111 (1996) UN Doc. A/51/457.

([3394]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Commission, §11 and§15; Inter-American Commission, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights (2002), section 3(a) (1) (b) §94.

([3395]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §59, Domukovsky et al. v. Georgia, 1995 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/62/D/623,624,626,627 10/ §18 (1998), Kelly v. Jamaica, 1987 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/41/D/253 14/ §5 (1991); Inter-American Court: Dacosta Cadogan v. Barbados, Inter-American Court 47 § § (2009) and 85, Advisory Opinion 99 / OC-16 §137- §135 (1999), Advisory Opinion 83 / §55 (1983) OC-3; Inter-American Commission: Report on Terrorism and Human Rights, (2002), section 3(a) (1) (b) §94.

([3396]) Article 6(2) of the International Covenant; see Article 4 of the African Charter, Article 4(2) of the American Convention, and Article 5 of the Arab Charter.
See, for example, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers. §62 (2007) UN Doc. A/62/207.

[3397]See, e.g., Commission on Human Rights: Mbengi v. Zaire (16) / 1977), 2/14-1/ §14 § (1983) UN Doc. A/38/40 Supp. No 40 and 17, Ideva v. Tajikistan, 2004/7/9-2/ §9 (2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/95/D/1276, Aliyev v. Ukraine, 1997/4/7-2 / §7 (2003)

The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions stressed that military courts, and other special courts, should not have the power to impose the death penalty.[3398]

While the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention adopted the same view towards military courts.[3399]

The Inter-American Court and the Inter-American Commission found that violations of fair trial rights occurred at the sentencing stage.[3400]

The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions warned against systems that rely excessively on heavily biased texts for victims in cases of major crimes, raising concerns that due process and the independence and impartiality of justice may be[3401] undermined.

The imposition of the death penalty on discriminatory grounds constitutes a form of arbitrary deprivation of the right to life.[3402]

Concerns have been repeatedly expressed about the imposition of the death penalty on discriminatory grounds, including the disproportionate imposition of the death penalty on members of particular ethnic groups and groups. Women were disproportionately convicted of adultery, which in some countries amounts to stoning to death, with its cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment.[3403]

Furthermore, the Human Rights Committee has concluded that a death sentence imposed after an unfair trial violates the prohibition on inhuman treatment.[3404]

The European Court ruled that the deportation of two persons to Syria, where they faced a real risk of being sentenced to death after an unfair trial, constituted a violation of both the right to life and the prohibition on cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment.[3405]

The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions stressed that: «.. When the state judicial system fails to ensure respect for fair trials, the government should impose a moratorium on[3406] executions.

Subsections 28/6/1 and 28/6/4 do not repeat all fair trial guarantees that apply to every person accused of a criminal offense. They only cover provisions whose interpretation in relation to UN Doc. CCPR/C/78/D/781; African Commission: Malawi African Society et al. v. Mauritania (54) / 91, 61/91, 98/93, 164/97 to 196/97 and 210/98), African Commission, Annual Report 13 9 § § (2000) and 120; pen International, the Constitutional Rights Project, International Rights Organization acting for Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr., and Civil Liberties Organization v. Nigeria (137) / 94, 139/94, 154/96 and 161/97), Annual Report 12 103 §,(1998); Medellín et al. v. United States (12). 644), 90/09 Report of the Inter-American Commission §148- §124 (2009), 154 - 155; DaCosta Cadogan v. Barbados, Inter-American Court (2009) §90- §86, 128 (b).

---

([3398]) Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, 2012) UN Doc. A/67/275), United States of America, UN Doc . §41- §38 (2009) A/HRC/11/2/Add. 5.

([3399]) Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, UN Doc. §80 (1998) E/CN4. /1999/63.

([3400]) American Commission: Jacob v. Grenada (12). 158), §70- §71 (2002), Medellín et al. v. United States (12). 644), Report 90/09 of the American Commission § 146- §148(2009).

Special [3401]Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions, §64 ,(2006) UN Doc. A/61/311.

([3402]) William Andrews v. United States (11). 139), Inter-American Commission, Report 57/96 § 177 (1996); see Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions, 275 / §14 ,(2012) UN Doc. A/67..

([3403]) Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: United States of America, §23 (2008) UN Doc. CERD/C/USA/CO/6; Special Rapporteur on Torture, 3/ §40 (2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/7; UN Secretary-General, 280 / §72 (2010) UN Doc. A/65..

Commission [3404]on Human Rights, Larrañaga v. Philippines, / UN Doc. CCPR 11/ §7 (2006) C/87/D/1421/2005, Mwamba v. Zambia, UN Doc . 8/ §6 (2010) CCPR/C/98/D/1520/2006.

([3405]) Bader and Qanbar v. Sweden (13284/ 04), European Court (2005) §42- §48.

Special [3406]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §51 (2010) UN Doc. A/HRC/14/24a, Afghanistan, UN Doc §65 §A/HRC/11/2/Add. 4 and 89..

death penalty cases provides additional protection, or where additional safeguards apply in this regard.

1-The right to a competent lawyer

Every person detained or accused of a criminal offense has the right to a lawyer during his detention, at the initial stages of the proceedings, during his trial and the various stages of appeal.[3407]

In addition, the right to a lawyer extends to clemency proceedings and individuals seeking a review of their verdicts by the constitutional courts competent in major crimes cases.[3408]

A person accused of a major crime has the right to be represented by a lawyer of his choice, even if this requires the postponement of the hearing.[3409]

If a person accused of a criminal offence punishable by death does not have a lawyer of his choice, the interest of justice always requires that he be assisted by a designated lawyer free of charge, when necessary.[3410]

Therefore, the state must provide sufficient resources to appoint competent lawyers to provide legal assistance and defend defendants in cases that can be punished by the death penalty.[3411]

If a lawyer is appointed to represent the accused free of charge, the accused does not have an absolute right to choose whomever he wishes. However, in death penalty cases, the State should take into account the preferences of the accused, including at the appeal stage.[3412]

Death penalty cases may not proceed unless the accused has effective legal assistance from a competent lawyer.[3413]

Principle 3 of the Principles of Legal Aid, paragraph 5 of the Death Penalty Safeguards, article 14 (3[3407]) (d) of the International Covenant, article 7(1) (c) of the African Charter, article 8(2) (d) - (e) of the American Convention, articles 16 (3) and(4) of the Arab Charter, article 6(3) (c) of the European Convention, principle 1 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, and section n(2) (c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Human Rights Committee, Clive Johnson v. Jamaica, UN Doc 2/ §10 (1998) CCPR/C/64/D/592/1994, Brown v. Jamaica, UN Doc 6/ §6 (1999) CCPR/C/65/D/7751997, Idieva v. Tajikistan, UN Doc 5/ §9 (2009) CCPR/C/95/D/1276/2004, Kelly v. Jamaica, UN Doc . 10/ §5 (1991) CCPR/C/41/D/253/1987.

([3408]) Guideline 6 §47 (c) of the Principles of Legal Aid; see section H(c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Europe.

Commission on Human Rights, Currie v. Jamaica, / UN Doc. CCPR 4/13-3/ §13 (1994) C/50/D/337/1989, Henry v. Trinidad and Tobago, 6/ §7 (1999) UN Doc. CCPR/C/64/D/752/1997; Hilaire, Konstantin, Benjamin et al. v. Trinidad and Tobago (94) / 2002), Inter-American Court §152 (2002) (b)..

Pinto [3409]v. Trinidad and Tobago, 1987 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/39/D/232 5/ §12 (1990). See African Commission: Lawyers without Borders (acting on behalf of Bwambamyi) v. Burundi (231)/ 990) Annual Report 5 §14 (2000) and § 27 - §30, Amnesty International et al. v. Sudan (48) / 90 , 50/91, 52/91 and 89/93) Annual Report 13 §64- §66 (1999), Pen International et al. acting on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr and Civil Liberties Organization v. Nigeria (137) / 94 , 139/94, 154/96 and 161/97) Annual Report 12 (1998) §97 - §103.

Principle [3410]3 of the Principles of Legal Aid, and Section H(a) and(c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Robinson v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc 3/10-2/ §10 § (1989) CCPR/C/35/D/223/1987; see ECOSOC Safeguards Relating to the Death Penalty, §5.

([3411]) Principle 3 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers; see Principles 2 15§and 37§13 of the Principles of Legal Aid.

Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §547 UN Doc. A/CN. 4/1996/4; see Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, United States of America, UN Doc §16- §13 A/HRC/11/2/Add. 5, 21-22, and 74; see Medellín et al. v. United States (12). 644), Report 90/09 of the American Commission 139 § (2009).

[3412]See Pinto v. Trinidad and Tobago, Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc 5/ §12 (1990) CCPR/C/39/D/232/1987; Civil Liberties Organization, Centre for Legal Defence and Legal Aid Project v. Nigeria (218) / 98, African Commission, Annual Report 14 § § §31-28,(2001).

[3413]Robinson v. Jamaica, Human Rights Commission, / UN Doc. CCPR 3/10-2/ §10 (1989) C/35/D/223/1987; see Abdul Salim Yassin and Noel Thomas v. Guyana, Commission on Human Rights, 1996 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/62/D/676 . 8/ §7 (1989).

It is the duty of the state, and the court in particular, in death penalty cases, to ensure that the assigned lawyer is competent, has the required skills and experience to face the gravity of the charge against his client, and to defend him effectively.[3414]

If the authorities or the court are notified that the lawyer is ineffective, or his lack of effectiveness is apparent, the court must ensure that the lawyer performs the duties assigned to him, or replace him.[3415]

2. The right to adequate time and facilities for the preparation of the defense

All persons accused of a criminal offence punishable by death shall be entitled to adequate time and facilities for the preparation of their defense.[3416]

The defense should seek to gain additional time to prepare its defense if the need arises; the court should give it sufficient time to prepare such a defense in response to its request.[3417]

The Inter-American Court ruled that the defendant's rights to adequate time and facilities to prepare his defense and to be informed in advance of the charges were violated when, at the end of a trial of a person accused of aggravated rape, the prosecution asked the court to find the defendant guilty of murder, under which he could be sentenced to death. The court responded to his request without giving the defense the opportunity to respond to the murder charge, and without informing the accused of his right to request an adjournment or to present additional evidence.[3418]

3-The right to complete the procedures without undue delay

Proceedings in capital cases, including investigation, trial and appeal proceedings, must be completed without undue delay.[3419]

While the reasonableness of delays is determined on a case-by-case basis, the Human Rights Committee has confirmed that the following delays have been unduly prolonged in cases involving major crimes: a one-week delay between the arrest of the accused and his or her being brought before a judge (in violation of article 9 of the International Covenant); detention of the accused for 16 months prior to the commencement of his or her trial; and a 31-month delay between trial and the decision to dismiss an appeal.[3420]

([3414]) Principle 13 of the Principles of Legal Aid.

See [3415]Pinto v. Trinidad and Tobago, Human Rights Committee, UN Doc 5/ §12 (1990) CCPR/C/39/D/232/1987, Kelly v. Jamaica, UN Doc 10/ §5 (1991) CCPR/C/41/D/253/1987, Chan v. Guyana, UN Doc 3/6-2/ §6 § (2005) CCPR/C/85/D/913/2000, Brown v. Jamaica, 8/ §6 (1999) UN Doc. CCPR/C/65/D/775/1997, Parle v. Jamaica, . 3/ §9 (1996) UN Doc. CCPR/C/57/D/546/1993.

([3416]) Article 14 (3) (b) of the International Covenant, Article 8(2) (c) of the American Convention, Article 16 (2) of the Arab Charter, Article 6(3) (b) of the European Convention, and Section N(3) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

ECOSOC Resolution 1989/64, §1 (a); Kelly v. Jamaica, 1987/10 / §5 (1991) UN Doc. CCPR/C/41/D/253.

Commission [3417]on Human Rights: Kelly v. Jamaica, / UN Doc. CCPR 9/ §5 (1991) C/41/D/253/1987, Larrañaga v. Philippines, UN Doc 5/ §7 (2006) CCPR/C/87/D/1421/2005, Chan v. Guyana, UN Doc 3/6-2/ §6 (2005) CCPR/C/85/D/913/2000; see Barry v. Jamaica, Human Rights Committee, 1988/4/ §11 (1994) UN Doc. CCPR/C/50/D/330.

Fermín [3418]Ramírez v. Guatemala, American Commission §58-§80 (2005).

([3419]) Articles 9(3) and 14 (3) (c) of the International Covenant, article 7(1) (d) of the African Charter, articles 7(5) and 8(1) of the American Convention, articles 5(3) and 6(1) of the European Convention, and article 14 (5) of the Arab Charter (on pre-trial detention).

Kelly v. Jamaica, 1987/1991) UN Doc. CCPR/C/41/D/253) . 12/ §5.

McLawrence [3420]v. Jamaica, Human Rights Commission, / UN Doc. CCPR 6/ §5 (1997) C/60/D/702/1996 and 5/11..

4. Right to appeal

Every person convicted of a crime for which he may be sentenced to death shall have the right to have his conviction and sentence reviewed by an independent, impartial and competent[3421] court.

The death penalty may not be carried out except after a final judgment has been issued by a competent court.[3422]

The Human Rights Committee has made it clear that depriving a person sentenced to death who was unable to pay for a lawyer's expenses of legal aid violated not only the right to a lawyer, but also the right to appeal.[3423]

The period of time during which the appeal should be filed must be long enough to enable the accused to view and review the court records and prepare his documents for appeal and application.[3424]

Once appeals are submitted in death penalty cases, the appellate body is obliged to consider and decide on them without undue delay.[3425]

5. Rights of Foreign Nationals

Foreign nationals (regardless of their immigration status) who have been arrested, detained or imprisoned shall be notified of their right to communicate with officials of the embassy of the country of their nationality, the consular body of their country, or any consular body concerned. If a person is a refugee or stateless, or is under the protection of an intergovernmental organization, he or she shall be notified of his or her right to contact the appropriate international organization or a representative of the State in which he or she permanently resides.[3426]

This right is also enshrined in treaties that impose duties to investigate and prosecute crimes under international law.[3427]

Consular officers (or representatives of the appropriate agencies concerned with the care of refugees and stateless persons) can provide a wide range of assistance, including arranging for the appointment of a lawyer, obtaining evidence from the home country and monitoring the treatment of detainees, including respect for the rights of the detained person.[3428]

Article 14 (5[3421]) of the International Covenant, article 8(2) (h) of the American Convention, article 16 (7) of the Arab Charter, article 2 of Protocol 7 to the European Convention, paragraph 6 of the death penalty safeguards, and section n(10) (b) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa; see article 7(a) of the African Charter.

([3422]) Article 6(2) of the International Covenant, Article 4(2) of the American Convention, Article 6 of the Arab Charter, and paragraph 5 of the death penalty safeguards.

([3423]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment §51 ,32, Mansaraj et al. v. Sierra Leone, 1998/6/ §5 (2001) UN Doc. CCPR/C/72/D/839, Aliboev v. Tajikistan, 2001/5/ §6 (2005) UN Doc. CCPR/C/85/D/985; see Civil Liberties Organization et al. v. Nigeria (218) / 98), African Commission, Annual Report 14 §32- §34 (2001).

[3424]See Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/Add. 2 (Sudan) §151 (2006).

Human [3425]Rights Committee: Thomas v. Jamaica, UN Doc 9/ §5 (1999) CCPR/C/65/D/614/1995, Mwamba v. Zambia, UN Doc . 6/ §6 (2010) CCPR/C/98/D/1520/2006.

United [3426]Nations General Assembly resolution 65/212, §4 (g); Human Rights Council resolution 12/6, §4 (b).

Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, Article 17 (2) (d) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearances, Article 16 (7) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Principle 16 (2) of the Body of Principles, Guideline 43§3 (c) of the Principles on Legal Aid, Section M(2) (d) of the Principles on Fair Trial in Africa, and Principle 5 of the Principles Relating to Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas.

Among [3427]others, article 6(3) of the Convention against Torture, article 10 (3) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearances, article 7(3) of the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, and article 15 (3) of the Council of Europe Convention on the Prevention of Terrorism.

([3428]) Advisory Opinion 99 / OC-16 of the Inter-American Court (1999) §86; Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States of America), ICJ (2004) §85.

The International Court of Justice ruled that the failure of the United States of America to inform foreign nationals charged with major crimes of their rights to consular assistance constituted a violation of the rights of such individuals, as well as of the duties of the United States of America to foreign States under international law. The court considered that the United States of America is required to review the conviction of the individuals concerned and the sentences issued against them, and to reconsider them.[3429]

The Inter-American Court concluded that the imposition of the death penalty on a national of a foreign state, despite the authorities' failure to inform him of his right to consular assistance, violated his right to life.[3430]

In view of the assistance and protection that such representatives can provide, individuals who are nationals of the State that arrested or detained them, and of another foreign State, should be granted the right to communicate with and receive visits from the consular representatives of the latter State.[3431]

If a person is a national of two or more foreign countries, Amnesty International is of the view that they should be allowed to communicate with the representatives of each of these countries, and to receive visits and assistance from them, if they so choose.

Seventh: The right to seek pardon and commutation of sentence

Every person sentenced to death shall have the right to seek pardon or commutation of his sentence. (Replace the penalty with a lighter one.[3432]

The International Court of Justice has considered that these amnesty procedures, although issued by the executive branch and not the judiciary, are an integral part of the public system to ensure justice and fairness in the system of administration of justice.[3433]

The right to seek pardon or commutation of sentence requires an impartial and sufficient procedure that provides an opportunity to present all relevant evidence and evidence that would support the pardon of the[3434] accused.

It gives the competent officials the power to issue pardons or commute sentences. Legal aid should be present in such endeavors.[3435]

Fundamental safeguards for pardon and commutation proceedings include rights for the convicted person to:

makes an offer in support of their request and responds to comments made by others;

be informed in advance of when their application will be considered;

The decision shall be notified promptly;)3436(.

([3429]) ICJ: LaGran Case (Germany v. United States of America), (2001) §77, §89, §91, §123- § 125, §128 (3), §128 (7), Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States of America) §41, § 50-§51, §153(2004).

([3430]) Advisory Opinion 99 / OC-16 of the Inter-American Court (1999) §137; see decision 2002/62 of the Commission on Human Rights, Preamble §6 and§14.

See [3431]Rule 27 (2) of the European Rules for Preventive Detention 4/6/28.

([3432]) Article 6(4) of the International Covenant, Article 6 of the Arab Charter, Article 4(6) of the American Convention, Paragraph 7 of the Death Penalty Safeguards, and Section N(10) (d) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Fermín Ramírez v. Guatemala, Inter-American Court (2005) . §107- §109.

Avena [3433]and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States of America), I.C.J. 142 § (2004);see also Fermín Ramírez v. Guatemala, I.C.J. §109 (2005).

Hillier [3434]et al. v. Trinidad and Tobago, Inter-American Court (2002) §184- §189.

([3435]) Guideline 16 §47 (c) of the Principles of Legal Aid, and Section H(c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Special [3436]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §59- §67 (2008) UN Doc. A/HRC/8/3; Baptiste v. Grenada (11). 743), Inter-American Commission §121 (2000); see United Nations General Assembly resolution 65/208, §5.

He receives legal assistance from a lawyer.

Such requests must be considered by the appropriate officials in good faith and in earnest.

In countries where Islamic law applies, where families of victims can accept "blood money" to waive their right to retribution from the perpetrator, there must be a separate system subject to the authorities for petitioners to turn to for pardon or commutation of sentence. The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions has emphasized that while such regimes do not necessarily lack consistency with international human rights law, they must be applied in a non-discriminatory manner that does not violate the right to due process, including the right to a final judgement by a court, and the right to seek pardon or commutation of State powers.

Examples of discrimination that are not allowed include that only wealthy people can buy their freedom or life, or those systems that determine different levels of value of "blood money" on prohibited grounds such as the victim being a woman or a non-Muslim person.[3437]

The Human Rights Committee considered that the predominant role of the victim's family in deciding whether or not to carry out the death penalty on the basis of financial compensation (blood money) violates the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.[3438]ICCPR

Eighth: The death sentence may not be carried out during the consideration of the appeal or petitions for clemency

The death sentence may not be carried out until:[3439].

the accused exhausts all his rights of appeal;

Concludes consideration of appeals filed, including grievances and complaints to international and regional bodies, such as the International Commission of Human Rights, the Committee against Torture, the European Court or the Inter-American Commission;

The accused exhausts petitions for pardon or commutation of the sentence.[3440]

States should ensure that no one is executed during the consideration of any legal procedure or petition for clemency at the national or international level.[3441]

Officers responsible for the execution of death sentences should be adequately informed of the status of appeal procedures and petitions for clemency and instructed not to carry out the death sentence as long as there is an appeal or a procedure for requesting clemency under consideration.[3442]

Regional human rights courts and international and regional human rights bodies have made it clear that executions carried out while pre-trial proceedings are being considered constitute a violation of rights, including the right to redress. The infringement is aggravated when the court or tribunal has issued immediate or provisional measures to request a stay of execution of the sentence.[3443]

([3437]) Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions, . §55- §63 (2006) UN Doc. A/61/311.

Concluding [3438]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Yemen, / UN Doc. CCPR. §15 (2005) CCO/84/YEM.

([3439]) Article 4(6) of the American Convention, paragraph 8 of the Death Penalty Safeguards; see Articles 14 (5) and(6) of the International Covenant, and Article 6 of the Arab Charter.

([3440]) See M. Nowak, The United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: A Commentary on the International Covenant, Second Revised Edition, Engel, 2005, p. 146.

[3441]Resolution 2005/59 of the Commission on Human Rights, §7 (j).

([3442]) Resolution 1996/15 of the Economic and Social Council, §6; Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, / UN Doc. E. §553 (1996) CN. 4/1996/4.

([3443]) pen International et al., on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr. and Civil Liberties Organization, v. Nigeria (137/94, 139/94, 154/96 and 161/97), 12th Annual Report of the African Commission §102- §103 ,(1998); Hilaire, Konstantin, Benjamin et al.

The International Court of Justice considered that the United States of America had breached its obligation when it executed a Mexican citizen despite the interim measures ordered by the Court to stay the execution of the sentence.[3444]

Ninth: The need for sufficient time to pass between the issuance of the death sentence and its execution

States must allow a sufficient period of time between the issuance and execution of the sentence to prepare for and conclude appeals, as well as petitions for clemency, so that the convicted person can manage his personal affairs.[3445]

If the death sentence is carried out hastily following the issuance of the sentence, this creates obstacles to or prevents appeals in the courts, petitions for clemency, and seeking redress from international human rights bodies. It also deprives the convicted person and their family of the opportunity to prepare themselves psychologically and say goodbye to each other.

Tenth: Duty to Transparency

The secrecy surrounding the death penalty is incompatible with the rights of convicted persons, their families and society at large. Such secrecy violates the right to a fair and public trial, the prohibition on cruel or degrading treatment, and the right to know.[3446]

Transparency is an essential condition for the public and the international community to know the way in which the death penalty is applied, and to make room for knowledge-based dialogue about its use.[3447]

It should publish precise details of each execution, including the name of the person, the charge against them, and the date and place of execution. Moreover, this information should be compiled, classified and published periodically at least once a year.[3448]

Transparency also requires that all convicted prisoners and their lawyers be officially informed of the date of execution of the sentence, well in advance to enable them to resort to possible remedies at the national or international level, and to prepare themselves for what will happen.[3449]

The family of anyone suspected of committing or convicted of a major crime has the right to visit them. They shall also have the right to be informed about the conduct of judicial proceedings

---

v. Trinidad and Tobago, Inter-American Court (94/2020), Inter-American Court § 198- §200 (2002); see also Al-Saadoun and Mufdi v. United Kingdom (61498) / 08, European Court § 151- §165 (2010).

([3444]) Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States of America), ICJ, Decision on the Request for Interpretation of the Decision of 31 March 2004 (19) January 2004 §50- §53 (2009) and§61 (2) - (3); see also LaGrand Case (Germany v. United States of America), ICJ §110- §116 (2001) and§128 (5).

ECOSOC [3445]Resolution 1996/15, §5; see International Rights and Others v. Botswana (240) / 2001), African Commission, §52 (2003); Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Executions,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/1998/68، §553 (1996) ،UN Doc. E/CN. 4/1996/4. §118 (1998).

[3446]See United Nations General Assembly resolution 65/206, §3 (b); United Nations Secretary-General, 280 / §72 (2010) UN Doc. A/65; Human Rights Committee: Concluding observations: Botswana, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/BWA §13 (2008) CO/1, Japan, §21 (1998) UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 102, Kovaleva et al. v. Belarus, 2011 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/106/D/2120 10/ §11 (2012); Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §37 (2005) ,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/53/Add. 3; Bader and Qanbar v. Sweden (13284/ 04), EC 46 § § (2005).

Special [3447]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §98- §115 (2012) UN Doc. A/67/275, in particular §103; Toktakunov v. Kyrgyzstan (1470) / 2006), Commission on Human Rights, / UN Doc. CCPR . 8/7-1/ §7 (2011) C/101/D/1470/2006.

Special [3448]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §28- §32(2006) ,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/53 and§56 - §57, Press Release on Iraq (27 July 2012), UN Doc. A/HRC/8/3/Add. 3 (Nigeria) §78 (2004) UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2005/7 ,§82- §81 (2008); Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee: Japan, 2008) UN Doc. CCPR/C/JPN/CO/5) §16; Special Rapporteur on Torture, 279 / §52 UN Doc. A/67; HRC Resolution 37/19, §69.

Commission [3449]on Human Rights, Pratt and Morgan v. Jamaica (210) / 1986 and 225/1987), 7/ §13 (1989) UN Doc. Supp. No. 40)A/44/40(at 222.

and the fate of petitions for clemency. They shall also have the right to be officially informed well in advance of the decision to execute the sentence until they make a final visit to the convicted person or communicate with him, and to be informed of the reasons for the execution.[3450]

The bodies of the persons executed should be returned to their families for burial according to the customs.[3451]

However, carrying out executions in public violates the prohibition on cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[3452]

Eleventh: Conditions of prisoners sentenced to death

The conditions of prisoners sentenced to death must not violate the right to be treated with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, or the applicable prohibition against the use of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Persons sentenced to death should not be deprived of contact with others, including their family members. At a minimum, the Standard Minimum Rules and the Bangkok Rules must be respected in their treatment.

The Human Rights Committee, in several cases related to the death penalty, has reiterated that Article 10 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights includes the duty to provide adequate medical care, basic sanitation, adequate food and recreational facilities to persons detained on death row.[3453]

The jurisprudence of the Inter-American Court is no different.[3454]

The Committee against Torture raised particular concerns about reports of prisoners sentenced to death in Mongolian prisons being held in solitary confinement, kept in shackles, and deprived of adequate food, and noted that the Special Rapporteur on Torture has described such conditions as torture.[3455]

The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions also raised concerns about the lack of space for visiting NGO representatives and MEPs to meet with people sentenced to death in Japan, in 2001 and 2002.[3456]

Chapter Twenty-Five: The Right to Appeal Judgments

25-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

The double-degree rule is a basic guarantee for the interests of the litigant, the supreme interest of justice, and the appeal as a way to appeal to the party who believes that damage has been caused by the ruling of the court of first instance, is an expensive guarantee for the litigant, and therefore it must be considered a general principle in the proceedings, and therefore the double-

Shidko [3450]v. Belarus, Commission on Human Rights, / UN Doc. CCPR . 2/ §10 (2003) C/77/D/886/1999.

Concluding [3451]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Botswana, UN Doc. §13 (2008) CCPR/C/BWA/CO/1.

Special [3452]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §43- §42 (2006) ,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/53/Add. 3; see UNGA Res. 65/225, 1 § (2010) (a) (i); OHCHR Res. 2005/59, §7 (1).

Commission [3453]on Human Rights: Kelly v. Jamaica, / UN Doc. CCPR 7/ §5 (1991) C/41/D/253/1987, Henry and Douglas v. Trinidad and Tobago, 5/ §9 (1996) UN Doc. CCPR/C/37/D/571/1994, Linton v. Jamaica, . 5/ §8 (1992) UN Doc. CCPR/C/46/D/255/1987.

[3454]See, e.g., Inter-American Court: Hilaire, Konstantin, Benjamin et al. v. Trinidad and Tobago, § 133- §172 (2002), Raxcaco-Reyes v. Guatemala, §94- §102 (2005).

([3455]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: Mongolia, UN Doc. §16 (2010) CAT/C/MNG/CO/1.

Special [3456]Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, §44 § (2006) ,UN Doc. E/CN. 4/2006/53/Add. 3..

degree rule is a guarantee of good justice, and the Supreme Constitutional Court in Egypt has approved several principles in that context as follows:

1-The general rule is that people do not differentiate among themselves in the field of their right to access to their natural judge, nor within the scope of the procedural and substantive rules governing the same judicial litigation, nor in the effectiveness of the defense guarantee guaranteed by the Constitution or the legislator for the rights they claim, nor in their requirement according to unified standards when the conditions of their request are met, nor in the methods of appeal they regulate, but the same rights must have unified rules, whether in the field of litigation, defense, performance, or challenge of the provisions related to them.[3457]

2- That what the legislator stipulates of the inadmissibility of appealing some judicial judgments, there is no violation of the provisions of the Constitution that do not preclude limiting litigation to one degree in the matters in which the judgment was decided. Limiting the right of litigation on the matters in which the judgment is decided to one degree is within the framework of the discretionary authority that the legislator has in the field of regulating rights, and within the limits required by the public interest. The origin of the judgments that are initially decided in the substantive dispute is the permissibility of appeal, as the consideration of the claimant in two degrees is a basic guarantee of litigation that may not be withheld from the litigants without an explicit text and according to objective grounds to the effect that deviation from them is not assumed, whether the appeal is considered - in the judgments issued in the first instance - as an inevitable way to monitor their integrity and correct their crookedness or as a means of transferring the dispute in its entirety to the appellate court, to glossify it again, as a single judgment in this dispute does not provide an adequate guarantee that takes care of justice, and ensures the effectiveness of its management according to their levels that are committed by civilized states[3458]

3- Limiting litigation to one degree falls within the discretionary authority of the legislator,.[3459]

Therefore, it is not permissible for the legislator to make an unjustified discrimination among citizens regarding the implementation of these rules, which disrupts or restricts them to a group of them, especially at the level of fair adjudication of their civil rights and obligations. This is supported by the fact that the methods of appealing judgments are not only procedural means established by the legislator to provide means of evaluating their distortion, but are in fact more closely related to the rights they deal with, whether in the field of proving, denying them, or describing them, so that their fate is mainly due to the openness or closure of these roads, as

---

([3457]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 95 of 20 S issued at the session of May 11, 2003, the date of publication on May 29, 2003, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 10, page No. 1082, rule No. 157, Case No. 64 of 17 S issued at the session of February 7, 1998, the date of publication on February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78.

([3458]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 39 of 15 S. Issued at the session of February 4, 1995, the date of publication March 6, 1995, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 6, page No. 511, rule No. 35.

([3459]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 174 of 24 S issued at the session of January 9, 2005, the date of publication January 24, 2005, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11, page No. 1299, rule No. 218, Case No. 201 of 23 S issued at the session of December 15, 2002, the date of publication December 26, 2002, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 10, page No. 816, rule No. 119, Case No. 19 of 19 S, issued at the 7th session of March 1998, the date of publication 19 March 1998, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1210, rule No. 88, Case No. 64 of 17 S, issued at the 7th session of February 1998, the date of publication 19 February 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78, Case No. 31 of 10 S, issued at the 7th session of December 1991, the date of publication 26 December 1991, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 5 Page No. 57 Rule No. 12, Case No. 7 of 1 s Issued at the session of February 7, 1981, the date of publication is March 5, 1981, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 1 Page No. 160 Rule No. 3.

well as to distinguishing between citizens whose legal status is identically situated in the field of access to their opportunities.[3460]

The methods of appealing judgments are not only procedural means established by the legislator to provide ways to correct their distortion, but in fact they are more closely related to the rights they deal with, whether in the field of proving them or themselves, so that their fate is originally due to the closure or openness of these roads, as well as to the distinction between citizens whose legal status is similar in the field of access to their opportunities.[3461]

Litigation in the matters in which it has been decided has been limited to one degree, even if it falls within the discretionary authority of the legislator, and to the extent and within the narrow limits required by a public interest that has its weight, but if the legislator chooses to litigate in two degrees, each of them should complete its features, and its exhaustion after withdrawing from its guarantees should be without decrease, as litigation in two degrees - and whenever it is decided by jus cogens texts - is considered an original in the requirement of the disputed rights, to the effect that the judicial litigation does not reach its end until after it consumes its two stages by appealing it. This necessarily requires that the right of defense be withdrawn to them together, and that his eyesight be iron with them, as they are two complementary rings, and they are determined together for the judicial litigation with its final outcome, so the facts of justice do not have the same if the road of one of them is closed.[3462]

It is not permissible to invoke that limiting litigation to one level means the speed of adjudication of cases, but rather the openness or closure of the methods of appeal against judgments is determined on objective grounds under which the speed of adjudication of cases does not fall in contradiction to their nature, especially in the field of enforcing criminal laws whose penalties affect the right to life, freedom or property.[3463]

4- That the origin of the judgments is the permissibility of appeal, as the dispute in two degrees is a basic guarantee of litigation that may not be withheld from the litigants without an explicit text, and according to objective grounds, to the effect that the departure from them is not assumed, whether the appeal is considered appeal, in the judgments issued in a preliminary form - as an inevitable way to monitor their safety and correct their distortion, or as a means of transferring the entire dispute and all the elements it contains to the Court of Appeal to record its vision in it again, as a single judgment on this dispute does not provide sufficient guarantee that takes care of justice, and ensures the effectiveness of its management according to their levels committed to by civilized countries.[3464]

5- Determining the permissibility of the appeal or not is a legal matter to be decided by the judicial authority to which the opponent submits his appeal, that is, his lawsuit. The clerk's office may not prevent the appeal report on the grounds that it is not permissible. Otherwise, this

---

([3460]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 9 of 16 S, issued at the session of 5 August 1995, the date of publication 17 August 1995, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7, page No. 106, rule No. 7.

([3461]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 64 of 17 S. Issued at the session of February 7, 1998, the date of publication of February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78.

([3462]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 64 of 17 S. Issued at the session of February 7, 1998, the date of publication of February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78.

([3463]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 64 of 17 S issued at the session of February 7, 1998, the date of publication February 19, 1998, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8, page No. 1108, rule No. 78, Case No. 39 of 15 S issued at the session of February 4, 1995, the date of publication March 6, 1995, published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 6, page No. 511, rule No. 35.

([3464]) Case No. 39 of 15 S. Issued at the session of February 4, 1995, the date of publication March 6, 1995, and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 6, page No. 511, rule No. 35.

prohibition is a violation of the right to resort to the judiciary and a violation of the provisions of the Constitution and the law.[3465]

6- When the judicial organization is at the forefront and the top is occupied by a court above the lower courts whose jurisdiction is limited to adjudicating in matters of law, there is a multiplicity in the levels of litigation, and this is not a denial of the right to litigation, but rather an affirmation of its content, and the establishment of its dimensions to ensure the purposes it seeks.[3466]

25-1-1 Opposition

First: Provisions in which opposition is permissible

The opposition shall be accepted in the judgments issued in absentia in misdemeanors.[3467]

It is clear from this that to accept the opposition, two conditions must be met: the first is to be in a judgment issued in a misdemeanor article, and the second is to be in a judgment issued in absentia.

As for the first condition, the legislator limited the challenge to the opposition to the judgments issued in absentia in misdemeanors punishable by a penalty restricting freedom, without the judgments issued by a fine. However, the Supreme Constitutional Court ruled that this distinction was differentiated between the accused in misdemeanors, in the field of determining those who have the right to appeal the opposition in the judgments issued in those misdemeanors. Those who were sentenced in absentia in misdemeanors punishable by a penalty restricting freedom were allowed to take this path, and others who were sentenced in absentia in misdemeanors punishable by a fine were prohibited from entering. Thus, the referred text established an arbitrary distinction in the field of discrimination between its addressees, despite the similarity of their circumstances, and the union of their legal positions. As all of them are sentenced, their criminal responsibility for the misdemeanors for which they are submitted to criminal trial has been determined under absentia provisions, whatever the type of punishment imposed on them, which requires ensuring equal legal protection for them, so that a group of them, who are convicted of crimes punishable by a fine alone, is deprived of dissent in those provisions, including discrimination that is not justified by objective conditions that support it, which is prohibited by a commitment to the principle of equality before the law, which was raised by Article (53) of the existing Constitution. The constitutionality of the criminal laws decided by the legislator in the criminal field - which impose the most serious and far-reaching restrictions on this freedom - assumes that the legislator does not discriminate unjustifiably among those addressed by its provisions, and that the differences between them do not prevent them from benefiting equally from its guarantees, which was not complied with by the text referred to.

Whereas, the violation of the principle of equality before the law, which affected the referred text, was also necessitated by a violation of the principle of personal freedom guaranteed by the Constitution in the text of Article (54) thereof, and considered it one of the natural rights that

---

([3465]) In this regard, the Supreme Administrative Court ruled that: [The prohibition attributed to the court clerk's office to register the lawsuit (and this applies to the appeal report) to constitute an administrative decision involving a flagrant aggression against a constitutional right guaranteed by the Constitution to all citizens, which is the right of recourse to the judiciary, which is a protected right and guaranteed to all people, and the clerks of the courts may not refrain from registering the lawsuits that citizens wish to file, because this abstention is unlawfully and without the basis of the law, the constitutional guarantee of the rule of law, which is the right of recourse to the judiciary] Supreme Administrative Court, Appeals Nos. 454 and 694 of 27 Q issued at the session of April 23, 1983 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 28, page 679, rule No. 101.

([3466]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 102 of 12 S, issued at the session of 19 June 1993, the date of publication 8 July 1993, published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 5, page No. 343, rule No. 29.

([3467]) Article 398 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

may not be violated through its regulation. This means that the determination of criminal responsibility for criminal acts in response to a social necessity and in order to achieve a legitimate interest must be carried out after following the legal means whose application is in accordance with the foundations and controls of constitutional legitimacy, as it is closely related to personal freedom, as a natural right, which Article (54) of the Constitution obliges to preserve and not to prejudice, as it is one of the rights intrinsic to the human person, which Article (92) of the Constitution does not allow to suspend, diminish or prejudice its origin or essence. Hence, distinguishing between the accused in misdemeanors in the stages of determining their responsibility for them, by depriving the opposition in the default judgment that imposed the fine on the basis of the penalty prescribed by law for the act, despite the unity of the purpose of the punishment of any kind, which is the correction of the perpetrators and the achievement of public and private deterrence, includes an infringement of personal freedom in one of its aspects in violation of the text of Article (92) of the Constitution.

Whereas, it is decided that appealing by way of opposition to the criminal judgment would return the litigation to the court that issued the default judgment to rule on it again, and the referred text did not achieve this guarantee for the group that excluded it, and they are the convicts in absentia in the misdemeanors for which the fine is prescribed. Therefore, it deprived them of a stage of litigation, which is a violation of the right to litigation guaranteed by Article (97) of the existing Constitution, and a waste of the values of justice that Article (4) of the existing Constitution considered the basis for building society and achieving its national unity. This is not affected by the fact that limiting litigation to one degree falls within the discretionary authority of the legislator in the field of regulating rights, as this matter is only to the extent and within the narrow limits required by a public interest that has its weight; and it cannot be approved, if the legislator has previously chosen to litigate in two degrees as an approach. Litigation is in two degrees, and whenever it is decided by jus cogens texts, it is considered an asset in the requirement of the disputed rights, to the effect that the judicial litigation does not reach its end until after it enters into its two stages of adjudication.

Whereas, the legislator's guarantee, as a general principle, of the right of the accused convicted in absentia, in a misdemeanor, to take the path of challenging the opposition to the judgment issued against him, to the effect that he assumed his innocence until his guilt is proven in a legal trial in which he is guaranteed the guarantees of his defense, in accordance with the text of Article (96) of the Constitution, which guaranteed the principle of innocence. This is because the legislator has approved this general principle, so it is not possible for him after depriving some of that right, which is what was stipulated in the referred text, so he came to waste the origin of innocence, which is above the Constitution, which extends in its content to every individual, whether he is suspected or accused, as a basic rule in the accusatory system approved by all laws, not to ensure the protection of the guilty, but to prevent punishment for the individual if the charge against him has been covered by suspicions in a way that prevents certainty from being compared by the accused. The criminal indictment - in itself - does not displace the origin of innocence that always accompanies the individual, nor does it remove it, whether at the pre-trial stage, during the trial, throughout its sessions, and regardless of the time it takes for its procedures. Therefore, there is no way to refute the origin of innocence without evidence whose persuasive power reaches the amount of certainty and certainty that does not leave reasonable grounds for suspicion of the absence of the charge, provided that its significance has been established by a judicial ruling that has exhausted the methods of appeal.

Whereas the closure of the text referred to the opposition to challenge the judgments issued in absentia in misdemeanors punishable by a fine would affect the guarantee of the right of the accused to defend himself because of the issuance of the judgment in his absence, and his inability to present his defenses as required by his fair trial in accordance with the levels recognized in civilized nations, which require that he be guaranteed guarantees that help him to show his innocence of what is attributed to him, preserve his freedom from what threatens it, and preserve his dignity, while enabling him to present his defenses, defenses, or requests in the criminal case, and therefore the referred text has violated the right to defense, as well as the right to a fair trial guaranteed by Articles (96 and 98) of the Constitution.[3468]

This ruling is considered applicable as it is more suitable for the accused as long as the criminal case filed is not decided by a final judgment, pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 5 of the Penal Code, as it established for the convict a legal center that is more suitable because it allowed him to oppose it in the appeal judgment in absentia to oblige her to pay a fine for a misdemeanor punishable by a fine alone.[3469]

The opposition may also be appealed against the judgments issued by the Child Court, as Article 143 of the Child Law stipulates that: "The provisions contained in the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure shall be applied in matters not provided for in this chapter."[3470]

It is also permissible to appeal the judgments issued by the partial state security courts if the second paragraph of Article 8 of Law No. 105 of 1980 stipulates that "the judgments of the partial state security courts shall be subject to appeal before a specialized chamber of the appellate misdemeanor court. Judgments issued by this chamber may be appealed in cassation and review, as the street did not intend to reorganize the methods of appeal, but intended to distinguish between the partial state security courts established in accordance with The aforementioned law, whose rulings may be appealed by the means of appeal prescribed in the Criminal Procedure Law and between the "Emergency Court" Summary State Security Courts formed in accordance with the provisions of the Presidential Decree No. 162 of 1958 regarding the state of emergency, whose rulings may not be appealed by any means of appeal and whose rulings shall not become final until they are ratified by the President of the Republic pursuant to Article 12 of the same law, as well as the allocation of a circuit in the Appellate Misdemeanors Court to consider appeals against the rulings of the Summary State Security Court in order to ensure the proper functioning of justice and the unification of legal and judicial principles with regard to the cases it has jurisdiction over and the speed of adjudication, not This is evidenced by what was revealed in the explanatory memorandum to draft law No. 105 of 1980 and the report of the Constitutional and Legislative Affairs Committee on the same draft, as the first stated that" As for the judgments of the partial state security courts, they are subject to the normal appeal procedures stipulated in the Criminal Procedure Law, except for the challenge of the opposition, as the draft stipulated that the judgments of the opposition may not be challenged..." The second stated that the committee made some amendments to the provisions of the draft as received from the government, and the most important of these amendments are the following: (First) ..... (II) .... (Third) .... (Fourth) Allowing the challenge to the opposition in the judgments issued by the Misdemeanors Appellate Chamber in appeals against the judgments of the State Security District Courts and deleting the provision prohibiting this challenge contained at the end of the third paragraph of Article (8) of the draft" The street has taken the conclusions of the Constitutional and Legislative Affairs Committee and the aforementioned law was issued

---

([3468]) Supreme Constitutional Court, Case No. 56 of 32 S. Issued at the session of March 5, 2016, date of publication March 14, 2016.

([3469]) Appeal No. 39164 of 85 S issued on December 5, 2018 (unpublished).

([3470]) Article 143 of the Children's Law, and the Court of Cassation had ruled, under the entry into force of Law No. 31 of 1974 on juveniles, that: [The aforementioned law was free of the objection to the inadmissibility of opposition to the appeal in absentia judgments issued by the juvenile courts for appellate misdemeanors, which means that it is permissible to appeal by way of opposition to those judgments as long as the law does not explicitly stipulate their inadmissibility, and the principle established in Article 398 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is the permissibility of opposition in absentia judgments issued in misdemeanors and violations by the accused], Appeal No. 795 of 63 s issued at the session of 9 October 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 48 page No. 1074 Rule No. 160.

free of the stipulation of the inadmissibility of the objection, which means that the challenge by way of opposition to these judgments is permissible as long as the law does not explicitly stipulate their inadmissibility, especially since Article 5 of the same law stipulates that" except as stipulated in this law, the procedures and provisions prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Law shall be followed....." Since this was the case, it was decided that the legal and appealable judgment shall be subject to objection if the convict proves that an excuse prevented him from attending and he could not submit it before the judgment.[3471]

On the other hand, with regard to the second condition of accepting the opposition, the opposition is accepted only in absentia judgments.[3472]

It is decided that the judgment shall be considered in the presence of the accused in the sessions in which the pleading took place, whether the judgment was issued or issued in another session, and that the lesson in describing the judgment as present, legal or absent is the fact of the fact in the case, not what is wrong in it or in the minutes of the session.[3473]

The objection shall not be accepted in the judgment issued in the cases where the judgment is considered in presence, unless the convict proves the existence of an excuse that prevented him from attending, and he could not submit it before the judgment, and his appeal is not permissible.[3474]

Second: Who has the right to object

The opposition shall be from the accused or whoever is responsible for civil rights.[3475]

The objection shall not be accepted from the civil rights plaintiff.[3476]

This means that the judgment in the civil lawsuit of the criminal lawsuit is always tantamount to the judgment in the presence of the civil rights claimant, and therefore he is not entitled to challenge it in opposition like the judgments in the presence, it is equal to the opposition before the court of first instance or before the court of second instance.[3477]

The implication of the non-acceptance of the opposition by the plaintiff of the civil right is that he has no interest in the dispute he raises in describing the judgment as being in presence or in absentia, because describing it in either of the two descriptions does not create a right for him or waste it, in addition to the fact that the aforementioned text states that the judgment in the civil lawsuit of the criminal lawsuit is always the same as the judgment in presence before the plaintiff of civil rights.[3478]

([3471]) Appeal No. 6150 of 58 S issued at the session of February 15, 1989 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 40 page No. 223 rule No. 38.

([3472]) Appeal No. 26484 of 59 S issued at the session of April 20, 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 413 rule No. 57.

([3473]) Appeal No. 2395 of 61 s issued at the session of October 20, 1998 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 49 page No. 1123 rule No. 152, Appeal No. 1970 of 49 s issued at the session of January 28, 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 142 rule No. 28, Appeal No. 1254 of 45 s issued at the session of November 30, 1975 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 26 page No. 807 rule No. 177.

([3474]) Article 241 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3475]) Article 398 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and see: Appeal No. 13426 of 80 S issued at the 12th session of December 2011 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 62, page No. 452, rule No. 74, Appeal No. 14353 of 60 S issued at the 16th session of June 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 44, page No. 623, rule No. 95.

([3476]) Article 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3477]) Appeal No. 63050 of 59 S issued at the 22nd session of October 1995 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 46 page No. 1126 rule No. 167, Appeal No. 6733 of 54 S issued at the 30th session of April 1986 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 37 page No. 526 rule No. 104.

([3478]) Appeal No. 19117 of 59 S issued at the 14th session of October 1996 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 47 page No. 1012 rule No. 143, Appeal No. 1970 of 35 S issued at the 28th session of February 1966 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 17 page No. 211 rule No. 39.

Third: The date of the opposition

The opposition shall be by the accused or whoever is responsible for civil rights within the ten days following his notification of the default judgment contrary to the legal time limit. This announcement may be by summary on a form issued by a decision by the Minister of Justice. In all cases, the announcement shall not be considered by the administration authority.

However, if the announcement of the judgment has not been made to the person of the accused, the time limit for the objection for him with regard to the sentenced punishment starts from the day he becomes aware of the announcement, otherwise the objection is permissible until the lawsuit is dropped by the lapse of the period.

The declaration of judgments in absentia and judgments considered to be in presence may be made by a member of the public authority.[3479]

The date of the appeal against the objection shall start from the date of the announcement of the judgment to the convict. If the judgment decides that the appeal objection is not accepted in a calculated form, the date of the objection shall start from the date of the issuance of the opposing judgment, it shall have erred in the correct application of the law, which is defective, and the date of the objection as a whole shall be the dates of the appeal against the judgments of the public order, and it may be adhered to for the first time before the Court of Cassation.[3480]

This means that if the announcement is made to the convicted person, this is considered a conclusive presumption of knowledge of the issuance of the default judgment, but if it is announced in his home country and the announcement is not delivered to him personally, but received by others who may legally receive it on his behalf, this is considered a presumption that his paper reached him, but it is an inconclusive presumption, as the convicted person may refute it by proving the contrary.[3481]

Fourth: Opposition Procedures

The objection shall be obtained by a report in the clerk's office of the court that issued the judgment, in which the date of the hearing specified for its consideration shall be recorded. This shall be considered a declaration of it, even if the report is from an agent. The Public Prosecution shall assign the rest of the litigants in the lawsuit to attend and notify the witnesses of the aforementioned hearing.[3482]

It is scheduled that the opposition gets a report in the registry of the book proving the date of the session that was set for its consideration, and this is considered an announcement for it, even if the report is from an agent.[3483]

The report of the opposition is a procedural act initiated by an employee of the clerk of the court competent to edit it proving the desire of the accused or the person responsible for civil rights to object to the default judgment issued against him and the street did not require a special form for this report, and therefore the absence of the signature of the head of the criminal registry does not affect its validity, and since the above indicates that the street considered the proof of

---

([3479]) Article 398 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3480]) Appeal No. 29828 of 59 S issued at the session of February 14, 1995 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 46 page No. 384 rule No. 57.

([3481]) Appeal No. 15125 of 65 S issued at the session of June 3, 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55 page No. 573 rule No. 79, Appeal No. 29342 of 63 S issued at the session of February 18, 2003 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 54 page No. 316 rule No. 31, Appeal No. 1494 of 50 S issued at the session of January 28, 1981 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 32 page No. 104 rule No. 13.

([3482]) Article 400 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

([3483]) Appeal No. 28389 of 72 S issued in the session of November 1, 2009 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 60 page No. 399 rule No. 55.

the competent employee the date of the hearing specified for the consideration of the opposition in the report paper as an announcement, whether the report is from the opponent or his agent[3484].

Thus, the law was satisfied with the announcement of the opponent of the session specified for the consideration of his opposition as soon as the report was issued, even if the report was issued by his agent.[3485]

It is also decided that the presence of the appellant at the hearing set for the consideration of his objection and enabling him to present his full defense shall forfeit his right to adhere to the obligation to declare it.[3486]

Fifth: Governance in the Opposition

The opposition entails a reconsideration of the lawsuit for the opponent before the court that issued the default judgment.[3487]

The law requires that the lawsuit for the objection be considered before the court that issued the default judgment, and there is nothing to prevent the judge who issued the default judgment from considering it.[3488]

In no case may the opponent be harmed based on the objection filed by him.[3489]

The principle, according to Article 401 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is that in no case may the opponent be harmed based on the objection filed by him. The rule that the status of the appellant should not be abused was a general legal rule that applies to all methods of appeal, whether ordinary or unusual, and it is a due process rule that supersedes all considerations and is applicable in all cases.[3490]

([3484]) Appeal No. 11621 of 63 S issued at the session of 22 September 1999 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 50 page No. 457 rule No. 106.

([3485]) Appeal No. 15007 of 4Q issued at the hearing of May 19, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6996 of 4Q issued at the hearing of January 20, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1007 of 83Q issued at the hearing of July 3, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9144 of 4Q issued at the hearing of May 15, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3180 of 67Q issued at the hearing of November 16, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3182 of 67Q issued at the hearing of November 16, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3182 of 67Q issued at the hearing of November 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3182 of 67 s issued at the hearing of 16 November 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3180 of 67 s issued at the hearing of 16 November 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25573 of 66 s issued at the hearing of 21 September 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1042 of 67 s issued at the hearing of 7 September 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1042 of 67 s issued at the hearing of 7 September 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21514 of 66 s Issued at the session of July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21847 of 66 s issued at the session of July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22453 of 66 s issued at the session of July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22454 of 66 s issued at the session of July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22454 of 66 s issued at the session of July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22453 of 66 s issued at the session of July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6370 of 55 s issued at the session of March 5, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 37 page 347 rule No. 71, Appeal No. 3547 of 54 s issued at the session of October 30, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 35 page No. 699 rule No. 153.

([3486]) Appeal No. 13814 of 59 S issued at the session of November 5, 1991 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 page No. 1133 rule No. 156.

([3487]) Article 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3488]) Appeal No. 2051 of 24 S issued in the session of January 10, 1955 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 6, page No. 377, rule No. 124.

([3489]) Article 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3490]) Appeal No. 60164 of 74 S issued at the 6th session of January 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64, page No. 25, rule No. 3, Appeal No. 2020 of 69 S issued at the 12th session of February 2007 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 58, page No. 145, rule No. 29, Appeal No. 2892 of 61 S issued at the 16th session of January 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45, page No. 107, rule No. 15, Appeal No. 18555 of 59 S issued at the session of March 23, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 43 page 320 rule No. 44, Appeal No. 4440 of 59 S issued at the session of June 9, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 page 918 rule No. 126, Appeal No. 18303 of 59 S issued at the session of May 16, 1991 and published in the first part of the

It is not permissible for the opponent to be harmed based on the objection filed by him, which is a general provision that applies in all cases, regardless of whether the default judgment includes an error in the assessment of the facts or an error in the application of the law.[3491]

The abolition of the stay of execution is considered an aggravation of the penalty even with the reduction of the term of imprisonment.[3492]

This means that the opposition court may not increase the penalty or rule in the lawsuit on the basis that the incident is a felony so as not to worsen the position of the opponent.[3493]

It also follows from the rule that the opponent may not be harmed by the opposition filed by him, that the court, when adjudicating in opposition to the appellant, corrects the omission of adjudicating in the appeal of the Public Prosecution and the judiciary with the penalty of a fine that has not previously been initially ruled in response to the appeal of the Public Prosecution, is considered an error in the application of the law, and this does not change the request of the Public Prosecution for this amendment.[3494]

However, if the opponent does not attend any of the hearings specified for the consideration of the lawsuit, the objection shall be considered null and void. In this case, the court may sentence him to a procedural fine not exceeding one hundred pounds in the misdemeanor articles and not exceeding ten pounds in the violation articles, and it may order temporary enforcement, even with the appeal regarding the compensation awarded.[3495]

It is decided that the ruling to consider the opposition as if it were not permissible only when the opponent fails to attend the first session determined to consider his opposition, but if he attends, the court must decide on the subject of the opposition, even if he fails to attend other sessions, because Article 401/2 of the Code of Criminal Procedure arranged the ruling to consider the opposition as if it was not if the opponent did not attend the specific session to consider the opposition, it wanted to arrange a penalty for those who do not care about his opposition, so it ruled to deprive him of a review of his case by the court that convicted him in absentia unlike the opponent who attended the first session and then defaulted, the idea of the penalty does not meet with him, but it is necessary to distinguish between him and the opponent who did not attend at all.[3496]

Technical Office letter No. 42 page 840 rule No. 117, Appeal No. 7096 of 58 S issued at the session of 31 From January 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 Page 240 Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 1739 of 55 S issued in the session of 21 October 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 Page 905 Rule No. 163, Appeal No. 1338 of 53 S issued in the session of 27 November 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 34 Page 996 Rule No. 200, Appeal No. 230 of 42 S issued in the session of 24 April 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 23 Page 603 Rule No. 135.

([3491]) Appeal No. 1262 of 37 BC issued at the session of 23 October 1967 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 18 page No. 1008 rule No. 205.

([3492]) Appeal No. 4440 of 59 S issued at the session of June 9, 1991 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 page No. 918 rule No. 126.

([3493]) Appeal No. 43317 of 85 S issued at the session of January 18, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 44542 of 85 S issued at the session of January 18, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1876 of 80 S issued at the session of December 24, 2016 (unpublished).

([3494]) Appeal No. 24167 for the year 61 S issued in the session of November 4, 2001 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 52 page No. 791 rule No. 149.

([3495]) Article 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3496]) Appeal No. 50789 of 59 S issued at the 8th session of May 1995 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 46 Page 832 Rule No. 125, Appeal No. 13814 of 59 S issued at the 5th session of November 1991 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 42 Page 1133 Rule No. 156, Appeal No. 4440 of 59 S issued at the 9th session of June 1991 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 42 Page 918 Rule No. 126, Appeal No. 8695 of 58 s issued at the session of May 31, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 page No. 802 rule No. 139, Appeal No. 6935 of 52 s issued at the session of February 2, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 34 page No. 197 rule No. 35, Appeal No. 2735 of 50 s issued at the session of April 22, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical

The opposition shall not be accepted in any way in the judgment issued in his absence, and the court may, in this case, sentence him to a procedural fine of no less than fifty pounds and no more than two hundred pounds in misdemeanor articles and no less than ten pounds and no more than twenty pounds in violation articles.[3497]

If the court decides to accept the opposition in a form, it will have exhausted its jurisdiction with regard to the form of the opposition, which prevents it from returning to address it. If the court nonetheless returns to consider the form of the opposition by ruling it inadmissible, it will have erred in applying the law by wrongly withholding it from consideration of the object of the opposition.[3498]

It is noted that the requirement of combining the provisions of Articles 401 and 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure makes it stipulated that the annulment of the acquittal judgment was unanimous and obligatory for the validity of both the appeal in absentia judgment issued on the basis of the prosecution's appeal and the judgment issued in opposition to the accused in that judgment. Therefore, it is not before the Court of Appeal, which decides in opposition only to uphold the appealed judgment as long as the absentia judgment was not issued unanimously and the contested judgment ruled otherwise to uphold the appeal in absentia judgment, it may have erred in the application of the law.[3499]

It is not valid in the law to rule on the objection filed by the accused to the judgment issued in his absence as if it did not exist or by accepting it in form, rejecting it as an object, and upholding the opposing judgment in it without hearing the defense of the opponent. Unless his failure to attend the hearing is without excuse , and that if this failure is due to a compelling excuse that prevented the opponent from attending the hearing in which the judgment was issued in the opposition, the judgment is invalid because the trial was held on defective procedures that would deprive the opponent of the use of his right to defense and the subject of the compelling excuse and its assessment shall be on appeal or when challenged by way of cassation.[3500]

25-1-2 Appeal

It is decided that the appeal against the appeal is a right prescribed for the convict related to public order, which may not be denied except by a special provision in the law.[3501]

Office letter No. 32 page No. 392 rule No. 69, Appeal No. 1682 For the year 48 s issued in the session of February 5, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 30 page No. 219 rule No. 43, Appeal No. 1054 of 42 s issued in the session of October 29, 1972 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 23 page No. 1091 rule No. 245, Appeal No. 1693 of 39 s issued in the session of December 29, 1969 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 20 page No. 1508 rule No. 312, Appeal No. 1946 of 36 s issued in the session of January 9, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 18 page No. 60 rule No. 8.

([3497]) Article 401 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Appeal No. 6994 of 4Q issued at the session of January 20, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6034 of 3Q issued at the session of April 21, 2015 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 66 Page 404 Rule No. 54, Appeal No. 7108 of 63Q issued at the session of December 30, 1998 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 49 Page 1546 Rule No. 221.

([3498]) Appeal No. 2395 of 61 S issued at the session of October 20, 1998 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 49 page No. 1123 rule No. 152.

([3499]) Appeal No. 29552 of 63 S issued at the 26th session of February 2003 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 54, page No. 322, rule No. 33, Appeal No. 2015 of 38 S issued at the 10th session of February 1969 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 20, page No. 240, rule No. 52, Appeal No. 548 of 24 S issued at the 17th session of May 1954 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 5, page No. 645, rule No. 216.

([3500]) Appeal No. 23535 of 61 s issued at the 6th session of April 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50 page No. 197 rule No. 46, Appeal No. 77 of 41 s issued at the 6th session of June 1971 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 22 page No. 431 rule No. 106.

([3501]) Appeal No. 5543 of 53 s issued at the session of March 1, 1984 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 35 page No. 232 rule No. 47, Appeal No. 1089 of 46 s issued at the session of January 24, 1977 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 28 page No. 135 rule No. 29.

25-1-2-1 Appealing judgments issued in misdemeanors and violations

First: Judgments that may be appealed

Judgments issued by the District Court in misdemeanors. If the judgment is issued in a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding three hundred pounds in addition to restitution and expenses, it may not be appealed except for violation of the law, for an error in its application or interpretation, or for an invalidity in the judgment or procedures that affected the judgment.[3502]

This means that the law does not restrict the right of the accused or the Public Prosecution to appeal the judgments issued by the District Court in misdemeanor matters in any way.[3503]

The lesson in the permissibility of appeal is the penalty prescribed by law, not what the court stipulates.[3504]

Judgments issued by the Misdemeanor Court in matters of violations may be appealed in the following cases:

By the accused if he is sentenced to anything other than a fine and expenses;

From the Public Prosecution if it requests a ruling other than the fine and expenses and the accused is acquitted or does not rule on what it requested.[3505]

With the exception of the foregoing cases, the appeal may be filed by the accused or by the Public Prosecution in the following cases:

If the judgment is issued in violation of the law or for an error in its application or interpretation

The occurrence of an invalidity in the judgment or in the procedures that affected the judgment.[3506]

Judgments issued in the civil lawsuit by the District Court may be appealed in cases of violations and misdemeanors by the plaintiff of civil rights and the person responsible for them or the accused in respect of civil rights alone if the required compensation exceeds the quorum in which the partial judge rules definitively.[3507]

Article 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure allows the civil rights plaintiff to appeal the judgments issued in the civil lawsuit filed by association with the criminal lawsuit in relation to civil rights alone if the claimed compensation exceeds the quorum that the partial judge finally rules on, to the effect that the civil rights plaintiff may not appeal the judgment issued against him by the summary court when the claimed compensation does not exceed the final quorum of

---

([3502]) Article 402 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3503]) Appeal No. 6859 of 52 S issued at the session of 30 May 1983 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 34 page No. 695 rule No. 140, Appeal No. 2264 of 49 S issued at the session of 21 May 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 654 rule No. 127, Appeal No. 1371 of 40 S issued at the session of 8 November 1970 and published in the third part of the technical office book No. 21 page No. 1076 rule No. 259.

([3504]) Appeal No. 12901 of 4Q issued at the session of March 25, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 71300 of 74Q issued at the session of April 18, 2007 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 58, page 380, rule No. 73, Appeal No. 4675 of 62Q issued at the session of April 8, 2002 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 53, page No. 620, rule No. 101, Appeal No. 2196 of 38Q issued at the session of May 5, 1969 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 20, page No. 627, rule No. 127.

([3505]) Article 402 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3506]) Article 402 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3507]) Article 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

the partial judge, even if the judgment is wrong in the application or interpretation of the law. This rule applies even if the claimed compensation is described as temporary.[3508]

([3508]) Appeal No. 19348 of 70 Q issued on January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19462 of 70 Q issued on January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19523 of 70 Q issued on January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19462 of 70 Q issued on January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19523 of 70 Q issued on January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15965 of 70 Q issued on January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16369 of 70 Q issued on January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15965 of 70 Q issued on January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16369 of 70 Q issued on January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13111 of 70 Q issued on December 15, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13273 of 70 Q issued on December 15, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14363 of 70 Q issued on December 15, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9860 of 70 Q issued on December 1, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10608 of 70 Q issued on December 1, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12987 of 70 Q issued on November 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26854 of 69 Q issued on October 20, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2738 of 70 Q issued on September 22, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28815 of 69 Q issued on July 28, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28639 of 69 Q issued on July 21, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23612 of 69 Q issued on March 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22462 of 67 Q issued on March 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21853 of 65 Q issued on March 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18356 of 69 Q issued on February 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1548 of 69 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6588 of 69 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26052 of 68 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 34351 of 69 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 35074 of 69 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4906 of 5 Q issued on February 17, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page 241, Rule No. 28, Appeal No. 1548 of 69 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26317 of 68 Q issued on January 6, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25876 of 68 Q issued on December 28, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2168 of 68 Q issued on July 31, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8782 of 68 Q issued on July 21, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6489 of 65 Q issued on April 26, 2004, published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page 450, Rule No. 60, Appeal No. 31007 of 68 Q issued on April 15, 2004, Appeal No. 38328 of 73 Q issued on April 1, 2004, published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page 287, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 15581 of 66 Q issued on February 19, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16128 of 65 Q issued on January 19, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24083 of 67 Q issued on December 18, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12553 of 67 Q issued on December 4, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12675 of 67 Q issued on December 4, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12798 of 67 Q issued on December 4, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25583 of 67 Q issued on November 20, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19785 of 66 Q issued on November 6, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16953 of 67 Q issued on November 4, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14455 of 64 Q issued on October 20, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2904 of 67 Q issued on October 2, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21083 of 66 Q issued on July 31, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15051 of 63 Q issued on June 9, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15051 of 63 Q issued on June 9, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17131 of 71 Q issued on June 5, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17746 of 66 Q issued on June 5, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1208 of 66 Q issued on March 6, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23548 of 65 Q issued on February 24, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 27204 of 63 Q issued on February 20, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2867 of 65 Q issued on February 6, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 27204 of 63 Q issued on January 16, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15921 of 65 Q issued on December 23, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12791 of 63 Q issued on October 17, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20678 of 65 Q issued on October 3, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4803 of 64 Q issued on June 6, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5739 of 63 Q issued on June 6, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16765 of 64 Q issued on June 6, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21022 of 63 Q issued on June 6, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16552 of 64 Q issued on April 4, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2542 of 63 Q issued on March 21, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16517 of 64 Q issued on January 3, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16517 of 64 Q issued on January 3, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21652 of 65 Q issued on November 13, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 1102, Rule No. 183, Appeal No. 10929 of 64 Q issued on April 4, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 602, Rule No. 97, Appeal No. 8150 of 63 Q issued on December 20, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 977, Rule No. 189, Appeal No. 14243 of 63 Q issued on March 14, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 327, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 8452 of 61 Q issued on December 9, 1999, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 655, Rule No. 146, Appeal No. 13331 of 63 Q issued on December 20, 1997, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 1457, Rule No. 221, Appeal No. 63077 of 59 Q issued on January 17, 1996, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 47, page 93, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 18266 of 59 Q issued on January 14, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 73, Rule No. 7, Appeal No. 4504 of 57 Q issued on October 18, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 921, Rule No. 138, Appeal No. 4504 of 57 Q issued on October 18, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 921, Rule No. 138, Appeal No. 8078 of 54 Q issued on April 16, 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 571, Rule No. 99, Appeal No. 6333 of 54 Q issued on January 24, 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 143, Rule No. 18, Appeal No. 5638 of 52 Q issued on January 25, 1983, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 162, Rule No. 28, Appeal No. 34 of 49 Q issued on March 17, 1980, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 391, Rule No. 73, Appeal No. 1753 of 48 Q issued on February 18, 1979, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 30, page 275, Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 1753 of 48 Q issued on January 21, 1979, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 30, page 136, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 1307 of 47 Q issued on March 20, 1978, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 29,

Article 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure allows the plaintiff of civil rights and the person responsible for it or the accused with regard to civil rights only - to appeal the judgments issued in the civil lawsuit by the District Court in violations and misdemeanors, if the required compensation exceeds the quorum in which the district judge rules definitively, then the civil rights plaintiff may not appeal the judgment issued against him by the District Court if the compensation claimed does not exceed the final quorum of the district judge, even if the judgment is marred by an error in the application or interpretation of the law, even if the compensation claimed is described as temporary.[3509]

It must be taken into account that compensation related to taxes and fees are supplementary penalties that include an element of compensation, but they are not considered damages that need to exceed the quorum ruled by the partial judge in order to accept the judgment issued on appeal.[3510]

In addition, if the accused appeals the judgment issued by the District Court in the criminal and civil lawsuits, regardless of the amount of compensation claimed, it is not permissible - because the civil lawsuit is subordinate to the criminal lawsuit - to accept the appeal in relation to one of them without the other, due to its fragmentation. This means that the Appeal Court's decision to accept the accused's appeal of the criminal lawsuit for a judgment may be appealed and that the civil lawsuit may not be appealed against the same judgment because the amount of compensation claimed for the final quorum of the partial judge is considered an error in law.[3511]

5- It is permissible to appeal the judgment issued in crimes that are indivisibly linked to each other, even if the appeal is not permissible for the appellant except for some of these crimes only.[3512]

6- It is not permissible to appeal the preparatory and preliminary judgments issued in subsidiary matters before deciding on the merits of the case, and the appeal of the judgment issued on the merits inevitably entails the appeal of these judgments.[3513]

This means that it is not permissible to appeal against the preparatory and interlocutory judgments as well as the judgments issued in subsidiary matters except with the judgment issued in the original lawsuit, and the judgments issued before the adjudication of the subject matter on which the prohibition of proceeding in the lawsuit is based are the judgments that would prevent proceeding in the original lawsuit.[3514]

7- It is excluded from the previous rule, that all judgments issued for lack of jurisdiction may be appealed, and judgments issued for jurisdiction may be appealed if the court does not have jurisdiction to rule on the case.[3515]

---

page 315, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 65 of 47 Q issued on May 29, 1977, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 28, page 651, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 1541 of 45 Q issued on January 19, 1976, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 80, Rule No. 16, Appeal No. 599 of 44 Q issued on June 10, 1974, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 589, Rule No. 125, Appeal No. 990 of 43 Q issued on December 9, 1973, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 24, page 1157, Rule No. 236.

([3509]) Appeal No. 1991 for the year 49 S issued at the session of June 8, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page No. 712 rule No. 138.

([3510]) Appeal No. 11362 of 67 S issued at the session of November 7, 2006 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 57 page No. 858 rule No. 94.

([3511]) Appeal No. 2234 of 67 S issued at the session of February 21, 2005 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 154 rule No. 21.

([3512]) Article 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3513]) Article 405 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3514]) Appeal No. 2109 of 35 S issued at the session of May 9, 1966 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 17 page No. 572 rule No. 102.

([3515]) Article 405 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In this regard, the Court of Cassation ruled that the decision of the Misdemeanor Court to refer the case to the Public Prosecution to take its affairs in it because it considered that the incident constitutes a felony and not a misdemeanor, the fact that what was issued by that court is a final judgment of lack of jurisdiction, and does not change its nature is what the court described as an order, and it may not be withdrawn until the evidence is based on its cancellation, because it is decided that the lesson is the truth of reality, and then it may be appealed)[3516](.

It follows that the judgments issued in requests for recusal of judges in criminal matters are, by their nature: judgments issued in subsidiary matters related to the formation of the court, and this means that they may not be challenged independently of the judgments issued on the subject of the original lawsuit.[3517]

Second: Who has the right to appeal

Both the accused and the Public Prosecution may appeal the judgments issued in the criminal case.[3518]

It is decided that the right of the Public Prosecution to appeal is absolute and shall be exercised on the date prescribed for it whenever the judgment may be appealed. The judgment issued in opposition to the accused was a stand-alone judgment. The prosecution has the right to appeal against him if it sees fit to do so, and the end of the matter is that if it appeals against the judgment issued in opposition, the appeal court may not exceed the sentence imposed by the trial judgment in absentia - so that the opponent is not harmed by his opposition - except if the prosecution has appealed the judgment in absentia.[3519]

The effect of the convict's appeal of the primary judgment issued against him in absentia is that he has waived his right to object only by resorting to the method of appeal.[3520]

Third: Scope of the Appeal

It is decided that the scope of the appeal is determined as a petitioner.[3521]

It is decided that the appeal transfers the lawsuit to the court of second instance within the limits of the interest of the appellant, and that the appeal of the accused alone is in his own interest, and that the presence of the civil rights plaintiff before the Court of Appeal - if he had not appealed the judgment issued in the civil lawsuit - is only to demand the support of the judgment issued to him for compensation.[3522]

Since the appeal takes place in a report in the clerk's office of the court that issued the appealed judgment, this report is the reference in knowing what judgment is the subject of the appeal to which the court of second instance is contacted and reconsiders the subject matter of his case.

([3516]) Appeal No. 3168 of 75 S issued at the session of February 18, 2013 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 64, page No. 292, rule No. 30, Appeal No. 4556 of 60 S issued at the session of May 12, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 47, page No. 619, rule No. 86.

([3517]) Appeal No. 2109 of 35 S issued at the 9th session of May 1966 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 17 page No. 572 rule No. 102, Appeal No. 2463 of 23 S issued at the 9th session of January 1954 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 5 page No. 221 rule No. 74.

([3518]) Article 402 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3519]) Appeal No. 4961 of 63 s issued at the session of April 28, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50 page No. 253 rule No. 60, Appeal No. 1138 of 37 s issued at the session of October 9, 1967 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 18 page No. 940 rule No. 189.

([3520]) Appeal No. 65 of 49 S issued at the session of May 3, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 30 page No. 521 rule No. 111.

([3521]) Appeal No. 1644 of 47 S issued in the session of April 2, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 329 rule No. 61.

([3522]) Appeal No. 985 of 44 S issued on October 7, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 25, page No. 648, rule No. 140.

After deciding on the extent to which it meets the legal conditions for its appeal, the court of second instance shall abide by what is stated in the appeal report, and if it exceeds it, it shall have decided what was not requested of it, and its judgment shall be null and void.[3523]

The appeal of the Public Prosecution is limited to the criminal lawsuit only. It is decided that the scope of the appeal is determined as the plaintiff. The appeal of the Public Prosecution - which has no capacity to speak only about the criminal lawsuit and has nothing to do with the civil lawsuit - does not transfer the dispute before the Court of Appeal except with regard to the criminal lawsuit and not others in accordance with the rule of the relative effect of the appeal. If the civil lawsuit has been resolved by rejecting it and this judiciary has become final by not challenging it from whoever owns it, which is the plaintiff of civil rights alone, the appeal court's response to the civil lawsuit and the judiciary of the plaintiff of civil rights with temporary compensation shall be a response to what it does not have the judiciary in and a separation of what has not been transferred to it and has not been presented to it in violation of the law)[3524](.

The prosecution's appeal is not specialized because of it, but it transfers the entire lawsuit to a second instance court for the benefit of all parties to the lawsuit in relation to the criminal lawsuit, so it decides on it in a way that entitles it to consider all aspects of it, not limited to what the prosecution puts in the decision of its appeal or expresses in the session of requests. It is not valid in the law to say that the appeal filed by the Public Prosecution is restricted by any restriction except what is stipulated in the report that it is about a specific incident without another of the facts subject of the trial. Since the prosecution's appeal is general, it does not specialize because of it, but transfers the entire case to the court of second instance for the benefit of all parties to the case in relation to the criminal case, so it communicates with it in a way that entitles it to consider it in all its aspects, not limited to what the prosecution puts in deciding the reasons for its appeal.[3525]

If the appeal of the Public Prosecution is scheduled, although it does not specialize because of it, but it is inevitably determined by its subject matter, the appeal court does not contact other than the subject that was raised by it under the appeal report, no matter how young, unless it is raised from other subjects of defect.[3526]

It is decided that the appeal of the judgment issued in opposition to its inadmissibility to lift it from an irrevocable judgment is limited in its subject matter to this judgment as a stand-alone formal judgment without the effect of the appeal to the primary judgment due to the different nature of each of the two judgments.[3527]

It is decided that the appeal of the civil rights plaintiff is limited to the civil lawsuit and does not extend to the subject of the criminal lawsuit, even if it was initiated by him - because the appeal

---

([3523]) Appeal No. 49381 of 59 S issued at the session of 13 April 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 48 page No. 458 rule No. 67, Appeal No. 5611 of 54 S issued at the session of 31 January 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 36 page No. 195 rule No. 30, Appeal No. 116 of 47 S issued at the session of 15 May 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 28 page No. 586 rule No. 124.

([3524]) Appeal No. 1644 of 47 S issued in the session of April 2, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 329 rule No. 61.

([3525]) Appeal No. 533 of 46 S issued at the 25th session of October 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 27 page No. 785 rule No. 178, Appeal No. 672 of 41 S issued at the 12th session of December 1971 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 22 page No. 734 rule No. 178.

([3526]) Appeal No. 116 of 47 S issued at the session of May 15, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 28 page No. 586 rule No. 124.

([3527]) Appeal No. 648 of 45 S issued at the session of 4 May 1975 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 26 page No. 386 rule No. 88.

court's contact with this lawsuit is only through the appeal of the prosecution and the accused.[3528]

Whereas Article 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure allowed the civil rights plaintiff to appeal the judgment issued by the Summary Court in respect of violations and misdemeanors with regard to his civil rights alone, if the required compensation exceeds the quorum that the partial judge finally rules, and his right to do so exists because it is independent of the right of the Public Prosecution and the right of the accused is restricted only by the quorum, and once his appeal is filed, the appellate court must examine the elements of the crime in terms of the availability of its elements and the proof of the act constituting it against the accused on the one hand and the validity of its attribution to him, as a result of which its legal effects are not restricted by the judgment of the court of first instance, and this does not prevent the fact that the judgment in the criminal case has acquired the force of res judicata, because the two lawsuits - criminal and civil - although they arise from the same reason, but the subject matter in each differs from the other, which is not possible to adhere to the authority of the criminal judgment[3529]

The right of appeal prescribed for the civil rights plaintiff in Article 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is independent of the right of the Public Prosecution and the accused. The appellate court - on the basis of that plaintiff's appeal - must examine the elements of the crime and the act constituting it against the accused, without its judgment being the same as that issued in the criminal case, preventing this, because the criminal and civil lawsuits, even if they arose for the same reason, but the subject matter in both of them is different, which does not justify adherence to the force of the res judicata, otherwise the right of appeal prescribed for the civil rights plaintiff will be suspended and the function of the appellant misdemeanor court will be suspended if his appeal is considered independently in a subsequent session to the one that has already been decided in the appeal of the Public Prosecution.[3530]

Fourth: Appeal Date

1-The appeal shall be made by a report in the clerk's office of the court that issued the judgment within ten days from the date of the pronouncement of the judgment in presence or the announcement of the judgment in absentia, or from the date of the judgment issued in opposition in cases where it is permissible to do so.[3531]

The appeal is a procedural act in nature. The law only requires the appellant to disclose his desire to object to the judgment by reporting it in the clerk's office of the court that issued the ([3528]) Appeal No. 1588 of 45 S issued in the session of February 1, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 27, page No. 139, rule No. 27.

([3529]) Appeal No. 4838 of 67 s issued at the session of October 15, 2003 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 54 page 981 rule No. 131, Appeal No. 13409 of 61 s issued at the session of October 8, 2000 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 51 page 595 rule No. 115, Appeal No. 1933 of 53 s issued at the session of November 24, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 34 page 991 rule No. 199, Appeal No. 5638 of 52 s issued at the session of January 25, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 34 page No. 162 rule No. 28, Appeal No. 212 of 45 s issued at the session of March 24, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 26 page No. 280 rule No. 65.

([3530]) Appeal No. 212 of 45 S issued at the session of March 24, 1975 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 26 page No. 280 rule No. 65.

([3531]) Article No. 406 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 12010 of 79 s issued at the session of March 24, 2011 and published in Technical Office Book No. 62 page No. 189 rule No. 31, Appeal No. 28389 of 72 s issued at the session of November 1, 2009 and published in Technical Office Book No. 60 page No. 399 rule No. 55, Appeal No. 405 of 42 s issued at the session of May 29, 1972 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 23 page No. 821 rule No. 186, Appeal No. 45 of 41 s issued at the session of April 4, 1971 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 22 page No. 335 rule No. 82, Appeal No. 1600 of 37 s issued at the session of November 20, 1967 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 18 page No. 1133 rule No. 237, Appeal No. 324 of 26 issued at the session of May 1, 1956 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 7 page No. 701 rule No. 197.

judgment within the legally specified time limit. If the appellant comes to the clerk's office and decides before the competent clerk verbally that he wishes to file it, and the clerk records this desire in the report prepared for this purpose and signs it, the appeal is legally valid, even if it is not signed by the rapporteur, which brings him into the possession of the appellate court and contacts him.[3532]

The basis is that the date for appealing the judgment issued in the opposition begins - as the present judgment - from the day it is issued.[3533]

If one of the litigants appeals within the prescribed ten days, the appeal period shall be extended for those who have the right of appeal from the rest of the litigants five days from the date of expiry of the said ten days.[3534]

Taking into account that what is meant by the litigation in the appeal in the event that it is filed by the convicted person is the Public Prosecution or the plaintiff of civil rights, and not by other convicted persons or those responsible for civil rights, and the basis of this is that Article 409 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates that "if one of the litigants appeals within the prescribed ten-day period, the date of appeal shall be extended for those who have the right to appeal from the rest of the litigants five days from the date of the end of the said ten days." It is a text in which the street adopted the idea of subsidiary appeal in accordance with many legislations such as the French law and the mixed criminal investigation law because of the wisdom of the phenomenon disclosed by the street in Explanatory Memorandum No. 2 accompanying the Code of Criminal Procedure to Article 435, which became Article 409 by saying "One of the litigant may appeal at the end of the ten days and thus surprise his opponent who has refraged from appealing against the silence of his opponent. It is fair that he has an opportunity to appeal if he wants to preserve his interests. Accordingly, if the defendant appeals the judgment issued against him, the deadline for the prosecution and the civil rights plaintiff is extended for another five days, and it goes without saying that the sub-appeal may only be filed if the original appeal is filed within the ten-day deadline...."The statement that the appeal of one of the defendants on time entitles another defendant with him to report the appeal in the five days following the end of the ten days prescribed by law for the appeal and is not consistent with the correctness of the law, as the defendant's opponent is the prosecution and the civil rights plaintiff and not the other defendant who is questioned with him about committing the accident, and he is not responsible for civil rights who is asked with the defendant about reparation on the basis that the responsibility of the follower for the wrongful acts of his subordinate is a subsidiary responsibility established by law for the benefit of the injured and is based on the idea of legal guarantee, so the follower is considered to be a guarantor in solidarity with the follower[3535]

2-The Attorney General may appeal within a period of thirty days from the time of issuance of the judgment, and he may decide to appeal in the clerk's office of the court competent to hear the appeal.[3536]

([3532]) Appeal No. 2297 of 51 S issued at the 26th session of November 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 32 page No. 981 rule No. 172, Appeal No. 2943 of 32 S issued at the 29th session of October 1963 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 14 page No. 729 rule No. 132.

([3533]) Appeal No. 130 of 47 s issued at the session of 30 May 1977 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 28 page No. 658 rule No. 139.

([3534]) Article 409 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3535]) Appeal No. 10967 of 59 S issued at the session of January 9, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 42 page No. 51 rule No. 9, Appeal No. 568 of 48 S issued at the session of January 15, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 30 page No. 97 rule No. 16, Appeal No. 2055 of 34 S issued at the session of April 19, 1965 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 16 page No. 377 rule No. 77.

([3536]) Article 406 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

3-The deadline for appealing the judgments issued in the absence of the accused and considered in presence of the accused shall start from the date of his notification thereof, regardless of whether he was informed by another means of the issuance of the judgment.[3537]

It is established in the case law of the Court of Cassation that the lesson in describing the judgment as being in presence, presence or absence is the reality of the lawsuit, not what is in the operative part of the judgment.[3538]

It is clear from this that the Code of Criminal Procedure made a difference between the judgments regarding the validity of the date of appeal. Article 406 stipulates that the time limit for appealing the judgments in presence and the judgments in absentia in which the opposition may be objected to. This date is considered effective from the date of pronouncing the judgment in presence or the judgment issued in opposition or the judgment as the opposition was not or from the date of expiry of the date set for the opposition in the judgment in absentia. Article 407 stipulates that the judgments issued in absentia and considered in presence. The start of the date of their appeal for the accused is considered from the date of notifying them, as these judgments - as shown by the explanatory memorandum of the Code of Criminal Procedure - are in fact absentia, and for the purpose there that they are not subject to opposition. The law requires that the start of the date of their appeal be from the date of notifying the accused of them)[3539](.

The scope of application of Article 407 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which stipulates that the date of appeal shall not start for the accused except from the date of his notification of the judgment, is the judgments issued in the absence of the accused and considered in presence in accordance with Articles 238 to 241 of the said Code and not the judgments issued in opposition, as these judgments are subject to the text of Article 406 Procedures)[3540](.

It is decided that the date of appeal against the appeal against the judgment issued in the opposition begins as the present judgment from the date of its issuance, unless the non-attendance of the objection at the hearing that was set to consider his objection is due to compelling reasons that have nothing to do with his will. The date of the appeal does not start until the day on which he is officially informed of the judgment.[3541]

The date of appeal - as is the case with all dates of appeal against judgments - from the public order, and it may be invoked in any case in which the lawsuit is filed, but raising any plea in its

---

([3537]) Article 407 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Appeal No. 4573 of 64 S issued at the session of December 20, 2001, Appeal No. 1180 of 42 S issued at the session of January 1, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 24, page No. 23, rule No. 6, Appeal No. 847 of 42 S issued at the session of October 15, 1972 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 23, page No. 1036, rule No. 230.

([3538]) Appeal No. 15582 of 62 S issued at the session of March 25, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1970 of 49 S issued at the session of January 28, 1980 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 31 page 142 rule No. 28, Appeal No. 1171 of 40 S issued at the session of November 15, 1970 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 21 page 1082 rule No. 261.

([3539]) Appeal No. 1201 of 40 S issued at the session of 23 November 1970 and published in Part III of the Technical Office letter No. 21 page No. 1143 rule No. 276, Appeal No. 1185 of 34 S issued at the session of 15 December 1964 and published in Part III of the Technical Office letter No. 15 page No. 829 rule No. 163, Appeal No. 239 of 24 S issued at the session of 5 July 1954 and published in Part III of the Technical Office letter No. 5 page No. 888 rule No. 283.

([3540]) Appeal No. 6963 of 67 S issued at the session of June 1, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1611 of 66 S issued at the session of January 1, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16955 of 63 S issued at the session of March 14, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50, page No. 174, rule No. 39, Appeal No. 45 of 41 S issued at the session of April 4, 1971 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 22, page No. 335, rule No. 82.

([3541]) Appeal No. 16955 of 63 S issued at the hearing of March 14, 1999 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 50 page No. 174 rule No. 39.

regard for the first time before the Court of Cassation is conditional on it being based on facts proven by the judgment and does not require an objective investigation.[3542]

The day on which the judgment is issued is not counted as part of the appeal date.[3543]

It is decided that the assessment of the sufficiency of the excuse on which the appellant relies in failing to report his appeal in time is the right of the trial judge. When it is rejected, it is not subject to comment by the Court of Cassation unless the reason for the rejection is unjustifiable and cannot be rationally accepted.[3544]

If the Court of Appeal decides to accept the appeal in form, despite the fact that its judgment records contain data indicative of its own, that the convict decided to appeal after the lapse of the legally prescribed ten-day deadline, and without the court stating the reasons for this and whether the appellant has shown an excuse and evidence and accepted it or not, its judgment will have been marred by deficiency in causation as well as violation of the law.[3545]

Illness is one of the excuses that justify the failure to follow the trial procedures, and therefore - if its duration is prolonged - the failure to report the appeal within the legally prescribed time, which requires the judgment if the appellant adheres to the excuse of illness and provides his evidence, to present the judgment to this evidence and say his word in it. If the appealed judgment supports the appealed default judgment that the appeal is not accepted in form for the report after the deadline, without ever presenting the medical certificate submitted by the appellant to prove the validity of that excuse, justifying his delay in the report with the appeal, and he did not achieve that defense and turned away from it completely, it is flawed by the deficiency in the statement and the violation of the right of defense to invalidate it)[3546](.

([3542]) Appeal No. 48101 of 59 S issued at the session of July 21, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 50 page No. 411 rule No. 97, Appeal No. 18295 of 59 S issued at the session of December 26, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 44 page No. 1265 rule No. 192, Appeal No. 6953 of 59 S issued at the session of January 30, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 43 page No. 188 rule No. 18, Appeal No. 11365 of 59 S issued at the session of March 12, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 page No. 490 rule No. 69, Appeal No. 1680 of 55 S issued at the session of October 8, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 824 rule No. 146, Appeal No. 6081 of 52 S issued at the session of February 7, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 34 page No. 206 rule No. 38, Appeal No. 785 For the year 49 S issued in the session of December 13, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 30 page No. 924 rule No. 198, Appeal No. 1635 of the year 48 S issued in the session of January 28, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 30 page No. 171 rule No. 33, Appeal No. 1290 of the year 48 S issued in the session of December 7, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 29 page No. 883 rule No. 183, Appeal No. 1373 of the year 41 S issued in the session of January 16, 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 23 page No. 65 rule No. 18, Appeal No. 1397 of the year 29 S issued in the session of January 25, 1960 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 11 page No. 100 rule No. 18.

([3543]) Appeal No. 4792 of 60 S issued at the session of January 12, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 48 page No. 76 rule No. 11, Appeal No. 677 of 47 S issued at the session of November 14, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 28 page No. 967 rule No. 199, Appeal No. 1173 of 39 S issued at the session of December 1, 1969 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 20 page No. 1354 rule No. 275.

([3544]) Appeal No. 776 of 43 s issued at the session of 19 November 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 24 page No. 1019 rule No. 212, Appeal No. 1303 of 29 s issued at the session of 28 December 1959 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 10 page No. 1068 rule No. 219.

([3545]) Appeal No. 11365 of 59 S issued at the session of March 12, 1991 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 page No. 490 rule No. 69.

([3546]) Appeal No. 3372 of 55 S issued at the hearing of 16 October 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 875 rule No. 157.

The Court of Cassation also ruled that: [Do not be reassured of the validity of the opponent's excuse based on this certificate, as in addition to his failure to attend all the hearings in which the lawsuit was considered at first and appeal before the hearing in which he submitted the certificate, it does not state that the opponent has responded to the instructions of its editor in terms of the obligation to rest and stay in bed already throughout the period for which the certificate specified its principle and end, but it was proven from the appeal report that the opponent is the one who moved to the registry of the competent court and decided to appeal in person and signed the report by signing it on May 24, 1977, which is in the period of claiming illness,

The mere restriction of the freedom of the accused and his presence in prison is not an excuse that prevents him from deciding to appeal within the legal time limit as long as the prison system enables him to decide the existence of the books prescribed for this purpose in them.[3547]

In all cases, if a compelling excuse prevents the convict from making the decision to appeal on the legally specified date, he must initiate the appeal on the day immediately following the demise of the impediment.[3548]

It is not acceptable for the convicted person to fail to file the appeal on time that he is ignorant of the legal date. If the judgment responds to his defense that he has no excuse for ignorance of the law and takes it accordingly by failing to file the appeal on the legal date calculated from the day of the issuance of the appealed present judgment, this is a correct consideration of the law.[3549]

Although the appeal report paper is an argument with regard to proving its data, including the date of receipt of the report, but when it has been proven a date that does not match the truth by omission or material error, it is irrelevant as the real date on which the convict decided to appeal.[3550]

Fifth: Court of Appeal

The appeal shall be submitted to the court of first instance in whose jurisdiction the court that issued the judgment is located. It shall be submitted within a maximum period of thirty days to the department competent to hear the appeal in the articles of violations and misdemeanors.

If the accused is detained, the Public Prosecution shall transfer him in a timely manner to the prison in the place where the court of first instance is located, and the appeal shall be considered expeditiously[3551].

Although Article 410 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates that the appeal shall be submitted within a maximum period of thirty days to the competent department, but this is only as a matter of regulatory provisions that do not entail nullity as a result of violating them.[3552]

Since the power of attorney under which the lawyer decided to appeal has explicitly stipulated that he has the right to appeal any judgment issued against the client, this is legally sufficient to which indicates the lack of seriousness of that certificate. In view of the foregoing, the judgment in absentia opposing it, as it ruled that the appeal is not accepted in a form to be decided after the deadline, is appropriate, with which it is necessary to rule on the subject of the objection by rejecting it and supporting the judgment in absentia opposing it], Appeal No. 1690 of 53 S issued at the session of 31 December 1984 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 35 page No. 971 rule No. 217, Appeal No. 1290 of 48 S issued at the session of 7 December 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 883 rule No. 183.

---

([3547]) Appeal No. 44363 of 59 S issued at the session of 19 March 1996 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 47 page No. 376 rule No. 53, Appeal No. 1600 of 37 S issued at the session of 20 November 1967 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 18 page No. 1133 rule No. 237.

([3548]) Appeal No. 405 of 42 S issued at the session of 29 May 1972 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 23 page No. 821 rule No. 186, Appeal No. 1282 of 35 S issued at the session of 6 December 1965 and published in the third part of the technical office book No. 16 page No. 906 rule No. 174.

([3549]) Appeal No. 1282 of 35 S issued on December 6, 1965 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 16 page No. 906 rule No. 174.

([3550]) Appeal No. 2955 of 32 S issued on March 4, 1963 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 14, page No. 144, rule No. 32.

([3551]) Article 410 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3552]) Appeal No. 1187 of 40 BC issued at the session of 22 November 1970 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 21 page No. 1118 rule No. 271.

authorize him to appeal in each case, and the lawsuit does not need to be specifically specified in the power of attorney document.[3553]

Sixth: Setting a hearing for the appeal

The clerk's office shall specify to the appellant in the appeal report the date of the hearing specified for his consideration, and this shall be considered an announcement of it, even if the report is from an agent, and this date shall not be before the lapse of three full days, and the Public Prosecution shall assign the other litigants to attend.[3554]

It is clear from this that the legislator has satisfied himself with the announcement of the opposition or the appellant - respectively - of the specific session as soon as the objection or appeal is decided, even if the report is from an agent.[3555]

The legislator obligated the Public Prosecution to assign the litigants other than the appellants to attend the session specified for hearing the appeal.[3556]

It is established that when the judgment was issued against the plaintiff in civil rights and ruled to cancel the appealed judgment and reject the civil lawsuit, without the plaintiff being notified of the civil rights to appear before the Court of Appeal and without hearing his defense in the lawsuit pursuant to the text of Article 408 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the judgment shall be based on a violation of a trial procedure, which invalidates it.[3557]

The appeal filed by the convicted person with a freedom-restricting penalty that is enforceable shall be forfeited if he does not apply for enforcement before the hearing in which the lawsuit is considered.

However, the court may, when considering the appeal, order a temporary suspension of the execution of the sentence or the release of the convict on bail or otherwise, until the appeal is decided.[3558]

([3553]) Appeal No. 640 of 13 S issued on March 1, 1943 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 6P, Part No. 1, Page No. 185, Rule No. 125.

([3554]) Article 408 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3555]) Appeal No. 8372 of 81 S issued at the hearing of 14 May 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 63, page 332, rule No. 52, Appeal No. 21514 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 31 July 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21353 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 25 July 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15513 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 1 June 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15605 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 4 May 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4625 of 65 S issued at the hearing of March 4, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25337 of 63 S issued at the hearing of July 28, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20055 of 64 S issued at the hearing of June 5, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 787 of 68 S issued at the hearing of May 12, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 623 of 68 S issued at the hearing of April 14, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5746 of 63 S issued at the hearing of November 7 For the year 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8858 of 61 s issued at the session of October 8, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14631 of 62 s issued at the session of September 27, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 48, page No. 937, rule No. 141, Appeal No. 62266 of 59 s issued at the session of November 4, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 43, page No. 988, rule No. 152, Appeal No. 1142 of 43 s issued at the session of December 30, 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 24, page No. 1283, rule No. 261.

([3556]) Appeal No. 7657 of 62 S issued at the session of 7 June 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51 page No. 499 rule No. 96, Appeal No. 2487 of 50 S issued at the session of 30 April 1981 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 32 page No. 445 rule No. 78.

([3557]) Appeal No. 8024 of 69 s issued at the session of January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9951 of 69 s issued at the session of May 5, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21020 of 66 s issued at the session of September 29, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23575 of 65 s issued at the session of October 16, 2002 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 53 page 965 Rule No. 160, Appeal No. 21090 of 68 s issued at the session of February 10, 2001 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 52 page 269 Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 22334 of 62 s issued at the session of April 17, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8451 of 60 s issued at the session of May 20, 1999 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 50 page 324 Rule No. 74.

([3558]) Article 412 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

This means that the forfeiture of the appeal is a mandatory penalty imposed on the appellant if he does not apply for the enforcement of the freedom-restricting penalty that must be enforced before the hearing specified for the consideration of his appeal, in order to prevent the abuse of the right of appeal and out of respect for the enforceable judgment, which is a procedural penalty that removes the right of the accused to initiate the appeal - which has been available to him since the issuance of the appealed judgment - by the court on its own initiative without paying attention to the appeal order in terms of form)[3559](.

The ruling stipulates that the appellant's failure to implement before the hearing specified for the hearing of his appeal shall not be due to a compelling excuse.[3560]

Whereas the legal axiom stipulates that what is required by Article 412 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to accept the appeal from the appellant to implement the sentence before the hearing is only when such implementation is legally obligatory, which does not happen if the act attributed to the accused is not punishable by a penalty restricting freedom.[3561]

It is also not verified if the penalty initially imposed is a fine.[3562]

This is not achieved in the event that the appellant pays the bail prescribed in the primary judgment.[3563]

It is also not achieved if the crime attributed to the accused has lapsed with the lapse of the period.[3564]

It is also not achieved in the event that the sentence of imprisonment is suspended and the accused is the only appellant, which means that the appellate court must first consider whether enforcement is obligatory and as long as it is not, and if it accepts it, it shall decide on the lawsuit.[3565]

Article 412 of the Criminal Procedure Law made the forfeiture of the appeal dependent on the convict's failure to apply for execution before the hearing, thus stating that his appeal shall not be forfeited when he has submitted for execution until the time of the appeal on his case on the day of the hearing, as long as the execution on him has become a fait accompli before the hearing of the appeal. Whenever he has appeared before the court at the time of the appeal on his case on the day of the hearing, he, by his appearance, has placed himself at the disposal of the dominant authority for execution, without regard to whether the dominant authority for

---

([3559]) Appeal No. 4211 of 58 S issued on 27 November 1989 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 40 page No. 1084 rule No. 173.

([3560]) Appeal No. 6780 of 53 S issued in the session of April 10, 1984 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 35 page No. 408 rule No. 89.

([3561]) Appeal No. 23462 of 66 S issued at the hearing of September 18, 2006 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 57, page 776, rule No. 80, Appeal No. 21168 of 66 S issued at the hearing of July 25, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 699 of 69 S issued at the hearing of March 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 699 of 69 S issued at the hearing of March 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1549 of 68 S issued at the hearing of March 22, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18447 of 64 S issued at the hearing of December 24, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1105 of 22 S issued at the hearing of December 30, 1952 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 4, page 285, rule No. 111.

([3562]) Appeal No. 15240 of 61 s issued at the session of 13 April 1998 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 49 page No. 545 rule No. 71, Appeal No. 383 of 51 s issued at the session of 6 December 1981 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 32 page No. 1058 rule No. 187.

([3563]) Appeal No. 23607 of 59 S issued at the session of 26 December 1994 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 45 page No. 1234 rule No. 193, Appeal No. 62266 of 59 S issued at the session of 4 November 1992 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 43 page No. 988 rule No. 152.

([3564]) Appeal No. 48 of 68 S issued at the session of February 23, 2004 (unpublished).

([3565]) Appeal No. 2801 of 65 S issued at the session of March 13, 2001 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 52, page No. 324, rule No. 52, Appeal No. 41721 of 59 S issued at the session of January 29, 1996 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 47, page No. 141, rule No. 20.

execution has taken the enforcement action before him before or after the hearing, or has failed in its duty to do so after he has placed himself at its disposal)[3566](.

The execution of the judgment does not require the writing of the execution order in preparation for the placement of the accused in prison, but it is sufficient that he has placed himself at the disposal of the authority controlling the execution before the hearing, without regard to whether this authority has taken measures before him to implement before or after the hearing. The accused, if he appeared before the Court of Appeal to decide on the subject of his appeal from a judgment covered by the enforcement, the execution on him has become a fait accompli prior to the hearing of the appeal.[3567]

It is decided that the text of Article 412 of the Code of Criminal Procedure indicates that the forfeiture of the appeal is a mandatory penalty imposed on the appellant sentenced to a custodial sentence if he does not submit to the execution of the sentence before the session specified for the consideration of his appeal.[3568]

The penalty for forfeiture of the appeal shall be that the appeal is filed by the convicted person and that the penalty restricting freedom shall be enforceable with proof that it is not submitted for execution before the hearing, and it shall not be enforceable if the appeal is filed by a non-convicted person.[3569]

If Article 412 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has made the forfeiture of the appeal dependent on the convict's failure to submit the execution before the hearing and it is not necessary to enforce it only when the execution is due and it is achieved if the bail specified in the preliminary judgment is not paid, which was initiated to ensure that the appellant attends the hearing and does not flee from the judgment that is issued, then the failure to pay it would still be enforceable and the aforementioned Article 412 would become applicable.[3570]

([3566]) Appeal No. 2775 of 69 S issued at the hearing of 14 May 2007 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 58 page No. 415 rule No. 82, Appeal No. 16221 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 9 November 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11134 of 63 S issued at the hearing of 1 January 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7730 of 63 S issued at the hearing of 27 October 1997 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 1158 rule No. 173, Appeal No. 27770 of 59 S issued at the 27th session of October 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 898 rule No. 140, Appeal No. 1535 of 57 S issued at the 8th session of December 1988 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 39 page No. 1257 rule No. 194, Appeal No. 3702 of 58 S issued at the 13th session of October 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 39 page No. 905 rule No. 135, Appeal No. 6965 of 55 S issued at the 27th session of March 1988 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 39 Page 508 Rule No. 74, Appeal No. 3239 of 54 S issued at the 25th session of December 1984 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 35 Page 958 Rule No. 214, Appeal No. 5010 of 52 S issued at the 14th session of December 1982 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 33 Page 988 Rule No. 204, Appeal No. 4331 of 51 s issued at the session of February 3, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 33 page No. 133 rule No. 26, Appeal No. 502 of 48 s issued at the session of October 15, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 29 page No. 692 rule No. 136, Appeal No. 1516 of 27 s issued at the session of December 16, 1957 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 8 page No. 993 rule No. 271, Appeal No. 2164 of 23 s issued At the session of January 19, 1954, published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 5, page No. 272, rule No. 90.

([3567]) Appeal No. 3467 of 62 S issued at the session of September 19, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52, page No. 647, rule No. 118, Appeal No. 6965 of 55 S issued at the session of March 27, 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 39, page No. 508, rule No. 74, Appeal No. 1738 of 29 S issued at the session of February 2, 1960 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 11, page No. 139, rule No. 28, Appeal No. 1516 of 27 S issued at the session of December 16, 1957 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 8, page No. 993, rule No. 271.

([3568]) Appeal No. 1063 of 66 S issued at the session of February 24, 2005 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 162 rule No. 22.

([3569]) Appeal No. 8374 of 69 S issued at the session of January 23, 2006 (unpublished).

([3570]) Appeal No. 21073 of 66 s issued at the session of January 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13163 of 65 s issued at the session of March 15, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3467 of 62 s issued at the session of September 19, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52, page No. 647, rule No. 118, Appeal No. 3467 of 62 s issued at the session of September 19, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52, page No. 647, rule No. 118, Appeal No. 13984 of 64 s issued at

The penalty of forfeiture of the appeal shall not be imposed except when examining the appeal of the accused against the judgment of the court of first instance. If the appeal court fails to consider the appeal of the accused, it shall rule the forfeiture of the appeal and shall be subject in its judgment to the judiciary on the merits of the case, and its decision not to appeal against it shall become final from the Public Prosecution, it shall not require the forfeiture of the appeal for the first time when considering the objection of the accused to the appeal in absentia judgment because he has acquired a right in the consideration of the merits of the case that he may not be deprived of it due to an error committed by the court.[3571]

Seventh: Appeal Review Procedures

1. Preparation of Summary Report

One of the members of the circuit entrusted with the judgment in the appeal shall draw up a report signed by him, and this report must include a summary of the facts and circumstances of the case, evidence of proof and denial, and all sub-issues that have been filed and the procedures that have been completed.[3572]

Writing a summary report is an essential element in the proceedings before the Court of Appeal.[3573]

The law required that one of the members of the circuit entrusted with the judgment in the appeal submit a report signed by him, including a summary of the facts and circumstances of the case, evidence of proof and denial, and all the sub-issues that occurred, the procedures that took place, and the obligation to read it before any other procedure so that the judiciary knows what is recorded in the lawsuit papers in order to understand the statements made by the litigants and to facilitate the review of the papers before the judgment is issued. Otherwise, the court will have overlooked one of the essential procedures necessary for the validity of its judgment.[3574]

---

the session of April 12, 2000 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 51, page No. 413, rule No. 76, Appeal No. 4492 of 56 s issued at the session of December 29, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 37, page No. 1141, rule No. 219, Appeal No. 2266 of 49 s issued at the session of April 2, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 31, page No. 478, rule No. 89.

([3571]) Appeal No. 7563 of 59 S issued at the session of 23 April 1992 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 43 page No. 420 rule No. 63.

([3572]) Article 411 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3573]) Appeal No. 4745 of 88 S issued at the 4th session of November 2018, Appeal No. 2005 of 78 S issued at the 5th session of January 2017.

([3574]), Appeal No. 10649 of 85 S issued at the hearing of April 17, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6829 of 85 S issued at the hearing of April 2, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31822 of 83 S issued at the hearing of June 5, 2014, Appeal No. 3388 of 4 S issued at the hearing of October 27, 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64, page No. 866, rule No. 132, Appeal No. 8926 of 82 S issued at the hearing of May 19, 2013, Appeal No. 8926 of 82 S issued at the hearing of 19 May 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12023 of 79 S issued at the hearing of 1 March 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10318 of 74 S issued at the hearing of 25 February 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6936 of 67 S issued at the hearing of 1 June 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7103 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 6 April 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32313 of 69 S issued at the hearing of 14 November 2005 and published in a letter Technical Office No. 56 Page No. 565 Rule No. 88, Appeal No. 8117 of 66 S issued at the hearing of April 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1528 of 66 S issued at the hearing of January 1, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4614 of 66 S issued at the hearing of December 19, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 757 of 62 S issued at the hearing of February 6, 2002 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 53 Page No. 232 Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 10344 of 64 S issued at the session of January 15, 2000 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 51, page No. 52, rule No. 6, Appeal No. 5847 of 61 S issued at the session of November 17, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 1303, rule No. 185, Appeal No. 27954 of 59 S issued at the session of November 23, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45, page No. 1022, rule No. 159, Appeal No. 3578 of 56 S issued at the 22nd session of February 1987, published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 38, page No. 310, rule No. 45, Appeal No. 4619 of 56 S issued at the 25th session of December 1986, published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 37, page No. 1135, rule No. 217, Appeal No. 4890 of 54 S issued at the 14th session of May 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 36, page No. 651, rule No. 115, Appeal No. 2672 of 54 s issued at the hearing of

The data mentioned in Article 411 of the Criminal Procedure Law shall be mentioned in the summary report if the court communicates with the subject matter of the case, but if it is in the process of deciding on the formal conditions that must be met to accept the appeal, there is nothing to prevent the summary decision from referring only to the fulfillment or non-fulfilment of those conditions - that is, to the extent required by the decision in the form)[3575](.

However, the summary report is just a statement that allows the members of the Authority to familiarize themselves with the entire facts and circumstances of the lawsuit, and the investigations and procedures that have been carried out in it. The law did not entail the deficiency or error of the report as a result of any invalidity attached to the judgment issued in the lawsuit.[3576]

November 14, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 35 page 772 rule No. 172, Appeal No. 633 of 51 s issued at the hearing of November 18, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 32 page No. 938 rule No. 161, Appeal No. 595 of 49 s issued at the hearing of March 19, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 page No. 424 rule No. 77, Appeal No. 105 of 45 s issued at the hearing of March 9, 1975 Published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 26, page No. 217, rule No. 48, Appeal No. 1256 of 25 S issued at the session of February 21, 1956 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 7, page No. 247, rule No. 74.

([3575]) Appeal No. 17966 of 66 S issued at the session of June 1, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4413 of 66 S issued at the session of April 20, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20438 of 65 S issued at the session of November 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 827 of 26 S issued at the session of November 27, 1956 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 7, page No. 1191, rule No. 331.

([3576]) Appeal No. 23024 of 4 Q issued on February 27, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2788 of 5 Q issued on September 5, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2788 of 5 Q issued on September 5, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22573 of 4 Q issued on January 15, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22108 of 83 Q issued on November 27, 2014, published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page 891, Rule No. 117, Appeal No. 8789 of 6 Q issued on September 30, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 761, Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 8385 of 4 Q issued on July 25, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 745, Rule No. 110, Appeal No. 2257 of 83 Q issued on July 7, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4639 of 67 Q issued on December 7, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22444 of 66 Q issued on July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19182 of 66 Q issued on July 31, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22707 of 66 Q issued on July 25, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21865 of 66 Q issued on July 25, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24241 of 67 Q issued on July 2, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20687 of 66 Q issued on July 2, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18090 of 66 Q issued on June 5, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6045 of 67 Q issued on May 18, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15492 of 66 Q issued on May 4, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10253 of 67 Q issued on October 20, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13303 of 67 Q issued on September 22, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12451 of 66 Q issued on May 19, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26256 of 66 Q issued on January 6, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20378 of 68 Q issued on July 22, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2236 of 68 Q issued on May 27, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8955 of 66 Q issued on April 1, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17158 of 65 Q issued on February 18, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11836 of 65 Q issued on January 15, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12025 of 65 Q issued on December 11, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3357 of 65 Q issued on November 20, 2003, Appeal No. 8004 of 65 Q issued on October 16, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7174 of 65 Q issued on October 2, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10252 of 65 Q issued on July 24, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26021 of 64 Q issued on May 15, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16065 of 64 Q issued on April 15, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 549, Rule No. 67, Appeal No. 6757 of 63 Q issued on September 26, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18708 of 63 Q issued on May 16, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11621 of 63 Q issued on September 22, 1999, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 457, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 16955 of 63 Q issued on March 14, 1999, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 174, Rule No. 39, Appeal No. 12955 of 63 Q issued on December 30, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1550, Rule No. 222, Appeal No. 2370 of 62 Q issued on October 18, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1117, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 11562 of 60 Q issued on March 25, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 479, Rule No. 62, Appeal No. 1820 of 60 Q issued on April 7, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 341, Rule No. 46, Appeal No. 62266 of 59 Q issued on November 4, 1992, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 43, page 988, Rule No. 152, Appeal No. 12765 of 59 Q issued on April 11, 1991, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 608, Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 5453 of 57 Q issued on March 3, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 377, Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 2117 of 56 Q issued on May 21, 1986, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 569, Rule No. 112, Appeal No. 7274 of 53 Q issued on May 29, 1984, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 538, Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 4419 of 51 Q issued on February 8, 1982, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 159, Rule No. 32, Appeal No. 508 of 48 Q issued on October 16, 1978, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 699, Rule No. 138, Appeal No. 2081 of 33 Q issued on

The loss of the summary report after its recitation - assuming its occurrence - does not invalidate the procedures.[3577]

The law does not require the name of those who read the summary report from the members of the circuit, so the judgment is not defective in that it does not refer to the name of the recipe of those who read the report as long as it is proven that it has already been read, as the law does not require the name of the recipe of those who read the summary report from the members of the circuit.[3578]

It is established that the law, although it required the signature of the rapporteur on the summary report, did not provide for nullity because the report was free of signature or because the minutes of the session were free of mention of its status.[3579]

March 23, 1964, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 15, page 206, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 17085 of 4 Q issued on October 28, 2014, published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page 760, Rule No. 96, Appeal No. 3388 of 4 Q issued on October 27, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 866, Rule No. 132, Appeal No. 3388 of 4 Q issued on October 27, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 866, Rule No. 132, Appeal No. 9145 of 4 Q issued on May 15, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7853 of 66 Q issued on April 7, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3134 of 67 Q issued on March 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24240 of 65 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5511 of 65 Q issued on November 17, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10667 of 67 Q issued on November 16, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18327 of 62 Q issued on May 27, 1997, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 663, Rule No. 99, Appeal No. 1508 of 58 Q issued on April 30, 1989, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 547, Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 313 of 54 Q issued on October 14, 1984, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 658, Rule No. 143, Appeal No. 471 of 46 Q issued on October 10, 1976, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 715, Rule No. 162, Appeal No. 159 of 41 Q issued on October 3, 1971, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 22, page 517, Rule No. 125, Appeal No. 815 of 39 Q issued on October 13, 1969, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 20, page 1047, Rule No. 206, Appeal No. 2739 of 67 Q issued on March 16, 2006, Appeal No. 12270 of 67 Q issued on October 18, 2004, published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page 681, Rule No. 103, Appeal No. 15275 of 67 Q issued on February 20, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20955 of 62 Q issued on December 3, 1997, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 1345, Rule No. 204, Appeal No. 24657 of 62 Q issued on December 22, 1994, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 1222, Rule No. 191, Appeal No. 955 of 61 Q issued on November 2, 1992, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 43, page 947, Rule No. 148, Appeal No. 87 of 27 Q issued on March 12, 1957, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 8, page 247, Rule No. 70.

([3577]) Appeal No. 5002 of 5 S issued at the 25th session of February 2016 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 67, page No. 260, rule No. 31, Appeal No. 24742 of 85 S issued at the 21st session of February 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1399 of 85 S issued at the 21st session of January 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21602 of 84 S issued at the 22nd session of March 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66, page No. 319, rule No. 45, appeal No. 11609 of 2015 4S issued at the hearing of 21 October 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2144 of 67 S issued at the hearing of 19 October 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6074 of 67 S issued at the hearing of 18 May 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7785 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 7 April 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20350 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 6 January 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6944 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 25 March 2004 and published in the Office's letter Technical No. 55, page No. 278, rule No. 40, Arab Republic of Egypt, unpublished judgments, Court of Cassation, Criminal Chamber of Counsel, Appeal No. 29058 of 71 S issued at the hearing of October 2, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3088 of 64 S issued at the hearing of March 20, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10890 of 63 S issued at the hearing of October 3, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13533 of 65 S issued at the hearing of May 16, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18790 of 61 S issued at the hearing of January 4, 2000 and published in the Technical Office Book No. 51, page 33, rule No. 3, Appeal No. 18095 of 59 S issued at the hearing of October 5, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 44, page 759, rule No. 117, Appeal No. 1368 of 35 S issued at the hearing of February 8, 1966 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 17, page 115, rule No. 21.

([3578]) Appeal No. 12270 of 67 s issued at the session of 18 October 2004 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 55, page 681, rule No. 103, Appeal No. 1656 of 66 s issued at the session of 1 January 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14184 of 67 s issued at the session of 21 December 2003 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 54, page No. 1256, rule No. 176, Appeal No. 1635 of 48 s issued at the session of 28 January 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 30, page No. 171, rule No. 33, Appeal No. 61 of 48 s issued at the session of 13 February 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 29, page No. 162, rule No. 28.

([3579]) Appeal No. 61 of 48 s issued at the session of February 13, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 29 page No. 162 rule No. 28, Appeal No. 655 of 38 s issued at the session of June 3, 1968 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 19 page No. 645 rule No. 130, Appeal No. 905 of 33 s issued at the session of March 2, 1964 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 15 page No. 159 rule No. 33, Appeal No. 618 of

The text of Article 411 of the Criminal Procedure Law clearly indicates that the summary report is in writing, and that it is one of the papers of the lawsuit that must be found in its file. Failure to put this report in writing is a failure in one of the substantive procedures that defects the judgment and invalidates it. It is not indispensable for this report for one of the members to read the wording of the accusation and the text of the primary judgment. This is a non-serious work that does not replace the obligation to implement the law by drawing up a written report that the other two judges can rely on in understanding the lawsuit.[3580]

While the law requires that the report be in writing, on the other hand, the law did not require that the report be written privately or on a particular paper. Therefore, editing it against the case file does not result in any nullity.[3581]

The result of the absence of the summary report of the lawsuit papers is the failure of the court to fulfill its status, even if it stipulates in its judgment that it is fulfilled, even if this statement is not denied by challenging forgery.[3582]

It is sufficient that the summary report was read out at the hearing in which the case was considered, and it is not disputed that the validity of this procedure is that the report was developed by a body other than the one that adjudicated the case, as the Rapporteur for this report stated that he - having seen the case papers - considered that the elements and facts contained in the report are sufficient to express what he concluded from his side to it, and that he did not find a need to draw up another report.[3583]

It is decided that the judgment completes the minutes of the session in proving the reading of the summary report and the contested judgment proved the reading of that report, so it is not inconceivable that the proof of this reading was mentioned in the preamble of the contested judgment as long as the head of the department that issued the judgment signed it with its clerk in accordance with Article 312 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which indicates its approval of the statements contained therein, the requirements of the legislator in this regard shall have been achieved.[3584]

2- Hearing the appellant's statements

The statements of the appellant and the aspects based on his appeal shall be heard after reading the report - and before expressing an opinion on the lawsuit from the author of the

---

23 s issued at the session of May 18, 1953 and published in the third part of the Technical Office book No. 4 page No. 837 rule No. 305.

([3580]) Appeal No. 18475 of 65 S issued at the 20th session of April 2004 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 55 Page 433 Rule No. 57, Appeal No. 10124 of 59 S issued at the 29th session of October 1992 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 43 Page 943 Rule No. 147, Appeal No. 4613 of 58 S issued at the 3rd session of May 1990 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 41 Page 665 Rule No. 114, Appeal No. 1719 of 55 S issued at the 16th session of October 1985 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 36 Page 872 Rule No. 156, Appeal No. 185 of 48 S issued at the 12th session of June 1978 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 29 Page 607 Rule No. 117.

([3581]) Appeal No. 557 of 25 S issued in the session of October 10, 1955 and published in the fourth part of the book of the Technical Office No. 6 page No. 1217 rule No. 356.

([3582]) Appeal No. 4613 of 58 s issued at the session of May 3, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 41 page No. 665 rule No. 114, Appeal No. 185 of 48 s issued at the session of June 12, 1978 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 29 page No. 607 rule No. 117, Appeal No. 94 of 47 s issued at the session of May 9, 1977 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 28 page No. 581 rule No. 122.

([3583]) Appeal No. 4419 of 51 s issued at the session of February 8, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 33 page No. 159 rule No. 32, Appeal No. 508 of 48 s issued at the session of October 16, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 29 page No. 699 rule No. 138.

([3584]) Appeal No. 4419 of the year 51 S issued at the session of February 8, 1982 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 33 page No. 159 rule No. 32, Appeal No. 1635 of the year 48 S issued at the session of January 28, 1979 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 30 page No. 171 rule No. 33.

report or the rest of the members - and then the rest of the litigants shall speak, and the accused shall be the last to speak.[3585]

If the judgment is issued without the defendant presenting his defense in response to a memorandum submitted by the plaintiff with civil rights accepted by the court and the result of the defense is stated in its judgment, which invalidates the trial procedures for violating the defendant's rights in the defense, and this does not change that the court has authorized the submission of memoranda to whoever the litigants want, as this does not change the rules that guarantee the fairness of the litigation and not ignorance of the litigation against whoever was a party to it and that the accused is the last to speak.[3586]

However, if the accused does not ask the court to hear him, he shall be deemed to have waived his right to be the last to speak, considering that he did not have or has nothing left to say at the conclusion of the trial, and does not invalidate the trial.[3587]

The question of the accused about his charge is obligatory only before the court of first instance, but on appeal, the law did not require this question, but it is obligatory to start - after reading the report submitted by one of the judges - to hear the statements of the appellant, and then the rest of the litigants make their statements and the accused is the last to speak.[3588]

If the Public Prosecution and the civil plaintiff plead after hearing the testimony of witnesses, there is no objection in the law to prevent this, but it is prohibited that the accused is not the last to speak.[3589]

3. Hearing of witnesses

The court shall issue its judgment after reviewing the papers.[3590]

It is established that the court of second instance rules according to the original on the requirement of the papers, and it does not conduct investigations except what it deems necessary to conduct or complete what the court of first instance should have conducted. The original is that the appellate court originally rules from the fact of the papers and is not legally obligated to hear witnesses or conduct an investigation except as it deems necessary to meet a shortage in it or in response to a substantive defense presented by the opponent for whose trial the criminal litigation was held. This right corresponds to the duty of the appellate court is for one of its members to submit an updated report to be read at the hearing, which is the only procedure that attests to the oral investigation of the pleading in the appeal trial)[3591](.

The violation of the right of defense shall not be achieved if the court turns away from the request for the re-hearing of witnesses as long as it does not see for itself the need for it, and as

---

([3585]) Article 411 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3586]) Appeal No. 882 of 50 S issued at the session of February 25, 1981 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 32 page No. 182 rule No. 28, Appeal No. 292 of 43 S issued at the session of May 28, 1973 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 24 page No. 672 rule No. 139.
([3587]) Appeal No. 50614 of 74 S issued at the 7th session of December 2005 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 56, page No. 691, rule No. 105, Appeal No. 737 of 47 S issued at the 5th session of December 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28, page No. 1043, rule No. 212, Appeal No. 1023 of 21 S issued at the 31st session of December 1951 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 3, page No. 347, rule No. 132.
([3588]) Appeal No. 855 of 3S issued at the session of January 16, 1933, published in the first part of the set of legal rules, third year, page No. 108, rule No. 75, Appeal No. 1129 of 47S issued at the session of November 6, 1930, published in the first part of the set of legal rules, second year, page No. 80, rule No. 86.
([3589]) Appeal No. 125 of 46 S issued at the session of December 20, 1928 and published in the first part of the set of legal rules, the first year, page No. 85, rule No. 62.
([3590]) Article 411 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3591]) Appeal No. 1007 of 44 S issued at the session of 3 December 1974 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 25 page No. 808 rule No. 173, Appeal No. 1970 of 35 S issued at the session of 28 February 1966 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 17 page No. 211 rule No. 39.

long as the court of first instance has achieved the oral pleading by hearing the witnesses for the prosecution and the witnesses for the defense.[3592]

However, the law requires that the appellate court hear the witnesses who should have been heard before the court of first instance by itself, or by a judge delegating him for that purpose, and meet any other deficiency in the investigation procedures.

In all cases, it is justified to order what it deems necessary to complete an investigation or hear witnesses.

No witness may be assigned to attend unless ordered to do so by the court.[3593]

The established principle is that the criminal trial must be based on the oral investigation conducted by the court at the hearing and hear witnesses as long as possible, but it is permissible for it to decide to recite the statements of the witness if it is not possible to hear his testimony or if the accused or his defender accepts this. It is not permissible to violate this principle, which was assumed by the street in the rules of the trial, whatever it may be, except with the explicit or implicit waiver of the litigants. This is not objected to that the appellate court does not conduct an investigation in the hearing, but rather its judiciary is based on what it heard from the litigants and what it extracts from the papers presented to it, as its right to this scope is limited by the need to take into account the requirements of the right of defense, but that the law obligated it to hear by itself or by one of the judges - delegating it to that - the witnesses who should have been heard before the court of first instance and fulfilling all the shortcomings in the investigation procedures, and accordingly it must include in its judgment evidence that it faced the elements of the lawsuit and familiarized itself with them in a way that discloses that it was aware of them and balanced them. If the appellate court neglected to request the hearing of witnesses who did not respond to the first court degree to the request to hear them - its judgment is flawed by the lack of causation as well as the violation of the right of defense.[3594]

([3592]) Appeal No. 1007 of 44 S issued at the session of December 3, 1974 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 25 page No. 808 rule No. 173.

([3593]) Article 413 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3594]) Appeal No. 6959 of 67 Q issued on June 1, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10834 of 65 Q issued on February 20, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 288, Rule No. 30, Appeal No. 10510 of 66 Q issued on May 5, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24397 of 67 Q issued on February 23, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24397 of 67 Q issued on February 23, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 39817 of 73 Q issued on January 27, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5705 of 65 Q issued on May 28, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 537, Rule No. 96, Appeal No. 4575 of 65 Q issued on February 12, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 167, Rule No. 31, Appeal No. 15117 of 64 Q issued on June 5, 1996, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 47, page 732, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 12681 of 59 Q issued on November 7, 1991, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 1150, Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 1620 of 59 Q issued on January 31, 1991, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 217, Rule No. 30, Appeal No. 3077 of 57 Q issued on November 10, 1987, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 931, Rule No. 171, Appeal No. 4749 of 56 Q issued on January 28, 1987, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 148, Rule No. 22, Appeal No. 2143 of 51 Q issued on December 17, 1981, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 1127, Rule No. 201, Appeal No. 638 of 47 Q issued on November 6, 1977, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 28, page 909, Rule No. 189, Appeal No. 829 of 46 Q issued on January 3, 1977, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 28, page 25, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 451 of 46 Q issued on October 3, 1976, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 691, Rule No. 155, Appeal No. 1931 of 45 Q issued on March 15, 1976, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 316, Rule No. 66, Appeal No. 319 of 45 Q issued on May 4, 1975, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 26, page 375, Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 1793 of 44 Q issued on March 2, 1975, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 26, page 197, Rule No. 43, Appeal No. 788 of 43 Q issued on December 16, 1973, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 24, page 1228, Rule No. 249, Appeal No. 241 of 43 Q issued on June 3, 1973, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 24, page 696, Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 241 of 43 Q issued on June 3, 1973, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 24, page 696, Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 259 of 42 Q issued on April 30, 1972, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 632, Rule No. 142, Appeal No. 229 of 42 Q issued on April 17, 1972, published in the second part

It is not appropriate in the principles of inference to pre-judge evidence that has not been put forward, and if the Court of Appeal has rejected the request to hear witnesses - proof and denial - who did not respond to the court of first instance to the request to hear them - and began to respond to the request to hear witnesses on his behalf by considering his residence on an estimate of the value of their testimony before hearing them, its judgment is flawed)[3595](.

However, in the event that the appellate court considers that there is an invalidity in the proceedings or in the judgment issued by the court of first instance in the matter, it shall correct the invalidity and rule on the lawsuit, in application of the text of Article 419 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Still, it shall not be obliged to hear the witnesses heard by the court of first instance again, as the invalidity is focused on the primary judgment and does not extend to the trial procedures that took place in accordance with the law as long as the court of first instance was competent to hear the lawsuit. The lawsuit was properly filed before it.[3596]

Eighth: Judgment on Appeal

Referral to the Public Prosecution

If the appellate court finds that the incident is a felony, or that it is a misdemeanor committed by newspapers or other means of publication on non-individuals, it shall rule not to have jurisdiction and refer the case to the Public Prosecution to take the necessary action in it.[3597]

This article applies in the case where the incident is presented to the Court of Appeal for the first time, not after a final judgment has been issued that the Misdemeanor Court does not have jurisdiction to consider it. If the judgment of the Court of Appeal decides to refer the case to the Criminal Court, it has erred in the application of the law.[3598]

---

of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 583, Rule No. 129, Appeal No. 20 of 42 Q issued on March 26, 1972, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 448, Rule No. 98, Appeal No. 20 of 42 Q issued on March 26, 1972, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 448, Rule No. 98, Appeal No. 66 of 42 Q issued on March 5, 1972, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 291, Rule No. 68, Appeal No. 66 of 42 Q issued on March 5, 1972, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 291, Rule No. 68, Appeal No. 15 of 42 Q issued on February 21, 1972, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 214, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 1868 of 40 Q issued on January 18, 1971, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 22, page 86, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 1104 of 40 Q issued on October 4, 1970, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 21, page 953, Rule No. 225, Appeal No. 516 of 40 Q issued on May 24, 1970, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 21, page 721, Rule No. 170, Appeal No. 114 of 37 Q issued on February 13, 1967, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 18, page 197, Rule No. 39, Appeal No. 1899 of 36 Q issued on February 7, 1967, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 18, page 178, Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 1445 of 36 Q issued on October 31, 1966, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 1049, Rule No. 197, Appeal No. 1753 of 35 Q issued on February 22, 1966, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 185, Rule No. 33, Appeal No. 941 of 35 Q issued on November 1, 1965, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 16, page 761, Rule No. 143, Appeal No. 1626 of 34 Q issued on November 30, 1964, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 15, page 765, Rule No. 151, Appeal No. 970 of 31 Q issued on June 26, 1962, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 13, page 567, Rule No. 143, Appeal No. 514 of 27 Q issued on October 7, 1957, published in the third part of Technical Office Book No. 8, page 754, Rule No. 202, Appeal No. 168 of 24 Q issued on March 29, 1954, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 5, page 437, Rule No. 148, Appeal No. 1242 of 22 Q issued on January 27, 1953, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 4, page 442, Rule No. 169, Appeal No. 1241 of 22 Q issued on December 17, 1952, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 4, page 252, Rule No. 99..

([3595]) Appeal No. 22974 of 4Q issued at the 6th session of December 2014 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 65, page No. 921, rule No. 121, Appeal No. 7718 of 82Q issued at the 24th session of December 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64, page No. 1043, rule No. 156, Appeal No. 20 of 42Q issued at the 26th session of March 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 23, page No. 448, rule No. 98.

([3596]) Appeal No. 1393 of 25 S issued in the session of April 10, 1956 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7 page No. 538 rule No. 157

See the following: the appellate court's correction of the nullity and the judgment in the lawsuit.

([3597]) Article 414 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3598]) Appeal No. 994 of 25 S issued at the session of March 20, 1956 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7 page No. 405 rule No. 118.

Appeal filed by the Public Prosecution

If the appeal is filed by the Public Prosecution, the court may confirm, annul or amend the judgment, whether against or in the interest of the accused. The sentence imposed may not be aggravated or the judgment of acquittal can be annulled except by unanimous opinion of the judges of the court.[3599]

In the interpretation of Article 417 of the Code of Procedure, it is decided that the appeal of any of the parties to the case reopens the dispute for its own benefit, except for the appeal of the Public Prosecution. It transfers the entire dispute regarding the criminal case in the interest of both parties - the accused and the prosecution. If the Public Prosecution appeals the first instance judgment, this allows the court of second instance to increase the penalty within the limits of the crime for which the accused was convicted. The prosecution's appeal restores the entire case to its original state and makes the appeal court resolve to assess the charge and its evidence, the penalty and the amount of the estimate it deems necessary to acquit or convict the accused and reduce the penalty to its minimum or increase it to its maximum limit without being obliged to state the reasons for this increase.[3600]

It is not valid in the law to say that the appeal filed by the Public Prosecution is subject to any restriction unless it is stipulated in the report that it is for a specific incident and not for another of the facts subject to trial, and the appeal of the Public Prosecution is not allocated because of it, but rather it transfers the entire case to the second instance court for the benefit of all parties to the lawsuit in relation to the criminal lawsuit, and it decides on it in a way that entitles it to consider in all its aspects unconstrained, including what the Public Prosecution puts in the report of its appeal or expresses in the session of requests.[3601]

This means that if the appeal is filed by the Public Prosecution, it is not permissible to increase the sentence imposed or to annul the judgment issued for acquittal except by unanimous opinion of the judges of the court. If the judgment of the Court of Appeal is issued to annul the initial judgment issued for the acquittal of the accused without mentioning that it was issued unanimously by the judges who issued it, this would, as ruled by the Court of Cassation, render the said judgment null and void in the decision to annul the acquittal, due to the failure of the condition of validity of the judgment of such annulment in accordance with the law.[3602]

It is required to combine the provisions of Articles 401 and 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by making it clear that the emphasis was unanimous and that both the appeal in absentia judgment issued on the basis of the prosecution's appeal and the judgment issued in opposition to the accused in that judgment are valid. Therefore, it is not before the Court of

---

([3599]) Article 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3600]) Appeal No. 7082 of 66 S issued at the session of June 3, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 49 page No. 790 rule No. 104, Appeal No. 1888 of 39 S issued at the session of March 23, 1970 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 21 page No. 450 rule No. 109, Appeal No. 1236 of 36 S issued at the session of November 7, 1966 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 17 page No. 1086 rule No. 203.
([3601]) Appeal No. 6115 of 53 S issued at the session of March 5, 1984 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 35 page No. 243 rule No. 50, Appeal No. 1274 of 42 S issued at the session of January 8, 1973 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 24 page No. 54 rule No. 14.
([3602]) Appeal No. 3944 of 64 s issued at the session of February 21, 1999 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 50 Page 132 Rule No. 28, Appeal No. 20867 of 59 s issued at the session of January 27, 1994 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 45 Page 164 Rule No. 25, Appeal No. 3747 of 56 s issued at the session of February 22, 1987 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 38 Page 313 Rule No. 46, Appeal No. 55 of 42 s issued at the session of March 6, 1972 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 23 Page 312 Rule No. 72, Appeal No. 49 of 25 s issued at the session of May 17, 1955 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 6 Page 1001 Rule No. 299, Appeal No. 2410 of 23 s issued at the session of February 8, 1954 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 5 Page 313 Rule No. 100.

Appeal, which rules in opposition, except to uphold the appealed judgment as long as the default judgment was not issued unanimously.[3603]

The judgment issued by the judgment of the Court of Appeal to uphold the appeal judgment in absentia opposed by the accused and the decision to cancel the judgment of acquittal issued by the court of first instance without mentioning that it was issued unanimously with the opinions of the judges is null and void, because the condition of the validity of the judgment of this annulment in accordance with the law is not sufficient in that the appeal judgment to cancel the acquittal judgment has been stipulated unanimously with the opinions of the judges because the opposition in the absentia judgment would return the case to its first state with regard to the opponent, so that if the court decides to rule in opposition to uphold the judgment in absentia issued to cancel the acquittal judgment, it must state in its judgment that it was issued unanimously with the opinions of the judges because the judgment in opposition, even if it was issued to uphold the appeal absentia judgment, but in fact it was ruled to cancel the judgment of acquittal from the court of first instance.[3604]

The unanimity of the judges of the court when aggravating the penalty or canceling the acquittal judgment is limited to cases of disagreement between them and the court of first instance in assessing the facts and evidence, and that these facts and evidence are sufficient in assessing the responsibility of the accused and his entitlement to punishment, or establishing proportionality between this responsibility and the amount of punishment, all within the limits of the law altruistically from the street in favor of the accused. As for considering the leveling of the rule of law, it is not correct to respond to the difference of fate that it applies to its correct face, it does not need unanimity, but it is not conceivable that unanimity is an excuse to exceed the limits of the law or omit one of its provisions[3605].

---

([3603]) Appeal No. 13831 of 67 s issued at the session of March 28, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29552 of 63 s issued at the session of February 26, 2003 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 54 page No. 322 rule No. 33, Appeal No. 2015 of 38 s issued at the session of February 10, 1969 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 20 page No. 240 rule No. 52, Appeal No. 548 of 24 s issued at the session of May 17, 1954 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 5 page No. 645 rule No. 216, Appeal No. 427 of 24 s issued at the session of May 10, 1954 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 5 page No. 589 rule No. 200.

([3604]) Appeal No. 5109 of 4Q issued at the session of May 19, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4918 of 4Q issued at the session of December 16, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7621 of 82Q issued at the session of February 24, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1889 of 67Q issued at the session of September 21, 2006, Appeal No. 5316 of 67Q issued at the session of May 4, 2006, Appeal No. 11031 of 67Q issued at the session of September 21, 2006. July 2005, Appeal No. 12463 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 19 May 2005, Appeal No. 1993 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 17 March 2005, Appeal No. 3171 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 3 March 2005, Appeal No. 14958 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 17 February 2005, Appeal No. 14957 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 3 February 2005, Appeal No. 24118 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 3 February 2005, Appeal No. 24198 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 3 From February 2005, Appeal No. 8126 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 16 October 2003, Appeal No. 838 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 26 May 2003, Appeal No. 885 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 26 May 2003, Appeal No. 585 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 14 April 2003, Appeal No. 593 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 14 April 2003, Appeal No. 571 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 14 April 2003, Appeal No. 574 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 14 April 2003, Appeal No. 591 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 14 April 2003, Appeal No. 14811 of 85 S issued at the hearing of 19 December 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66 Page No. 920 Rule No. 131, Appeal No. 14626 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 19 March 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55 Page No. 263 Rule No. 36, Appeal No. 10625 of 64 S issued at the hearing of 9 February 2000 Published in Technical Office Letter No. 51 Page No. 153 Rule No. 27, Appeal No. 18331 of 64 S issued at the session of January 26, 2000 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 51 Page No. 96 Rule No. 15, Appeal No. 7028 of 54 S issued at the session of November 10, 1985 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 36 Page No. 1002 Rule No. 182, Appeal No. 4041 of 54 S issued at the session of January 17, 1985 Published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 36 Page No. 98 Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 2682 of 50 S issued at the session of 16 April 1981 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 32 Page No. 363 Rule No. 65, Appeal No. 1535 of 49 S issued at the session of 3 February 1980 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 31 Page No. 169 Rule No. 34, Appeal No. 185 of 44 S issued at the session of 25 March 1974 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 25 Page No. 337 Rule No. 73, Appeal No. 1124 of 37 s issued at the session of 19 June 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 18 page No. 857 Rule No. 172, Appeal No. 476 of 36 s issued at the session of 30 May 1966 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 17 page No. 705 Rule No. 130, Appeal No. 2481 of 24 s issued at the session of 17 May 1955 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 6 page No. 998 Rule No. 298.

The weighting of the opinion of the judge of the court of first instance in the absence of unanimity is due to the fact that he conducted the investigation in the case and heard the witnesses himself, which suggests that the requirement of unanimity of the judges is limited to the case of disagreement in the assessment of facts and evidence and the assessment of punishment. As for considering the leveling of the rule of law, it is not correct to respond to a dispute, and the fate to apply it to its correct face does not require unanimity, but it is not imagined that unanimity is only to enable the law and to conduct its provisions, not to be a pretext for exceeding its limits or omitting one of its provisions. Whereas, the primary judgment did not rule on the subject of the lawsuit, but its judgment was limited to the lapse of the criminal lawsuit by the lapse of the period to the application of the provisions of the law. If the appellate court corrects that error, the statement that its judgment is invalid because it was not issued unanimously by the judges of the court is misplaced.[3606]

The ruling that the criminal lawsuit has lapsed is considered a presumption of innocence within the meaning of that article, so it is incumbent on the court to mention in its ruling that it was issued unanimously by the judges.[3607]

The same ruling applies to the civil rights plaintiff's appeal of the ruling issued to dismiss his case based on the acquittal of the accused because the incident was not proven, whether or not the Public Prosecution appealed it. Whenever the preliminary ruling acquitted the accused and rejected the civil lawsuit filed by the civil rights plaintiff, this ruling issued in the civil lawsuit and the compensation appeal may not be canceled except by unanimous opinion of the judges of the court, as is the case in the criminal lawsuit, due to the dependency between the two lawsuits on the one hand and the linkage of the compensation ruling to the proof of the criminal incident on the other hand.[3608]

([3605]) Appeal No. 6063 of 67 S issued at the session of May 18, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7895 of 66 S issued at the session of June 2, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 60 of 67 S issued at the session of October 25, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17875 of 65 S issued at the session of December 5, 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 797, rule No. 120, Appeal No. 1423 of 68 S issued at the session of December 22, 2004 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9378 of 60 S issued at the 8th session of October 1997 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 48 Page 1046 Rule No. 156, Appeal No. 1431 of 60 S issued at the 12th session of January 1997 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 48 Page 71 Rule No. 10, Appeal No. 14878 of 59 S issued at the 31st session of January 1993 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 44 Page 155 Rule No. 16, Appeal No. 3747 for the year 56 S issued at the session of February 22, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 38 page No. 313 rule No. 46, Appeal No. 7719 for the year 54 S issued at the session of January 2, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 36 page No. 43 rule No. 2, Appeal No. 537 for the year 48 S issued at the session of February 5, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 30 page No. 210 rule No. 41, Appeal No. 116 of 47 S issued at the hearing of May 15, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 586 rule No. 124, Appeal No. 444 of 40 S issued at the hearing of May 10, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 21 page No. 677 rule No. 160, Appeal No. 1266 of 36 S issued at the hearing of February 14, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 18 page No. 200 rule No. 40, Appeal No. 1939 of 35 S issued at the session of February 21, 1966 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 17, page No. 169, rule No. 31, Appeal No. 1879 of 34 S issued at the session of February 16, 1965 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 16, page No. 144, rule No. 33, Appeal No. 1554 of 29 S issued at the session of March 1, 1960 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 11, page No. 201, rule No. 39.

([3606]) Appeal No. 23928 of 67 S issued at the 25th session of July 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3747 of 56 S issued at the 22nd session of February 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 38 page No. 313 rule No. 46.

([3607]) Appeal No. 29504 of 67 S issued at the 22nd session of April 2007 (unpublished).

([3608]) Appeal No. 344 of 69 S issued at the session of February 13, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19904 of 66 S issued at the session of November 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10087 of 61 S issued at the session of October 21, 2001 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 52 Page 764 Rule No. 142, Appeal No. 1431 of 60 S issued at the session of January 12, 1997 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 48 Page 71 Rule No. 10, Appeal No. 47330 of 59 S issued at the session of November 25, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 47 page No. 1246

However, the conduct of the legislator in determining the rule of unanimity of the opinions of the judges of the Court of Appeal when aggravating the penalty or canceling the acquittal judgment - which is an exception to the general rule that he has drawn for the issuance of judgments by a majority of opinions - and listing it in Article 417 in its second paragraph supplementing the first paragraph of the appeal filed by the Public Prosecution alone, is apparent in limiting it to a case that offends the position of the accused in relation to the criminal incident alone, or when the civil compensation claimed in the civil lawsuit filed by association with the criminal lawsuit relates to the establishment of that criminal incident For the same reason on which that exception is based - whether the Public Prosecution appealed the judgment or not - its ruling does not apply to the last paragraph of the aforementioned article if it is related to the deterioration of the position of the accused in the civil lawsuit independently based on the appeal filed by the civil rights plaintiff in order to increase the amount of compensation decided at first instance after the ratio of the criminal incident to the accused has been achieved, which is not valid with the implementation of the judgment of measurement by settlement between this last case, in which the unanimous judgment was not included, and the case of the appeal of the Public Prosecution, whose judgment was stated in its breast alone because of the difference Bug in both cases)[3609](.

The street necessitated the convening of the consensus contemporary to the issuance of the judgment in the appeal to tighten the sentence imposed or cancel the acquittal sentence, but it indicated the direction of its desire - until the consensus is contemporary to the issuance of the judgment and does not have a following because this is what the judgment achieved its legislation, and therefore the provision of unanimity of views in conjunction with the pronouncement of the judgment to cancel the acquittal is a necessary condition for the validity of the ruling to cancel and to rule on the conviction, and if the lesson in the judgments is what the judge pronounces in the public session after hearing the lawsuit, it is not enough that the reasons for the judgment include what indicates the convening of the consensus as long as it is not proven in the judgment paper that these reasons have been publicly read in the pronouncement session with the operative part)[3610](.

The unanimity of the judges of the court in accordance with the text of Article 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is limited - in the field of criminal proceedings - to cases of increasing the penalty or canceling the acquittal judgment in the event of disagreement in the assessment of facts and evidence and the assessment of the penalty. As for the formal judgments, the law rule No. 180, Appeal No. 22592 of 59 S issued at the session of March 7, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 page No. 459 rule No. 65, Appeal No. 4632 of 58 S issued at the session of November 27, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 40 page No. 1088 rule No. 174, Appeal No. 556 of 1989 46 s issued at the session of 31 October 1976 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 27 Page 800 Rule No. 183, Appeal No. 151 of 40 s issued at the session of 16 March 1970 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 21 Page 395 Rule No. 97, Appeal No. 24725 of 59 s issued at the session of 25 October 1994 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 45 Page 893 Rule No. 139, Appeal No. 17480 of 59 S issued at the session of October 28, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 44 page No. 896 rule No. 141, Appeal No. 14290 of 60 S issued at the session of December 16, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 43 page No. 1165 rule No. 182, Appeal No. 6417 of 56 S issued at the session of April 8, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 38 page No. 582 rule No. 97, Appeal No. 537 of 48 S issued At the session of February 5, 1979, published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 30, page 210, rule No. 41, appeal No. 672 of 43 s issued in the session of October 21, 1973, published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 24, page No. 859, rule No. 178, appeal No. 823 of 25 s issued in the session of April 24, 1956, published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 7, page No. 646, rule No. 180, appeal No. 1019 of 24 s issued in the session of December 6, 1954, published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 6, page No. 245, rule No. 83.

---

([3609]) Appeal No. 943 of 33 S issued at the session of December 23, 1963 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 14 page No. 967 rule No. 177.

([3610]) Appeal No. 21274 of 64 S issued at the session of July 24, 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51 page No. 536 rule No. 104.

does not require that they be issued unanimously. This is the case of the contested judgment and the appeal in absentia judgment issued in support of the judgment in the preliminary objection that is not accepted to be lifted from a judgment that is not amenable to them. These judgments are the ones to which the previous judgments deciding on the subject matter are invalid because they were not issued unanimously by the opinions of the judges in the cases that require this, as it is not correct to delve into the recent judgments that were decided alone on the subject of the case and gained the force of the thing ruled on)[3611](.

Since the right of the prosecution to appeal is absolute, it shall proceed on the date prescribed for it, even if in the interest of the accused, as long as the judgment may be appealed, and it considers itself a face to that, and the end of the matter is that if it appeals the judgment issued in opposition, the appellate court may not exceed the sentence imposed by the primary judgment in absentia, so that the opponent is not harmed by his opposition, except if the prosecution has appealed this judgment, so avoiding the judgment is a mistake in the application of the law.[3612]

It is decided that the scope of the appeal is determined in the capacity of a plaintiff. The appeal of the Public Prosecution - which has no capacity to speak only about the criminal case and has nothing to do with the civil case - does not transfer the dispute before the Court of Appeal except with regard to the criminal case only in accordance with the rule of the relative effect of the appeal. Since the civil lawsuit has been resolved by rejecting it and this judiciary has become final by not challenging it from those who own it and it is the civil rights plaintiff alone, the appeal court's response to the civil lawsuit and the judiciary to the civil rights plaintiff with temporary compensation is a response to what it does not have the judiciary in and a separation of what was not transferred to it and was not presented to it in violation of the law.[3613]

Appeal filed by a person other than the Public Prosecution

If the appeal is filed by a person other than the Public Prosecution, the court may only confirm or amend the judgment in the interest of the appellant. If it rules that the appeal is forfeited, inadmissible, inadmissible, or rejected, it may sentence the appellant to a fine not exceeding five pounds.[3614]

It is decided that the rule that the status of the appellant should not be abused is a general rule of law that applies to all methods of appeal, whether ordinary or extraordinary.[3615]

([3611]) Appeal No. 7475 of 56 S issued on December 2, 1987 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 38 page No. 1057 rule No. 192.

([3612]) Appeal No. 33 of 44 s issued at the session of February 4, 1974 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 25 page No. 94 rule No. 21, Appeal No. 2317 of 52 s issued at the session of October 26, 1982 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 33 page No. 807 rule No. 165.

([3613]) Appeal No. 1644 of 47 S issued in the session of April 2, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 329 rule No. 61.

([3614]) Article No. 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and see: Appeal No. 8429 of 58 S issued at the hearing of March 16, 1989 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 40 page No. 416 rule No. 70, Appeal No. 87 of 55 S issued at the hearing of February 21, 1985 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 36 page No. 293 rule No. 49 The Court of Cassation ruled that: [It is established that the appellant is not harmed by his appeal in accordance with the provisions of the third paragraph of Article No. 417 of the Criminal Procedure Law. The contested judgment had tightened the sentence imposed on the appellant by the court of first instance by releasing the period of deposit based on his appeal alone. He has violated the law, which authorizes this court to correct this error.] Appeal No. 29223 of 67 BC issued at the session of April 15, 2007 (unpublished).

([3615]) Appeal No. 3858 of 67 S issued at the 6th session of April 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7527 of 79 S issued at the 7th session of March 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66, page No. 274, rule No. 37, Appeal No. 20535 of 83 S issued at the 2nd session of April 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 207, rule No. 21, Appeal No. 2020 of 69 S issued at the 12th session of February 2014 2007 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 58, Page No. 145, Rule No. 29, Appeal No. 19772 of 67 S issued in the session of May 12, 2005 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 56, Page No. 322, Rule No. 48, Appeal No. 18555 of 59 S issued in the session of March 23, 1992 and published in

Therefore, it is established that it is not permissible in law to increase the penalty imposed by the court of first instance if the appeal is filed by the accused alone without prosecution so as not to prejudice his appeal.[3616]

It is decided that the lesson in aggravating or reducing the penalty is the degree of severity in the order of penalties. However, if the court of first instance has sentenced the accused to two types of punishment, imprisonment and fine, the appellate court cannot increase the amount of the fine, even if it reduces the penalty of imprisonment or keeps its implementation as long as he is the appellant alone, and it has not harmed the appellant by his appeal as it did not achieve the innocence or reduction of the penalty as long as it imposed both types of punishment.[3617]

If the Public Prosecution did not appeal the primary judgment, it is not permissible for the Court of Appeal to punish the appellant accused with a penalty that was not included in the appealed judgment or to increase the amount of any of the penalties imposed by the aforementioned judgment because it has harmed him with the appeal filed by him, which is not permissible.[3618]

It is clear from this that if the appeal is filed by the accused alone without the Public Prosecution, the appellate court may not aggravate the sentence or rule that the court of first instance does not have jurisdiction to hear the case, if it is proven to it that the incident in which the lawsuit is filed is in fact a felony, because this harms the status of the appellant and is not before it in this case, except to uphold the initial conviction or amend it in the interest of the appellant after his implicit jurisdiction has acquired the force of the res judicata.[3619]

---

the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 43, Page No. 320, Rule No. 44, Appeal No. 7096 of 58 S issued in the session of January 31, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 41, Page No. 240, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 7096 of 58 s issued at the session of 31 January 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 page No. 240 rule No. 41, Appeal No. 1739 of 55 s issued at the session of 21 October 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 905 rule No. 163, Appeal No. 1262 of 37 s issued at the session of 23 October 1967 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 18 page No. 1008 rule No. 205.

([3616]) Appeal No. 1 of 72 s issued at the session of April 11, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23199 of 2 s issued at the session of May 18, 2013 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 64, page No. 642, rule No. 91, Appeal No. 24657 of 62 s issued at the session of December 22, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 45, page No. 1222, rule No. 191, appeal No. 18303 For the year 59 S issued in the session of May 16, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 42 Page 840 Rule No. 117, Appeal No. 81 of 55 S issued in the session of March 21, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 36 Page 444 Rule No. 75, Appeal No. 673 of 25 S issued in the session of November 14, 1955 and published in the fourth part of the Technical Office book No. 6 Page 1310 Rule No. 385, Appeal No. 151 of 43 S issued in the session of April 8, 1973 and published in the second part of the Office book Technician No. 24 Page No. 490 Rule No. 101

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The revocation of the stay of execution is considered an aggravation of the penalty even with the reduction of the amount of the fine imposed, or the reduction of the period of imprisonment imposed, the contested judgment has erred in the law], Appeal No. 15525 of 64 S issued at the session of October 17, 2000 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 51, page No. 657, rule No. 128, Appeal No. 4440 of 59 S issued at the session of June 9, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 42, page No. 918, rule No. 126

It also ruled that: [The contested judgment has aggravated the sentence imposed on the respondent by the Court of First Instance by releasing the period of the deposit as described on the basis of his appeal alone, it has violated the law, and then it had to be corrected by upholding the appealed judgment and making the penalty of the deposit for a period of one year], Appeal No. 13962 of 59 BC issued at the session of 23 April 1992 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 43 page 425 rule No. 64,.

([3617]) Appeal No. 1760 of 55 S issued at the 22nd session of October 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 36 page No. 915 rule No. 165, Appeal No. 5566 of 53 S issued at the 18th session of January 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 35 page No. 62 rule No. 11, Appeal No. 2416 of 49 S issued at the 8th session of June 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 31 page No. 717 rule No. 139.

([3618]) Appeal No. 18555 of 59 S issued at the session of March 23, 1992 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 43 page No. 320 rule No. 44.

([3619]) Appeal No. 16182 of 67 S issued at the session of May 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20237 of 64 S issued at the session of December 20, 2000 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 51 page 850 Rule No. 168, Appeal No. 24574 of 62 S issued at the session of April 22, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 49 page 603 Rule No. 78, Appeal No. 12791 For the year 62 S issued in the session of March 22, 1997 and published in the first part of the

If the appeal is filed by the accused alone without the Public Prosecution, the court cannot rule on the lack of jurisdiction of the court of first instance to hear the case, saying that the State Security Emergency Court is competent to adjudicate the case because of the abuse of the status of the accused, who cannot be harmed by the appeal filed by him alone, because his interest requires that he be tried before the ordinary courts with general jurisdiction in the consideration of all crimes and cases because the street has surrounded these courts with guarantees, represented by its formation of purely judicial elements, and its multiple degrees, and the right to challenge its judgments by way of cassation when its conditions are met, which are guarantees that are not available in the emergency judiciary, and the appeal court in this case only has to uphold the primary conviction or amend it for the benefit of the appellant after his implicit judiciary has acquired jurisdiction over the force of the judicial order.[3620]

Also, it is not in the interest of the accused to be tried before the State Security Court formed in accordance with the Emergency Law, because this is an affront to his position, which cannot be harmed by the appeal filed by him alone, because his interest requires, in the form of the lawsuit - to be tried before the ordinary courts of general jurisdiction in the consideration of all crimes and cases - except for what is excluded by a special text - because the street has surrounded these courts with guarantees, represented by its formation of purely judicial elements, and from the multiplicity of degrees, and the right to challenge its rulings by way of cassation when its conditions are met, and these guarantees are not available in the emergency judiciary.[3621]

However, when the court of second instance considered that the incident attributed to the accused was a felony and not a misdemeanor, and indicated in the records of its judgment that it did not rule that it had no qualitative jurisdiction to consider the case on this basis so that the appellant would not be harmed by his appeal, and then it ruled that the appellant was innocent of what was assigned to him, then it had to abide by the text of Article 417, so it decided to uphold or amend the appealed judgment in the interest of the accused, but it ruled that he was innocent in order to avoid the ruling that the incident attributed to him was not a felony and so as not to harm his position as the appellant alone, so it would be in violation of the law, as the ruling of innocence comes only after the court is exposed to the incident in which the criminal case was filed in terms of law and subject matter.[3622]

On the other hand, if the civil rights plaintiff is the only one - without the Public Prosecution or the accused - who appealed the judgment issued by the court of first instance, which ruled to convict the accused and oblige him to compensate, and it was decided that it is not valid for the appellant to be harmed based on the appeal filed by him alone, in accordance with the provision of the third paragraph of Article 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which stipulated that if technical office book No. 48 Page 386 Rule No. 54, Appeal No. 1800 of the year 61 S issued in the session of October 5, 1992 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 43 Page 776 Rule No. 119, Appeal No. 2292 of the year 58 S issued in the session of June 15, 1989 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 40 Page 641 Rule No. 108, Appeal No. 8111 of the year 54 S issued in the session of January 21, 1985 and published in the first part of the office book Technical No. 36 Page No. 105 Rule No. 13, Appeal No. 1060 of 45 S issued at the session of October 13, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 26 Page No. 590 Rule No. 132, Appeal No. 1505 of 44 S issued at the session of December 9, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 25 Page No. 846 Rule No. 182, Appeal No. 1830 of 35 S issued at the session of February 7, 1966 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 17 Page No. 91 Rule No. 16, Appeal No. 1375 of 30 S issued at the session of November 28, 1960 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 11 Page No. 841 Rule No. 162, Appeal No. 1493 of 23 S issued at the session of December 21, 1953 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 5 Page No. 178 Rule No. 60.

---

([3620]) Appeal No. 1130 of 68 S issued on December 8, 2003 (unpublished).

([3621]) Appeal No. 3311 of 66 S issued at the 10th session of March 2005 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 56, page No. 195, rule No. 28, Appeal No. 5058 of 55 S issued at the 5th session of February 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 37, page No. 239, rule No. 49.

([3622]) Appeal No. 19403 of 59 S issued at the session of March 17, 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 292 rule No. 38.

the appeal is filed by other than the Public Prosecution, the court can only confirm or amend the judgment in the interest of the appellant, which is a provision that applies to the civil lawsuit of the criminal lawsuit pursuant to Article 266 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, since the foregoing, the judgment of the Court of Appeal - by implicitly ruling to reject the civil lawsuit - is tainted with nullity and wrong in law.[3623]

The person responsible for civil rights benefits from the accused's appeal against independence if he gains it by way of dependence and necessity.[3624]

Reimbursement of compensation in the event of revocation of the judgment issued

If the judgment issued for damages is canceled, and it has been temporarily implemented, it shall be refunded based on the cancellation judgment.[3625]

Opposition in absentia judgments issued by the Court of Appeal

Judgments in absentia and opposition thereto before the Court of Appeal shall follow what is prescribed before the courts of first instance.[3626]

The objection shall not be accepted in the legal presence judgment unless the convicted person proves the existence of an excuse that prevented him from attending and he could not submit it before the judgment, and his appeal is not permissible and it is obligatory to act in relation to the legal presence judgments issued by the court of second instance.[3627]

If the appealed judgment has been issued null and void because it is devoid of the text of the law under which the punishment was inflicted on the accused, then the Court of Appeal may rule its nullity and address the judgment on the merits of the case.[3628]

Correction of the Court of Appeal for nullity and judgment in the lawsuit

If there is nullity in the procedures or in the judgment of the court of first instance, the appellate court may correct the nullity and rule on the lawsuit.[3629]

It is scheduled to require Article 419 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that in the event of invalidity of the procedures or invalidity of the judgment, the street has authorized the Court of Appeal to correct this invalidity and rule on the case.[3630]

([3623]) Appeal No. 2855 of 63 S issued at the session of 19 October 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 1113 rule No. 167.

([3624]) Appeal No. 605 of 51 S issued at the session of November 15, 1981 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 32 page No. 907 rule No. 156.

([3625]) Article 416 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3626]) Article 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code, see the above regarding the opposition.

([3627]) Appeal No. 1587 of 52 S issued at the session of 24 May 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 34 page No. 663 rule No. 134, Appeal No. 748 of 43 S issued at the session of 21 January 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 25 page No. 45 rule No. 10, Appeal No. 135 of 42 S issued at the session of 21 May 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 23 page No. 748 rule No. 166, Appeal No. 97 of 36 S issued at the session of 21 March 1966 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 17 page No. 333 rule No. 65.

([3628]) Appeal No. 2316 of 66 S issued on 21 October 1999 (unpublished).

([3629]) Article No. 419 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 136 of 28 S issued at the session of March 24, 1958 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 9 page No. 339 rule No. 93, Appeal No. 1234 of 27 S issued at the session of December 3, 1957 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 8 page No. 955 rule No. 262, Appeal No. 419 of 27 S issued at the session of June 3, 1957 and published in the part The second part of Technical Office Letter No. 8 Page No. 581 Rule No. 160, Appeal No. 841 of 26 S issued at the 22nd session of October 1956 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 7 Page No. 1049 Rule No. 288, Appeal No. 1393 of 25 S issued at the 10th session of April 1956 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 7 Page No. 538 Rule No. 157, Appeal No. 1394 of 25 S issued at the 6th session of March 1956 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 7 Page No. 303 Rule No. 92.

This means that the legislator is entitled to the Court of Appeal in the event of the nullity of the procedures or the nullity of the judgment to correct this nullity and rule on the lawsuit.[3631]

However, if it decides to uphold the appealed judgment despite having previously ruled its nullity, it shall have set aside the proper application of the law, which disadvantages its ruling.[3632]

If the court of second instance has found that there is an invalidity in the primary judgment that affects its subjectivity and loses an element of its existence because of the absence of the preamble to the appointment of the court from which it was issued and the body that issued it and the date of its issuance and reference to the text of the law under which it was ruled to correct this invalidity and rule in the lawsuit again, but has done so and decided to support the appealed judgment despite its absence, it has avoided the proper application of the law, which defects its ruling, which invalidates it and requires its revocation. It does not change the fact that its judgment has established independent reasons for its receipt in support of the nonexistent.[3633]

The street did not require the appellate court to return the case to the court of first instance unless the latter ruled not to have jurisdiction or to accept a subsidiary plea that would result in preventing the proceedings from proceeding, but in the event of the nullity of the procedures or the nullity of the judgment, the street authorized the appellate court to correct this nullity and rule on the lawsuit.[3634]

In order for the Court of Appeal to correct the invalidity of the judgment of the Court of First Instance and to address the adjudication of the case, it is required that the Court of First Instance is already competent in the case at first instance. If the Court of First Instance is not

---

([3630]) Appeal No. 22291 of 59 S issued at the session of April 23, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 43 page No. 429 rule No. 65, Appeal No. 1704 of 56 S issued at the session of June 4, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 37 page No. 643 rule No. 122, Appeal No. 217 of 29 S issued at the session of March 30, 1959 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 10 page No. 375 rule No. 84, Appeal No. 2039 of 27 S issued at the session of April 8, 1958 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 9 page No. 367 rule No. 101.

([3631]) In this regard, the Court of Cassation ruled that: [Whereas it is clear from the papers that the court of first instance ruled on the subject of the case to punish the appellant with six months' imprisonment with work for the two charges against him and to oblige him to pay the civil plaintiff an amount of 51 pounds based on its statement : (Whereas the court is reassured by the seizure record that the accused committed the violation described in the description of the Public Prosecution, and therefore the elements of the charge against him have been fulfilled and are sufficiently proven before him, and the court decides to punish him with the articles of indictment and the text of Article 304 of the Code of Criminal Procedure) The appellant appealed this judgment and ruled in absentia to accept the appeal in form and on the merits by rejecting it and supporting the appealed judgment for its reasons, and if the court objected to accept the objection in form and on the merits by canceling the opposing judgment in it and accepting the appeal in form and on the merits by invalidating the appealed judgment and ruling again to imprison the accused for six months with work and obliging him to pay the civil claimant an amount of 51 pounds as temporary compensation and the judgment returned new reasons sufficient to carry his conviction in order to correct the shortcomings of the appealed judgment in the reasoning, the contested judgment was consistent with the correct law The Court of First Instance, having exhausted its jurisdiction by the judgment it issued on the subject, has no way to return the case to it a second time, regardless of the implication of its judgment or similar defects of causation, and therefore what the appellant raises regarding the Second Instance Court's response to the decision on the merits of the case is invalid [Appeal No. 23713 of 62 S issued at the session of January 24, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 47, page No. 127, rule No. 18.

([3632]) Appeal No. 1812 of 36 S issued in the session of January 2, 1967 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 18 page No. 31 rule No. 3.

([3633]) Appeal No. 1923 of 34 S issued on March 8, 1965 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 16 page No. 220 rule No. 47.

([3634]) Appeal No. 2513 of 55 S issued at the 10th session of October 1985 and published in Part I of the Technical Office Book No. 36 Page 846 Rule No. 150, Appeal No. 1540 of 48 S issued at the 11th session of January 1979 and published in Part I of the Technical Office Book No. 30 Page 71 Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 531 of 48 S issued at the 10th session of December 1978 and published in Part I of the Technical Office Book No. 29 Page 892 Rule No. 185, Appeal No. 853 of 39 S issued at the 23rd session of June 1969 and published in Part II of the Technical Office Book No. 20 Page 944 Rule No. 187.

competent, the Court of Appeal must refer the case to the Public Prosecution to take its affairs in it, in accordance with Article 414 of the Criminal Procedure Law.[3635]

Because to say otherwise means allowing the trial of the accused before the Court of Appeal directly for an incident that the Court of First Instance does not have the right to try for its departure from its jurisdiction, in addition to the fact that this is a judiciary in matters that the court has not contacted in accordance with the law, in addition to the fact that it deprives the accused of a degree of litigation and this is due to his attachment to the judicial system and its degrees is contrary to the provisions related to public order.[3636]

However, if the court of first instance ruled on the merits of the case, but its decision was null and void related to the public order for its issuance by a judge who did not hear the pleading, it is not considered as a first degree of litigation, and the court of second degree may not correct this nullity because of the loss of that degree on the appellant, which must be the cassation coupled with the cancellation of the appealed primary judgment and the return of the case to the court of first instance for further adjudication by another judge.[3637]

If the court of first instance has ruled on the lawsuit in the matter and exhausted its jurisdiction, it is obligatory for the appellate court to determine, according to its ruling, the nullity of the procedures before the court of first instance to correct the nullity and rule on the lawsuit, but it has implemented the provision of the last paragraph - in other cases - and ruled to return the lawsuit to the court of first instance for reconsideration, its ruling was based on an error in the application of the law, which must be corrected and the lawsuit returned to the appellate court to rule on its merits.[3638]

If the court of first instance ruled on the merits of the case, but its ruling was null and void related to public order because it was issued by a judge who did not hear the pleading, it is not considered as a first degree of litigation, and the court of second degree may not correct this nullity because of the loss of that degree on the appellant, which must be the cassation coupled with the cancellation of the appealed primary judgment and the referral of the case to the court of first instance for further adjudication by another judge.[3639]

Whereas the court of first instance has exhausted its jurisdiction by issuing a judgment convicting the accused, but that judgment has been devoid of a statement of the date of its issuance, and it was decided that the judgment paper is one of the official papers that must bear

---

([3635]) Appeal No. 568 of 47 s issued at the session of December 4, 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 28 page No. 1002 rule No. 205, Appeal No. 489 of 29 s issued at the session of April 20, 1959 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 10 page No. 451 rule No. 99

It also ruled that: [If it is established from the papers that the accused is a public servant of the maintenance weapon, and that the theft occurred on state-owned money - which is the electric current produced and distributed by the Electricity and Gas Department - and the Public Prosecution had appealed the primary default judgment of his conviction and the judgment issued in the opposition acquitting him of the charge against him, the judiciary of the Court of Appeal considering the incident a misdemeanor and punishing the accused on this basis is an error in the law that requires the reversal of the judgment with the referral of the case to the Court of Appeal for reconsideration guided by the rules stipulated in Articles 414, 415 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, considering that the incident is a felony to which Article 113 of the Penal Code applies] Appeal No. 581 of 29 Q issued at the hearing of June 2, 1959 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 10, page No. 616, rule No. 136.

([3636]) Appeal No. 568 of 47 S issued at the 4th session of December 1977 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 28 page No. 1002 rule No. 205.

([3637]) Appeal No. 14579 of 63 S issued at the session of June 1, 1999 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 50 page No. 345 rule No. 81.

([3638]) Appeal No. 15173 of 59 S issued at the session of 4 November 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 page No. 994 rule No. 176, Appeal No. 567 of 44 S issued at the session of 3 June 1974 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 25 page No. 564 rule No. 120.

([3639]) Appeal No. 584 of 54 S issued at the session of December 20, 1984 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 35 page No. 934 rule No. 207.

the date of its issuance, otherwise it is nullified because it loses one of the elements of its existence legally because it is the only document that certifies the existence of the judgment in its entirety in the manner in which it was issued and based on the reasons on which it was based, and if the judgment itself is nullified, the appealed judgment must be nullified, and - after nullifying it - the appeal court must decide on the subject matter of the case.[3640]

In the event that the appealed judgment does not have the signature of the judge and the statement of the authority, the Court of Appeal shall not return the case to the court of first instance, and the Court of Appeal shall consider the case and rule on its merits.[3641]

The appeal court must also consider the lawsuit in the event of the issuance of the primary judgment that is not signed by the judge, and there is no objection that this misses one of the degrees of litigation against the accused.[3642]

Also, if the Court of First Instance has exhausted its jurisdiction by ruling on the subject of the objection in support, the Court of Appeal, if it considers that there is an invalidity in the proceedings or in the judgment - because the accused was not given a valid declaration - should correct the invalidity and rule in the case, and therefore the judgment of the Court of Appeal, if it decided to return the case to the Court of First Instance to decide on the objection otherwise, is wrong, which must be overturned.[3643]

If the appellate court has erred in returning the case, except in the cases stipulated by law, which is the case of the ruling of lack of jurisdiction or the acceptance of a subsidiary plea that results in preventing the proceeding of the lawsuit, to the court of first instance to adjudicate the lawsuit despite the exhaustion of the jurisdiction of the last court to adjudicate on its subject matter, the ruling of the court of first instance that the lawsuit may not be considered because it was previously adjudicated shall be valid in law.[3644]

It must be taken into account that the authority of the appellate court to correct the invalidity pursuant to Article 419 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is limited to the judgment of the court of first instance and may not extend to the judgment issued by it because of the implication of this violation of the authority of the judgments[3645].

Cancellation of the judgment by the Court of Appeal and return of the case to the Court of First Instance

If the judgment of the court of first instance is issued for lack of jurisdiction or acceptance of a subsidiary plea that results in preventing the proceeding of the lawsuit, and the appellate court decides to cancel the judgment and the jurisdiction of the court or to reject the subsidiary plea

---

([3640]) Appeal No. 5873 of 53 S issued at the 27th session of December 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 34 page No. 1082 rule No. 216, Appeal No. 1438 of 48 S issued at the 4th session of May 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 32 page No. 448 rule No. 79.

([3641]) Appeal No. 741 of 43 S issued at the session of November 13, 1973 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 24 page No. 996 rule No. 207.

([3642]) Appeal No. 11 of 43 s issued at the session of March 4, 1973 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 24 page No. 279 rule No. 61.

([3643]) Appeal No. 1834 of 39 s issued at the session of March 2, 1970 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 21 page No. 338 rule No. 84, Appeal No. 893 of 39 s issued at the session of December 22, 1969 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 20 page No. 1430 rule No. 295.

([3644]) Appeal No. 1696 of 33 S issued at the session of January 6, 1964 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 15 page No. 24 rule No. 5, Appeal No. 2186 of 32 S issued at the session of February 4, 1963 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 14 page No. 64 rule No. 14, Appeal No. 323 of 31 S issued at the session of May 22, 1961 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 12 page No. 594 rule No. 113.

([3645]) Appeal No. 171 of 29 S issued at the session of March 23, 1959 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 10 page No. 337 rule No. 75.

and consider the lawsuit, the court of appeal must return the case to the court of first instance to rule on its merits.[3646]

This means that returning the case to the court of first instance is not permissible except in the following cases:

First: The issuance of a judgment by the Court of Appeal annulling the judgment issued by the Court of First Instance for lack of jurisdiction.

Second: The issuance of a judgment by the Court of Appeal annulling the judgment issued by the Court of First Instance to accept a subsidiary plea that resulted in preventing the proceedings from proceeding.

It is not permissible for the appellate court - in other than these two cases - to abandon the consideration of the case and return the case to the court of first instance after this has exhausted all its authority in it, and therefore the appellant's statement of the absence of the first instance judgment for the loss of his official paper and the error of the court of second instance in addressing the subject because of missing one of the degrees of litigation against the accused is incorrect and the appellate court was correct when it considered the subject of the case and ruled on it[3647].

The street requires the appellate court to return the case to the court of first instance if the latter ruled not to have jurisdiction or to accept a subsidiary plea that would result in preventing the case from proceeding. If the court of first instance ruled that the case could not be considered because of the precedent of adjudication, and the appellate court ruled to cancel this case based on the appeal of the Public Prosecution, the aforementioned court should have ruled in the appeal against the judgment of the court of first instance to cancel it and reject the plea that the case may not be considered because of the precedent of adjudication and return the case to the court of first instance to decide on the matter so that one of the two degrees of litigation

---

([3646]) Article 419 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and see: Appeal No. 19833 of 4S issued at the session of December 24, 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 1005, rule No. 135, Appeal No. 17180 of 3S issued at the session of April 28, 2013 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 64, page No. 544, rule No. 76, Appeal No. 11544 of 64S issued at the session of October 11, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 50, page No. 528 Rule No. 119, Appeal No. 17399 of 64 s issued at the session of January 18, 2001 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 52 Page No. 136 Rule No. 21, Appeal No. 8635 of 67 s issued at the session of July 1, 1997 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 48 Page No. 719 Rule No. 110, Appeal No. 6399 of 54 s issued at the session of October 29, 1987 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 38 Page No. 898 Rule No. 164, Appeal No. 6860 of 56 S issued at the hearing of April 16, 1987 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 38 Page 620 Rule No. 105, Appeal No. 1806 of 39 S issued at the hearing of February 22, 1970 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 21 Page 269 Rule No. 66, Appeal No. 1872 of 39 S issued at the hearing of January 19, 1970 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 21 Page 141 Rule No. 33, Appeal No. 2039 of 27 S issued at the 8th session of April 1958 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 9 page 367 rule No. 101, Appeal No. 136 of 28 S issued at the 24th session of March 1958 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 9 page 339 rule No. 93, Appeal No. 841 of 26 S issued at the 22nd session of October 1956 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 7 page 1049 rule No. 288, Appeal No. 965 of 23 S issued At the session of June 23, 1953, published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 4, page No. 1016, rule No. 360.

([3647]) Appeal No. 8635 of 67 s issued at the 1st session of July 1997 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 48 Page 719 Rule No. 110, Appeal No. 23713 of 62 s issued at the 24th session of January 1996 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 47 Page 127 Rule No. 18, Appeal No. 8248 of 54 s issued at the 12th session of November 1986 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 37 Page 865 Rule No. 166, Appeal No. 1696 of 33 s issued at the 6th session of January 1964 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 15 Page 24 Rule No. 5, Appeal No. 1234 of 27 s issued at the 3rd session of December 1957 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 8 Page 955 Rule No. 262, Appeal No. 419 of 27 s issued at the 3rd session of June 1957 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 8 Page 581 Rule No. 160.

against the accused does not miss, according to the text of Article 419/2 of the Criminal Procedure Law, but it did not do so, it has erred in the application of the law.[3648]

If the judgment of the Court of Appeal decides to invalidate the judgment issued by the court of first instance, but it did not rule to return the lawsuit to the court of first instance to decide on it, but ruled on its subject matter and thus missed the convict one of the two degrees of litigation, it is wrongly defective in the law, which requires its cassation and referral to the court of first instance to decide on the subject matter of the lawsuit.[3649]

The legislator also obligated the Court of Appeal, when ruling to cancel the preliminary ruling not to accept the civil lawsuit; to return the lawsuit to the court of first instance to decide on its merits.[3650]

If the Court of Appeal ruled in the appeal submitted to it to cancel the appealed judgment and to accept the civil lawsuit - before the accused - and dealt with its subject matter and ruled on it in a chapter starting with obliging temporary compensation, although it had to rule to cancel the appealed judgment - in the decision not to accept the civil lawsuit - and return the case to the court of first instance to decide on the subject of the civil lawsuit so as not to miss the accused one of the two degrees of litigation, but it did not do so, it would have erred in the application of the law.[3651]

It is decided that the appeal of the judgment issued in the objection that it is not permissible - or that it is not accepted in form - is limited in its subject matter to this judgment as a stand-alone formal judgment without the effect of the appeal going to the primary default judgment due to the different nature of each of the two judgments. The contested judgment, as it omitted to adjudicate in the form of the objection and dealt with the subject matter of the law, has erred in the correctness of the law, as in this case it must focus on the form of the objection only, either by upholding the appealed judgment or by canceling it and returning the lawsuit to the court of first instance to consider the subject matter of the objection.[3652]

([3648]) Appeal No. 22375 of 61 S issued at the 1st session of October 2001 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 52 Page 687 Rule No. 126, Appeal No. 19257 of 60 S issued at the 12th session of September 1993 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 44 Page 698 Rule No. 109, Appeal No. 6209 of 53 S issued at the 20th session of March 1984 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 35 Page 310 Rule No. 65, Appeal No. 2506 of 53 S issued at the 11th session of January 1984 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 35 Page 39 Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 202 of 40 S issued at the 5th session of April 1970 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 21 Page 510 Rule No. 123.

([3649]) Appeal No. 27180 of 59 S issued at the 6th session of December 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 45 page No. 1086 rule No. 170, Appeal No. 9974 of 59 S issued at the 29th session of November 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 43 page No. 1077 rule No. 167, Appeal No. 6978 of 53 S issued at the 26th session of April 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 35 page No. 483 rule No. 106.

([3650]) Appeal No. 9378 of 60 BC issued at the session of October 8, 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 1046 rule No. 156.

([3651]) Appeal No. 23152 of 64 S issued at the session of November 10, 2002 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 53 page No. 1098 rule No. 182, Appeal No. 41964 of 59 S issued at the session of November 7, 1995 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 46 page No. 1162 rule No. 174, Appeal No. 11681 of 59 S issued at the session of February 6, 1991 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 page No. 252 rule No. 34, Appeal No. 1601 of 45 S issued at the session of February 2, 1976 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 27 page No. 152 rule No. 30.

([3652]) Appeal No. 23511 of 64 S issued at the 28th session of January 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52, page No. 178, rule No. 28, Appeal No. 16398 of 60 S issued at the 27th session of October 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 1155, rule No. 158, Appeal No. 2167 of 56 S issued at the 15th session of May 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 37, page No. 561, rule No. 110, Appeal No. 984 of 40 S issued at the 5th session of October 1970 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 21 page 957 Rule No. 226, Appeal No. 1652 of 39 S issued at the 4th session of May 1970 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 21 page 651 Rule No. 154, Appeal No. 1406 of 37 S issued at the 6th session of November 1967 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 18 page 1079 Rule No. 222, Appeal No. 1772 of 35 S Issued at the session of March 22, 1966 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 17, page No. 343, rule No. 68.

The legislator obliged the appellate court, if the court of first instance issued its ruling of lack of jurisdiction and ruled to cancel it, and the jurisdiction of the court to return the case to the court of first instance to rule on its merits, the decision of the appeal judgment on the merits of the case - after the primary ruling of lack of jurisdiction was canceled - and did not return the case to the court of first instance, he may have violated the law, which requires his cassation and return the case to the court of first instance to rule on it.[3653]

The issuance of the judgment by a judge who has performed the function of the Public Prosecution in the lawsuit, although he must refrain from considering it automatically, otherwise his judgment is null and void related to public order, and that judgment must not be considered as a first degree of litigation, even if he has decided on the subject matter of the lawsuit, and it is not permissible to correct the court of the second degree of this nullity and decide on the lawsuit, because of missing a degree of litigation on the appellant, which must be coupled with the cassation of the judgment coupled with the cancellation of the appealed primary judgment and the referral of the case to the court of first instance for further adjudication by another judge.[3654]

If the court of first instance has ruled in absentia that the lawsuit is inadmissible based on the nullity of the procedures for initiating criminal proceedings. The Public Prosecution appealed the judgment, and the Court of Appeal ruled in absentia to accept the appeal in form and in substance to cancel the appealed judgment and punish the accused. The convicted person objected, and the court ruled that the objection was as if it were not. The contested judgment, as it ruled that the judgment issued by the Court of First Instance was invalid based on the invalidity of the procedures for initiating the criminal case and did not rule to return the case to the Court of First Instance for adjudication, but rather ruled on its subject matter and thus missed the convicted person one of the two degrees of litigation, it is wrongly defective in the law.[3655]

If the Court of Appeal has ruled to cancel the appealed judgment and return the papers to the Court of First Instance to consider the objection of the accused and based its judiciary on the fact that the Court of First Instance ruled on the case without hearing the defense of the accused, it has erred in the application of the law, as returning the case to the Court of First Instance is not permissible except in the two cases stipulated in the second paragraph of Article 419 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.[3656]

25-1-2-2 Appealing judgments issued in felonies

First: Judgments that may be appealed

Judgments rendered in person by the Criminal Court of First Instance may be appealed.[3657]

([3653]) Appeal No. 47840 of 59 S issued at the session of February 18, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 48 page No. 214 rule No. 28, Appeal No. 26018 of 59 S issued at the session of April 23, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 43 page No. 438 rule No. 66, Appeal No. 38 of 46 S issued at the session of April 11, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 27 page No. 407 rule No. 88.

([3654]) Appeal No. 2 of 56 s issued at the session of 31 March 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 39 page No. 516 rule No. 76, Appeal No. 529 of 42 s issued at the session of 12 June 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 23 page No. 914 rule No. 205.

([3655]) Appeal No. 138 of 44 s issued at the session of March 3, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 25 page No. 201 rule No. 44, Appeal No. 1006 of 42 s issued at the session of December 17, 1972 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 23 page No. 1374 rule No. 309.

([3656]) Appeal No. 904 of 26 S issued at the session of November 12, 1956 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 7 page No. 1144 rule No. 316.

([3657]) Article 419 bis of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Judgments issued in the civil lawsuit may be appealed from the Criminal Court of First Instance if the required compensation exceeds the quorum that is finally ruled by the Court of First Instance.[3658]

Judgments rendered in absentia in criminal matters may be appealed only by the Public[3659] Prosecution.

Second: Who has the right to appeal

The Public Prosecution and the accused may appeal the summonses issued by the Criminal Court of First Instance.[3660]

The civil rights plaintiff, the person responsible for it, and the accused may appeal the judgments issued in the civil lawsuit from the Criminal Court of First Instance with regard to civil rights only, if the required compensation exceeds the quorum finally ruled by the Court of First Instance.[3661]

The Public Prosecution may appeal the judgments issued in absentia in the articles of felonies.[3662]

Third: Appeal date

The accused, the public prosecution, the plaintiff of civil rights and those responsible for them may appeal the judgments issued in the articles of felonies within forty days from the date of the judgment, and the public prosecutor may appeal the judgment within sixty days from the date of its issuance.[3663]

Fourth: The Court of Appeal

The Registry shall submit the appeal report and the case file immediately after the expiry of the deadline for depositing the reasons for the judgment issued in it to the President of the Court of Appeal after inserting the appeal in a schedule prepared for that. The President of the Court shall specify a session for its consideration, and order the notification of the accused and the notification of the rest of the litigants.[3664]

Fifth: Setting a hearing for the appeal

The President of the Court of Appeal shall determine a session for the hearing of the appeal and shall order the notification of the accused and the notification of the rest of the litigants thereto.[3665]

Sixth: Suspension of the execution of the appealed judgment

The principle is that the appeal of the judgment issued by the Criminal Court of First Instance does not result in the suspension of the execution of the judgment, unless the Criminal Court of Appeal decides to suspend the execution, or the judgment is issued with the death penalty.[3666]

([3658]) Article 419 bis 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3659]) Article 419 bis/2.
([3660]) Article 419 bis of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3661]) Article 419 bis /1.
([3662]) Article 419 bis/2.
([3663]) Article 419 bis /4.
([3664]) Article 419 bis/5.
([3665]) Article 419 bis/5.
([3666]) Article 419 bis /9 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Seventh: Appeal Review Procedures

The Court of Appeal shall send copies of the case files and the judgments issued therein to the judges appointed to hear the appeal well in advance of the date of the hearing.[3667]

1- Hearing the appellant's statements

The court hears the statements of the appellant and the aspects on which he relies in his appeal, the aspects of his defense and defenses, as well as the rest of the litigants, provided that the accused is the last to speak.[3668]

2- Hearing the statements of the remaining litigants and witnesses

The court shall hear the rest of the litigants other than the accused, provided that the accused is the last to speak.[3669]

3-Consideration of the appeal in the absence of the accused

If the convict or his agent fails without excuse to attend the session set for the consideration of his appeal, or at any subsequent session, the court shall assign him a lawyer to defend him and decide on the appeal.[3670]

25.1.3 Denunciation

First: Who has the right to appeal in cassation

The prosecution, the convicted person, and the person responsible for civil rights and the plaintiff shall have the right to appeal in cassation the final judgment issued from the last degree in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors.[3671]

It is required that the judgment has harmed the appellant, and if this condition fails to negate the appellant's interest in the appeal, his appeal is not permissible; considering that the interest is the subject of the appeal, and if the contested judgment did not impose a penalty on the appellant or oblige him to do something, then the appeal has been decided upon by the person who has no place, and therefore the appeal against it is not permissible as the interest is the subject of the appeal)[3672](.

The capacity of the convicted person is available only to those who are a party to the litigation and the judgment was issued against their interest. If the judgment is not imposed on the appellant, there is a penalty, they have no capacity to challenge it by way of cassation.[3673]

Whereas Article 211 of the Code of Procedure - which is one of the faculties of law - does not allow appealing against the judgments of those to whom all his requests were ruled, taking into account the rule that the interest in the lawsuit according to Article 3 of the aforementioned law, which is applied in the case of cassation appeal and when the judgment is appealed, as well as the beginning of the case, and the criterion of the true interest, whether it is a case or a potential

---

([3667]) Article 419 bis /6.
([3668]) Article 419 bis /7.
([3669]) Article 419 bis /7.
([3670]) Article 419 bis /9 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3671]) Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.
([3672]) Appeal No. 17012 of 4Q issued at the session of 21 October 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 734, rule No. 91, Appeal No. 12804 of 4Q issued at the session of 4 July 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12243 of 59Q issued at the session of 22 January 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 42, page No. 160, rule No. 19, Appeal No. 4683 of 54Q issued at the session of 6 June 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 36, page No. 762, rule No. 134.
([3673]) Appeal No. 32081 for the year 83 S issued in the session of October 1, 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 628 rule No. 80.

one, is that the judgment in which the appeal procedure was taken harmed the appellant when he ruled to reject all his requests or ruled against each other, and therefore it is not in the interest of the appellant if the judgment was issued in accordance with his requests or achieved his intent. In other words, proving the right to appeal is not sufficient to accept it, but rather it requires the existence of direct conditions for the right of appeal, which is that the appellant has an interest in revoking the right that he attributes to himself. Whereas, Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal in Cassation does not allow an appeal in cassation other than the final judgments issued in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors, and this stipulates - and based on what has been done by the judiciary of this court - that the judgment has harmed the appellant so that he is entitled to appeal it. If this condition is not met, the appeal is not permissible, considering that the interest is subject to the appeal.[3674]

It should be noted that the judiciary of the Court of Cassation had considered the compensation stipulated in the laws related to taxes and fees as complementary penalties that include the element of compensation, and allowed, due to the availability of this element, the intervention of the public treasury before the criminal court to request a ruling and then appeal against the judgment issued in regard to it. However, since the Supreme Constitutional Court ruled on 4/11/2007 in Case No. 9 of 28 S Constitutional unconstitutionality of the first paragraph of Article 43 of the General Sales Tax Law No. 11 of 1991, It included (that the perpetrators must be sentenced in solidarity to compensation that does not exceed the like of the tax), and therefore, pursuant to this judiciary, the representative of the Public Treasury has no capacity to intervene in these cases or challenge the judgments issued thereon, after the punishment prescribed for the crime did not include the element of compensation that was explicitly mentioned in it, and therefore the basis for its intervention in these cases collapsed and the right to intervene in them was taken away by requesting the judgment of compensation and the criminal courts refrained from ruling it on their own after the issuance of the judgment of the Supreme Constitutional Court. - And then the appeal is sacrificed with this reward is not permissible. The Minister of Finance, in his capacity as the appellant, was not a party to the contested judgment and may not accordingly challenge it by way of cassation.[3675]

The right to appeal in cassation is vested in the appellant to be a party to the final judgment issued by the court of last instance and that this judgment has harmed him. If this condition is not met, his appeal against the judgment issued by cassation is not permissible.[3676]

It is not enough for the appellant to be considered a party to the contested judgment to have been disputed before the court of first instance without the court of second instance.[3677]

According to the second paragraph of Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, it is not accepted by any of the civil rights claimant and those responsible for it to appeal the judgment issued in the criminal case for lack of interest in it.[3678]

([3674]) Appeal No. 8359 of 83 S issued at the 8th session of October 2014 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 638 rule No. 82.

([3675]) Appeal No. 7428 of 4S issued at the session of 22 December 2013 (unpublished), and reviewed the judgment of the Supreme Constitutional Court in, Case No. 9 of 28S issued at the session of 4 November 2007, the date of publication 13 November 2007 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 12 page No. 719 rule No. 71.

([3676]) Appeal No. 1517 of 51 s issued at the session of 31 October 1981 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 32 page No. 791 rule No. 136, Appeal No. 1627 of 50 s issued at the session of 8 January 1981 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 32 page No. 32 rule No. 2.

([3677]) Appeal No. 1627 of 50 S issued at the session of January 8, 1981 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 32 page No. 32 rule No. 2.

([3678]) Appeal No. 1944 of 52 S issued at the hearing of June 14, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 33 page No. 707 rule No. 146, Appeal No. 2726 of 51 S issued at the hearing of January 27, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 33 page No. 92 rule No. 17, Appeal No. 2726 of 51 S issued at the hearing of January 27, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 33 page No. 92 rule No. 17, Appeal No. 579

Whereas it is not permissible to appeal from the plaintiff of civil rights and those responsible for them except with regard to their civil rights, and if the appellant did not claim civil rights before the appellee, then his appeal before them is not permissible.[3679]

However, if the defect that the person responsible for civil rights - the appellant - throws the judgment in his part related to the criminal lawsuit involves a violation of his civil obligations because of his attachment to the validity of the procedures for initiating the criminal lawsuit, and his acceptance results in the ruling that the criminal lawsuit may not be filed against the accused, and the consequent non-acceptance of the civil lawsuit against the appellant and his subordinate, because it is established that the civil lawsuit filed before the criminal courts is subordinate to the criminal lawsuit, and if the latter is inadmissible, the first must be ruled inadmissible as well, and then the appellant, as a civil rights official, has the right to challenge the contested judgment by what he raised in his appeal, which is a defense that may be raised in any case in which the lawsuit is based.[3680]

It is also taken into account that the Illicit Gain Law No. 62 of 1975, although it gave the examination and investigation bodies the right to investigate those subjects to the provisions of this law, but it did not give those bodies the right to initiate criminal proceedings before the competent court or to appeal against the judgments issued therein. If the present appeal is filed by the Public Defender in his capacity as authorized by the Illicit Gain Department, and the reasons report was signed by one of the members of that department, the appeal must not be accepted in form to be filed by a person without capacity.[3681]

The basis of the right of the person responsible for civil rights to appeal - in relation to civil rights - before the Court of Cassation against the final judgments issued by the last degree in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors in the cases stipulated therein, is that the appellant is a party to the final judgment issued by the court of the last degree and that this judgment has harmed him. If this condition is not met, his appeal against the judgment issued by way of cassation is not permissible.[3682]

It is decided that - in order for the Public Prosecution to have the right to appeal in cassation against the judgment issued by the court of second instance in the event that it does not appeal the first instance judgment, this judgment must have been canceled in the appeal or amended of 48 S issued at the 29th session of October 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 29 page No. 749 rule No. 151, Appeal No. 1535 of 45 S issued at the 18th session of January 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 27 page No. 70 rule No. 14, Appeal No. 339 of 31 S issued at the 1st session of January 1962 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 13 page No. 4 rule No. 1, Appeal No. 927 For the year 50 s issued in the session of November 5, 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 960 rule No. 186, Appeal No. 1328 of 49 s issued in the session of February 7, 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 208 rule No. 42.

---

([3679]) Appeal No. 33594 of 75 s issued at the session of November 14, 2012 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 63 page 701 rule No. 124, Appeal No. 90125 of 75 s issued at the session of November 14, 2012 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 63 page No. 703 rule No. 125, Appeal No. 7730 of 75 s issued at the session of November 11, 2012 and published in the Technical Office's book No. 63 page No. 646 rule No. 116, Appeal No. 3449 of 55 s issued at the session of December 19, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 36 page No. 1138 rule No. 211, Appeal No. 34 of 49 s issued at the session of March 17, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 31 page No. 391 rule No. 73.

([3680]) Appeal No. 1817 of 51 S issued on December 1, 1981 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 32 page No. 1009 rule No. 176.

([3681]) Appeal No. 52528 of 75 S issued at the session of May 15, 2008 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 59 page No. 283 rule No. 50.

([3682]) Appeal No. 17296 of 59 S issued at the session of April 29, 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 425 rule No. 59.

so that the judgment issued in the appeal filed by the accused is a new judiciary completely separate from the judiciary of the court of first instance.[3683]

Second: Judgments and cases that may be appealed in cassation Courts

The cassation appeal shall be against the final judgment issued from the last degree in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors - punishable by a fine exceeding twenty thousand pounds - in the following cases:

- If the contested judgment is based on a violation of the law or an error in its application or interpretation.
- If the judgment is null and void.
- If the proceedings are null and void, it shall influence the judgment.[3684]

1- Judgments that may be appealed in cassation

It is permissible to appeal in cassation the judgments issued from the last degree in the articles of felonies, and misdemeanors punishable by a fine exceeding twenty thousand pounds.[3685]

It is decided that the permissibility of the appeal is a matter prior to considering its form, and therefore the court must decide on this initially before considering the form of the appeal.[3686]

It is established that if the crimes attributed to the accused were committed for a single purpose or were indivisibly connected and adjudicated by a single judgment, this judgment shall be appealed. The judgment deals with all crimes, and this is not precluded by the fact that one of these crimes is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding twenty thousand pounds, because the provision that it is not permissible to appeal in cassation in these misdemeanors is due to the appeal addressed to the misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding twenty thousand pounds alone, but if this misdemeanor is related to a misdemeanor that may be challenged, it may be subject to the appeal that is filed against it and the misdemeanor associated with it.[3687]

It is also clear that Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation has limited the right of appeal to the final judgments issued in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors without violations except those related to them. Violations mean crimes punishable by a fine not exceeding a maximum amount of one hundred pounds.[3688]

([3683]) Appeal No. 4721 of 55 S issued at the session of January 14, 1986 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 37 page No. 76 rule No. 16.

([3684]) Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3685]) Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3686]) Appeal No. 4135 of 5Q issued at the 20th session of January 2016 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 67, page No. 135, rule No. 17, appeal No. 32421 of 83Q issued at the 15th session of March 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66, page No. 299, rule No. 40, appeal No. 18990 of 4Q issued at the 18th session of February 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66, page No. 245, rule No. 31, appeal No. 3137 of 4Q issued at the 27th session of October 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64, page No. 861, rule No. 130, appeal No. 2465 of 80Q issued at the 7th session of April 2011 (unpublished).

([3687]) Appeal No. 4677 of 82 S issued at the session of 21 May 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 554, rule No. 62, Appeal No. 24742 of 85 S issued at the session of 21 February 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18990 of 4 S issued at the session of 18 February 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66, page No. 245, rule No. 31.

([3688]) Appeal No. 4906 of 5 S issued at the 17th session of February 2016 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 67 page No. 241 rule No. 28, Appeal No. 11526 of 4 S issued at the 18th session of November 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64 page No. 919 rule No. 140, Appeal No. 15296 of 65 S issued at the 4th session of July 2004 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 55 page No. 603 rule No. 85, Appeal No. 21786 of 63 s issued in the session of July 28, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50 page 438 rule No. 101, Appeal No. 15047 of 62 s issued in the session of December 20, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 1197 rule No. 187, Appeal No. 14254 of 59 s issued in the session of March 4, 1992 and published in the first part of the

It is not permissible to appeal in cassation the judgment issued in the criminal case against the accused in a crime punishable by a fine that does not exceed the limits of the penalty of the violation, and the court decides not to accept the appeal, and it does not change this consideration that the criminal case has lapsed by the lapse of more than one year from the date of the report of the appeal and the submission of its reasons and between the date of the hearing in which the appeal was considered, as its inadmissibility prevents consideration of this, because it is established that the task in examining this matter is to properly communicate the appeal to the Court of Cassation that allows it to address its examination and express its judgment in it.[3689]

The grounds for the inadmissibility of appealing misdemeanor articles punishable by a fine not exceeding twenty thousand pounds, is the amount of the penalty included in the text in appreciation of the legislator that the penalty mentioned in its maximum limit is not of seriousness or importance commensurate with the permissibility of appealing it by way of cassation, and therefore the judgment issued in these crimes if it does not comply with the maximum penalty prescribed to exceed it or inflict a heavier penalty than it, it is not justified to close before the convict the way of this appeal after the judgment has wasted the considerations assessed by the legislator, and it was The basis of this prohibition, and to say otherwise, is a matter of justice that is repugnant to the logic of the law. The Court of Cassation distances itself from it because its main function is to review the validity of the application of the law to the incident in a correct manner because it recognizes a penalty - definitively sentenced - that has no basis in the law, and it violates the rule of the legality of crimes and punishment, which means limiting the sources of criminalization and punishment in the texts of the law so that the judge may not impose a punishment other than the punishment specified by the street in this

---

Technical Office letter No. 43 page No. 286 rule No. 36, Appeal No. 11267 of 59 s issued in the session of May 15, 1992 1991 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 42 Page No. 799 Rule No. 114, Appeal No. 8540 of 58 S issued at the session of October 31, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 41 Page No. 965 Rule No. 170, Appeal No. 3923 of 57 S issued at the session of March 8, 1989 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 40 Page No. 361 Rule No. 57, Appeal No. 6465 of 55 S issued at the session of May 11, 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 39 page 685 rule No. 102, Appeal No. 3378 of 56 S issued at the session of October 14, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 37 page 757 rule No. 145, Appeal No. 4964 of 55 S issued at the session of March 10, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 37 page 367 rule No. 76, Appeal No. 6362 of 53 S issued at the session of February 28, 1984 and published in the part First of Technical Office Letter No. 35 Page No. 211 Rule No. 43, Appeal No. 906 of 49 S issued at the 12th session of November 1979 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 30 Page No. 802 Rule No. 171, Appeal No. 1855 of 45 S issued at the 23rd session of February 1976 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 27 Page No. 273 Rule No. 57, Appeal No. 1004 of 43 S issued at the 9th session of December 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 24 page No. 1167 rule No. 238, Appeal No. 715 of 39 s issued at the 9th session of June 1969 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 20 page No. 879 rule No. 175, Appeal No. 23544 of 63 s issued at the 31st session of December 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49 page No. 1558 rule No. 224, Appeal No. 16340 of 62 s issued at the 24th session of July 1997 and published in the first part of the letter Technical Office No. 48 Page 802 Rule No. 123, Appeal No. 16340 of 62 S issued at the session of July 24, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 48 Page No. 802 Rule No. 123, Appeal No. 27954 of 59 S issued at the session of November 23, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 45 Page No. 1022 Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 23674 of 59 S issued at the session of April 5 For the year 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 44 Page 331 Rule No. 44, Appeal No. 13847 of 59 s issued at the session of May 10, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 Page 699 Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 6647 of 58 s issued at the session of February 26, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 Page 443 Rule No. 73, Appeal No. 4809 of 58 s issued at the session of October 25, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 40 Page No. 809 Rule No. 135, Appeal No. 3873 of 57 S issued at the session of March 22, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 40 Page No. 422 Rule No. 71, Appeal No. 2236 of 38 S issued at the session of April 28, 1969 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 20 Page No. 551 Rule No. 115.

([3689]) Appeal No. 4906 for the year 5 issued in the session of February 17, 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67 page No. 241 rule No. 28.

text, adhering to its type and amount, and the waste of this principle is a waste of the rights of individuals, and therefore To rectify it by allowing it to be challenged by way of cassation.[3690]

The fine, which may be appealed against the judgment issued - if it exceeds twenty thousand pounds - is the criminal fine, which is a penalty subject to all the characteristics of the penalties, including that the judgment is issued by a criminal court at the request of the indictment authority and is multiplied by the number of defendants and after a precedent is ruled in the recidivism, and the lawsuit lapses in its regard even after the initial judgment is issued for all the reasons for the expiry of criminal cases such as criminal statute of limitations, blanket amnesty, death, and it is implemented by physical coercion, and in all of this it differs from the civil fine, which has other characteristics contrary to the above, It is established that the forgery fine imposed on the plaintiff of forgery, if it is proven that there is no forgery, which is stipulated in the last paragraph of Article 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is a civil fine and not one of the criminal fines stipulated in Article 22 of the Penal Code. By imposing the forgery fine, the street wanted to put an end to people's denial of what was in their hands, so it decided to oblige the plaintiff of forgery to pay it for causing him to obstruct the progress of the case unjustly or for finding a dispute that could have been resolved if he admitted to writing the alleged forgery, it is a purely civil fine There is no place for the judge to pay attention to the extenuating circumstances, and the explanatory memorandum of Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Law stipulates that a penalty must be imposed on the plaintiff of forgery if his appeal results in the suspension of the original lawsuit and then his lawsuit is proven to be invalid, or the Civil Court of Cassation has ruled that the fine for forgery is a penalty imposed by law on the plaintiff of forgery when deciding the forfeiture of his right to his lawsuit or his inability to prove it and that its infliction As a penalty, it is related to public order and the Court of Cassation may be subjected to it on its own initiative, as this fine is prescribed as a deterrent to deterring the litigants from continuing to deny or delaying the adjudication of the case and is not a punishment for a crime; because the allegation of forgery is only a defense in the case that does not necessarily require its suspension and is not a criminal act; and because there is nothing to prevent the penalty from being civil such as compensation and others, and the Penal Code when it actually sins, it provides for the accountability of the perpetrator by pronouncing punishment or judgment, as well as the case in the Code of Criminal Procedure in crimes that occur in violation of its provisions Such as the crimes of refraining from swearing or giving testimony or others, and then the description of the forgery fine as a penalty required by the plaintiff for forgery is inferior to what the street wants to distinguish between it as a civil fine and criminal fines, and since Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation has limited the right of appeal by cassation from the Public Prosecution, the convicted person and the person responsible for civil rights and the defendant to the final judgments issued from the last degree in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors and not others, and Article 31 of the same law stipulates that it is not permissible to appeal by cassation against judgments issued before adjudicating the matter, unless it is based on the prohibition of proceeding with the lawsuit, when the contested judgment has ruled in relation to the criminal lawsuit by the lapse of the period, and its decision to fine the appellant that there is no forgery is a judgment in a preliminary subordinate matter, and not a penalty, the appeal by cassation of that judgment is not permissible.[3691]

---

([3690]) Appeal No. 3945 of 5 S issued at the 15th session of February 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9405 of 84 S issued at the 22nd session of February 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66 page No. 256 Rule No. 34 of the Arab Republic of Egypt Unpublished judgments of the Court of Cassation Criminal Chamber of Counsel, Appeal No. 21223 of 4 S issued at the 21st session of January 2015, Appeal No. 18087 of 4 S issued at the 3rd session of September 2014, Appeal No. 8907 of 4 S issued at the 23rd session of February 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65 page No. 136 Rule No. 10.

It is not permissible to appeal in cassation if the penalty for the crime is a fine not exceeding twenty thousand pounds and that crime does not combine it with any other crime - which is subject to appeal in cassation - unity of purpose or indivisible link.[3692]

In the case of continuing misdemeanors or violations punishable by a daily fine that exceeds the number of days of the violation, this is only an exception to the principle of the unity of the incident in continuous crimes, in which the street is considered every day in which the violation is multiple as a stand-alone incident punishable by a fine, and therefore, regardless of the multiple days of the violation and the increase according to its multiplicity, the total amount of the fine imposed does not change the type of crime as it is a violation, it is not permissible to appeal the judgment issued in it by way of cassation.[3693]

Also, if the crime for which the appellant was convicted in application of the provisions of the Labor Law is punishable by a fine of no less than five hundred pounds and no more than one thousand pounds, the appeal by way of cassation shall be inadmissible and shall not change the legislator's stipulation of the multiplicity of the fine penalty by the multiplicity of workers, as they are crimes of a special nature that are distinguished from other crimes by requiring the street, when deciding the penalty in them, to multiply the fine to the extent of the workers whose rights have been violated by the crime. This multiplicity does not change the type of crime and considers it one of the misdemeanors in which the judgment issued by way of cassation may not be challenged.[3694]

Since it is stipulated that it is not permissible to appeal in cassation against judgments in misdemeanor articles punishable by a fine not exceeding twenty thousand pounds, and since the crime for which the appellant was convicted is punishable by a fine less than the quorum of the cassation appeal, the judgment shall be issued within the limits of the final quorum, and it shall be according to the original inadmissible, which was required to adjudicate the inadmissibility of the appeal. However, since the rules relating to the jurisdiction of the criminal courts in criminal matters are all considered public order, given that the street, in its assessment, has based this on general considerations related to the proper functioning of justice, and it is permissible to pay for violating them for the first time before the Court of

---

([3691]) Appeal No. 4135 of 5 S issued at the session of January 20, 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 135, rule No. 17.

([3692]) Appeal No. 14811 of 85 s issued at the session of 19 December 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66, page No. 920, rule No. 131, Appeal No. 34074 of 83 s issued at the session of 22 March 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18122 of 4 s issued at the session of 3 September 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29536 of 3 s issued at the session of 22 April 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4663 of 81 s issued at the session of 19 November 2012 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 63, page No. 734, rule No. 131, Appeal No. 5018 of 81 s issued at the session of 12 December 2011 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 62, page No. 456, rule No. 75.

([3693]) Appeal No. 32587 of 4S issued at the 27th session of July 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66, page No. 566, rule No. 77, Appeal No. 32421 of 83S issued at the 15th session of March 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66, page No. 299, rule No. 40, Appeal No. 8540 of 81S issued at the 28th session of May 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2465 of 80S issued at the 7th session of April 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3381 of 65 s issued at the session of June 11, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52 page No. 566 rule No. 103, Appeal No. 23536 of 64 s issued at the session of January 21, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52 page No. 142 rule No. 22, Appeal No. 16951 of 59 s issued at the session of October 31, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 44 page No. 887 rule No. 139, Appeal No. 30255 of 59 s issued at the session of May 8, 1991 Published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 42 Page No. 761 Rule No. 109, Appeal No. 7834 of 54 S issued on the 8th of October 1986 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 37 Page No. 706 Rule No. 134.

([3694]) Appeal No. 20846 of 4Q issued at the session of January 17, 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66 page No. 164 rule No. 16, Appeal No. 15161 of 5Q issued at the session of February 19, 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 134 rule No. 9, Appeal No. 5523 of 4Q issued at the session of December 24, 2013.

Cassation or to adjudicate it on its own without a request, whenever this is in the interest of the convict, and the elements of the violation are fixed in the judgment.

However, since the crime for which the convict was convicted falls within the jurisdiction of the economic courts, an exclusive and unilateral jurisdiction that is not shared by any other court, and therefore the court of the second degree should not decide to uphold the appealed judgment in what was ruled in the subject matter, but rather to cancel it and the lack of jurisdiction of the ordinary misdemeanors court to hear the case in accordance with the law, but did not do so and ruled to uphold the appealed judgment, it has erred in the application of the law, and therefore it is not justified to close the way of this appeal after the judgment wasted the rules of jurisdiction in the criminal and public order articles, and to say otherwise is interested in the correct application of the law, because it recognizes the jurisdiction of ordinary courts for crimes not provided for by law, which fall within the jurisdiction of other courts, and must be remedied by allowing the appeal of this judgment by way of cassation as the legal way to correct this error in which the court, which accused its jurisdiction of the crime it convicted the appellant.[3695]

It is noted that the crime of refraining from implementing the judgment or the final decision issued by the competent authority to remove, correct or resume is a crime of concern of a kind. It is considered a violation or a misdemeanor depending on the amount of the fine to be imposed on the violator calculated from the total value of the violating acts. If the contested judgment does not indicate the total value of those acts, the Court of Cassation can't determine the amount of the fine prescribed by law for the crime in question and determine whether it is a violation or a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding twenty thousand pounds. It is not permissible to appeal in cassation the judgment issued from the last degree in either of either of them, or otherwise, which is a preliminary matter that must be decided before deciding on the form and subject of the appeal, which this court was unable to decide in a way that prevents it from determining the validity of the contested judgment from its corruption, so it must then be overturned and returned[3696].

The Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation also did not provide for the permissibility of appealing against the decision issued by the Court of Appeal to reject the request for interpretation, as did the Criminal Procedure Law as well. Appealing it by way of cassation is not permissible.[3697]

The judgment issued in the form follows the judgment issued on the subject of the criminal lawsuit in terms of the permissibility or inadmissibility of challenging it by way of cassation.[3698]

2- What is meant by the final judgment

The principle in the jurisdiction of the criminal chambers of the Court of Cassation is limited to the final judgments issued by the court of last instance in the articles of felonies and

---

([3695]) Appeal No. 12307 of 4S issued at the 27th session of April 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65, page No. 310, rule No. 35.

([3696]) Appeal No. 5540 of 4S issued at the 26th session of February 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 144, rule No. 12.

([3697]) Appeal No. 7937 of 66 S issued at the hearing of April 14, 2005 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 265 rule No. 39.

([3698]) Appeal No. 9141 of 60 S issued at the session of January 19, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 48 page No. 118 rule No. 17, Appeal No. 761 of 49 S issued at the session of October 22, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 30 page No. 773 rule No. 163, Appeal No. 1842 of 39 S issued at the session of March 29, 1970 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 21 page No. 474 rule No. 114.

misdemeanors (Article 30 of Law No. 57 of 1959 on the cases and procedures of appeal before the Court of Cassation).[3699]

Whereas Article 30 of Law 57 of 1959 regarding the cases and procedures of appeal before the Court of Cassation has limited the right of appeal in cassation from the prosecution, the accused and the person responsible for civil rights and the defendant to the final judgments issued from the last degree in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors, and the meaning of the fact that the judgment is final that it was issued unappealable by an ordinary method of appeal. Hence, when the judgment issued by the court of first instance became final by accepting the one who was issued against him or by missing his appeal on time, he acquired the force of the res judicata and was not allowed to contest it afterwards by way of cassation, and the reason for that is that cassation is not a normal way of appeal that the street allowed only under special conditions to correct the error of the final judgments in the law. If the opponent has closed himself the door of appeal - which is a normal way - where he could have corrected the error of the judgment in reality or in the law, he was not allowed to appeal after cassation, and this is of the same axiom.[3700]

What is meant by the final judgment is the judgment in which the ordinary appeal was blocked and became subject to cassation appeal, and there is no doubt that the acquittal and the rejection of the civil lawsuit of this nature, as well as other judgments that require non-conviction by the criminal court in the absence of the accused for a felony, is a final judgment from the time of its issuance, because it is not considered to have harmed him because he did not convict him of anything, and therefore he does not forfeit in his presence or by arresting him; because the forfeiture and the review of the case before the criminal court are limited to the sentence or compensation in the absence of the accused for a felony, and therefore it is a final judgment, and the appeal of the Public Prosecution, the civil rights plaintiff and the person responsible for it by way of cassation is permissible.[3701]

([3699]) Appeal No. 14814 of 85 S issued at the session of November 28, 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66, page No. 21, rule No. 6, Appeal No. 25555 of 75 S issued at the session of October 12, 2005 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 56, page No. 24, rule No. 4, Appeal No. 620 of 46 S issued at the session of November 1, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 27, page No. 830, rule No. 189.

([3700]) Appeal No. 12522 of 60 S issued at the 10th session of March 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 48 page No. 313 rule No. 45, Appeal No. 62708 of 59 S issued at the 24th session of October 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 44 page No. 870 rule No. 135, Appeal No. 5555 of 59 S issued at the 28th session of November 1991 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 page No. 1265 rule No. 175, Appeal No. 2643 of 56 S issued at the session of November 4, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 37 page 824 rule No. 159, Appeal No. 4784 of 55 S issued at the session of February 2, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 37 page 211 rule No. 43, Appeal No. 776 of 53 S issued at the session of June 1, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 34 page No. 725 rule No. 145, Appeal No. 1127 For the year 45 s issued in the session of November 2, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 26 page No. 652 rule No. 143, Appeal No. 1374 of the year 41 s issued in the session of January 16, 1972 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 23 page No. 69 rule No. 19, Appeal No. 1950 of the year 40 s issued in the session of March 22, 1971 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 22 page No. 278 rule No. 66, Appeal No. 438 of the year 37 s issued in the session of April 17, 1967 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 18 page No. 527 rule No. 101, Appeal No. 1803 of the year 35 s issued in the session of March 15, 1966 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 17 page 298 rule No. 59, Appeal No. 1029 of the year 47 s issued in the session of February 26, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 29 page 175 rule No. 30.

([3701]) Appeal No. 14244 of 82 S issued at the 25th session of February 2018, Appeal No. 7703 of 81 S issued at the 21st session of March 2017 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 5 rule No. 1.

The principle is that it is not permissible to appeal by way of cassation, which is an exceptional way except in the final judgments issued in the subject matter by which the lawsuit ends. As for decisions and orders, they may not be challenged by way of cassation except by a text.[3702]

The Law on Regulating Terrorist Entities and Terrorists No. 8 of 2015, issued by a decision of the President of the Republic in its article 6, allowed the concerned parties and the Public Prosecution to appeal by cassation against the decision of the Criminal Court to include the terrorist entity in the list of terrorist entities and its decision to include the names of natural persons on the list of terrorists on the date specified by it. It stipulated that: "The concerned parties and the Public Prosecution may appeal against the decision issued regarding the inclusion on the lists of terrorist entities or the lists of terrorists within sixty days from the date of publication of the decision before the Criminal Chamber of the Court of Cassation, which is determined annually by the General Assembly of the Court, in accordance with the usual procedures for appeal.

The concerned parties may include in the appeal a request for permission to exclude some amounts of funds or other assets frozen to meet their requirements from expenses necessitated by the purchase of foodstuffs, rent, medicines, medical treatment or other[3703] expenses.

The point in determining whether the appeal is based on a judgment, a decision, or a matter related to the investigation or referral is the reality, not what the issuing authority mentions about it or what it describes.[3704]

Accordingly, it is not permissible to appeal against the judgment issued by the Criminal Court in appealing against the order of the Public Prosecution that there is no face to file a criminal case because what was issued by this court in this case is in fact a decision related to an act of investigation under Articles 167 and 210 of the Criminal Procedure Law, as amended by Law No. 170 of 1981. It is not a judgment in the legal sense contained in Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, and it does not change its nature. This is what the court described as a judgment and addressed in the name of the people and pronounced in a public session, because it is decided that the lesson in this regard is a fact, not a reality.[3705]

Since the principle is that it is not permissible to appeal by way of cassation - which is an exceptional way - except in the final judgments issued in the subject matter by which the lawsuit ends, appealing the judgment issued in the form is not permissible, and since the problem of implementation is not considered an obituary of the judgment, but rather an obituary of the implementation itself, and it is required for the jurisdiction of the ordinary judiciary to consider that problem and decide on it that the judgment in question in its implementation is issued by one of the courts of that authority.

If the judgment on the subject matter of the criminal case in question was issued by the Supreme State Security Criminal Court and ratified by the President of the Republic, and the judgment was issued in the form of the implementation of this judgment by that court, which is an exceptional judicial body, and Article 12 of Law No. 162 of 1958 on emergency cases ([3702]) Appeal No. 1 of 2017 issued at the session of 20 May 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1 of 2017 issued at the session of 20 May 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7937 of 66 Q issued at the session of 14 April 2005 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 265 rule No. 39.

([3703]) Article 6 of Law No. 8 of 2015 regarding the organization of lists of terrorist entities and terrorists, and see: Appeal No. 1 of 2017 issued at the session of May 20, 2017 (unpublished).

([3704]) Appeal No. 6708 of 78 BC issued at the 29th session of May 2016 (unpublished).

([3705]) Appeal No. 6708 of 78 S issued at the 29th session of May 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7520 of 82 S issued at the 11th session of January 2016 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 67, page No. 112, rule No. 11, Appeal No. 34648 of 77 S issued at the 15th session of November 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 838, rule No. 106.

prohibited the appeal in any way against the judgments issued by the State Security Courts, and stipulated that these judgments are not final until after they are ratified by the President of the Republic, and it was decided that the judgment issued in the form follows the judgment issued in the subject matter of the criminal case in terms of the permissibility or inadmissibility of appeal, and the judgment in the form of the implementation of the judgment issued by the Supreme State Security Court "Emergency", which may not be appealed in any way against the judgments issued in the subject matter of the criminal case, then the cassation appeal against the judgment issued by this court rejecting the form and continuing to implement - regardless of the opinion in this judgment - is not permissible.[3706]

The Code of Criminal Procedure and the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation also did not provide for the permissibility of cassation appeal in criminal orders.[3707]

An appeal by way of cassation against the judgment shall not be accepted as long as it is appealed by way of opposition.[3708]

It is decided that the announcement is the one that opens the door of opposition and begins with the validity of the deadline specified in the law. If the contested judgment has not yet been announced to the appellant, the door of opposition to this judgment is still open, and it is not permissible to appeal it by way of cassation.[3709]

It is also not permissible to appeal in cassation the judgment issued in absentia by the court of first instance to oblige the appellant to pay temporary civil compensation because it is decided

---

([3706]) Appeal No. 9287 of 78 S issued at the session of November 4, 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66 page No. 725 rule No. 111.

([3707]) Appeal No. 13748 of 4Q issued at the 13th session of July 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 583, rule No. 69, Appeal No. 7690 of 4Q issued at the 15th session of May 2013 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 64, page No. 627, rule No. 88.

([3708]) Article 32 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, and see: Appeal No. 27024 of 63 S issued at the session of 27 December 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 49 page No. 1527 Rule No. 217, Appeal No. 21681 of 59 S issued at the session of 7 June 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 45 page No. 729 Rule No. 111, Appeal No. 5459 of 58 S issued at the session of February 7, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 41, page No. 322, rule No. 52, appeal No. 7779 of 59 S issued at the session of January 18, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 41, page No. 177, rule No. 26, appeal No. 506 of 46 S issued at the session of October 17, 1976 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 27, page No. 746, rule No. 169, appeal No. 1047 of 41 S issued at the session of December 20, 1971 and published in the third part of the office letter Technician No. 22 Page No. 795 Rule No. 190, Appeal No. 558 of 38 S issued at the hearing of May 6, 1968 and published in Part II of the Technical Office Book No. 19 Page No. 526 Rule No. 102, Appeal No. 570 of 37 S issued at the hearing of April 17, 1967 and published in Part II of the Technical Office Book No. 18 Page No. 538 Rule No. 104, Appeal No. 1290 of 36 S issued at the hearing of March 7, 1967 and published in Part I of the Technical Office Book No. 18 Page No. 334 Rule No. 68, Appeal No. 126 of 36 S issued at the hearing of March 28, 1966 and published in Part I of the Technical Office Book No. 17 Page 371 Rule No. 73.

([3709]) Appeal No. 7781 of 85 S issued at the session of March 20, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4883 of 81 S issued at the session of September 15, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4 of 2010 S issued at the session of March 19, 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55 page No. 27 rule No. 5, Appeal No. 15049 of 66 S issued at the session of May 18, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29703 of 59 S issued at the session of October 16, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 47 page No. 1035 rule No. 147, Appeal No. 663 of 55 S issued at the session of April 8, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 551 rule No. 94, Appeal No. 1666 of 50 S issued at the session of May 28, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 32 page No. 577 rule No. 102, Appeal No. 1130 of 43 S issued at the session of December 24, 1973 and published in the third part of Technical Office Letter No. 24 Page 1268 Rule No. 258, Appeal No. 1796 of 38 S issued at the hearing of February 17, 1969 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 20 Page No. 254 Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 25048 of 64 S issued at the hearing of April 16, 2002 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 53 Page 638 Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 795 of 31 S issued at the hearing of December 11, 1961 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 12 Page 978 Rule No. 203, Appeal No. 19736 of 59 S issued at the hearing of May 24, 1993 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 538 Rule No. 77, Appeal No. 6913 of 53 S issued at the hearing of November 14, 1984 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 35 Page 763 Rule No. 169.

that the cassation appeal is not valid to be addressed to other than the final judgment issued from the last degree.[3710]

Since the appeal is by way of cassation, it is not valid to direct it to anything other than the final judgment issued from the last degree, and this judgment was limited to upholding the judgment issued on the inadmissibility of the objection - and its ruling is valid - the primary judgment ruling on the merits of the case by conviction has acquired the force of the res judicata, which is not permissible for the Court of Cassation to expose to similar defects.[3711]

It is also not permissible to appeal in cassation against a legal presence judgment issued by the Criminal Court.[3712]

The lesson in describing the judgment as absent or in my presence is the reality of reality, not what the court mentions about it.[3713]

Whereas Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation has limited the right of appeal in cassation to the final judgments issued from the last degree in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors, which means that the judgments issued by the Court of Cassation are final judgments that are not subject to appeal, and thus the criminal case lapses, and it is not permissible to reconsider it before the judiciary again, because the judgment issued by the Court of Cassation to convict or acquittal when deciding on the subject of the criminal case after cassation for the second time - like all other final judgments - is the title of the truth, but it is stronger than the truth itself, and therefore it must be ruled that the appeal is not permissible.[3714]

3- Judgments issued before adjudicating the matter

It is not permitted to appeal by way of cassation against the judgments issued before the adjudication of the matter unless they are based on the prohibition to proceed with the lawsuit.[3715]

The principle is that it is not permissible to appeal in cassation except after a judgment has been issued in the subject matter of the lawsuit that terminates the litigation or prevents the proceeding of the lawsuit.[3716]

([3710]) Appeal No. 17200 of 4Q issued at the session of October 15, 2014 (unpublished).

([3711]) Appeal No. 537 of 55 S issued at the session of March 20, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 431 rule No. 73.

([3712]) Appeal No. 14845 of 70 S issued at the 26th session of September 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51, page No. 558, rule No. 109.

([3713]) Appeal No. 494 of 58 S issued at the 22nd session of February 1989 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 40 Page 310 Rule No. 49, Appeal No. 5634 of 58 S issued at the 1st session of December 1988 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 39 Page 1201 Rule No. 185, Appeal No. 7120 of 53 S issued at the 7th session of March 1984 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 35 Page 254 Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 1029 of 47 S issued at the 26th session of February 1978 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 29 Page 175 Rule No. 30, Appeal No. 1047 of 41 S issued at the 20th session of December 1971 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 22 Page 795 Rule No. 190.

([3714]) Appeal No. 21536 of 65 S issued at the session of December 11, 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 1391 rule No. 212.

([3715]) Article 31 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3716]) Appeal No. 39618 of 72 S issued at the session of January 16, 2003 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 54 page 112 rule No. 11, Appeal No. 13106 of 60 S issued at the session of June 7, 1999 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 50 page No. 376 rule No. 88, Appeal No. 63405 of 59 S issued at the session of January 9, 1996 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 47 page No. 40 rule No. 4, Appeal No. 25218 of 59 S issued at the session of December 1, 1994 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 45 page No. 1050 rule No. 165, Appeal No. 62703 of 59 S issued at the session of October 24, 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 866 rule No. 134, Appeal No. 7322 of 54 S issued at the session of January 29, 1985 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 36 page No. 182 rule No. 26.

The principle is that it is not permissible to appeal by way of cassation, which is an exceptional way, except in the judgments issued in the subject matter by which the lawsuit ends. Decisions and orders related to investigation or referral of any kind may not be challenged by cassation except by a special text.[3717]

The point in determining whether the appeal is based on a judgment, decision or order related to the investigation or referral, is the fact of the fact, not what the issuing authority mentions about it or what it describes. Therefore, the judgment issued by the court in contesting the order of the Public Prosecution that there is no face to file a criminal case, issued in a felony article before the Criminal Court, is in fact a decision related to an act of investigation under Articles 167 and 210 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and not a judgment within the legal meaning of Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.[3718]

As well as the court's decision to dismiss the lawsuit is not a judgment in the legal sense contained in Article 30 of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation and does not change its nature. The court described it as a judgment and addressed ([3717]) Article 31 of Law No. 57 of 1959 on Appeal Cases and Procedures before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 13874 of 77 S issued at the 25th session of February 2013 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 64, page No. 308, rule No. 34, Appeal No. 37938 of 72 S issued at the 17th session of February 2009, Appeal No. 22359 of 66 S issued at the 12th session of July 2006 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 57, page No. 767, rule No. 77, Appeal No. 3718 of 65 s issued at the session of March 9, 2005 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 56, page No. 190, rule No. 27, appeal No. 27004 of 69 s issued at the session of March 27, 2002 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 53, page No. 534, rule No. 87, appeal No. 19526 of 62 s issued at the session of April 11, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52, page No. 415, rule No. 68, appeal No. 825 of 61 s issued at the session of November 2, 1999 and published in the first part of the letter Technical Office No. 50 Page No. 553 Rule No. 124, Appeal No. 13325 of 60 S issued at the session of 22 September 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 50 Page No. 453 Rule No. 105, Appeal No. 13103 of 60 S issued at the session of 9 December 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 48 Page No. 1387 Rule No. 211, Appeal No. 3129 of 62 S issued at the session of 10 October For the year 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 46 Page No. 1084 Rule No. 158, Appeal No. 62822 of 59 S issued at the session of November 10, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 Page No. 991 Rule No. 154, Appeal No. 313 of 59 S issued at the session of January 29, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 Page No. 191 Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 1042 of 55 S issued at the session of April 11, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 Page No. 564 Rule No. 97, Appeal No. 1725 of 32 S issued at the session of June 12, 1962 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 13 Page No. 550 Rule No. 139, Appeal No. 19144 of 59 S issued at the session of December 28, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 44 Page No. 1271 Rule No. 194, Appeal No. 26000 of 59 S issued at the session of October 12, 1993 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 44 Page No. 787 Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 15819 of 59 S issued at the hearing of 11 April 1993 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 44 Page No. 359 Rule No. 48, Appeal No. 3305 of 55 S issued at the hearing of 27 January 1986 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 37 Page No. 152 Rule No. 31, Appeal No. 1803 of 55 S issued at the hearing of 3 December 1985 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 36 Page No. 1061 Rule No. 195.

([3718]) Appeal No. 3718 of 65 S issued at the session of March 9, 2005 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 56, page No. 190, rule No. 27, Appeal No. 13325 of 60 S issued at the session of September 22, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50, page No. 453, rule No. 105, Appeal No. 45090 of 59 S issued at the session of May 17, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 713, rule No. 91, Appeal No. 7276 of 54 S issued at the session of April 23, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 581 rule No. 102, Appeal No. 6840 of 53 S issued at the session of March 14, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 35 page No. 274 rule No. 56, Appeal No. 45090 of 59 S issued at the session of May 17, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49 page No. 713 rule No. 91, Appeal No. 45090 of 59 S Issued at the session of May 17, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 49 page No. 713 rule No. 91, Appeal No. 7276 of 54 s issued at the session of April 23, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 36 page No. 581 rule No. 102, Appeal No. 7276 of 54 s issued at the session of April 23, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 36 page No. 581 rule No. 102, Appeal No. 6840 of 53 s issued at the session of March 14, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 35 page No. 274 rule No. 56, Appeal No. 6840 of 53 s issued at the session of March 14, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 35 page No. 274 rule No. 56.

it in the name of the people and pronounced it in a public session because it is decided that the lesson in this regard is the reality of reality.[3719]

Also, the judiciary in the civil lawsuit not to accept it does not end the litigation or prevent it from proceeding if it properly contacted the competent court, which is the civil court that has jurisdiction in civil disputes, and therefore the civil rights plaintiff's appeal in it by way of cassation is not permissible.[3720]

The court's decision to suspend the lawsuit until the appeal of unconstitutionality is decided is only a procedure prior to the issuance of the judgment, but it is not a judgment that ends the lawsuit, which reveals that appealing it by way of cassation is not permissible.[3721]

It is also not permissible to appeal against the decision of the appellate misdemeanor court to suspend the conduct of the criminal case until the civil lawsuit included in the decision is decided, which is not permissible.[3722]

It is also not permissible to appeal the decision of the Criminal Court to take the opinion of the Mufti of the Republic before the death sentence, as consulting the opinion of the Mufti is only a procedure necessary for the validity of the death sentence, which means that it is a procedure prior to the issuance of the judgment, but it is not a judgment that ends the case.[3723]

The ruling of the contested judgment regarding the civil lawsuit rejecting the claim of forgery is a ruling on a preliminary sub-issue that may not be appealed in cassation against the independence of.[3724]

4- Appeal by the civil rights plaintiff

Article 30 of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation - promulgated by Law No. 57 of 1959 replaced by Law No. 74 of 2007 amending some provisions of the Criminal Procedure Law and the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation - does not allow appeal in relation to the civil lawsuit alone if the required compensation does not exceed the quorum of the cassation appeal stipulated in Article 248 of the Civil and Commercial Procedure Law, which is one hundred thousand pounds, stipulating that: «It is not permissible to appeal in relation to the civil lawsuit alone if the required compensation does not exceed the quorum of the cassation appeal stipulated in Article 248 of the Civil and Commercial Procedure Law».[3725]

Whereas Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation allows the civil rights plaintiff to appeal to the Court of Cassation against the final judgments issued from the last degree in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors in the cases indicated therein with regard to his civil rights only, and the right of the civil rights plaintiff to do

---

([3719]) Appeal No. 13103 of 60 BC issued at the session of 9 December 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 1387 rule No. 211.

([3720]) Appeal No. 11638 for the year 61 S issued in the session of April 12, 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51 page No. 407 rule No. 74.

([3721]) Appeal No. 439 of 61 S issued on November 25, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 48 page No. 1310 rule No. 198.

([3722]) Appeal No. 15935 for the year 62 S issued at the session of September 20, 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 898 rule No. 136.

([3723]) Appeal No. 14725 of 62 S issued at the session of January 17, 1994 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 45 page No. 115 rule No. 17.

([3724]) Appeal No. 691 of 43 BC issued at the session of May 13, 1974 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 25 page No. 470 rule No. 100.

([3725]) Article 30 of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 11436 of 82 S issued at the session of February 25, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 470 of 84 S issued at the session of May 4, 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67 page No. 467 rule No. 54, Appeal No. 8794 of 78 S issued at the session of March 5, 2016 (unpublished).

so is independent of the right of both the Public Prosecution and the accused and the person responsible for civil rights, and when he files his appeal by way of cassation and decides to accept it in form and in substance to overturn the contested judgment and return it, The Court of Repeat had to examine the elements of the crime in terms of the availability of its elements and the proof of the act constituting it against the accused in terms of its occurrence and the validity of its attribution to him, which resulted in its legal effects not restricted by the previous judiciary. This is not precluded by the fact that the judgment in the criminal case has the force of res judicata; because the criminal and civil lawsuits, even if they arise from the same reason, but the subject matter in each of them differs from the other, which makes it impossible to adhere to the authority of the final judgment, otherwise the right of appeal by cassation prescribed for the plaintiff of civil rights is suspended and the function of the Court of Repeat is suspended in its regard if the plaintiff of rights Civil is the only appellant, and this is to argue that the force of res judicata in the criminal judgment issued by the criminal court on the subject of the criminal case is not in accordance with Article 456 of the Criminal Procedure Law except before the civil courts and not before the criminal courts themselves as they consider the civil case by association with the criminal case, and if the contested judgment violated this consideration and withheld itself from examining the availability of the elements of the crime against the appellee, adhering to the previous judgment of acquittal in the criminal case, it may have erred in the application of the law, which makes it defective in a way that requires its cassation.[3726]

The street is intended by what is stipulated in Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation that the condition for the permissibility of cassation appeal in the judgments issued in the civil lawsuit alone is that the claimed compensation exceeds the quorum of the cassation appeal stipulated in Article 248 of the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law, which is one hundred thousand pounds, even if the compensation is described as temporary, it is a general rule that if the accused in cassation appeals against the judgment issued against him for compensation, he is subject to the quorum of cassation appeal if it is limited to the civil lawsuit alone, but if the accused in cassation appeals against the judgment issued against him in the civil and criminal lawsuits, a specific quorum is not limited to that the civil lawsuit is subordinate to the criminal lawsuit, the cassation appeal may not be accepted for one without the other because of its fragmentation, and all that is required in this case that his cassation appeal against the criminal judgment is permissible.[3727]

The right of the civil rights plaintiff to appeal in cassation is that the compensation stipulated in Article 248 of the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law exceeds one hundred thousand pounds, and if the civil rights plaintiff's requests before the court of first instance are an amount of temporary compensation, the quorum of the appeal stipulated in the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law shall not exceed, even if it is described as temporary, and therefore it must be decided that the appeal is not permissible.[3728]

([3726]) Appeal No. 15742 of 4Q issued at the session of July 21, 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66, page No. 551, rule No. 73.

([3727]) Appeal No. 19779 of the year 4 issued in the session of December 28, 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 1015 rule No. 138.

([3728]), Appeal No. 18142 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 3 September 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6990 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 20 January 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6938 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 20 January 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6977 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 20 January 2014, Appeal No. 23574 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 27 November 2013 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 64, page No. 944, rule No. 145, Appeal No. 10232 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 26 September 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 678 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 4 July 2013 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 64, page No. 702, rule No. 101, Appeal No. 2289 of 4Q issued at the hearing of 21 April 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7221 of 79Q issued at the hearing of 17 September 2011 (unpublished).

The right to appeal in cassation is based on the fact that the compensation exceeds the quorum stipulated in Article 248 of the Code of Procedure, and the priority in assessing the lawsuit is what the litigants claim, not what is actually ruled.[3729]

5-Cases in which it is permissible to appeal in cassation

It is permitted to appeal in cassation in the following cases:

1. If the contested judgment is based on a violation of the law or an error in its application or interpretation;

2- If the judgment is null and void;

3- If the proceedings are null and void, it shall have an effect on the judgment.[3730]

It is also required in the judgment to include the reasons on which it was based. The legislator has stipulated that the reasons for the judgment must include the factual evidence and legal arguments on which the court relied in issuing its judgment in the dispute. The legislator has arranged the nullity on the lack of factual or legal reasons for the judgment.

The deficiency in the reasons for the contested judgment - the deficiency in causation - which results in the invalidity of the judgment, is such as an error in attribution or attribution of the judgment to evidence that has no fixed origin in the papers, or the existence of a contradiction in the reasons on which the judgment is based that makes it dilapidated so that its operative part does not find what it is based on, or an error in understanding the reality in the lawsuit.

The contradiction that defects and invalidates the judgment is the one that falls between its reasons so that some of them deny what others have proven and do not know which of the two things the court intended.[3731]

The error in attribution that defects the judgment is the one that occurs in what is influential in the doctrine of the court that concluded it.[3732]

The reasons for the judgment are considered tainted by corruption in inference if it involves a defect that affects the integrity of the deduction. This is achieved if the court bases its judgment on an understanding that is contrary to what is established in the lawsuit papers, or if there is no logical necessity between what it concluded in its judiciary and what has been proven to it, or if the court bases its conviction on evidence that is objectively invalid to be convinced of, or on a lack of understanding of the fact that has been proven to it, or on extracting this fact from a source that does not exist or exists but is contrary to what it has proven. This is also achieved if the judgment is based on a fact that was deduced from an imaginary source that does not exist, or exists but is contrary to what it has proven, or is not contradictory, but it is reasonably impossible to deduce that fact from it, it is necessary in the principles of inference that the evidence on which the judgment is based to lead to the consequences it has without arbitrariness in conclusion and does not contradict the judgment of reason and logic.[3733]

([3729]) Appeal No. 15745 of 4Q issued on July 2, 2014 (unpublished).
([3730]) Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.
([3731]) Appeal No. 22936 of 64 S issued at the session of July 9, 2003 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 54 page No. 773 rule No. 103.
([3732]) Appeal No. 19153 of 61 S issued at the session of May 18, 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 499 rule No. 74.
([3733]) See Appeal No. 3815 of 80 S issued on April 11, 2011 (unpublished).

An error in the application of the law means misinterpreting a legal rule and applying it to something other than the subject to which the street wanted to apply and drawing incorrect conclusions.[3734]

The violation of the law is in three forms:

First: Violation of the law by abandoning a legal text that cannot be interpreted, and there is no dispute that it must be taken into account in the lawsuit;

Second: The error in the application of the law by the acts of a legal text that does not apply to the lawsuit;

Third: The error in the interpretation of the law, by giving the text to be applied a meaning that is not its correct meaning.

The nullity of the judgment means the penalty arranged by law for violating the rules and procedures that the courts are obligated to follow in forming their bodies and in issuing and editing judgments, and they often do not realize that they are not observed until when they are issued or after they are issued.

The invalidity of the procedures that affect the judgment means that there is a defect in one of the lawsuit procedures from its filing until the issuance of the judgment, and that there is a close link between this defect and the judgment issued in the lawsuit.

6. Scope of the challenge

The right of the civil rights plaintiff to appeal by way of cassation is limited to what has been decided by the judgment related to the civil lawsuit only, and therefore his appeal to the criminal part is not permissible, which must be decided not to accept the appeal in relation to the criminal lawsuit. The civil right plaintiff may not challenge the verdict of the acquittal of the accused without the verdict of rejecting the civil lawsuit, and the appeal report is the reference in determining the contested part of the judgment.[3735]

Nor does the plaintiff of civil rights accept what he attributes to the judgment issued in the criminal case regarding the description of the charge.[3736]

However, the civil plaintiff may, if he appeals in cassation against the judgment issued in the civil lawsuit, rely on aspects related to the criminal lawsuit, as long as it has an impact on the civil lawsuit and the civil lawsuit can be adjudicated, and the civil plaintiff is not considered to have exceeded his capacity and interest.[3737]

([3734]) Dictionary of Law - Arabic Language Academy - Arab Republic of Egypt - Public Authority for Amiri Press Affairs - 1420AH - 1999AD - p. 317.

([3735]) Appeal No. 29609 of 77 S issued at the session of November 4, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22876 of 77 S issued at the session of May 20, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 53204 of 73 S issued at the session of October 19, 2010 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 61 page No. 567 rule No. 68, Appeal No. 53204 of 73 S issued at the session of October 19, 2010 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 61 page No. 567 rule No. 68, Appeal No. 34065 of 71 s issued at the session of 3 August 2008, Appeal No. 24469 of 70 s issued at the session of 29 July 2008 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 59 page No. 341 rule No. 62, Appeal No. 16241 of 63 s issued at the session of 28 May 2001 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 52 page No. 530 rule No. 95, Appeal No. 2282 of 62 s issued at the session of 15 October 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51 page No. 626 rule No. 122, Appeal No. 18790 For the year 61 S issued in the session of January 4, 2000 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 51, page No. 33, rule No. 3, appeal No. 25644 of 59 S issued in the session of November 15, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45, page No. 999, rule No. 156, appeal No. 4480 of 58 S issued in the session of December 4, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 40, page No. 1131, rule No. 183.

([3736]) Appeal No. 9126 of 69 S issued at the session of March 7, 2002 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 53 page No. 393 rule No. 70.

([3737]) Appeal No. 23408 of 73 S issued at the 16th session of March 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64, page No. 370, rule No. 44, Appeal No. 17139 of 64 S issued at the 8th session of February 2000 and published in the Technical

When the civil rights plaintiff filed his appeal by way of cassation and decided to accept it in form and in the matter of cassation of the contested judgment and restitution, the Court of Repetition had to examine the elements of the crime in terms of the availability of its elements and the proof of the act constituting it against the accused on the one hand and the validity of his attribution to him, which resulted in its legal effects not restricted by the previous judiciary. This is not precluded by the fact that the judgment in the criminal lawsuit has acquired the force of res judicata because the two lawsuits - criminal and civil - although they arise from one reason, the subject matter in each differs from the other, which makes it impossible to adhere to the authority of the criminal judgment, otherwise to disrupt the right of appeal prescribed to the civil rights plaintiff and to disrupt the function of the court of restitution in its regard if the civil rights plaintiff is the sole appellant)[3738](.

It is not permissible to appeal from any of the litigants in criminal and civil lawsuits, except with regard to his rights.[3739]

It is not permissible to appeal from the plaintiff of civil rights and those responsible for them except in relation to their civil rights.[3740]

However, the Attorney General may appeal the verdict in the interest of the accused.[3741]

7. Appeal on grounds of non-observance of trial proceedings

The principle is to consider that the procedures have been taken into account during the consideration of the lawsuit. However, the concerned party may prove by all means that these procedures have been neglected or violated, unless they are mentioned in the minutes of the session or in the judgment. If it is stated in one of them that they were followed, it is not permissible to prove that they were not followed except by challenging forgery.[3742]

Office letter No. 51, page No. 142, rule No. 25, Appeal No. 2406 of 31 S issued at the 23rd session of October 1962 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 13, page No. 664, rule No. 165.

([3738]) Appeal No. 1822 of 59 S issued at the session of May 4, 1989 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 40 page No. 565 rule No. 93, Appeal No. 5962 of 52 S issued at the session of May 16, 1983 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 34 page No. 636 rule No. 128.

([3739]) Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3740]) Appeal No. 2582 of 86 S issued at the session of April 3, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 339 of 31 S issued at the session of January 1, 1962 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Book No. 13 Page No. 4 Rule No. 1.

([3741]) Article 30 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3742]) Article 30 of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 32788 of 85 S issued at the session of 25 November 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 33679 of 84 S issued at the session of 1 September 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66 Page 588 Rule No. 83, Appeal No. 14148 of 84 S issued at the session of 10 May 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4898 of 82 S issued at the session of 1 December 2013 and published in the Office's letter Technical No. 64 Page No. 967 Rule No. 148, Appeal No. 8015 of 81 S issued at the hearing of March 20, 2012 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 63 Page No. 308 Rule No. 48, Appeal No. 9702 of 80 S issued at the hearing of January 18, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10641 of 80 S issued at the hearing of March 6, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20657 of 73 S issued at the hearing of December 14, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8004 of 65 S issued at the hearing of December 16, 2008 (unpublished) October 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6501 of 71 S issued at the session of October 7, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12336 of 65 S issued at the session of July 31, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 42490 of 72 S issued at the session of March 5, 2003 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 54 Page No. 333 Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 4881 of 63 S issued at the session of May 16, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14318 of 71 s issued at the session of March 7, 2002 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 53 page 397 rule No. 71, Appeal No. 41 of 62 s issued at the session of October 1, 2000 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 51 page 571 rule No. 111, Appeal No. 26297 of 64 s issued at the session of December 22, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 47 page 1392 rule No. 200, Appeal No. 3972 of 61 s issued at the session of January 10, 1993 and published in the first part of the letter Technical Office No. 44 Page No. 57 Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 864 of 61 S issued at the session of October 22, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 43 Page No. 895 Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 6944 of 61 S issued at the session of December 16, 1991 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 42 Page No. 1342 Rule No. 185, Appeal No. 5092 of 61 S issued at the session of November 4 For the year 1991 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 Page 1119 Rule No. 155, Appeal No. 24875 of 59 S issued at the session of 5 April 1990

However, the absence of the minutes of the hearing and the judgment proves that the court is in the presence of the lawyer present with the accused in the list of lawyers' registration, with the fact that his name is not found in the Bar Association, which results in the invalidity of the trial and the judgment proceedings and the need for the Court of Cassation to revoke it on its own and return. This does not prejudice the statement that the original in the judgments is that the procedures were taken into account during the consideration of the case, as this requires that the procedures are mentioned in the minutes of the hearing or the judgment, which is devoid of each of the aforementioned statement of registration, which stigmatizes the trial proceedings as invalidity.[3743]

It is decided that the mere absence of the minutes of the hearing and the judgment from mentioning the publicity should not be a face to the cassation of the judgment unless the appellant proves that the hearing was confidential.[3744]

It was ruled that since the report paper does not actually exist, it is not valid in this regard to object within the meaning of the text of the last paragraph of Article 30 of Law No. 57 of 1959 regarding the cases and procedures of appeal in cassation by saying that the judgment as long as it is proven that this procedure has been fulfilled, there is no way to deny it except by challenging forgery as long as the report paper does not actually exist.[3745]

8- Presenting the judgments issued in the presence of the death penalty to the Court of Cassation

The Public Prosecution shall submit the case, if the judgment was issued in presence of the death penalty, to the Court of Cassation accompanied by a memorandum of its opinion on the judgment, within the time limit set for the cassation appeal.[3746] and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 41 Page 582 Rule No. 100, Appeal No. 3807 of 56 S issued at the session of 19 November 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 37 Page 904 Rule No. 173, Appeal No. 613 of 55 S issued at the session of 16 May 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 Page No. 688 Rule No. 122, Appeal No. 1307 of 47 S issued at the session of March 20, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 29 Page No. 315 Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 1309 of 45 S issued at the session of December 21, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 26 Page No. 844 Rule No. 186, Appeal No. 1542 of 41 S issued at the session of April 3, 1972 and published in the second part of Technical Office Letter No. 23 Page No. 518 Rule No. 114, Appeal No. 989 of 40 S issued at the session of 5 October 1970 and published in Part III of Technical Office Letter No. 21 Page No. 960 Rule No. 227, Appeal No. 2081 of 33 S issued at the session of 23 March 1964 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 15 Page No. 206 Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 2308 of 31 S issued at the session of 8 May 1962 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 13 Page No. 458 Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 4332 of 62 s issued at the hearing of 13 December 1994 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 45 page 1141 Rule No. 180, Appeal No. 4100 of 61 s issued at the hearing of 2 November 1992 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 43 page 957 Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 10124 of 59 s issued at the hearing of 29 October 1992 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 43 page 943 Rule No. 147, Appeal No. 1719 of 55 s issued at the hearing of 16 October 1985 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 36 page 872 Rule No. 156, Appeal No. 185 of 48 s issued at the hearing of 12 June 1978 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 29 page 607 Rule No. 117.

---

([3743]) Appeal No. 12393 of 85 s issued at the hearing of November 14, 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66, page No. 796, rule No. 119, Appeal No. 3621 of 81 s issued at the hearing of December 19, 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 63, page No. 858, rule No. 155, Appeal No. 54932 of 75 s issued at the hearing of December 6, 2005 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 56, page No. 677, rule No. 103, Appeal No. 5562 of 69 s issued at the hearing of February 15, 2000 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 51, page No. 187, rule No. 36, Appeal No. 19861 of 64 s issued at the hearing of June 5, 1995 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 46, page No. 897, rule No. 137.

([3744]) Appeal No. 4332 of 62 S issued at the session of 13 December 1994 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 45 page No. 1141 rule No. 180.

([3745]) Appeal No. 4613 of 58 S issued at the session of May 3, 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 page No. 665 rule No. 114.

([3746]) Article 46 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

If the judgment is issued in presence of the death penalty, and it is not appealed within the time limit prescribed by law, the Public Prosecution shall submit the case to the Court of Cassation, accompanied by a memorandum of its opinion on the judgment, on the date prescribed for the cassation appeal.[3747]

The function of the Court of Cassation regarding death sentences is of a special nature, which requires the implementation of its control over all elements of the judgment, objective and formal, and it decides on its own initiative to overturn the judgment in any case of error in the law or nullity, even on its own initiative, not limited to the limits of the aspects of the appeal or the basis of the opinion by which the Public Prosecution presents those provisions.[3748]

([3747]) Article 419 bis /8 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3748]) Appeal No. 8236 of 88 Q issued on April 11, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9508 of 87 Q issued on April 3, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5939 of 87 Q issued on January 4, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15321 of 85 Q issued on February 3, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page 153, Rule No. 21, Appeal No. 12393 of 85 Q issued on November 14, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page 796, Rule No. 119, Appeal No. 12393 of 85 Q issued on November 14, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page 796, Rule No. 119, Appeal No. 6101 of 84 Q issued on February 2, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page 213, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 5762 of 82 Q issued on December 1, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 1009, Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 5086 of 81 Q issued on October 10, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 491, Rule No. 83, Appeal No. 9400 of 79 Q issued on February 7, 2010, published in Technical Office Book No. 61, page 94, Rule No. 14, Appeal No. 7486 of 78 Q issued on October 25, 2009, Appeal No. 1 of 78 Q issued on October 27, 2008, Appeal No. 45127 of 76 Q issued on December 6, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 938, Rule No. 108, Appeal No. 45127 of 76 Q issued on December 6, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 938, Rule No. 108, Appeal No. 21267 of 76 Q issued on November 5, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 851, Rule No. 93, Appeal No. 39975 of 76 Q issued on November 2, 2006, Appeal No. 39975 of 76 Q issued on November 2, 2006, Appeal No. 83644 of 75 Q issued on March 2, 2006, Appeal No. 54932 of 75 Q issued on December 6, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page 677, Rule No. 103, Appeal No. 38004 of 75 Q issued on October 2, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page 452, Rule No. 67, Appeal No. 24467 of 75 Q issued on June 4, 2005, Appeal No. 8591 of 75 Q issued on May 15, 2005, Appeal No. 30947 of 73 Q issued on December 4, 2003, Appeal No. 39918 of 72 Q issued on February 5, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 293, Rule No. 26, Appeal No. 6627 of 72 Q issued on October 20, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 982, Rule No. 164, Appeal No. 22612 of 71 Q issued on February 4, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 213, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 21910 of 71 Q issued on February 3, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 191, Rule No. 33, Appeal No. 21910 of 71 Q issued on February 3, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 191, Rule No. 33, Appeal No. 21868 of 71 Q issued on February 2, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 176, Rule No. 30, Appeal No. 20301 of 71 Q issued on January 6, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 58, Rule No. 10, Appeal No. 10228 of 71 Q issued on November 15, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 861, Rule No. 165, Appeal No. 6860 of 70 Q issued on February 6, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 237, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 5562 of 69 Q issued on February 15, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 187, Rule No. 36, Appeal No. 6911 of 68 Q issued on December 14, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1449, Rule No. 206, Appeal No. 27320 of 64 Q issued on October 10, 1995, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 1095, Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 19861 of 64 Q issued on June 5, 1995, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 897, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 12044 of 64 Q issued on January 10, 1995, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 112, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 7979 of 64 Q issued on January 5, 1995, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 94, Rule No. 9, Appeal No. 7705 of 62 Q issued on December 13, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 1124, Rule No. 176, Appeal No. 6777 of 62 Q issued on November 3, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 919, Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 2654 of 62 Q issued on October 13, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 808, Rule No. 125, Appeal No. 474 of 60 Q issued on May 7, 1991, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 743, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 24526 of 59 Q issued on May 28, 1990, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 780, Rule No. 135, Appeal No. 22419 of 59 Q issued on February 8, 1990, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 345, Rule No. 56, Appeal No. 22437 of 59 Q issued on February 8, 1990, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 355, Rule No. 57, Appeal No. 6007 of 58 Q issued on December 8, 1988, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 1261, Rule No. 195, Appeal No. 3725 of 58 Q issued on October 4, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 853, Rule No. 128, Appeal No. 4118 of 57 Q issued on January 12, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 122, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 4114 of 57 Q issued on January 7, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 112, Rule No. 10, Appeal No. 5946 of 56 Q issued on January 14, 1987, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 92, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 3968 of 56 Q issued on December 31, 1986, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 1109, Rule No. 210, Appeal No. 4421 of 55 Q issued on January 20, 1986, published in the first part of Technical

However, exceeding the deadline for presenting the death sentences accompanied by a memorandum of opinion of the prosecution signed by a public lawyer or signed by an illegible signature, or without proving the date of its submission, does not result in the non-acceptance of the prosecution's offer, but that the Court of Cassation relates to the lawsuit as soon as it is presented to it and discovers on its own - without being bound by the opinion building guaranteed by the prosecution in its memorandum - what may have been defects in the judgment, and this is equal to the fact that the prosecution's presentation is on time or after its lapse, and its memorandum is signed by a public lawyer or without it in the degree, because the legislator wanted to identify it merely by setting an organizational rule and not leaving the door open indefinitely and expediting the presentation of the death sentences to the Court of Cassation in all cases when the judgment is issued in presence, in order to avoid suspicion between the right of the prosecution and its duty: its right to appeal by cassation in the judgment as a litigable criminal lawsuit, and its duty to present the case.[3749]

Office Book No. 37, page 105, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 4018 of 55 Q issued on December 19, 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 1145, Rule No. 212, Appeal No. 1725 of 55 Q issued on October 10, 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 840, Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 2500 of 51 Q issued on January 21, 1982, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 72, Rule No. 13, Appeal No. 275 of 51 Q issued on November 1, 1981, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 795, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 1294 of 48 Q issued on October 1, 1978, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 649, Rule No. 126, Appeal No. 166 of 47 Q issued on May 22, 1977, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 28, page 642, Rule No. 135, Appeal No. 488 of 38 Q issued on April 15, 1968, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 19, page 460, Rule No. 89, Appeal No. 6911 of 68 Q issued on December 14, 1998, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1449, Rule No. 206, Appeal No. 27320 of 64 Q issued on October 10, 1995, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 1095, Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 12044 of 64 Q issued on January 10, 1995, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 112, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 6713 of 63 Q issued on February 1, 1994, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 171, Rule No. 27, Appeal No. 7705 of 62 Q issued on December 13, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 1124, Rule No. 176, Appeal No. 6777 of 62 Q issued on November 3, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 919, Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 2654 of 62 Q issued on October 13, 1993, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 808, Rule No. 125, Appeal No. 7896 of 60 Q issued on October 7, 1991, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 973, Rule No. 134, Appeal No. 22419 of 59 Q issued on February 8, 1990, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 345, Rule No. 56, Appeal No. 3725 of 58 Q issued on October 4, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 853, Rule No. 128, Appeal No. 4113 of 57 Q issued on January 6, 1988, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 79, Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 5928 of 56 Q issued on February 5, 1987, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 226, Rule No. 32, Appeal No. 3828 of 56 Q issued on November 16, 1986, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 883, Rule No. 170, Appeal No. 4421 of 55 Q issued on January 20, 1986, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 105, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 1725 of 55 Q issued on October 10, 1985, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 840, Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 1646 of 52 Q issued on May 10, 1982, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 572, Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 2500 of 51 Q issued on January 21, 1982, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 72, Rule No. 13, Appeal No. 2365 of 51 Q issued on January 3, 1982, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 11, Rule No. 1, Appeal No. 414 of 44 Q issued on June 3, 1974, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 539, Rule No. 116, Appeal No. 324 of 44 Q issued on April 14, 1974, published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 408, Rule No. 87, Appeal No. 626 of 38 Q issued on May 20, 1968, published in the second part of Technical Office Book No. 19, page 589, Rule No. 117..

([3749]) Appeal No. 10017 of 88 Q issued on October 10, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8528 of 88 Q issued on May 12, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8352 of 88 Q issued on May 5, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8236 of 88 Q issued on April 11, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21565 of 87 Q issued on January 13, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 61 of 88 Q issued on November 25, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16471 of 87 Q issued on October 9, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11192 of 87 Q issued on April 2, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4042 of 87 Q issued on January 20, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 33074 of 86 Q issued on November 11, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2518 of 87 Q issued on November 9, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 33194 of 86 Q issued on November 4, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29658 of 86 Q issued on June 7, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28565 of 86 Q issued on May 6, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28605 of 86 Q issued on May 4, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 27833 of 86 Q issued on April 11, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23981 of 86 Q issued on February 1, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 48552 of 85 Q issued on November 5, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 45046 of 85 Q issued on May 4, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25951 of 85 Q issued on February 6, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 30847 of 85 Q issued on February 4, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22909 of 85 Q issued on January 10, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page 78, Rule No. 9, Appeal No. 25689 of 85 Q issued on January 5, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22912 of 85 Q issued on January 2, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12898 of 85 Q issued on December 5, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21819 of 85 Q issued on December 3, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2288 of 85 Q issued on June 13, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24057 of 84 Q issued on February 5, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6101 of 84 Q issued on February 2, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page 213, Rule No. 24, Appeal No. 22305 of 83 Q issued on October 12, 2014, published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page 656, Rule No. 85, Appeal No. 4007 of 82 Q issued on May 15, 2014, published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page 410, Rule No. 46, Appeal No. 17203 of 83 Q issued on May 12, 2014, published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page 369, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 18500 of 83 Q issued on May 8, 2014, published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page 331, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 6709 of 82 Q issued on December 5, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5762 of 82 Q issued on December 1, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 1009, Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 2983 of 82 Q issued on October 1, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 770, Rule No. 116, Appeal No. 3190 of 81 Q issued on July 7, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8958 of 81 Q issued on May 7, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8842 of 81 Q issued on May 5, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6068 of 81 Q issued on March 9, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 332, Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 2790 of 81 Q issued on October 10, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5086 of 81 Q issued on October 10, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 491, Rule No. 83, Appeal No. 6542 of 80 Q issued on March 12, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 280, Rule No. 43, Appeal No. 6071 of 80 Q issued on February 21, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6132 of 80 Q issued on February 18, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8409 of 79 Q issued on February 17, 2011, published in Technical Office Book No. 62, page 68, Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 7352 of 79 Q issued on December 15, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2823 of 79 Q issued on November 21, 2010, published in Technical Office Book No. 61, page 633, Rule No. 81, Appeal No. 5658 of 79 Q issued on October 13, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4864 of 79 Q issued on October 3, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10664 of 79 Q issued on March 4, 2010, published in Technical Office Book No. 61, page 215, Rule No. 27, Appeal No. 9400 of 79 Q issued on February 7, 2010, published in Technical Office Book No. 61, page 94, Rule No. 14, Appeal No. 9651 of 79 Q issued on February 3, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9507 of 78 Q issued on December 21, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1261 of 79 Q issued on December 17, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7486 of 78 Q issued on October 25, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7570 of 78 Q issued on October 19, 2009, published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page 343, Rule No. 47, Appeal No. 6416 of 78 Q issued on May 18, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4923 of 78 Q issued on April 7, 2009, published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page 201, Rule No. 26, Appeal No. 3506 of 78 Q issued on December 17, 2008, published in Technical Office Book No. 59, page 557, Rule No. 99, Appeal No. 34150 of 77 Q issued on June 11, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 37001 of 77 Q issued on April 10, 2008, published in Technical Office Book No. 59, page 267, Rule No. 46, Appeal No. 28680 of 77 Q issued on April 3, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19830 of 77 Q issued on December 12, 2007, published in Technical Office Book No. 58, page 794, Rule No. 148, Appeal No. 56449 of 76 Q issued on February 4, 2007, published in Technical Office Book No. 58, page 113, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 42103 of 75 Q issued on April 4, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 470, Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 69824 of 75 Q issued on March 13, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 41101 of 75 Q issued on February 27, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 355, Rule No. 39, Appeal No. 28073 of 75 Q issued on February 27, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 71175 of 75 Q issued on January 16, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 100, Rule No. 10, Appeal No. 43595 of 75 Q issued on December 21, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page 793, Rule No. 110, Appeal No. 46448 of 75 Q issued on December 15, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 56397 of 75 Q issued on December 7, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page 761, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 54932 of 75 Q issued on December 6, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page 677, Rule No. 103, Appeal No. 38004 of 75 Q issued on October 2, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page 452, Rule No. 67, Appeal No. 10854 of 75 Q issued on May 16, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8323 of 75 Q issued on May 7, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 695 of 75 Q issued on March 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 40661 of 73 Q issued on April 5, 2004, published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page 360, Rule No. 46, Appeal No. 38328 of 73 Q issued on April 1, 2004, published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page 287, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 22878 of 73 Q issued on January 6, 2004, published in Technical Office Book No. 55, page 86, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 7369 of 73 Q issued on December 22, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25219 of 68 Q issued on December 8, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31093 of 73 Q issued on December 6, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 1165, Rule No. 162, Appeal No. 52083 of 72 Q issued on October 18, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 993, Rule No. 134, Appeal No. 52711 of 72 Q issued on October 12, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 962, Rule No. 127, Appeal No. 4362 of 73 Q issued on October 5, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 937, Rule No. 125, Appeal No. 28408 of 72 Q issued on July 28, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5337 of 69 Q issued on April 14, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31536 of 72 Q issued on March 10, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 37282 of 72 Q issued on February 2, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 263, Rule No. 23, Appeal No. 19015 of 72 Q issued on November 13, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 1105, Rule No. 184, Appeal No. 6627 of 72 Q issued on October 20, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 982, Rule No. 164, Appeal No. 34413 of 71 Q issued on April 3, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 581, Rule No. 95, Appeal No. 21866 of 71 Q issued on March 25, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14318 of 71 Q issued on March 7, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 397, Rule No. 71, Appeal No. 17310 of 71 Q issued on March 7, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 436, Rule No. 72, Appeal No. 7981 of 70 Q issued on February 8, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 243, Rule No. 39, Appeal No. 26346 of 71 Q issued on February 7, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23449 of 71 Q issued on February 5,

2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 224, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 22612 of 71 Q issued on February 4, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 213, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 21868 of 71 Q issued on February 2, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 176, Rule No. 30, Appeal No. 29339 of 70 Q issued on January 17, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 125, Rule No. 23, Appeal No. 20301 of 71 Q issued on January 6, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 58, Rule No. 10, Appeal No. 24740 of 70 Q issued on December 24, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 1027, Rule No. 191, Appeal No. 10228 of 71 Q issued on November 15, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 861, Rule No. 165, Appeal No. 23369 of 70 Q issued on May 17, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 512, Rule No. 91, Appeal No. 13665 of 70 Q issued on March 22, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 353, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 6860 of 70 Q issued on February 6, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 237, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 5223 of 70 Q issued on February 4, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 205, Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 29744 of 69 Q issued on January 8, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17411 of 69 Q issued on April 3, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 373, Rule No. 68, Appeal No. 10016 of 66 Q issued on April 2, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 354, Rule No. 66, Appeal No. 33899 of 68 Q issued on February 16, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 198, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 5562 of 69 Q issued on February 15, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 187, Rule No. 36, Appeal No. 32586 of 68 Q issued on January 4, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 38, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 25219 of 68 Q issued on December 6, 1999, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 617, Rule No. 139, Appeal No. 8086 of 68 Q issued on November 10, 1998, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1258, Rule No. 176, Appeal No. 5189 of 68 Q issued on November 8, 1998, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 1227, Rule No. 170, Appeal No. 2353 of 68 Q issued on June 3, 1998, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 813, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 28462 of 67 Q issued on May 7, 1998, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 666, Rule No. 85, Appeal No. 26620 of 67 Q issued on May 6, 1998, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 639, Rule No. 83, Appeal No. 29653 of 67 Q issued on March 10, 1998, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 388, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 984 of 67 Q issued on October 7, 1997, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 1041, Rule No. 155, Appeal No. 14780 of 66 Q issued on May 15, 1997, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 576, Rule No. 86, Appeal No. 10639 of 66 Q issued on April 3, 1997, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 420, Rule No. 61, Appeal No. 7257 of 66 Q issued on March 11, 1997, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 335, Rule No. 47, Appeal No. 86 of 66 Q issued on March 5, 1997, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 285, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 11283 of 65 Q issued on October 9, 1996, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 47, page 971, Rule No. 138, Appeal No. 9758 of 65 Q issued on May 9, 1996, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 47, page 602, Rule No. 84, Appeal No. 4731 of 65 Q issued on February 6, 1996, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 47, page 179, Rule No. 27, Appeal No. 3943 of 65 Q issued on January 10, 1996, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 47, page 55, Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 24149 of 64 Q issued on September 27, 1995, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 973, Rule No. 150, Appeal No. 19862 of 64 Q issued on May 2, 1995, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 801, Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 19551 of 64 Q issued on April 6, 1995, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 677, Rule No. 102, Appeal No. 15249 of 64 Q issued on April 4, 1995, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 646, Rule No. 98, Appeal No. 12044 of 64 Q issued on January 10, 1995, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 112, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 7979 of 64 Q issued on January 5, 1995, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 94, Rule No. 9, Appeal No. 10319 of 64 Q issued on January 8, 1995, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 100, Rule No. 10, Appeal No. 6713 of 63 Q issued on February 1, 1994, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 171, Rule No. 27, Appeal No. 14725 of 62 Q issued on January 17, 1994, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 115, Rule No. 17, Appeal No. 17097 of 62 Q issued on January 6, 1994, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 61, Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 6430 of 62 Q issued on November 8, 1993, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 949, Rule No. 148, Appeal No. 1143 of 62 Q issued on November 7, 1993, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 931, Rule No. 146, Appeal No. 6777 of 62 Q issued on November 3, 1993, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 919, Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 6649 of 62 Q issued on November 2, 1993, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 899, Rule No. 142, Appeal No. 11646 of 61 Q issued on March 9, 1993, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 246, Rule No. 32, Appeal No. 8637 of 61 Q issued on January 19, 1993, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 115, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 20883 of 60 Q issued on March 8, 1992, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 43, page 292, Rule No. 37, Appeal No. 20997 of 60 Q issued on November 7, 1991, published in the second volume of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 1188, Rule No. 163, Appeal No. 7896 of 60 Q issued on October 7, 1991, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 973, Rule No. 134, Appeal No. 474 of 60 Q issued on May 7, 1991, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 743, Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 63 of 60 Q issued on April 1, 1991, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 557, Rule No. 81, Appeal No. 24526 of 59 Q issued on May 28, 1990, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 780, Rule No. 135, Appeal No. 30123 of 59 Q issued on May 10, 1990, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 714, Rule No. 124, Appeal No. 22419 of 59 Q issued on February 8, 1990, published in the first volume of

The value of what the street owed to the Public Prosecution in presenting the case in which the death sentence was issued is limited to the case in which this judgment was issued in the presence of the defendant. If this description is not met, that obligation shall be removed, as there is no point in that procedure regarding a judgment that is to be overturned in the presence of the defendant or his arrest and reconsideration of his lawsuit.[3750]

However, the death sentence must be issued by a court whose rulings may be challenged before the Court of Cassation, in order for that court to communicate with the case and have jurisdiction to decide on it. This means that the presentation by the Public Prosecution of the

---

Technical Office Book No. 41, page 345, Rule No. 56, Appeal No. 22437 of 59 Q issued on February 8, 1990, published in the first volume of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 355, Rule No. 57, Appeal No. 22443 of 59 Q issued on February 7, 1990, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 330, Rule No. 54, Appeal No. 22427 of 59 Q issued on February 6, 1990, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 312, Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 2805 of 59 Q issued on November 23, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 1038, Rule No. 168, Appeal No. 153 of 59 Q issued on April 19, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 525, Rule No. 84, Appeal No. 154 of 59 Q issued on April 6, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 661, Rule No. 112, Appeal No. 152 of 59 Q issued on April 4, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 491, Rule No. 81, Appeal No. 6176 of 58 Q issued on January 10, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 33, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 6174 of 58 Q issued on January 9, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 21, Rule No. 3, Appeal No. 6007 of 58 Q issued on December 8, 1988, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 1261, Rule No. 195, Appeal No. 3722 of 58 Q issued on October 20, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 938, Rule No. 141, Appeal No. 3725 of 58 Q issued on October 4, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 853, Rule No. 128, Appeal No. 4112 of 57 Q issued on April 12, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 574, Rule No. 88, Appeal No. 4118 of 57 Q issued on January 12, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 122, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 109 of 57 Q issued on April 1, 1987, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 530, Rule No. 88, Appeal No. 2269 of 55 Q issued on January 23, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 137, Rule No. 29, Appeal No. 5943 of 56 Q issued on January 18, 1987, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 111, Rule No. 14, Appeal No. 3968 of 56 Q issued on December 31, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 1109, Rule No. 210, Appeal No. 150 of 56 Q issued on April 3, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 453, Rule No. 93, Appeal No. 4018 of 55 Q issued on December 19, 1985, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 1145, Rule No. 212, Appeal No. 1587 of 55 Q issued on June 12, 1985, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 772, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 2989 of 54 Q issued on June 5, 1984, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 560, Rule No. 127, Appeal No. 4971 of 52 Q issued on December 13, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 973, Rule No. 201, Appeal No. 1646 of 52 Q issued on May 10, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 572, Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 882 of 52 Q issued on April 6, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 441, Rule No. 90, Appeal No. 2500 of 51 Q issued on January 21, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 72, Rule No. 13, Appeal No. 2503 of 51 Q issued on January 19, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 37, Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 275 of 51 Q issued on November 1, 1981, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 795, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 361 of 50 Q issued on December 4, 1980, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 1065, Rule No. 205, Appeal No. 2225 of 49 Q issued on February 11, 1980, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 218, Rule No. 44, Appeal No. 580 of 48 Q issued on December 11, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 916, Rule No. 190, Appeal No. 1430 of 48 Q issued on November 20, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 809, Rule No. 167, Appeal No. 1334 of 47 Q issued on February 27, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 207, Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 982 of 47 Q issued on January 29, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 113, Rule No. 20, Appeal No. 1857 of 45 Q issued on February 29, 1976, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 279, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 1797 of 45 Q issued on February 15, 1976, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 201, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 1019 of 44 Q issued on December 2, 1974, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 798, Rule No. 172, Appeal No. 1006 of 43 Q issued on December 9, 1973, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 24, page 1176, Rule No. 240, Appeal No. 986 of 33 Q issued on October 22, 1963, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 14, page 678, Rule No. 123, Appeal No. 2 of 31 Q issued on May 16, 1961, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 12, page 385, Rule No. 2..

([3750]) Appeal No. 4007 of 82 S issued at the session of May 15, 2014 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 410 rule No. 46.

contested judgment issued by the Supreme State Security Court "Emergency", which is not permissible in any way, is not permissible.[3751]

Third: Procedures for filing an appeal in cassation

1- Time limit for appeal in cassation

The appeal shall be filed by a report in the registry of the court that issued the judgment within sixty days from the date of the judgment in presence, or from the date of expiry of the date of the objection or from the date of the judgment issued in the objection, and the reasons on which the appeal was based must be filed within this date.[3752]

The time limit of the appeal shall not be added to the time limit of the appeal. This principle shall not be granted except where the law requires a declaration from which the date of validity of the time limit of the appellant begins. Whereas the Code of Criminal Procedure does not require the announcement of the present judgments until the time limit of the appeal begins, it does not provide for the time limit of the distance except when it is necessary to announce the validity of the time limit of the appeal.[3753]

In the event that its end coincides with an official holiday, the deadline shall be extended to the day following the end of[3754] this holiday.

([3751]) Appeal No. 6006 of 58 S issued in the session of February 1, 1989 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 40 page No. 152 rule No. 27.

([3752]) Article 34 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3753]) Appeal No. 22263 of 69 S issued at the 10th session of October 2007 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 58 Page No. 600 Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 6725 of 75 S issued at the 17th session of April 2006, Appeal No. 21668 of 66 S issued at the 19th session of December 2005 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 56 Page No. 790 Rule No. 109, Appeal No. 395 of 69 S issued at the 4th session of November 2001 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 52 Page No. 812 Rule No. 154, Appeal No. 82 of 61 S issued at the session of October 4, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 43 Page No. 762 Rule No. 117, Appeal No. 2007 of 48 S issued at the session of April 5, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 30 Page No. 430 Rule No. 91, Appeal No. 189 of 43 S issued at the session of April 16, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 24 Page No. 522 Rule No. 108.

([3754]) Appeal No. 15321 of 85 S issued at the session of February 3, 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 153, rule No. 21, appeal No. 7607 of 81 S issued at the session of May 28, 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 44, rule No. 8, appeal No. 14527 of 72 S issued at the session of October 21, 2009 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 60, page No. 354, rule No. 49, appeal No. 20908 of 74 S issued at the session of 2 of July of 2008, Appeal No. 11424 of 67 s issued at the session of 16 of January of 2007 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 58 page No. 57 rule No. 10, Appeal No. 29070 of 67 s issued at the session of 19 of October of 2006, Appeal No. 13334 of 75 s issued at the session of 19 of September of 2006 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 57 page No. 786 rule No. 82, Appeal No. 1178 of 70 s issued at the session of 21 of July of 2005, Appeal No. 7749 of 66 s issued At the session of June 2, 2005, Appeal No. 21988 of 64 s issued at the session of November 18, 2003 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 54 page No. 1100 rule No. 148, Appeal No. 16979 of 62 s issued at the session of January 8, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52 page No. 70 rule No. 8, Appeal No. 2284 of 61 s issued at the session of December 5, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 50 page No. 611 rule No. 138, Appeal No. 29342 of 59 S issued at the session of November 3, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49 page No. 1174 rule No. 162, Appeal No. 20996 of 65 S issued at the session of December 6, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 48 page No. 1354 rule No. 206, Appeal No. 9378 of 60 S issued at the session of October 8, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 48 page No. 1046 rule No. 156, Appeal No. 13560 For the year 65 s issued in the session of October 5, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 48 page No. 1016 rule No. 151, Appeal No. 23999 of 63 s issued in the session of October 1, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 46 page No. 1006 rule No. 152, Appeal No. 7570 of 61 s issued in the session of January 9, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 45 page No. 71 rule No. 8, Appeal No. 13904 of 61 s issued at the session of April 11, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 44 page No. 362 rule No. 49, Appeal No. 5661 of 59 s issued at the session of March 11, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 43 page No. 298 rule No. 38, Appeal No. 17458 of 60 s issued at the session of January 16, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 43 page No. 165 rule No. 14, Appeal No. 1846 of 59 s Issued at the session of December 21, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 40 page No. 1260 rule No. 203, Appeal No. 1398 of 57 s issued at the session of June 7, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book

It also extends if there is a coercive impediment that prevents him from knowing the date of the judgment or from submitting the report within the legal time limit until this impediment is removed, and then he must decide immediately after its removal.[3755]

Travel by the will of the appellant without the necessity of a resort and no excuse to prevent the return to submit the appeal within the legal time limit is not considered a reason beyond the will of the appellant to excuse the failure to attend.[3756]

The presence of the appellant in prison at the time of the appeal report does not merely provide an excuse to submit his reasons after the deadline as long as the appellant does not claim that he was prevented from contacting his lawyer.[3757]

However, his travel abroad on official business is a compelling excuse that prevents him from attending.[3758]

The illness of the appellant's lawyer does not have a compelling excuse that prevents him from deciding to appeal and providing reasons in a timely manner because this is the business of the appellant and not his lawyer.[3759]

The reasons for the appeal must be submitted within ten days from the date of the removal of the impediment in the event that the litigant decides directly to appeal.[3760]

No. 38 page No. 745 rule No. 133, Appeal No. 5636 of 56 s issued at the session of January 4, 1987 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 38 page No. 31 rule No. 2, Appeal No. 2361 of 55 s issued at the session of January 16, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 37 page No. 99 rule No. 22, Appeal No. 6049 of 53 s issued at the session of February 19, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 35 page No. 168 rule No. 34.

([3755]) Appeal No. 13065 of 59 S issued at the session of February 11, 1992 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 43 Page 230 Rule No. 25, Appeal No. 49 of 45 S issued at the session of February 23, 1975 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 26 Page 179 Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 49 of 45 S issued at the session of February 23, 1975 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 26 Page 179 Rule No. 40, Appeal No. 1436 of 39 S issued at the session of October 27, 1969 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 20 Page 1179 Rule No. 233, Appeal No. 2007 of 38 S issued at the session of February 10, 1969 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 20 Page 237 Rule No. 51, Appeal No. 500 of 37 S issued at the session of June 19, 1967 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 18 Page 829 Rule No. 166.

([3756]) Appeal No. 144 of 50 S issued at the session of March 16, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 page 389 rule No. 72, Appeal No. 343 of 57 S issued at the session of March 2, 1988 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 39 page 366 rule No. 53, Appeal No. 296 of 45 S issued at the session of May 12, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 26 page 414 rule No. 95.

([3757]) Appeal No. 631 of 55 S issued at the hearing of May 15, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 36 page No. 660 rule No. 117

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The principle is that appealing criminal judgments is the concern of the convicts only and the intervention of their lawyers is only at their will to appeal the judgment and their desire to proceed with it, and as long as the appellant did not personally show his desire to appeal the judgment issued against him until after the legal deadline has passed, it does not help that his lawyer sends a telegram to the director of his unit in which he is imprisoned in the army requesting permission for the appellant to report the cassation of the judgment issued against him, because the appellant could have decided to appeal before the clerk's office or the army on the legal deadline, and he or his defender did not claim that he was prevented from doing so. He is not entitled to invoke the delay of the prison administration in his case for this purpose], Appeal No. 1799 of 37 s issued at the session of January 8, 1968, published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 19, page No. 18, rule No. 3, Appeal No. 1189 of 35 s issued at the session of December 21, 1965, published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 16, page No. 954, rule No. 182.

([3758]) Appeal No. 220 of 44 S issued on June 24, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 25, page No. 625, rule No. 134.

([3759]) Appeal No. 2129 of 49 s issued at the session of March 19, 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 434 rule No. 79, Appeal No. 1913 of 40 s issued at the session of March 14, 1971 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 22 page No. 246 rule No. 59.

([3760]) Appeal No. 2518 of 32 S issued at the session of December 31, 1962 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 13 page No. 883 rule No. 214.

The date of the cassation appeal, like other dates, is from the public order, and it is permitted to adhere to it in any case in which the lawsuit is pending.

The appeal report also requires the filing of the reasons on time, and the writing of the judgment and the filing of its reasons may be delayed from the scheduled date, as the legislator did not arrange for the nullity of the delay in writing the judgment and depositing it within a period of thirty days from its issuance if it was issued with acquittal.

The report of the cassation appeal is the point of contact of the court with it and that the submission of the reasons on which it is based within the time limit specified by the law is a condition for its acceptance and that the report of the appeal and the submission of its reasons are together a procedural unit in which one does not take the place of the other and does not dispense with it.[3761]

([3761]) Appeal No. 3243 of 84 Q issued on February 15, 2020 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8352 of 88 Q issued on May 5, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5979 of 88 Q issued on November 21, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4745 of 88 Q issued on November 4, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4042 of 87 Q issued on January 20, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5939 of 87 Q issued on January 4, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 30612 of 85 Q issued on June 1, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21000 of 4 Q issued on March 22, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9980 of 84 Q issued on November 15, 2014, published in Technical Office Book No. 65, page 845, Rule No. 108, Appeal No. 16955 of 83 Q issued on April 8, 2014 (unpublished), Republic of Egypt, unpublished rulings, Court of Cassation, Criminal Advisory Chamber, Appeal No. 6952 of 4 Q issued on January 20, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5762 of 82 Q issued on December 1, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 1009, Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 2015 of 83 Q issued on May 8, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 578, Rule No. 82, Appeal No. 8958 of 81 Q issued on May 7, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13855 of 82 Q issued on May 5, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1876 of 81 Q issued on November 18, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9311 of 81 Q issued on June 6, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8136 of 81 Q issued on June 3, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8070 of 81 Q issued on March 26, 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2499 of 81 Q issued on December 18, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5491 of 80 Q issued on May 12, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8409 of 79 Q issued on February 17, 2011, published in Technical Office Book No. 62, page 68, Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 47324 of 73 Q issued on May 10, 2010, published in Technical Office Book No. 61, page 384, Rule No. 49, Appeal No. 26574 of 77 Q issued on January 20, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 50733 of 76 Q issued on January 17, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9187 of 78 Q issued on May 21, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18992 of 71 Q issued on February 8, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 64272 of 75 Q issued on February 8, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1 of 78 Q issued on October 27, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 63528 of 75 Q issued on January 5, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 52293 of 72 Q issued on November 6, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16532 of 64 Q issued on May 12, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 39918 of 72 Q issued on February 5, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 293, Rule No. 26, Appeal No. 11185 of 71 Q issued on September 23, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 851, Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 21868 of 71 Q issued on February 2, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 176, Rule No. 30, Appeal No. 9143 of 62 Q issued on December 18, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20108 of 60 Q issued on May 22, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23765 of 67 Q issued on January 17, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32586 of 68 Q issued on January 4, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 38, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 11343 of 68 Q issued on January 11, 1999, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 41, Rule No. 7, Appeal No. 20029 of 66 Q issued on September 23, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 941, Rule No. 123, Appeal No. 16491 of 66 Q issued on July 2, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 854, Rule No. 108, Appeal No. 28462 of 67 Q issued on May 7, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 666, Rule No. 85, Appeal No. 26620 of 67 Q issued on May 6, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 639, Rule No. 83, Appeal No. 29653 of 67 Q issued on March 10, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 388, Rule No. 53, Appeal No. 86 of 66 Q issued on March 5, 1997, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 285, Rule No. 41, Appeal No. 6857 of 59 Q issued on February 14, 1996, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 47, page 244, Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 24149 of 64 Q issued on September 27, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 973, Rule No. 150, Appeal No. 19861 of 64 Q issued on June 5, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 897, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 19862 of 64 Q issued on May 2, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 801, Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 12044 of 64 Q issued on January 10, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 112, Rule No. 12, Appeal No. 23361 of 61 Q issued on November 21, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 1042, Rule No. 160, Appeal No. 6430 of 62 Q issued on November 8, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 949, Rule No. 148, Appeal No. 6777 of 62 Q issued on November 3, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 919, Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 6649 of 62 Q issued on November 2, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 899, Rule No. 142, Appeal No. 7899 of 60 Q issued on October 22, 1991, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 1032, Rule No. 142, Appeal No. 60993 of 59 Q issued on January 1, 1991, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 16, Rule No. 3, Appeal No. 2485 of 59 Q

It is not valid to indicate the reasons for the appeal by referring to reasons filed in another appeal. In that case, the appeal is free of the reasons on which it is based. The principle is that when the law requires the validity of the appeal as a procedural act in a certain form, this procedural act itself must meet the conditions of its validity without supplementing it with other facts outside it.[3762]

Therefore, the legislator stipulated that the date of the appeal extends to ten days starting from the date of notifying the Public Prosecution of the deposit of the judgment with the Registry of the Book or the date of notifying the civil plaintiff of this deposit: «However, if the judgment is issued with acquittal and the appellant obtains a certificate of non-deposit of the judgment with the Registry of the Book within thirty days from the date of its issuance, the appeal and its reasons shall be accepted within ten days from the date of notifying him of the deposit of the judgment with the Registry of the Book, and the appellant in this case shall designate in his application for the aforementioned certificate a chosen place in the town in which the court center is located to announce the deposit of the judgment, otherwise it is valid to announce it in the Registry of the Book»([3763]

The negative testimony gives the Public Prosecution the right to wait for a notice of the filing of the acquittal judgment to report the appeal and submit its reasons within ten days from the date of its notice of filing.[3764]

The certificate that is reliable in this regard is issued after the expiry of the deadline specified in the law, including that the judgment was not deposited at the time of writing the lawsuit file signed despite the expiry of this deadline, and that the certificate issued after the expiry of the deadline for appeal and filing the reasons is not useful in extending the deadline, and that the certificate issued on the day of the deadline until the end of working hours does not negate the deposit of the judgment after that, because determining the date of work in the pens of the book does not mean that these pens are prevented from performing work after the expiry of the

---

issued on June 6, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 613, Rule No. 102, Appeal No. 6176 of 58 Q issued on January 10, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 33, Rule No. 4, Appeal No. 3030 of 58 Q issued on October 5, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 866, Rule No. 130, Appeal No. 5943 of 56 Q issued on January 18, 1987, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 111, Rule No. 14, Appeal No. 1725 of 55 Q issued on October 10, 1985, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 840, Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 1587 of 55 Q issued on June 12, 1985, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 772, Rule No. 137, Appeal No. 631 of 55 Q issued on May 15, 1985, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 660, Rule No. 117, Appeal No. 1646 of 52 Q issued on May 10, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 572, Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 2503 of 51 Q issued on January 19, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 37, Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 2007 of 48 Q issued on April 5, 1979, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 30, page 430, Rule No. 91, Appeal No. 580 of 48 Q issued on December 11, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 916, Rule No. 190, Appeal No. 1430 of 48 Q issued on November 20, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 809, Rule No. 167, Appeal No. 1294 of 48 Q issued on October 1, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 649, Rule No. 126, Appeal No. 1913 of 40 Q issued on March 14, 1971, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 22, page 246, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 1852 of 39 Q issued on January 12, 1970, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 21, page 91, Rule No. 23, Appeal No. 1 of 36 Q issued on December 12, 1966, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 886, Rule No. 2, Appeal No. 1189 of 35 Q issued on December 21, 1965, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 16, page 954, Rule No. 182, Appeal No. 1055 of 33 Q issued on October 28, 1963, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 14, page 722, Rule No. 130.

([3762]) Appeal No. 1456 of 48 BC issued at the session of 31 December 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 990 rule No. 205.

([3763]) Article 34 of the Appeal Cases and Procedures Law before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 27766 of 59 S issued at the session of February 6, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 43 page 201 rule No. 22, Appeal No. 4495 of 58 S issued at the session of January 24, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 41 page 214 rule No. 34.

([3764]) Appeal No. 44784 of 76 S issued in the session of December 1, 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64 page No. 962 rule No. 147.

deadline, and the Court of Cassation has settled at the expense of the lapse of thirty full days from the day following the date on which the judgment was issued)[3765](.

It is required that the judgment in question of the certificate obtained is issued with innocence, not with conviction, and there is no way to measure the convictions against the acquittals in this field because the wisdom for which the street saw that the judgment of innocence of the accused should not be invalidated if the aforementioned period lapses without signing it, which is not to harm him for a reason in which he has nothing to do with it. Since this is so, and the failure to file the conviction judgment within thirty days from the date of its issuance is not considered an excuse that results in an extension of the period specified by law to challenge the judgment and provide reasons, the appellant prosecution had to obtain from the Registry the certificate proving that the judgment was not deposited within the aforementioned date to initiate the report and provide its reasons based on the specified time limit, but it did not do so but exceeded the report by appealing and providing its reasons within the time limit specified in the law, if its appeal is not accepted.[3766]

With regard to the filing of reasons, the Registry of the Book is relied upon by the statement issued by this same Registry of the filing of reasons on a certain date after its signature by the competent person, and that there is no basis for the request of the Appellant Prosecution to extend the deadline unless it provides a certificate of robbery of any indication that the judgment is not deposited with the Registry of the Book within thirty days, and it is not valid to take the place of that certificate visa free of signature on the margin of the judgment.[3767]

2- Signing the appeal report and its reasons

A- Appeal submitted by a person other than the Public Prosecution or the State Cases Authority

With regard to appeals filed by other than the Public Prosecution, the law requires that their reasons be signed by a lawyer acceptable before the Court of Cassation, otherwise they are null and void and have no effect on criminal litigation, and are inadmissible in form.[3768]

([3765]) Appeal No. 1304 of 78 S issued at the 9th session of May 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64, page No. 598, rule No. 84, Appeal No. 2015 of 83 S issued at the 8th session of May 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64, page No. 578, rule No. 82, Appeal No. 37871 of 73 S issued at the 18th session of April 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32501 of 70 S issued at the 7th session of September 2008 and published in the Office letter Technical No. 59 Page No. 352 Rule No. 64, Appeal No. 23763 of 63 S issued at the hearing of 15 October 2002 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 53 Page No. 957 Rule No. 158, Appeal No. 6479 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 10 October 2000 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 51 Page No. 613 Rule No. 119, Appeal No. 23462 of 61 S issued at the hearing of 18 April 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29751 of 59 S issued at the hearing of 19 October 1997 and published in Part I From the Technical Office Letter No. 48 Page No. 1108 Rule No. 166, Appeal No. 5720 of 59 S issued at the 10th session of May 1993 and published at the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 44 Page No. 457 Rule No. 65, Appeal No. 5396 of 59 S issued at the 21st session of April 1993 and published at the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 44 Page No. 418 Rule No. 58, Appeal No. 4164 of 57 S issued at the 24th session of March 1988 and published at the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 39 Page No. 493 Rule No. 71, Appeal No. 533 of 57 S issued at the 10th session of May 1987 and published at the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 38 Page No. 666 Rule No. 115, Appeal No. 5943 of 53 S issued at the 7th session of March 1985 and published at the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 36 Page No. 338 Rule No. 58.

([3766]) Appeal No. 47324 of 73 S issued at the 10th session of May 2010 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 61, page No. 384, rule No. 49, Appeal No. 1810 of 34 S issued at the 16th session of March 1965 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 16, page No. 238, rule No. 51.

([3767]) Appeal No. 4537 of 57 S issued at the session of March 23, 1989 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 40 page No. 436 rule No. 74, Appeal No. 659 of 45 S issued at the session of May 4, 1975 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 26 page No. 393 rule No. 90, Appeal No. 1179 of 42 S issued at the session of January 1, 1973 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 24 page No. 19 rule No. 5.

([3768]) Article 34 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 7872 of 84 S issued at the 11th session of December 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 966, rule No. 128, Appeal No. 2436 of 83 S issued at the 12th session of February 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28406 of 64 S issued at the 7th session of September 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 51732 of 73 S issued at the 6th session of March 2006, published in

The report of the appeal drawn up by the law is the one that entails the entry of the appeal into the possession of the court and its contact with it based on a significant declaration of its desire. The failure to report the appeal does not make it a list and the Court of Cassation does not contact it and does not dispense with the appellant's submission of reasons to the Registry of the Book in a timely manner.[3769]

The reason for the necessity of the signature of a lawyer accepted before the Court of Cassation on the reasons for the appeal is the accuracy of the cassation appeal and the need to base it on pure legal reasons, and this requires that he edit it or at least approve it and sign it by a person with sufficient legal experience, and this is also justified by taking care of the time and effort of the Court of Cassation so that they are spent only for serious reasons of some kind that the court has jurisdiction over, which does not improve its estimate except for those who have previous experience, and it was mentioned in the explanatory memorandum of the law of cassation "The reason for this is to limit the appeals to a scope that only those with experience and experience, and to close it in the face of others in order to achieve the public interest and provide seriousness in these appeals".[3770]

The reasons report is a form sheet of procedural papers in the litigation, which must bear the elements of its existence and must be signed by those who issued it in the manner considered legally, and this statement may not be supplemented by evidence outside it that is not derived from it[3771].

Technical Office Letter No. 57, Page No. 384, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 51732 of 73 s issued at the hearing of March 6, 2006, published in Technical Office Letter No. 57, Page No. 384, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 4111 of 67 s issued at the hearing of February 16, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16201 of 61 s issued at the hearing of March 1, 2000, published in Technical Office Letter No. 51, Page No. 227, Rule No. 42, Appeal No. 18471 of 63 s issued at the hearing of October 8, 1998, published in part First of Technical Office Letter No. 49 Page No. 996 Rule No. 136, Appeal No. 18471 of 63 S issued at the 8th session of October 1998 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 49 Page No. 996 Rule No. 136, Appeal No. 11605 of 65 S issued at the 1st session of December 1997 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 48 Page No. 1318 Rule No. 201, Appeal No. 4665 of 63 S issued at the session of November 23, 1997 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 48, page No. 1301, rule No. 196, appeal No. 10201 of 65 s issued at the session of July 9, 1997 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 48, page No. 766, rule No. 117, appeal No. 5737 of 59 s issued at the session of May 8, 1996 and published in the first part of the technical office letter No. 47, page No. 594, rule No. 82, appeal No. 23842 of 61 s issued at the session of December 20, 1993 and published in the first part of the letter Technical Office No. 44 Page No. 1214 Rule No. 186, Appeal No. 15454 of 59 S issued at the hearing of November 15, 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 41 Page No. 1023 Rule No. 183, Appeal No. 7604 of 54 S issued at the hearing of November 12, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 36 Page No. 1007 Rule No. 184, Appeal No. 8275 of 54 S issued at the hearing of January 21, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 36 Page No. 110 Rule No. 14.

([3769]) Appeal No. 8288 of 87 S issued at the session of June 23, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3324 of 57 S issued at the session of December 25, 1988 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 39 page No. 1367 rule No. 207.

([3770]) Appeal No. 3597 of 59 S issued at the session of 26 November 1991 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 42 page No. 1242 rule No. 172, Appeal No. 8213 of 58 S issued at the session of 30 October 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 41 page No. 962 rule No. 169.

([3771]) Appeal No. 43950 of 75 S issued at the session of March 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1660 of 66 S issued at the session of July 29, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15661 of 65 S issued at the session of October 15, 2002 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 53 Page 961 Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 8696 of 67 S issued at the session of April 11, 1999 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 50 Page 210 Rule No. 50, Appeal No. 12720 of 60 S issued at the session of January 12, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 84, rule No. 11, Appeal No. 8201 of 60 S issued at the session of October 24, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42, page No. 1053, rule No. 145, Appeal No. 3324 of 57 S issued at the session of December 25, 1988 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 39, page No. 1367, rule No. 207, appeal No. 3324 of 1988 57 S issued at the hearing of 25 December 1988 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 39 Page 1367 Rule No. 207, Appeal No. 5112 of 56 S issued at the hearing of 26 May 1987 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 38 Page 721 Rule No. 127, Appeal No. 4099 of 56 S issued at the hearing of 11 December 1986 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 37 Page 1035 Rule No. 197, Appeal No. 8275 of 54 S issued at the session of January 21, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 110 rule No. 14, Appeal No. 695 of 50 S issued at the session of

This is not altered by the fact that the lawyer who is inadmissible before the Court of Cassation has signed the grounds of appeal paper on behalf of another lawyer acceptable before this court, as the legislator, when the reasons for the appeals filed by the convicts must be signed by a lawyer acceptable before the Court of Cassation, but he wanted to take care of setting the grounds of the appeal. If he assigned one of his assistants from the lawyers who are inadmissible before the Court of Cassation to put it, he must sign its paper to indicate his approval of it, because the reasons are in fact the essence of the appeal, its basis, and its status is one of its most special characteristics. If the reasons paper is not signed by the person concerned in it, it becomes a paper without effect in the litigation and it is a worthless rhetoric.[3772]

If the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal, even if it bears what indicates that it was issued by a lawyer's office, but it is removed with a signature that is impossible or impossible to read and to know the name and capacity of its owner, then this reasons paper shall be devoid of the signature of a lawyer accepted before the Court of Cassation until the deadline for the appeal has passed.[3773]

October 8, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 page No. 859 rule No. 165, Appeal No. 1029 of 50 S issued at the session of October 5, 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 page No. 839 rule No. 162, Appeal No. 1401 of 47 S issued At the session of January 15, 1978, published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 29, page No. 52, rule No. 9, appeal No. 842 of 47 s issued in the session of January 1, 1978, published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 29, page No. 16, rule No. 1, appeal No. 831 of 47 s issued in the session of December 4, 1977, published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28, page No. 1023, rule No. 210, Appeal No. 1514 of 46 s issued at the 10th session of April 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 481 rule No. 100, Appeal No. 1762 of 38 s issued at the 13th session of January 1969 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 20 page No. 82 rule No. 17, Appeal No. 652 of 38 s issued at the 3rd session of June 1968 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 19 page No. 639 rule No. 128, Appeal No. 783 of 36 s issued at the 20th session of June 1966, published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 17, page No. 838, rule No. 158.

([3772]) Appeal No. 8275 of 54 S issued at the session of January 21, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 36 page No. 110 rule No. 14, Appeal No. 1401 of 47 S issued at the session of January 15, 1978 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 29 page No. 52 rule No. 9, Appeal No. 1965 of 45 S issued at the session of March 28, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 27 page No. 359 rule No. 76.

([3773]) Appeal No. 9410 of 88 S issued at the session of April 18, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2159 of 80 S issued at the session of October 19, 2010 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 61 page No. 570 Rule No. 69, Appeal No. 27633 of 72 S issued at the session of February 8, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12464 of 68 S issued at the session of January 6, 2008 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 59 page No. 46 Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 5337 of 67 S Issued at the hearing of May 4, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7203 of 67 s issued at the hearing of May 4, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4364 of 66 s issued at the hearing of April 20, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9682 of 66 s issued at the hearing of April 20, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22616 of 67 s issued at the hearing of April 20, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17580 of 64 s issued at the hearing of March 20, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22616 of 67 s issued at the hearing of April 20, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17580 of 64 s issued at the hearing of March 20, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 51732 of 73 S issued at the 6th session of March 2006 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 57, page No. 384, rule No. 42, Appeal No. 4111 of 67 S issued at the 16th session of February 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23496 of 65 S issued at the 19th session of January 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2156 of 75 S issued at the 1st session of December 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31275 of 70 S Issued at the hearing of 27 March 2005 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 56 Page 235 Rule No. 35, Appeal No. 17529 of 70 S issued at the hearing of 2 January 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6931 of 62 S issued at the hearing of 17 January 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7476 of 63 S issued at the hearing of 25 March 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office Letter No. 49 Page 487 Rule No. 63, Appeal No. 12720 of 60 S issued at the hearing of 12 January 1998 and published in the first part of the Office Letter Technical No. 49 Page No. 84 Rule No. 11, Appeal No. 63005 of 59 S issued at the session of March 19, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 46 Page No. 564 Rule No. 82, Appeal No. 5449 of 63 S issued at the session of July 7, 1993 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 44 Page No. 662 Rule No. 103, Appeal No. 1526 of 60 S issued at the session of October 12, 1992 Published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 43 Page 829 Rule No. 127, Appeal No. 15454 of 59 S issued at the hearing of 15 November 1990 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 41 Page No. 1023 Rule No. 183, Appeal No. 1811 of 58 S issued at the hearing of 27 July 1989 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 40 Page No. 680 Rule No. 116, Appeal No. 1967 of 30 S issued at the hearing of 3 April 1961 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 12 Page No. 408 Rule No. 74.

The Court of Cassation also ruled on the nullity report as a penalty for signing the reasons by a lawyer who is not acceptable to it.[3774]

The signature must be on the last page that contained the final requests of the appellant, and the signature on some pages of the memorandum of reasons does not affect this as long as it is not signed on its last page.[3775]

The signature of the reasons for the appeal on the first page, as this is not considered a signature on the reasons for the appeal and does not achieve the purpose required by the law for it and entails a ruling that the appeal is not accepted in form.[3776]

The deemed signature is the one that is made at the end of the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal until it indicates that these reasons are issued by those who signed them in full and in detail.[3777]

Also, mentioning the name of the lawyer or the signature by photocopying, typewriting or any other technical means does not take the place of the original of the signature, which is the only document that was written by its owner, which attests to the issuance of the procedural work by the person to whom it was attributed.[3778]

Also, the appendix of the reasons for the appeal with the fingerprint of a seal - a cliché - bears the name of a lawyer who does not meet the form required by law to sign the reasons for the appeal.[3779]

The signing of the reasons for the appeal with a bilateral signature is not useful in inferring whether it was signed by lawyers admitted to the Court of Cassation because of the lack of a triple name. The appeal is inadmissible as a form because it has not been proven that it was signed by a lawyer admitted to the Court of Cassation.[3780]

The presence of a lawyer defending the appellant at the trial hearing does not dispense with the signature of a lawyer admitted before the Court of Cassation for the reasons of the appeal and does not make the reasons paper valid.[3781]

It is established that the cassation appeal is a personal right of the person against whom the judgment is issued to exercise it or not to exercise it as he deems in his interest, and no one

---

([3774]) Appeal No. 1660 of 66 S issued at the session of July 29, 2004 (unpublished).

([3775]) Appeal No. 3827 of 70 S issued on October 4, 2007 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 58, page No. 569, rule No. 111.

([3776]) Appeal No. 8696 of 67 s issued at the session of April 11, 1999 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 50 page No. 210 rule No. 50, Appeal No. 517 of 59 s issued at the session of April 18, 1989 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 40 page No. 522 rule No. 83.

([3777]) Appeal No. 517 of 59 S issued at the session of April 18, 1989 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 40 page No. 522 rule No. 83.

([3778]) Appeal No. 7078 of 75 s issued at the session of October 13, 2008 and published in the Technical Office book No. 59 page No. 423 rule No. 78, Appeal No. 3872 of 70 s issued at the session of October 4, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3827 of 70 s issued at the session of October 4, 2007 and published in the Technical Office book No. 58 page No. 569 rule No. 111, Appeal No. 62352 of 76 s issued at the session of March 20, 2007 and published in the Technical Office book No. 58 page No. 265 rule No. 54, Appeal No. 20669 of 62 s issued at the session of September 28, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 45 page No. 803 rule No. 125, Appeal No. 21005 of 60 s issued at the session of December 9, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 43 page No. 1139 rule No. 177.

([3779]) Appeal No. 12464 of 68 S issued at the 6th session of January 2008 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 59, page No. 46, rule No. 6, Appeal No. 17580 of 64 S issued at the 20th session of March 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 40127 of 59 S issued at the 21st session of April 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 47, page No. 540, rule No. 75.

([3780]) Appeal No. 33964 of 77 S issued at the 7th session of March 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2160 of 66 S issued at the 24th session of January 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 49 page No. 153 rule No. 20.

([3781]) Appeal No. 22835 of 77 S issued at the session of April 11, 2010 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 61 page No. 319 rule No. 41.

may act on his behalf to initiate it, unless he is entrusted with a fixed power of attorney that entitles him to this right, or he is legally acting on his behalf, then the appeal shall have been decided without capacity.[3782]

Also, the report of the natural guardian's agent for the minor by appealing on his behalf in the criminal part alone, although it is not an unacceptable event.[3783]

The lawyer's presence at the trial session and his denial of the signature attributed to him on the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal, to the effect that the appeal has been devoid of a memorandum of reasons signed by a lawyer accepted before the Court of Cassation and therefore lost the elements of his acceptance of what must be ruled not to accept the appeal in form)[3784](.

It must be taken into account that the first paragraph of Article 8 of the Advocacy Law stipulates that: «Without prejudice to the provisions of the Civil and Commercial Procedure Law, the lawyers of the legal departments of public bodies, public sector companies and press institutions may not practice the work of lawyers other than the party in which they work, otherwise the work is invalid...», and this text indicates that the street has set a condition for the validity of the work carried out by the lawyer who works in the parties mentioned in the text is that the work is limited to the party in which he works and arranged a penalty for violating the invalidity of the work, and then the signature of the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal of the convict is invalid for his departure from the circle of privatization specified by the Advocacy Law, and the reasons sheet in its case is one of the procedural papers issued by the litigants, which must be signed by the person concerned in which is a paper that has no effect in the litigation and is of no value. If it is established that the reasons paper was issued without capacity and remained anonymous from the signature of a lawyer legally accepted before the Court of Cassation until the deadline for appeal was missed, the appeal shall be inadmissible in form.[3785]

B- Appeal submitted by the Public Prosecution or the State Cases Authority

If the appeal is filed by the Public Prosecution, the appeal report and its reasons must be signed by a public lawyer at least.[3786]

It is clear from this that Article No. 34 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation has obligated for appeals filed by the Public Prosecution to be signed at least by a public lawyer, and the Court of Cassation has ruled that the reasons paper that is devoid of this signature is null and void and has no effect on the litigation and violates a nonsense that has no value.[3787]

([3782]) Appeal No. 12464 for the year 68 S issued in the session of January 6, 2008 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 59 page No. 46 rule No. 6.

([3783]) Appeal No. 5264 of 60 S issued at the session of March 9, 1999 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 50 page No. 154 rule No. 35.

([3784]) Appeal No. 1723 of 72 S issued at the session of 20 October 2007 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 58 page No. 643 rule No. 122, Appeal No. 786 of 43 S issued at the session of 25 November 1973 and published in the third part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 24 page No. 1041 rule No. 216.

([3785]) Article 8 of the Advocacy Law, Appeal No. 3324 of 57 S issued at the session of December 25, 1988 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 39 page No. 1367 rule No. 207, Appeal No. 4099 of 56 S issued at the session of December 11, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 37 page No. 1035 rule No. 197.

([3786]) Article 34 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3787]) Appeal No. 20914 of 83 s issued at the session of January 6, 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67, page No. 47, rule No. 5, Appeal No. 999 of 85 s issued at the session of December 2, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31660 of 84 s issued at the session of November 10, 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66, page No. 745, rule No. 114, Appeal No. 16955 of 83 s issued at the session of April 8, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24649 of 3 s issued at the session of

The memorandum of the reasons for the appeal must be that it is signed with a legible signature. If it is signed in the form of a signature that is never read, which makes it impossible to know whether it is signed by a public lawyer, the appeal may have lost one of the elements of its acceptance.[3788]

If the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal bears an indication of its signature by the head of the overall prosecution, the appeal shall have lost one of the elements of its acceptance, and this defect shall not be removed by marking by the Attorney General on the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal by consideration, as that visa alone does not indicate his adoption or approval of it.[3789]

Requiring the signature of the public defender on the grounds for the appeal does not change the existence of a printed form for the name of a public defender, as it does not meet the form required by law to sign the grounds for the appeal.[3790]

The signature by photocopying, typewriting, or any other means does not take the place of the original signature, which is the only document, as it is in the handwriting of its owner.[3791]

The deemed signature is the one that is made at the end of the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal until it indicates that these reasons are issued by the one who signed them in their entirety and in detail, and no part of that is the fixed signature on the first pages of it, as it does not indicate that the signature has gone to the reasons contained in the memorandum.[3792]

If the appeal is filed by the State Lawsuits Authority, the appeal report and its reasons must be signed by an advisor to that body.[3793]

When the reasons for the appeal are submitted signed with an unclear signature so that it is not possible to read it and know the name of its owner, it is unacceptable in form.[3794]

This does not change its appendix with the fingerprint of the "Ecclesiastical" ring read in the name of a consultant, and thus it has no effect on the litigation and is irrelevant.[3795]

November 27, 2013 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64, page No. 932, rule No. 144, Appeal No. 1605 of 82 s issued at the session of October 1, 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 63, page No. 417, rule No. 71.

([3788]) Appeal No. 16154 of 86 S issued at the session of 13 November 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 34946 of 84 S issued at the session of 8 May 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67 page 495 rule No. 57, Appeal No. 8136 of 81 S issued at the session of 3 June 2012 (unpublished).

([3789]) Appeal No. 17269 of 4 S issued at the hearing of October 15, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4075 of 82 S issued at the hearing of October 10, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5340 of 78 S issued at the hearing of October 7, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2174 of 83 S issued at the hearing of June 2, 2013, Appeal No. 25748 of 3 S issued at the hearing of April 24, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3966 of 82 S Issued at the hearing of 19 December 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6487 of 78 s issued at the hearing of 25 May 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 34946 of 84 s issued at the hearing of 8 May 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67 Page 495 Rule No. 57, Appeal No. 31660 of 84 s issued at the hearing of 10 November 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66 Page 745 Rule No. 114, Appeal No. 24649 of 3 s issued at the hearing of 27 November 2013 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64 Page No. 932 Rule No. 144, Appeal No. 1605 of 82 S issued on October 1, 2012 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 63 Page No. 417 Rule No. 71.

([3790]) Appeal No. 16154 of 86 S issued at the session of 13 November 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2174 of 83 S issued at the session of 2 June 2013 (unpublished).

([3791]) Appeal No. 20914 of 83 S issued at the 6th session of January 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 47, rule No. 5, Appeal No. 16955 of 83 S issued at the 8th session of April 2014 (unpublished).

([3792]) Appeal No. 16154 of 86 S issued at the session of 13 November 2016 (unpublished).

([3793]) Article 34 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3794]) Appeal No. 14901 of 63 S issued at the 10th session of July 1997 (unpublished), Appeal No. 47613 of 59 S issued at the 26th session of December 1996 (unpublished), Appeal No. 49538 of 59 S issued at the 26th session of December 1996 (unpublished).

([3795]) Appeal No. 12096 for the year 62 S issued at the session of September 20, 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 896 rule No. 135.

The reason for this - as we explained above - is the accuracy of the cassation appeal and the need to base it on pure legal reasons, and this requires that it be edited or at least approved and signed by a person with sufficient legal experience, and this is also justified by taking care of the time and effort of the Court of Cassation so that they are spent only for serious reasons of some kind that the court has jurisdiction over, which only those with previous experience can estimate. The explanatory memorandum of the cassation law states: "The reason for this is to limit the appeals to a scope that only those with experience and experience can enter, and to close it to others in order to achieve the public interest and provide seriousness in these appeals." Whereas, and since the signatory of the memorandum of reasons for appeal is of the rank of deputy in the State Cases Authority, which is equivalent to the rank of prosecutor, and therefore it is not considered those mentioned in the third and fourth paragraphs in the aforementioned article 34 or its capacity similar to theirs.

Whereas the judiciary of this court has settled on the assessment of nullity as a penalty for omitting to sign the reasons or signing them from those who are not mentioned, by deciding that the reasons paper is one of the documents of the procedures issued in the litigation, which must be signed by the concerned party, otherwise it is considered a paper that has no effect in the litigation and it is a worthless vowel.[3796]

3- Deposit of a guarantee

A- Deposit a guarantee in the court treasury

To accept the appeal in form - if the appeal is not filed by the Public Prosecution or by a person sentenced to a custodial penalty - the petitioner must deposit, upon the decision of the appeal, the treasury of the court that issued the judgment or the treasury of the Court of Cassation an amount of three hundred pounds as bail, unless he was exempted from it by a decision of the Legal Aid Committee. The state and those exempted from judicial fees shall be exempted from depositing the bail.[3797]

If the appellant - who is not sentenced to a penalty restricting freedom - does not deposit with the court the full amount of the bail prescribed until the consideration of the appeal, and does not obtain a decision from the Judicial Assistance Committee to exempt him from it, then his appeal shall be disclosed about his non-acceptance in form.[3798]

([3796]) Appeal No. 3597 of 59 S issued at the session of November 26, 1991 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 page No. 1242 rule No. 172.

([3797]) Article 36 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3798]) Appeal No. 15006 of 4S issued at the session of 19 May 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10690 of 4S issued at the session of 18 May 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5968 of 82S issued at the session of 5 February 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 Page 101 Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 6994 of 4S issued at the session of 20 January 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1236 of 70S issued at the session of 25 July 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22257 of 67 S issued at the hearing of April 6, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11381 of 68 S issued at the hearing of January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19061 of 66 S issued at the hearing of October 26, 2005 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 56, page No. 532, rule No. 82, Appeal No. 5698 of 66 S issued at the hearing of February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5713 of 66 S issued at the hearing of February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5713 of 66 S issued at the hearing of February 3, 2005 (unpublished) No. 26217 of 68 s issued at the hearing of January 6, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3642 of 68 s issued at the hearing of July 31, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8067 of 68 s issued at the hearing of July 28, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8317 of 68 s issued at the hearing of July 21, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6409 of 68 s issued at the hearing of July 12, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15387 of 65 s issued at the hearing of 5 July 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3675 of 68 s issued at the hearing of 1 July 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11197 of 66 s issued at the hearing of 6 May 2004 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 55 Page 477 Rule No. 64, Appeal No. 5558 of 65 s issued at the hearing of 26 February 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4793 of 66 s issued at the hearing of 25 February 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22256 of 67 s issued at the hearing of 22 February 2004 (unpublished) 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1440 of 65 BC issued at the hearing of January 12, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18601 of 65 BC issued at the hearing of January 6, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1534 of 66 BC issued at the hearing of January 1, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24470 of 65 BC issued at the hearing of December 18, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8612 of 65 BC issued at the

The principle is that the guarantee that must be deposited is multiplied by the number of appellants, unless they have one interest, so only one guarantee is deposited.[3799]

The placement of the juvenile is considered one of the social welfare institutions - even if it is a precautionary measure - but it restricts freedom in what is considered with him to be a punishment of imprisonment, so it is not necessary to accept the cassation appeal from the convict to deposit the bail.[3800]

The punishment of being placed under police supervision is considered the same as the punishment of imprisonment and similar to it in that it is a penalty restricting freedom. If this is the case, it is not necessary to accept the cassation appeal and deposit the bail.[3801]

However, the criminal measure of handing over the appellant to his guardian is not considered one of the penalties restricting freedom stipulated by the law, and therefore the legislator was obliged to accept the appeal in the form of depositing the bail. If the appellant does not deposit with the treasury of the court that issued the judgment the amount of the bail prescribed by the law, and does not obtain a decision from the Judicial Assistance Committee to exempt him from it, it must be decided not to accept the appeal.[3802] hearing of December 14, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22202 of 70 S issued at the hearing of 2 December 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15627 of 67 S issued at the hearing of 2 December 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12090 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 1 December 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6644 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 1 October 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3012 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 20 November 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6032 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 4 October 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17431 For the year 65 S issued at the hearing of October 2, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1686 of 64 S issued at the hearing of March 6, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12010 of 64 S issued at the hearing of April 15, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6490 of 62 S issued at the hearing of January 17, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3207 of 63 S issued at the hearing of November 1, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24937 of 62 s issued at the session of 18 September 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 46 page No. 924 rule No. 141, Appeal No. 1046 of 59 s issued at the session of 22 April 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 page No. 677 rule No. 97, Appeal No. 3597 of 57 s issued at the session of 22 January 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 40 page No. 109 rule No. 15, Appeal No. 1665 of 53 s issued at the session of 15 November 1983 and published in the part The first part of Technical Office Book No. 34 Page No. 954 Rule No. 190, Appeal No. 1381 of 50 S issued at the 10th session of December 1980 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 31 Page No. 1090 Rule No. 209, Appeal No. 626 of 43 S issued at the 12th session of November 1973 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 24 Page No. 958 Rule No. 199, Appeal No. 325 of 38 S issued at the 10th session of February 1969 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 20 Page No. 225 Rule No. 47, Appeal No. 1556 of 30 S issued at the 22nd session of November 1960 and published in Part III of Technical Office Book No. 11 Page No. 817 Rule No. 157.

---

([3799]) Appeal No. 3388 of 4Q issued at the 27th session of October 2013 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 64, page No. 866, rule No. 132, Appeal No. 10218 of 67Q issued at the 20th session of October 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20172 of 62Q issued at the 16th session of May 2002 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 53, page No. 741, rule No. 124, Appeal No. 13654 of 60Q issued at the 11th session From May 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 48 page No. 525 rule No. 77, Appeal No. 24725 of 59 s issued in the session of 25 October 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 893 rule No. 139, Appeal No. 393 of 54 s issued in the session of 27 January 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 154 rule No. 20, Appeal No. 1381 of 50 s issued in the session of 10 December 1980 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 31 Page No. 1090 Rule No. 209, Appeal No. 640 of 49 S issued at the 8th session of October 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 30 Page No. 755 Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 669 of 31 S issued at the 6th session of November 1961 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 12 Page No. 880 Rule No. 175.

([3800]) Appeal No. 12848 of 66 S issued at the session of May 21, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2396 of 62 S issued at the session of November 1, 1998 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 49, Page No. 1169, Rule No. 161, Appeal No. 322 of 56 S issued at the session of November 28, 1988 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 39, Page No. 1137, Rule No. 176, Appeal No. 7559 of 53 S issued at the session of June 6, 1984 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 35, Page No. 572, Rule No. 129, Appeal No. 2198 of 52 S issued at the session of March 2, 1983 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 34, Page No. 307, Rule No. 59, Appeal No. 5078 of 52 S issued at the session of December 29, 1982 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 33, Page No. 1100, Rule No. 224.

([3801]) Appeal No. 1228 of 51 S issued on 21 November 1981 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 32 page No. 954 rule No. 165.

([3802]) Appeal No. 20723 of 60 BC issued at the session of 8 December 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 1111 rule No. 173.

The penalty of prohibition from residing in a specific place is a type of preventive measure, and it is a real penalty arranged by law for a special category of perpetrators, even if it is not mentioned in the Penal Code, but it is not one of the penalties that deprive or restrict freedom stipulated by law. Hence, the legislator was obliged at the time to accept the appeal in form - submitted by other than the Public Prosecution - depositing the guarantee.[3803]

B. Bail Forfeiture Cases

If the Court of Cassation rules that the appeal is inadmissible, forfeited, inadmissible in form or rejected, it may also rule to confiscate the bail, and it may also rule to fine the appellant an amount equal to the amount of the bail, and the fine shall be permissible in the event that the appeal is rejected.[3804]

The decision to confiscate bail shall, in the event that the appeal is ruled inadmissible, rejected, inadmissible, or forfeited, the appeal shall be from the person sentenced to a penalty not restricting freedom, and if he is sentenced to a penalty restricting freedom, the court shall not be obliged to confiscate it, but rather to deposit it in the first place.[3805]

The abandonment of the litigation or the waiver of the appeal entails the return of the bail. Article 36 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation does not allow for the confiscation of the bail except in the case of a ruling that the appeal is inadmissible, forfeited, inadmissible in form or rejected. As long as the waiver of the appeal is accepted and signed before the consideration of the lawsuit and before the issuance of any judgment in the appeal, the bail must be returned. There is no question of whether the appeal contained in the waiver is an appeal that would in itself accept or not accept, nor to say that the return of the bail is not valid if the appeal itself is inadmissible, but every such search is on the one hand deflecting the necessity of the waiver that nothing can be considered in the lawsuit, and on the other hand deflecting the requirement that the text cannot be confiscated except in the event that the appeal is not permissible, forfeited, forfeited, not accepted in form or rejected.[3806]

Fourth: Request to Suspend the Execution of the Contested Judgment

The appellant may, in a judgment issued by the criminal court with a restrictive punishment or deprivation of liberty, request in the memorandum of the reasons for the appeal to temporarily suspend the enforcement of the judgment issued against him until the appeal is decided. The president of the court shall promptly specify a session to consider this request, in which the prosecution shall announce it.

The court shall, if it orders the suspension of the execution of the punishment, set a hearing to consider the appeal before it within a time limit not exceeding six months, and refer the appeal file to the prosecution to deposit a memorandum of its opinion within the time limit it specifies.

([3803]) Appeal No. 1915 of 49 S issued at the session of January 14, 1980 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 31 page No. 65 rule No. 13, Appeal No. 243 of 40 S issued at the session of April 12, 1970 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 21 page No. 566 rule No. 135.

([3804]) Article 36 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3805]) Appeal No. 5935 of 86 S issued at the session of July 31, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4599 of 65 S issued at the session of July 17, 2003 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 54 page 826 rule No. 110, Appeal No. 2730 of 51 S issued at the session of January 27, 1982 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 33 page 100 rule No. 18.

([3806]) Appeal No. 13666 of 83 S issued at the session of January 21, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13658 of 83 S issued at the session of October 22, 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 736 rule No. 92.

In all cases, the court may, if it orders a stay of execution, order the submission of a bail, or the procedures it deems necessary to ensure that the appellant does not escape.[3807]

Fifth: The adherence of the courts to the principles established by the Court of Cassation

The criminal courts of the Cairo Court of Appeal, which hear appeals against the judgments of the Court of Appeal Misdemeanors, shall abide by the established legal principles established in the jurisdiction of the Court of Cassation. If they decide to abandon a stable legal principle decided by the Court of Cassation, they shall refer the case, along with the reasons for which they decided to do so, to the President of the Court of Cassation.

The General Assembly of the Court of Cassation shall form two bodies of the Court, each of which shall be composed of eleven judges headed by the President of the Court or one of his deputies, one of them for criminal matters and the other for civil, commercial, personal status and other matters.

If one of the circuits of the court decides to abandon a legal principle decided by previous judgments, the lawsuit shall be referred to the competent authority of the court for adjudication, and the authority shall issue its judgments by novation by a majority of at least seven members.

If one of the circuits decides to withdraw a legal principle decided by previous judgments issued by other circuits, it shall refer the lawsuit to the two bodies jointly for adjudication. The judgments in this case shall be issued by a majority of at least fourteen members.

If those courts rule on the appeal without complying with the rulings and in violation of a stable legal principle decided by the Court of Cassation, without referring it to the General Authority for Criminal Matters, the Public Prosecutor alone, whether on his own or at the request of the concerned parties, may request the Court of Cassation to present the matter to the General Authority for Criminal Matters to consider this ruling. If the Authority finds that the ruling presented is contrary to a legal principle decided by the Court of Cassation, it shall cancel it and rule again on the appeal. If the Authority decides to approve the ruling, it shall rule that the request is not accepted.

The request must be submitted by the Attorney General within sixty days from the date of the judgment, accompanied by a memorandum of reasons signed by a public lawyer at least.[3808]

The function of the Court of Cassation in this regard is to unify the interpretation of laws and the integrity of their application, and the stability of legal principles to ensure convergence in the judicial solutions reached by the courts of the subject, and achieve its meeting on the same rules, and this is the function of the court, which required that there be only one court of cassation in the state, at the top of the judicial system, so that it is not topped by a court, and its provisions are not subject to the control of any party.[3809]

This means that the appeal against the judgments of the Misdemeanors Court of Appeal before one or more of the criminal courts of the Cairo Court of Appeal is held in a consultation room to decide by a reasoned decision on what discloses its inadmissibility in form or subject matter, and to decide to refer other appeals for consideration at the hearing before it as a matter of urgency. In this case, it may order the suspension of the execution of the custodial sentence until the appeal is decided. The provisions of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal

---

([3807]) Article 36 bis of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3808]) Article No. 36 bis of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, and Article No. 4 of the Judicial Authority Law, and see: Appeal No. 1 of 2010 issued at the session of March 19, 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55 page No. 8 rule No. 2.

([3809]) Appeal No. 11838 of 60 S issued at the session of April 13, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 44 page No. 5.

before the Court of Cassation shall apply to the appeals that these courts have jurisdiction to consider. However, if the court decides to accept the appeal, it must, if the reason for the appeal is related to the subject, set a subsequent hearing to the consideration of the subject and rule on it. Whereas, these courts must abide by the established legal principles established in the Court of Cassation's judiciary, and if they decide to abandon a stable legal principle decided by the Court of Cassation, they must refer the case, along with the reasons for which they considered that reversal, to the President of the Court of Cassation to implement the provisions of Article 4 of the Judicial Authority Law. If these courts rule on the appeal without abiding by the provisions of the previous paragraph, the Attorney General alone, whether on his own initiative or at the request of the concerned parties, may request the Court of Cassation to present the matter to the Public Authority for Criminal Materials to consider this ruling. If the Authority finds that the ruling violates a legal principle of the established principles decided by the Court of Cassation, it shall cancel it and rule again on the appeal.[3810]

The meaning of Article 4 of the Judicial Authority Law is that whenever the authority decides to abandon a principle decided by previous judgments, it shall issue its judgment by repeal by a majority of seven members of the authority, and fourteen members for the two bodies combined, and it has not yet obligated either of the two formations to decide on the issue of reversal by deciding on the subject of the appeal - obligatorily - which is what the phrase "and the judgments in this case shall be issued by a majority of at least fourteen members", which was stated by the deficit of the article, as the reversal is the one for which the majority referred to therein is necessary, without ruling on the appeal itself, which is then sufficient for the ordinary majority prescribed for the issuance of judgments.[3811]

Consideration of the application before the General Authority for Criminal Materials is not an appeal against the judgment. It is decided that the judgments of the Court of Cassation and the judgments of the Cairo Criminal Courts sitting in a consultation room are final judgments that may not be appealed by any means of appeal unless one of the cases of review stipulated in the Criminal Procedure Law is available, or if one of the members of the issuing circuit has a reason for invalidity as stipulated in the second paragraph of Article 147 of the Code of Procedure.

If the reasons on which the Attorney General based the request to present the judgment to the General Authority for Criminal Materials, do not constitute a violation of the legal principles established in the Court of Cassation, this is not permissible, which must approve the judgment and the judiciary not to accept the request.[3812]

Sixth: The jurisdiction of the Cairo Court of Appeal to consider appeals against the judgments of the Appellate Misdemeanors Court

---

([3810]) Appeal No. 2 of 2010 issued at the session of March 19, 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 17, rule No. 3.

([3811]) Appeal No. 16995 of 86 S issued at the 6th session of September 2017 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 11 rule No. 2, Appeal No. 7703 of 81 S issued at the 21st session of March 2017 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 5 rule No. 1, Appeal No. 6677 of 80 S issued at the 23rd session of March 2013 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 57 page No. 5, Appeal No. 14203 of 74 S issued at the session of 19 December 2012 and published in the technical office letter No. 56 page No. 5, Appeal No. 4224 of 70 S issued at the session of 19 May 2009 and published in the technical office letter No. 54 page No. 35 rule No. 5, Appeal No. 43276 of 77 S issued at the session of 14 April 2009 and published in the technical office letter No. 54 page No. 12 rule No. 2, Appeal No. 49390 of 75 S issued at the session of 12 November 2006 and published in the technical office letter No. 51 page No. 4 rule No. 1, Appeal No. 72594 for the year 75 S issued in the session of November 12, 2006 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51, page No. 11, rule No. 2.

([3812]) Appeal No. 5 of 2010 issued at the session of March 19, 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 33, rule No. 6.

The appeal against the judgments of the Misdemeanors Court of Appeal shall be before one or more of the criminal courts of the Cairo Court of Appeal, sitting in a consultation chamber, to decide by a reasoned decision on the disclosure of these appeals of non-acceptance in form or subject matter, and to decide to refer other appeals for consideration at the hearing before it as a matter of urgency. In this case, it may order the suspension of the enforcement of the penalty restricting freedom until the appeal is decided. The provisions of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation shall apply to the appeals that these courts are competent to hear.

However, if the court decides to accept the appeal, it must, if the reason for the appeal is related to the subject, set a next session to consider the subject and rule on it.[3813]

Seventh: The convict shall submit a penalty restricting freedom or a measure restricting it for execution

The appeal filed by the accused sentenced to a custodial penalty or a measure restricting it shall be forfeited if he does not apply for execution before the day of the hearing unless the court considers, when considering the appeal, the suspension of execution until it is decided, or his release on bail or without it. The court may order the procedures it deems necessary to ensure that the appellant does not escape.[3814]

The forfeiture of the appeal is a mandatory penalty imposed on the appellant fleeing the implementation of a penalty restricting freedom if he does not apply for implementation before the day of the hearing that was set for the consideration of the appeal, considering that the cassation appeal only responds to a final judgment and that the report does not result in suspending the implementation of the penalties restricting freedom imposed by the enforceable provisions.[3815]

([3813]) Article 36 bis of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3814]) Article 41 of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 18777 of 83 S issued at the session of July 2, 2014 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9177 of 4 S issued at the session of July 3, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8823 of 5 S issued at the session of March 27, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7625 of 82 S issued at the session of February 24, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2057 of 82 S issued at the session of October 10, 2012 (Unpublished), Appeal No. 2 of 2010 issued at the session of March 19, 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 17, rule No. 3, Appeal No. 2152 of 80 s issued at the session of March 1, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 38514 of 75 s issued at the session of January 6, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4970 of 78 s issued at the session of December 26, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 80934 of 75 s issued at the session of April 18, 2010 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 80934 of 75 S issued at the session of 18 April 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23205 of 67 S issued at the session of 18 May 2006.

([3815]) Appeal No. 8528 of 88 S issued at the hearing of May 12, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25172 of 66 S issued at the hearing of September 21, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17358 of 66 S issued at the hearing of May 18, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23205 of 67 S issued at the hearing of May 18, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 36102 of 75 S issued at the hearing of March 12, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6099 of 2006 66 S issued at the hearing of March 2, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10364 of 66 S issued at the hearing of December 18, 2005 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 56, page No. 779, rule No. 107, Appeal No. 18243 of 67 S issued at the hearing of December 1, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3238 of 74 S issued at the hearing of November 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12323 of 69 S issued at the hearing of September 22, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12533 of 66 S issued at the hearing of May 19, 2005 For the year 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7814 of 66 S issued at the hearing of April 7, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1991 of 66 S issued at the hearing of March 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3184 of 67 S issued at the hearing of March 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31624 of 69 S issued at the hearing of March 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3146 of 66 S issued at the hearing of March 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 958 of 66 S issued at the hearing of February 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24161 of 65 S issued at the hearing of February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17214 of 65 S issued at the hearing of April 15, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21836 of 65 S issued at the hearing of March 15, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6391 of 66 S issued at the hearing of March 7, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 40508 of 72 S issued at the hearing of January 1, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2839 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 18 November 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9374 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 6 November 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20680 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 5 November 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8112 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 16 October 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15820 of 63 S issued at the hearing of 17 October 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20398 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 3 October 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13640 of 63 s issued at the 3 October 2002 session

This also applies a fortiori to the appeal of the death sentence issued as a more severe penalty aimed at ending the life of the convict and depriving him of his freedom before execution - which is the same meaning derived from what the legislator stated in Article 471 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to instruct the Public Prosecution when the death sentence becomes final to place the convict in prison until the execution of the death sentence. This does not change that the legislator excluded cases where the death sentence was imposed, so Article 469 obligated the suspension of the execution of the death penalty by appeal in cassation; This means that the legislator intended to postpone the execution of the death penalty itself until it was settled in cassation in the appeal of the convict or the presentation of the Public Prosecution and the completion of its procedures, which requires that the convict be under execution, whether he was imprisoned before the sentence or arrested after it. Consideration of his appeal requires that he be under execution in one of the prisons prepared for that and to say otherwise to a person who walks away from him in the street. The legislator did not mean in any way to differ between those sentenced to death and others sentenced to a penalty of deprivation of liberty, so they may appeal in cassation - while they are free - without The accused puts himself under execution and decides that the appeal of the convicts shall be forfeited with custodial penalties if they do not apply for execution.

If the convict does not submit the death penalty for execution before the day of the session set for the consideration of the appeal, the appeal submitted by him must be overturned.[3816]

The purpose of the legislator's stipulation of the rule of forfeiture of the appeal as a penalty for the appellant's failure to apply for the enforcement of the freedom-restricting penalty imposed on him before the hearing is that it was noted that many of the convicts escape from the implementation of the judgments issued to them and challenge them at the same time by way of power of attorney.[3817]

Therefore, the court's decision to drop the appeal because the appellant did not apply to implement the freedom-restricting sentence imposed on him until the day of the hearing is correct, even if he had contracted an illness before it.[3818]

(unpublished), Appeal No. 27940 of 64 s issued at the 21 March 2002 session (unpublished), Appeal No. 13648 of 64 s issued at the 15 October 2000 session and published in Technical Office Letter No. 51 Page 628 Rule No. 123, Appeal No. 12471 of 60 s issued at the 18 October 1998 session and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 49 Page 1103 Rule No. 149, Appeal No. 20999 of 66 S issued at the 8th session of October 1998 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 49 Page 1039 Rule No. 140, Appeal No. 3280 of 57 S issued at the 25th session of December 1988 and published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 39 Page 1364 Rule No. 206, Appeal No. 5903 of 56 S issued at the 12th session of February 1987 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 38 Page 252 Rule No. 38, Appeal No. 2691 of 54 s issued at the session of November 12, 1985 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 36 page No. 1005 rule No. 183, Appeal No. 2604 of 50 s issued at the session of April 19, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 32 page No. 366 rule No. 66, Appeal No. 6 of 45 s issued at the session of March 24, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 26 page No. 255 rule No. 59, Appeal No. 1142 For the year 42 s issued at the session of December 18, 1972 and published in the third part of the technical office book No. 23 page No. 1410 rule No. 317, Appeal No. 809 of 42 s issued at the session of October 9, 1972 and published in the third part of the technical office book No. 23 page No. 1015 rule No. 225, Appeal No. 1650 of 41 s issued at the session of March 19, 1972 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 23 page No. 394 rule No. 87, Appeal No. 2059 of 37 s issued at the session of March 26, 1968 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 19 page No. 377 rule No. 72.

([3816]) Appeal No. 8528 of 88 S issued at the session of May 12, 2019 (unpublished).

([3817]) Appeal No. 5402 of 65 S issued at the session of 20 April 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55 page No. 427 rule No. 56, Appeal No. 12471 of 60 S issued at the session of 18 October 1998 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 49 page No. 1103 rule No. 149.

([3818]) Appeal No. 5402 of 65 S issued at the 20th session of April 2004 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 55, page No. 427, rule No. 56, Appeal No. 12471 of 60 S issued at the 18th session of October 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 1103, rule No. 149, Appeal No. 20999 of 66 S issued at the 8th session of October 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 1039, rule No. 140.

It is not useful for the appellant to invoke his travel in an assignment outside the country, as this is not considered a compelling excuse that prevents him from progressing to implementation.[3819]

The issuance of a ruling that the appeal has lapsed is presumed to have met the formal conditions for its validity, and then it fell due to the failure to apply for implementation before the day of the hearing.

The penalty shall be enforceable. If the prosecution orders a temporary stay of execution or if the convicted person complains about the execution of the penalty, the court shall not rule that the appeal is forfeited. If it rules that the appeal is forfeited, it may revoke that ruling when it is proven that the appellant's obligation to apply for execution has lapsed before it issues a ruling that the appeal is forfeited.[3820]

It must also be decided that the appeal is forfeited if the appellant executes part of the freedom-restricting sentence imposed on him and does not submit to complete its implementation after the issuance of the contested judgment and even before the day of the session set for the consideration of his appeal.[3821]

Since the appeal report does not entail the suspension of the enforcement of the sentence of restriction of liberty imposed by the enforceable provisions, if the appellant begins to implement the sentence, but he escaped from his prison before the completion of the implementation of the sentence of restriction of liberty imposed on him and did not submit to complete its implementation before the day of the session specified for the consideration of the appeal, the appeal shall be overturned.[3822]

However, it is not necessary for the appellant to apply for the enforcement of the freedom-restricting penalty imposed before the day of the hearing if the criminal lawsuit has lapsed by the lapse of the legally prescribed period. The obligation of the appellant to apply for the enforcement of the freedom-restricting penalty is incompatible in a lawsuit that has lapsed by virtue of the law, which requires that the judiciary to forfeit has become irrelevant, considering that the enforcement of the penalty is an effect of the judgment issued in the criminal lawsuit. In that case, the court shall rule on the lapse of the criminal lawsuit by the lapse of the period.[3823]

Eighth: Deciding on the appeal

The court shall rule on the appeal after reading the report drawn up by one of its members, and it may hear the statements of the Public Prosecution and lawyers on behalf of the litigants if it deems it necessary to do so.[3824]

Oral pleading before the Court of Cassation is permissible if the court deems it necessary to do so, and the appeal is considered filed before the court as soon as the appellant discloses his desire to object to the judgment in the form envisaged by the law and within the time limit set by it. This formal procedure entails the entry of the appeal into the possession of the Court of

---

([3819]) Appeal No. 80 of 42 S issued at the session of February 28, 1972 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 23 page No. 259 rule No. 62.

([3820]) Appeal No. 303 of 46 s issued at the session of 27 March 1977 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 28 page No. 386 rule No. 82, Appeal No. 1225 of 37 s issued at the session of 29 April 1968 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 19 page No. 486 rule No. 92, Appeal No. 1748 of 36 s issued at the session of 31 January 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 18 page No. 133 rule No. 25.

([3821]) Appeal No. 20562 of 83 S issued at the session of 25 May 2014 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 469 rule No. 54.

([3822]) Appeal No. 3027 of 80 S issued on October 4, 2011 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 62, page No. 283, rule No. 46.

([3823]) Appeal No. 25576 for the year 2S issued at the session of March 16, 2013 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 64, page No. 378, rule No. 46.

([3824]) Article 37 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

Cassation and its communication with it, and it is not necessary to consider the appeal as filed to order the appellant to appear before it, because the Court of Cassation is not an appeal level that restores the work of the trial judge, but rather it is an exceptional level whose field of work is limited to monitoring the non-application of the law.[3825]

Accordingly, the hearing of litigants - including the Public Prosecution - is one of the leaves entrusted to the discretion of the Court of Cassation when it contacted the appeal based on the report, and therefore it is not necessary to invite litigants, whatever their capacity, to announce or notify them of the session that determines the consideration of the appeal, whether they are accused or claimants of civil rights or responsible for them because those who should not be heard do not need to be invited.[3826]

If the appeal is rejected on the merits, it is not permissible in any case for the person who filed it to file another appeal from the same judgment for any reason.[3827]

This means that the basis of the ruling that the subsequent appeal is not permissible is the issuance of the judgment in the previous appeal filed by the appellant for the same judgment, rejecting the appeal on the merits.[3828]

It is established that the judgment issued in the form follows the judgment issued on the subject of the criminal lawsuit in terms of the permissibility or inadmissibility of the appeal by way of cassation. If the contested judgment was issued in a form in the implementation of a judgment of the Criminal Court that has already been rejected in cassation, the cassation appeal against this judgment is not permissible and the inadmissibility of the appeal must be ruled.[3829]

([3825]) Appeal No. 1005 of 31 S issued on October 2, 1962 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 13 page No. 590 rule No. 148.

([3826]) Appeal No. 18637 of 84 S issued at the 14th session of April 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66, page 360, rule No. 51, Appeal No. 2943 of 60 S issued at the 8th session of February 1995 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 46, page 326, rule No. 47, Appeal No. 26730 of 59 S issued at the 2nd session of February 1995 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 46, page 295, rule No. 42, Appeal No. 1197 of 39 S issued at the 9th session of February 1970 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 21, page 248, rule No. 61.

([3827]) Article 38 of the Appeal Cases and Procedures Law before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 9486 of 79 S issued at the 12th session of December 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66, page No. 865, rule No. 128, Appeal No. 17685 of 4 S issued at the 1st session of September 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 600, rule No. 73, Appeal No. 761 of 83 S issued at the 3rd session of July 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5340 of 80 s issued at the 6th session of March 2013 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64 Page 330 Rule No. 39, Appeal No. 15701 of 75 s issued at the 25th session of November 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 63 Page 782 Rule No. 140, Appeal No. 17411 of 70 s issued at the 23rd session of November 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 27036 of 67 s issued at the 21st session of December 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26552 of 67 s issued at the 16th session of November 2006 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 25171 of 67 S issued at the 21st session of September 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24540 of 67 S issued at the 7th session of September 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22435 of 66 S issued at the 31st session of July 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22513 of 67 S issued at the 20th session of April 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3675 of 67 S issued at the 20th session of October 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8758 of 67 S issued at the 22nd session of September 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 330 of 67 s issued at the hearing of March 17, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24315 of 66 s issued at the hearing of February 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25251 of 65 s issued at the hearing of June 7, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11916 of 65 s issued at the hearing of May 17, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20099 of 65 s issued at the hearing of March 15, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1514 of 68 s Issued at the session of February 23, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13494 of 65 s issued at the session of December 4, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 290 of 68 s issued at the session of March 24, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23630 of 67 s issued at the session of March 21, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20517 of 62 s issued at the session of January 14, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6379 of 61 s issued at the session of October 22, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2670 of 54 s issued at the session of November 12, 1984 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 749 Rule No. 165, Appeal No. 6852 of 52 s issued at the session of March 28, 1983 and published in the first part of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 448 Rule No. 91.

([3828]) Appeal No. 11469 of 65 S issued at the session of November 4, 2003 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 54 page No. 1054 rule No. 143.

([3829]) Appeal No. 256 of 41 s issued at the session of October 18, 1971 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 22 page No. 557 rule No. 133.

The meaning of the violation is that if the appeal has been previously ruled inadmissible in form, this does not preclude the filing of a subsequent appeal against the same judgment.[3830]

The court shall rule that the appeal shall not be accepted in form if the appeal or its reasons are submitted after the deadline.[3831]

The court shall correct the error and rule according to the law if the appeal is accepted and it is based on the violation of the law or the error in its application or interpretation.[3832]

According to the above, the Court of Cassation shall overturn the contested judgment if it is convinced of the reasons on which it was based or which it saw on its own initiative. Whenever the appeal is based on a violation of the law or an error in its application or interpretation, the court shall correct this error and rule according to the law correctly, as long as the error in which the judgment is deteriorated is not subject to any objective assessment.[3833]

([3830]) Appeal No. 16612 of 65 S issued at the hearing of January 15, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11469 of 65 S issued at the hearing of November 4, 2003 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 54, page No. 1054, rule No. 143, Appeal No. 61678 of 59 S issued at the hearing of March 13, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 48, page No. 351, rule No. 48, appeal No. 7226 of 60 S issued at the hearing of April 10, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 47, page No. 501, rule No. 70, appeal No. 14043 of 59 S issued at the hearing of March 19, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 43, page No. 307, rule No. 41.

([3831]) Article 39 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, see the above statement regarding the date of the cassation appeal.

([3832]) Article 39 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3833]) Appeal No. 6594 of 86 Q issued on October 16, 2016, published in Technical Office Book No. 67, page 713, Rule No. 90; Appeal No. 24022 of 67 Q issued on March 6, 2007 (unpublished); Appeal No. 14537 of 65 Q issued on February 3, 2005 (unpublished); Appeal No. 14536 of 65 Q issued on December 16, 2004 (unpublished); Appeal No. 28674 of 83 Q issued on March 21, 2015, published in Technical Office Book No. 66, page 309, Rule No. 43; Appeal No. 3165 of 70 Q issued on May 12, 2008, published in Technical Office Book No. 59, page 279, Rule No. 49; Appeal No. 121 of 65 Q issued on May 26, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 526, Rule No. 94; Appeal No. 12491 of 59 Q issued on March 20, 1997, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 380, Rule No. 53; Appeal No. 41365 of 59 Q issued on March 29, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 625, Rule No. 93; Appeal No. 23580 of 59 Q issued on February 27, 1994, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 320, Rule No. 46; Appeal No. 16701 of 59 Q issued on October 31, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 881, Rule No. 138; Appeal No. 6118 of 61 Q issued on February 17, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 201, Rule No. 25; Appeal No. 17708 of 59 Q issued on February 16, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 193, Rule No. 23; Appeal No. 11519 of 59 Q issued on January 24, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 145, Rule No. 15; Appeal No. 5343 of 59 Q issued on January 7, 1992, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 43, page 88, Rule No. 2; Appeal No. 9016 of 60 Q issued on December 3, 1991, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 1269, Rule No. 176; Appeal No. 16184 of 59 Q issued on October 8, 1990, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 887, Rule No. 155; Appeal No. 8421 of 58 Q issued on March 9, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 381, Rule No. 62; Appeal No. 5898 of 55 Q issued on December 31, 1987, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 1182, Rule No. 215; Appeal No. 3928 of 56 Q issued on December 18, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 1095, Rule No. 207; Appeal No. 6733 of 54 Q issued on April 30, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 526, Rule No. 104; Appeal No. 5097 of 55 Q issued on February 13, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 280, Rule No. 58; Appeal No. 2317 of 52 Q issued on October 26, 1982, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 33, page 807, Rule No. 165; Appeal No. 526 of 51 Q issued on November 5, 1981, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 825, Rule No. 143; Appeal No. 1420 of 51 Q issued on October 27, 1981, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 757, Rule No. 132; Appeal No. 144 of 51 Q issued on June 3, 1981, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 603, Rule No. 106; Appeal No. 1330 of 50 Q issued on May 6, 1981, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 467, Rule No. 82; Appeal No. 1710 of 50 Q issued on January 22, 1981, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 68, Rule No. 9; Appeal No. 1481 of 49 Q issued on May 18, 1980, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 626, Rule No. 121; Appeal No. 1528 of 49 Q issued on January 31, 1980, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 162, Rule No. 32; Appeal No. 1022 of 49 Q issued on December 26, 1979, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 30, page 977, Rule No. 210; Appeal No. 261 of 46 Q issued on June 6, 1976, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 602, Rule No. 133; Appeal No. 1837 of 45 Q issued on February 22, 1976, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 244, Rule No. 49; Appeal No. 1340 of 45 Q issued on December 28, 1975, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 26, page 874, Rule No. 192; Appeal No. 1020 of 45 Q issued on June 23, 1975, published in Volume 1 of Technical

If the reasons for the judgment include an error in the law or if there is an error in the mention of its provisions, it is not permissible to overturn the judgment when the sentence imposed is prescribed in the law for the crime, and the court shall correct the error that occurred.[3834]

It is decided that the error in the number of the applicable penalty article does not result in the nullity of the judgment as long as the act has been sufficiently described and the fact of the lawsuit subject of conviction has been adequately described and a penalty has been imposed that does not exceed the limits of the applicable article.[3835]

Also, the error of the judgment in determining the crime with the most severe punishment does not invalidate it and its cassation does not require only correcting its causes.[3836]

The decision of the contested judgment to oblige the child to pay the criminal expenses is contrary to what is required by Article 140 of the Child Law, which stipulates that: "Children are not obligated to pay any fees or expenses before all courts in cases related to this chapter," and according to the Court of Cassation to correct that error by canceling the penalty of the contested judgment of obliging the second appellant.[3837]the child) to pay the criminal expenses.

It does not affect the integrity of the judgment that the judge has included some erroneous legal reports in his blogs as long as they do not affect the essence of his judiciary and the result he

---

Office Book No. 26, page 578, Rule No. 129; Appeal No. 969 of 44 Q issued on October 27, 1974, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 700, Rule No. 151; Appeal No. 254 of 44 Q issued on March 17, 1974, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 280, Rule No. 62; Appeal No. 1094 of 42 Q issued on December 31, 1972, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 1476, Rule No. 331; Appeal No. 1410 of 41 Q issued on January 10, 1972, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 45, Rule No. 13; Appeal No. 1390 of 36 Q issued on December 20, 1966, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 1285, Rule No. 247; Appeal No. 1760 of 35 Q issued on December 6, 1965, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 16, page 916, Rule No. 176; Appeal No. 1295 of 34 Q issued on March 9, 1965, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 16, page 227, Rule No. 49.

([3834]) Article 40 of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 2388 of 50 S issued at the session of November 17, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 32 page No. 912 rule No. 157.

([3835]) Appeal No. 23666 of 87 S issued at the hearing of February 11, 2020 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11606 of 86 S issued at the hearing of May 8, 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29953 of 86 S issued at the hearing of April 27, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20454 of 84 S issued at the hearing of December 3, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 18521 of 84 S issued at the hearing of February 14, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4898 of 82 s issued at the 1 December 2013 session and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64 page 967 rule No. 148, Appeal No. 31979 of 2 s issued at the 8 July 2013 session and published in Technical Office Letter No. 64 page 708 rule No. 103, Appeal No. 42103 of 75 s issued at the 4 April 2006 session and published in Technical Office Letter No. 57 page 470 rule No. 55, Appeal No. 56397 of 75 s issued at the 7 December 2005 session and published in Technical Office Letter No. 56 page 761 Rule No. 106, Appeal No. 12507 of 61 s issued at the hearing of February 15, 2000 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19862 of 64 s issued at the hearing of May 2, 1995 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 46, page 801 Rule No. 121, Appeal No. 13702 of 60 s issued at the hearing of January 6, 1992 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 43, page 74 Rule No. 1, Appeal No. 6840 of 60 S issued at the session of October 3, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 42 page 958 rule No. 133, Appeal No. 2825 of 57 S issued at the session of October 13, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 38 page 787 rule No. 144, Appeal No. 4423 of 51 S issued at the session of February 8, 1982 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 33 page 165 rule No. 33, Appeal No. 2224 of 51 S issued at the session of December 22, 1982 1981, published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 32, page No. 1179, rule No. 210, Appeal No. 3605 of 50 S issued at the session of June 14, 1981, published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 32, page No. 667, rule No. 118, Appeal No. 1299 of 47 S issued at the session of February 26, 1978, published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 29, page No. 182, rule No. 31, Appeal No. 104 of 37 S issued at the session of March 13, 1967, published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 18, page No. 400, rule No. 74.

([3836]) Appeal No. 20893 of 86 S issued at the 7th session of April 2019 (unpublished).

([3837]) Appeal No. 13303 of 82 S issued at the session of February 11, 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 125 rule No. 8.

reached is correct and consistent with proper legal application, and accordingly the Court of Cassation decides to correct those reasons.[3838]

It is decided that the error of judgment on the date of the incident - assuming its occurrence - does not affect their safety as long as this date is not related to the rule of law in it, and as long as the appellant did not claim that the criminal case has lapsed by the lapse of the period.[3839]

According to the foregoing, the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation has ruled in the first paragraph of Article 39 that if the appeal is acceptable and based on the first case set forth in Article 30 - violation of the law or error in its application or interpretation - the court corrects the error and rules according to the law, and in Article 40 it prohibits the revocation of the judgment if its reasons include an error in the law or an error in the mention of its texts, and it must be limited to correcting the error when the penalty is prescribed in the law for the crime, while in the second paragraph of Article 39 it ruled that if the appeal is based on the second case of Article 30 - the invalidity of the judgment or the procedures affected the judgment - by revoking the judgment and returning the case to the court that issued it, the effect of the foregoing is that whenever the judgment must be corrected, it is prohibited to revoke all or part of it, and whenever the revocation is necessary, the cassation must be determined.[3840]

The court shall revoke the judgment if the appeal is based on the nullity of the judgment or the nullity of the procedures that affected it, and shall consider its subject matter. The principles prescribed by law for the crime that occurred shall be followed, and the judgment issued in all cases shall be in presence.[3841]

This means that the legislator has implicitly canceled one of the methods of appeal, which is the appeal in cassation for the second time.[3842]

There is no legal objection to the Court of Cassation considering an appeal before it, ruling to overturn the contested judgment, setting a session to consider the matter, and then the Chamber that issued the judgment itself - with the same members or others - considers the matter and decides on it.[3843]

Because he was able to accept the judgment and not appeal it by way of cassation.[3844]

The Court of Cassation shall not deal with the merits of the case.

Or for the facts proven by the contested judgment, but they are recognized, and they are limited to the application of the law by correcting the legal characterization and mitigating or aggravating the punishment, as the case may be.

([3838]) Appeal No. 7109 of 67 s issued at the session of 9 May 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55 page No. 480 rule No. 65, Appeal No. 5631 of 52 s issued at the session of 24 January 1983 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 34 page No. 147 rule No. 25.

([3839]) Appeal No. 4898 for the year 82 S issued in the session of December 1, 2013 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 64 page No. 967 rule No. 148.

([3840]) Appeal No. 786 of 57 S issued at the session of October 13, 1987 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 38 page No. 784 rule No. 143, Appeal No. 925 of 44 S issued at the session of October 13, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 25 page No. 670 rule No. 144, Appeal No. 240 of 44 S issued at the session of April 1, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 25 page No. 361 rule No. 78, Appeal No. 33 of 44 S issued at the session of February 4, 1974 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 25 page No. 94 rule No. 21.

([3841]) Article 39 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3842]) Appeal No. 16995 of 86 S issued at the 6th session of September 2017 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page No. 11 rule No. 2, Appeal No. 28605 of 86 S issued at the 4th session of May 2017 (unpublished).

([3843]) Appeal No. 3131 of 82 S issued on October 3, 2015 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 66, page No. 622, rule No. 92.

([3844]) Appeal No. 11567 of 85 S issued on 11 November 2017 (unpublished).

Provided that the cassation of the judgment based on the appeal of any of the litigants other than the Public Prosecution shall result in the inadmissibility of aggravation of the sentence imposed by the overturned judgment. If the cassation of the judgment occurs at the request of any of the litigants other than the Public Prosecution, its appeal shall not be prejudiced. The Court of Cassation shall not have the right to overturn the judgment if it is made in error if the appeal is filed by one of the litigants and this would harm the appellant.[3845]

This rule applies to those to whom the effect of the cassation has extended as an exception, even if his appeal was ruled inadmissible, as the legislator did not envisage this exception except to achieve justice that refuses to differentiate between the positions of similar litigants at the unity of the incident, so this rule must be adhered to for all defendants in the case who have ruled in their favor and the Public Prosecution had not decided to appeal the judgment before them.

([3845]) Article 43 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 3559 of 87 S issued at the session of 3 September 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4156 of 87 S issued at the session of 4 March 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4156 of 87 S issued at the session of 4 March 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5979 of 88 S issued at the session of 21 November 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6737 of 86 S issued at the session of 8 April 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10913 of 86 S issued at the 8th session of April 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 111 of 86 S issued at the 24th session of March 2018 (unpublished), Appeal No. 32783 of 85 S issued at the 25th session of November 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4220 of 85 S issued at the 18th session of November 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 902 of 86 S issued at the 4th session of November 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5292 of 87 S issued at the 1st session of November 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 25310 of 86 S issued at the hearing of July 31, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2353 of 87 S issued at the hearing of May 14, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1203 of 86 S issued at the hearing of March 14, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 44542 of 85 S issued at the hearing of January 18, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 29358 of 86 S issued at the hearing of January 14, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19721 of 86 S issued at the session of 28 December 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 961, rule No. 120, Appeal No. 40756 of 85 S issued at the session of 24 November 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 826, rule No. 102, Appeal No. 22461 of 85 S issued at the session of 22 November 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2015 of 84 S issued at the session of 3 October 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6001 of 84 S issued at the session of 17 May 2016 (unpublished) For the year 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6604 of 84 S issued at the hearing of March 17, 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67 Page 380 Rule No. 43, Appeal No. 22195 of 84 S issued at the hearing of February 7, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8675 of 85 S issued at the hearing of February 4, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22909 of 85 S issued at the hearing of January 10, 2016 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 67 Page 78 Rule No. 9, Appeal No. 6016 of 85 S issued at the session of January 2, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 24983 of 4 S issued at the session of December 5, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11258 of 84 S issued at the session of October 8, 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66, page No. 657, rule No. 97, Appeal No. 20242 of 84 S issued at the session of April 2, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7527 of 79 S issued at the session of March 7, 2015 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 66 Page No. 274 Rule No. 37, Appeal No. 30729 of 83 S issued at the hearing of 6 November 2014 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 65 Page No. 800 Rule No. 101, Appeal No. 24118 of 83 S issued at the hearing of 7 June 2014 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 65 Page No. 505 Rule No. 60, Appeal No. 26793 of 83 S issued at the hearing of 8 May 2014 and published in the Technical Office Letter No. 65 Page No. 354 Rule No. 39, Appeal No. 7129 of 81 s issued at the session of 23 April 2014 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 65, page No. 306, rule No. 34, Appeal No. 668 of 83 s issued at the session of 7 April 2014 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 65, page No. 252, rule No. 26, Appeal No. 20535 of 83 s issued at the session of 2 April 2014 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 65, page No. 207, rule No. 21, Appeal No. 7988 of 83 s issued at the session of 25 February 2014 (Unpublished), Appeal No. 10227 of 83 S issued at the 10th session of February 2014 (Unpublished), Appeal No. 6318 of 82 S issued at the 14th session of April 2013 (Unpublished), Appeal No. 11748 of 82 S issued at the 2nd session of April 2013 (Unpublished), Appeal No. 6079 of 82 S issued at the 24th session of February 2013 (Unpublished), Appeal No. 4061 of 82 S issued at the 1st session of January 2013 (Unpublished), Appeal No. 46766 of 75 S issued at the 11th session of November 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 63, page 656, rule No. 118, Appeal No. 8050 of 81 S issued at the 1st session of July 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8824 of 81 S issued at the 9th session of April 2012 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2840 of 80 S issued at the 3rd session of December 2011 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 62, page 414, rule No. 69, Appeal No. 13277 of 80 S issued at the 13th session of October 2011 (unpublished) Published), Appeal No. 4894 of 79 s issued at the hearing of 7 June 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9203 of 80 s issued at the hearing of 5 May 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 36057 of 77 s issued at the hearing of 15 April 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6202 of 79 s issued at the hearing of 21 February 2010 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 61, page 158, rule No. 24, Appeal No. 11793 of 76 s issued at the hearing of 21 January 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8273 of 78 s issued at the hearing of 28 September 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10457 of 71 s issued at the hearing of 6 January 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12235 of 76 s issued at the hearing of 3 January 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15231 of 74 s issued at the hearing of 18 November 2008 (unpublished).

The Court of Cassation may rule acquittal in accordance with the law.[3846]

It may also grant clemency to the accused in accordance with Article 17 of the Penal Code.[3847]

1-The court overturns the judgment in favor of the accused

The principle is that it is not permissible to express other reasons before the court other than the reasons previously stated on the legally prescribed date; which is sixty days from the date of the judgment in presence or from the date of the expiry of the date of the objection or from the date of the judgment issued in opposition, or within ten days if the judgment was issued with acquittal and the appellant obtained a certificate of non-deposit of the judgment within thirty days from the date of its issuance.[3848]

However, the court may revoke the judgment in favor of the accused on its own initiative if it finds that it is based on a violation of the law or on an error in its application or interpretation, or if the court that issued it was not formed in accordance with the law and does not have jurisdiction to adjudicate the lawsuit, or if a more correct law was issued after the contested judgment that applies to the fact of the lawsuit.[3849]

2- Effect of Cassation of Judgment

It is decided that the details of the reasons for the appeal are required from the point of view of the appeal specifically and a definition of its face since the openness of the dispute so that the person familiar with it can realize at first glance the place of violation of the law or the place of invalidity in which it occurred, and the principle is to abide by the reasons for the appeal, so that the judgment is not overturned except what was related to the aspects on which the cassation is

---

([3846]) Appeal No. 31919 of 73 S issued at the session of March 28, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 577 of 33 S issued at the session of June 24, 1963 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 14 page No. 559 rule No. 107.

([3847]) Appeal No. 672 of 31 S issued at the session of November 7, 1961 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 12 page No. 895 rule No. 179.

([3848]) Articles 34 and 35 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3849]) Article 35 of the Appeal Cases and Procedures Law before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 6452 of 87 S issued at the session of 21 July 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9075 of 85 S issued at the session of 25 November 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1759 of 78 S issued at the session of 14 December 2016 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 67 page No. 909 rule No. 112, Appeal No. 22632 of 84 S issued at the session of 26 March 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 13596 of 84 s issued at the hearing of March 26, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9032 of 84 s issued at the hearing of March 26, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19509 of 84 s issued at the hearing of March 26, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3633 of 84 s issued at the hearing of March 12, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4314 of 84 s issued at the hearing of February 27, 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10985 of 84 s issued at the hearing of February 27, 2016 (unpublished)), Appeal No. 8562 of 85 S issued at the hearing of June 26, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26635 of 84 S issued at the hearing of June 11, 2015 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17180 of 3 S issued at the hearing of April 28, 2013 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 64 Page 544 Rule No. 76, Appeal No. 12235 of 76 S issued at the hearing of January 3, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11997 of 67 S issued at the second session of November 2006, published in Technical Office Letter No. 57, page No. 848, rule No. 92, Appeal No. 24138 of 66 S issued at the 7 September 2006 session (unpublished), Appeal No. 22727 of 66 S issued at the 27 July 2006 session (unpublished), Appeal No. 15223 of 66 S issued at the 18 May 2006 session (unpublished), Appeal No. 2115 of 66 S issued at the 2 March 2006 session (unpublished), Appeal No. 2178 of 66 S issued at the 2 March 2006 session (unpublished), Appeal No. 2178 of 66 S issued at the 2 March 2006 session (unpublished), Appeal No. 16374 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 30 September 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1219 of 62 S issued at the hearing of 12 June 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12605 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 6 June 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14296 of 65 S issued at the hearing of 17 May 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5411 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 12 February 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 11168 of 65 S issued at the session of January 1, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 62550 of 59 S issued at the session of February 27, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 48, page No. 250, rule No. 35, Appeal No. 2892 of 61 S issued at the session of January 16, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45, page No. 107, rule No. 15, Appeal No. 21762 of 60 S issued at the session of July 22, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 43, page No. 676, rule No. 101, Appeal No. 14620 of 59 S issued at the session of January 17, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 41 page No. 154 rule No. 21, Appeal No. 6992 of 54 S issued at the session of January 9, 1986 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 37 page No. 41 rule No. 10, Appeal No. 1364 of 53 S issued at the session of October 13, 1983 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 34 page No. 829 rule No. 164.

based, and the Court of Cassation may not deviate from these reasons and address the errors of the judgment in the law except in the interest of the accused.[3850]

The judgment shall not be overturned except for those who filed the appeal.[3851]

However, if the division is not possible and if the appeal is not submitted by the Public Prosecution and the aspects on which the cassation is based are related to non-appellants of the defendants with him. In this case, the verdict shall be overturned for them as well, even if they did not submit an appeal or their appeal was inadmissible in form or the appeal was overturned. This is a departure from the general principle, which is the relativity of the effect of the appeal. The legislator, in the interest of the proper functioning of justice, considered that the effect of the overturned judgment should extend to non-accused appellants who were parties to the contested judgment if the aspects of the appeal contacted them and the judgment was not overturned for a reason specific to the person who filed the appeal.[3852]

([3850]) Article 42 of the Appeal Cases and Procedures Law before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 20535 of 83 S issued at the session of April 2, 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 207, rule No. 21.

([3851]) Article 42 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3852]) Article No. 42 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeals before the Court of Cassation, Appeal No. 33713 of 86 Q issued on January 19, 2019 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5995 of 85 Q issued on February 12, 2017 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5976 of 82 Q issued on February 6, 2013, published in Technical Office Book No. 64, page 211, Rule No. 22; Appeal No. 1933 of 82 Q issued on January 6, 2013 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4505 of 80 Q issued on February 16, 2012, published in Technical Office Book No. 63, page 212, Rule No. 29; Appeal No. 6868 of 79 Q issued on April 21, 2011 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8288 of 78 Q issued on December 26, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 31919 of 73 Q issued on March 28, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 39909 of 73 Q issued on January 21, 2010 (unpublished), Appeal No. 197 of 72 Q issued on October 3, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 61247 of 76 Q issued on September 27, 2009, published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page 324, Rule No. 43; Appeal No. 45129 of 73 Q issued on July 29, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 6487 of 78 Q issued on May 25, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9187 of 78 Q issued on May 21, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7239 of 72 Q issued on April 7, 2009, published in Technical Office Book No. 60, page 185, Rule No. 24; Appeal No. 10563 of 77 Q issued on March 4, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 63528 of 75 Q issued on January 5, 2008 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22474 of 67 Q issued on March 4, 2007, published in Technical Office Book No. 58, page 209, Rule No. 42; Appeal No. 10389 of 67 Q issued on October 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 59429 of 75 Q issued on June 12, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17631 of 75 Q issued on March 26, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 36102 of 75 Q issued on March 12, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 51732 of 73 Q issued on March 6, 2006, published in Technical Office Book No. 57, page 384, Rule No. 42; Appeal No. 1114 of 67 Q issued on February 16, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19970 of 66 Q issued on February 2, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 26783 of 67 Q issued on January 19, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17633 of 75 Q issued on July 21, 2005, published in Technical Office Book No. 56, page 412, Rule No. 62; Appeal No. 8467 of 75 Q issued on June 8, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 938 of 68 Q issued on May 26, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14376 of 65 Q issued on May 5, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14770 of 72 Q issued on April 7, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3212 of 66 Q issued on March 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19295 of 65 Q issued on January 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19342 of 65 Q issued on January 3, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10188 of 65 Q issued on November 17, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19336 of 66 Q issued on October 4, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16425 of 65 Q issued on September 27, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5832 of 66 Q issued on June 3, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14676 of 65 Q issued on May 19, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10612 of 70 Q issued on March 4, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12663 of 65 Q issued on March 4, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15799 of 65 Q issued on March 4, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2040 of 68 Q issued on February 23, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 812 of 68 Q issued on January 12, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8660 of 65 Q issued on December 7, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 22810 of 65 Q issued on November 20, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20114 of 66 Q issued on November 6, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8086 of 65 Q issued on October 16, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8115 of 65 Q issued on October 16, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 19262 of 65 Q issued on October 16, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 7659 of 65 Q issued on October 15, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 975, Rule No. 130; Appeal No. 20740 of 66 Q issued on September 29, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 8107 of 65 Q issued on June 11, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 744, Rule No. 98; Appeal No. 40767 of 72 Q issued on May 7, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 636, Rule No. 80; Appeal No. 10592 of 64 Q issued on April 20, 2003, published in Technical Office Book No. 54, page 577, Rule No. 72; Appeal No. 56 of 68 Q issued on March 10, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3484 of 64 Q issued on February 6, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21385 of 63 Q issued on December 19, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 1188, Rule No. 195; Appeal No. 16994 of 63 Q issued on November 21, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 17738 of 63 Q issued on November 21, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20351 of 69 Q issued on November 21, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14846 of 63 Q issued on November 7, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 14848 of 63 Q issued on November 7, 2002

(unpublished), Appeal No. 12774 of 63 Q issued on October 17, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 12858 of 63 Q issued on October 17, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10864 of 63 Q issued on October 3, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9496 of 63 Q issued on September 26, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 20594 of 69 Q issued on March 11, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15409 of 62 Q issued on February 7, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21926 of 70 Q issued on February 7, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 21428 of 71 Q issued on January 14, 2002, published in Technical Office Book No. 53, page 86, Rule No. 15; Appeal No. 9374 of 62 Q issued on January 3, 2002 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10946 of 71 Q issued on December 20, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 16393 of 62 Q issued on December 4, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 948, Rule No. 182; Appeal No. 16393 of 62 Q issued on December 4, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28947 of 68 Q issued on October 20, 2001, published in Technical Office Book No. 52, page 757, Rule No. 141; Appeal No. 16412 of 68 Q issued on May 14, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3721 of 70 Q issued on December 3, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 784, Rule No. 156; Appeal No. 10375 of 68 Q issued on November 12, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 717, Rule No. 143; Appeal No. 10809 of 64 Q issued on March 27, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 347, Rule No. 64; Appeal No. 14454 of 64 Q issued on February 21, 2000, published in Technical Office Book No. 51, page 213, Rule No. 39; Appeal No. 2127 of 61 Q issued on December 7, 1999, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 627, Rule No. 141; Appeal No. 548 of 69 Q issued on October 26, 1999, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 1045, Rule No. 205; Appeal No. 2614 of 66 Q issued on July 1, 1999, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 395, Rule No. 93; Appeal No. 16515 of 63 Q issued on June 9, 1999, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 387, Rule No. 91; Appeal No. 8286 of 60 Q issued on June 2, 1999, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 50, page 352, Rule No. 83; Appeal No. 2741 of 61 Q issued on May 27, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 746, Rule No. 98; Appeal No. 7704 of 66 Q issued on April 12, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 532, Rule No. 69; Appeal No. 7476 of 63 Q issued on March 25, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 487, Rule No. 63; Appeal No. 2957 of 66 Q issued on February 15, 1998, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 49, page 243, Rule No. 36; Appeal No. 10201 of 65 Q issued on July 9, 1997, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 766, Rule No. 117; Appeal No. 49865 of 59 Q issued on February 24, 1997, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 48, page 228, Rule No. 31; Appeal No. 23179 of 63 Q issued on October 3, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 1050, Rule No. 155; Appeal No. 15096 of 62 Q issued on March 7, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 448, Rule No. 70; Appeal No. 5318 of 63 Q issued on March 7, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 453, Rule No. 71; Appeal No. 3056 of 63 Q issued on February 12, 1995, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 46, page 363, Rule No. 53; Appeal No. 18792 of 64 Q issued on December 4, 1994, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 45, page 1072, Rule No. 168; Appeal No. 14844 of 62 Q issued on July 5, 1993, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 44, page 658, Rule No. 102; Appeal No. 6788 of 59 Q issued on April 9, 1992, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 43, page 371, Rule No. 54, Appeal No. 21699 of 59 Q issued on March 16, 1992, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 43, page 304, Rule No. 40; Appeal No. 370 of 60 Q issued on April 11, 1991, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 647, Rule No. 94; Appeal No. 2740 of 59 Q issued on February 24, 1991, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 418, Rule No. 58; Appeal No. 1006 of 59 Q issued on January 29, 1991, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 197, Rule No. 26; Appeal No. 12243 of 59 Q issued on January 22, 1991, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 42, page 160, Rule No. 19; Appeal No. 26014 of 59 Q issued on May 3, 1990, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 689, Rule No. 119; Appeal No. 14621 of 59 Q issued on January 17, 1990, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 41, page 159, Rule No. 22; Appeal No. 5736 of 58 Q issued on January 5, 1989, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 40, page 5, Rule No. 1; Appeal No. 2713 of 58 Q issued on November 10, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 1036, Rule No. 156; Appeal No. 3906 of 58 Q issued on November 3, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 1016, Rule No. 154; Appeal No. 2434 of 58 Q issued on June 8, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 772, Rule No. 116; Appeal No. 6919 of 57 Q issued on March 27, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 502, Rule No. 73; Appeal No. 3112 of 55 Q issued on January 31, 1988, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 39, page 232, Rule No. 29; Appeal No. 635 of 57 Q issued on May 20, 1987, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 704, Rule No. 124; Appeal No. 6649 of 56 Q issued on May 5, 1987, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 38, page 659, Rule No. 113; Appeal No. 4071 of 56 Q issued on November 20, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 943, Rule No. 179; Appeal No. 3287 of 56 Q issued on October 13, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 747, Rule No. 142; Appeal No. 4421 of 55 Q issued on January 20, 1986, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 37, page 105, Rule No. 24; Appeal No. 5790 of 54 Q issued on May 2, 1985, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 597, Rule No. 105; Appeal No. 256 of 55 Q issued on February 25, 1985, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 36, page 300, Rule No. 51; Appeal No. 400 of 54 Q issued on December 20, 1984, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 928, Rule No. 206; Appeal No. 3887 of 54 Q issued on December 18, 1984, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 913, Rule No. 202; Appeal No. 2505 of 54 Q issued on December 4, 1984, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 863, Rule No. 192; Appeal No. 5883 of 53 Q issued on November 22, 1984, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 807, Rule No. 182; Appeal No. 6578 of 53 Q issued on March 13, 1984, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 35, page 267, Rule No. 55; Appeal No. 2691 of 53 Q issued on December 29, 1983, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 34,

According to the foregoing, if the appeal is not submitted by the Public Prosecution, the judgment shall not be overturned except for the person who submitted the appeal, unless the aspects on which the cassation is based are related to other defendants with him, and if the Public Prosecution challenges the judgment by way of cassation, the dispute shall be transferred in relation to the criminal lawsuit in the interest of both parties from the accused and the Public Prosecution, so the Court of Cassation shall contact it - once it has fulfilled its legal conditions - in a way that entitles it to consider it in the interest of the aforementioned parties, and then the Court of Cassation shall have the right - upon the appeal of the Public Prosecution - to overturn the judgment in the interest of the appellant - the Public Prosecution - or in the interest of the accused in cases in which the law authorizes it to overturn it on its own initiative.[3853] page 1121, Rule No. 222; Appeal No. 951 of 53 Q issued on June 2, 1983, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 730, Rule No. 146; Appeal No. 5802 of 52 Q issued on March 16, 1983, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 371, Rule No. 75; Appeal No. 5314 of 52 Q issued on January 18, 1983, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 107, Rule No. 18; Appeal No. 6323 of 52 Q issued on January 4, 1983, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 34, page 55, Rule No. 6; Appeal No. 1817 of 51 Q issued on December 1, 1981, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 32, page 1009, Rule No. 176; Appeal No. 2416 of 49 Q issued on June 8, 1980, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 31, page 717, Rule No. 139; Appeal No. 765 of 49 Q issued on October 22, 1979, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 30, page 781, Rule No. 165; Appeal No. 1353 of 47 Q issued on March 12, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 255, Rule No. 47; Appeal No. 973 of 47 Q issued on January 30, 1978, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 29, page 120, Rule No. 21; Appeal No. 950 of 46 Q issued on January 10, 1977, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 28, page 57, Rule No. 12; Appeal No. 829 of 46 Q issued on January 3, 1977, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 28, page 25, Rule No. 4; Appeal No. 863 of 46 Q issued on December 20, 1976, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 975, Rule No. 219; Appeal No. 1977 of 45 Q issued on March 28, 1976, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 27, page 362, Rule No. 77; Appeal No. 1193 of 45 Q issued on November 23, 1975, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 26, page 726, Rule No. 160; Appeal No. 900 of 44 Q issued on January 5, 1975, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 26, page 1, Rule No. 1; Appeal No. 843 of 44 Q issued on December 15, 1974, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 852, Rule No. 184; Appeal No. 324 of 44 Q issued on April 14, 1974, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 25, page 408, Rule No. 87; Appeal No. 600 of 43 Q issued on October 14, 1973, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 24, page 829, Rule No. 172; Appeal No. 245 of 42 Q issued on April 24, 1972, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 23, page 606, Rule No. 136; Appeal No. 125 of 40 Q issued on March 2, 1970, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 21, page 344, Rule No. 86; Appeal No. 1398 of 39 Q issued on October 20, 1969, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 20, page 1133, Rule No. 223; Appeal No. 807 of 39 Q issued on October 13, 1969, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 20, page 1038, Rule No. 203; Appeal No. 1860 of 38 Q issued on January 27, 1969, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 20, page 183, Rule No. 40; Appeal No. 1619 of 38 Q issued on November 25, 1968, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 19, page 1022, Rule No. 207; Appeal No. 1868 of 38 Q issued on November 25, 1968, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 19, page 1031, Rule No. 209; Appeal No. 1752 of 38 Q issued on October 28, 1968, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 19, page 891, Rule No. 176; Appeal No. 873 of 37 Q issued on June 12, 1967, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 18, page 797, Rule No. 161; Appeal No. 690 of 37 Q issued on May 22, 1967, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 18, page 690, Rule No. 134; Appeal No. 240 of 37 Q issued on April 25, 1967, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 18, page 597, Rule No. 115; Appeal No. 4 of 37 Q issued on April 18, 1967, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 18, page 544, Rule No. 106; Appeal No. 102 of 37 Q issued on March 13, 1967, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 18, page 392, Rule No. 73; Appeal No. 1344 of 36 Q issued on December 12, 1966, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 1232, Rule No. 235; Appeal No. 1785 of 36 Q issued on November 21, 1966, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 1125, Rule No. 211; Appeal No. 1227 of 36 Q issued on November 7, 1966, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 1081, Rule No. 202; Appeal No. 433 of 36 Q issued on May 23, 1966, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 667, Rule No. 121; Appeal No. 1786 of 35 Q issued on February 22, 1966, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 17, page 189, Rule No. 34; Appeal No. 2009 of 34 Q issued on May 4, 1965, published in Volume 2 of Technical Office Book No. 16, page 430, Rule No. 87; Appeal No. 1427 of 34 Q issued on November 2, 1964, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 15, page 634, Rule No. 126; Appeal No. 2013 of 33 Q issued on February 10, 1964, published in Volume 1 of Technical Office Book No. 15, page 136, Rule No. 28; Appeal No. 638 of 31 Q issued on October 30, 1961, published in Volume 3 of Technical Office Book No. 12, page 852, Rule No. 169..

---

([3853]) Appeal No. 10625 of 64 S issued at the session of February 9, 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51, page No. 153, rule No. 27.

The cassation of the judgment for the accused requires its cassation for the person responsible for civil rights - even if the judgment is not appealed or his appeal is inadmissible in form - to establish his responsibility for compensation on the basis of the proof of the same incident in which he was convicted.[3854]

Unless the person responsible for civil rights did not appeal the primary judgment and was not a party to the litigation in which the contested judgment was issued, the effect of the cassation of the judgment does not extend to him in this case.[3855]

The cassation of the judgment for the person responsible for civil rights extends its effect to the accused and requires its cassation for him, and if he does not decide to appeal because the face of the appeal is connected to him, which requires - taking into account the proper course of justice - the retrial of the accused for the incident in its criminal part until the trial court reviews the case in full, but this effect does not result in the cassation appeal filed by the plaintiff of the civil right, so the authority of the criminal judgment remains untouched if the prosecution accepts it and does not challenge it within the specified time.[3856]

It is also established that the civil lawsuit filed before the criminal courts is a lawsuit for the criminal lawsuit. If the contested judgment is overturned, the judgment must be overturned for the civil lawsuit as well.[3857]

Also, in cases where the Court of Cassation corrects the contested judgment, if the error in which the judgment was deteriorated relates to the rest of the convicts who did not accept their appeal, the correction of the contested judgment must be extended to them. The reason for the extension of this effect in the cases of cassation or correction of the judgment is the same, as the justice refuses to extend the effect of the cassation of the judgment and does not extend to it in the case of correction, which is taken away from the intention of the street.[3858]

([3854]) Appeal No. 19840 of 67 S issued at the session of January 23, 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 3238 of 74 S issued at the session of November 17, 2005, Appeal No. 19534 of 66 S issued at the session of October 5, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 15321 of 61 S issued at the session of December 20, 1999 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5001 of 62 S issued at the session of December 13, 1994 and published in the first part of the Office's letter Technical No. 45 Page No. 1147 Rule No. 181, Appeal No. 3935 of 56 S issued at the session of November 20, 1986 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 37 Page No. 938 Rule No. 178, Appeal No. 556 of 46 S issued at the session of October 31, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 27 Page No. 800 Rule No. 183, Appeal No. 1704 of 33 S issued at the session of December 28, 1964 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 15 Page No. 877 Rule No. 172, Appeal No. 305 of 34 S issued in the session of October 12, 1964 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 15, page No. 568, rule No. 111.

([3855]) Appeal No. 10678 of 67 S issued at the 26th session of March 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51, page No. 343, rule No. 63.

([3856]) Appeal No. 2886 of 68 s issued at the session of July 13, 1999 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 50 page No. 997 rule No. 196, Appeal No. 609 of 50 s issued at the session of February 8, 1983 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 34 page No. 209 rule No. 39, Appeal No. 2101 of 51 s issued at the session of December 15, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 32 page No. 1095 rule No. 195, Appeal No. 712 of 40 s issued at the session of June 8, 1970 and published in the second part of the Technical Office book No. 21 page No. 855 rule No. 201, Appeal No. 1383 of 38 s issued at the session of February 11, 1969 and published in the first part of the Technical Office book No. 20 page No. 248 rule No. 54.

([3857]) Appeal No. 16077 of 59 S issued at the session of January 17, 1991 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 42 page No. 98 rule No. 13.

([3858]) Appeal No. 34835 of 85 S issued at the 6th session of February 2016 (unpublished), Appeal No. 1310 of 82 S issued at the 6th session of February 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 111, rule No. 7, Appeal No. 18696 of 66 S issued at the 15th session of September 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 2015 of 68 S issued at the 23rd session of February 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 4184 of 73 s issued at the session of September 29, 2003 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 54 page 884 rule No. 120, Appeal No. 1027 of 64 s issued at the session of March 2, 2003 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 54 page 325 rule No. 34, Appeal No. 3517 of 62 s issued at the session of October 24, 2001 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 52 page 782 rule No. 147, Appeal No. 17106 of 64 s issued at the session of September 25, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 47 page 878 rule No. 127, Appeal No. 13071 of 64 s issued at the session of June 12, 1996 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter

However, this is conditional on the Court of Cassation appointing in its judgment whoever encroaches on the effect of the cassation, because it alone has the discretion of whoever extends the effect of the cassation, because it alone has the assessment of the extent of the contested judgment.[3859]

However, the effect of the cassation of the judgment does not extend to the person against whom a judgment was issued in absentia because it is not a final judgment for him.[3860]

The effect of the cassation of the judgment does not extend to the person against whom the contested judgment was issued in legal presence.[3861]

The effect of the cassation of the judgment extends only to the defendants who had appealed the primary judgment issued against them. Their appeal was after the legal deadline and the court ruled that it was not accepted in form or ruled that it was forfeited and this was confirmed in the appeal objection. The Court of Appeal does not relate to the subject matter of the case unless the appeal is accepted in form)[3862](.

No. 47 page No. 756 rule No. 110, Appeal No. 12099 of 59 s issued at the session of January 9, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 43 page No. 110 rule No. 6.

([3859]) [If the face of the appeal on which the revocation of the contested judgment was based for the second appellant is not related to the first appellant, as the exemption from punishment is not a permissibility of the act or erasure of criminal responsibility, but is decided in the interest of the offender in whose act and in his person the elements of criminal responsibility and the entitlement to punishment have been achieved, and all that the excuse exempted from punishment has is the reduction of the punishment of the offender after the stability of his conviction without prejudice to the establishment of the crime in itself or the fact that the offender exempted from punishment is considered responsible for it and deserving of punishment in the first place], the impact of this does not extend to the first appellant], Appeal No. 21620 of 73 BC issued at the session of March 28, 2010 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 61, page No. 303, rule No. 38

See: Appeal No. 16404 of 64 s issued at the session of 11 December 1996 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 47 page No. 1308 rule No. 189, Appeal No. 160 of 41 s issued at the session of 16 April 1972 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 23 page No. 568 rule No. 124.

([3860]) Appeal No. 14764 of 83 S issued at the session of June 5, 2014 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 65 page 483 rule No. 57, Appeal No. 9507 of 78 S issued at the session of December 21, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 9187 of 78 S issued at the session of May 21, 2009 (unpublished), Appeal No. 91 of 67 S issued at the session of February 17, 2007 (unpublished), Appeal No. 10612 of 70 S issued at the session of March 4, 2007 (unpublished) 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 40767 of 72 S issued at the hearing of 7 May 2003 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 54 Page 636 Rule No. 80, Appeal No. 28947 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 20 October 2001 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 52 Page 757 Rule No. 141, Appeal No. 10375 of 68 S issued at the hearing of 12 November 2000 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 51 Page 717 Rule No. 143, Appeal No. 7704 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 12 April 2000 For the year 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 532, rule No. 69, Appeal No. 2957 of 66 S issued at the hearing of February 15, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 243, rule No. 36, Appeal No. 4035 of 60 S issued at the hearing of January 11, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 48, page No. 65, rule No. 9, Appeal No. 43911 of 59 S issued at the 31st session of October 1996 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 47 Page 1106 Rule No. 159, Appeal No. 5318 of 63 S issued at the 7th session of March 1995 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 46 Page 453 Rule No. 71, Appeal No. 6919 of 57 S issued at the 27th session of March 1988 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 39 Page 502 Rule No. 73, Appeal No. 726 of 56 S issued at the 8th session of October 1986 and published In the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 37 Page No. 714 Rule No. 136, Appeal No. 6335 of 55 S issued at the session of June 13, 1985 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 36 Page No. 782 Rule No. 138, Appeal No. 1657 of 50 S issued at the session of January 14, 1981 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 32 Page No. 64 Rule No. 8, Appeal No. 843 of 44 S issued at the session of December 15, 1974 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 25 Page No. 852 Rule No. 184.

([3861]) Appeal No. 1353 for the year 47 issued at the session of March 12, 1978 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 29 page No. 255 rule No. 47.

([3862]) Appeal No. 912 of 69 S issued at the session of 22 May 2006 (unpublished), Appeal No. 48513 of 59 S issued at the session of 21 April 2002 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 53 page No. 677 Rule No. 112, Appeal No. 7330 of 62 S issued at the session of 6 February 2002 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 53 page No. 235 Rule No. 43, Appeal No. 17906 of 61 S issued at the session of 16 From April 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49 page No. 585 rule No. 74, Appeal No. 18792 of 64 s issued in the session of December 4, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45 page No. 1072 rule No. 168, Appeal No. 1337 of 58 s issued in the session of March 9, 1989 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 40 page No. 376 rule

3- Return the case to the court that issued the judgment

If the contested judgment was issued by accepting a legal defense that prevents the proceeding of the lawsuit, or if it was issued before the adjudication of the matter and was based on the prohibition of proceeding in the lawsuit and was overturned by the Court of Cassation, the case is returned to the court that issued it for re-sentencing, formed by other judges.[3863]

Taking into account that in the event that the trial court has erred in its decision of lack of jurisdiction, and this error has prevented it from considering the merits of the case, it is not required that the Court of Repeat be composed of other judges, so it may be considered by the same judges who considered it for the first time unlike other cases of cassation if there is an invalidity in the judgment.[3864]

The Court of Repeat may not rule contrary to what was ruled by the Court of Cassation.[3865]

It is also not permissible for it, in all cases, to rule contrary to what was decided by the General Authority for Criminal Materials at the Court of Cassation.[3866]

The cassation court's correction of the contested judgment assumes that the judgment has adjudicated the subject matter, that is, that the trial court has exhausted its jurisdiction. If it has not been subjected to the examination of the subject matter, the case must be referred to the trial court when the appeal is accepted.

In all cases, the Court of Cassation shall not have the right to refer the case to the trial court if there is no benefit from the referral, as if the criminal case lapsed by prescription after the issuance of the contested judgment or an amnesty was issued for the punishment or the crime or a law that decriminalizes the act.

The original principle is that the cassation of the judgment and the retrial return the lawsuit to the Repeat Court in the state it was in before the issuance of the overturned judgment. That court (the Repeat Court) does not adhere to the provisions of the last judgment regarding the facts of the lawsuit, but rather it must proceed with the proceedings as if they were before it in the first place, and it must hear all the defenses submitted by the litigants, even if they have not previously adhered to them before the first court, unless they have previously adhered to subsidiary defenses and ruled to reject them with a final judgment that has not been challenged. Above all, it has full freedom to assess and adapt the facts and give the legal description that it deems unrestricted in all this by virtue of the cassation or what may be found in its regard. To that end, it may rule in the lawsuit in a way that reassures its conscience, even if it violates that judgment, and without considering this violation as a face of appeal, except if the subject of the violation is in itself fit to be a face of the appeal against the new judgment, and all that is adhered to in this regard is not to harm the appellant from his appeal, and to abide by the ruling

---

No. 61, Appeal No. 1411 of 38 s issued in the session of December 30, 1968 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 19 Page No. 1121 Rule No. 229.

([3863]) Article 44 of the Law of Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation, and see: Appeal No. 30763 of 67 s issued at the session of October 20, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28764 of 67 s issued at the session of May 19, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28766 of 67 s issued at the session of May 19, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 28767 of 67 s issued at the session of May 19, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 41 of 60 s issued at the session of February 19, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 42 page No. 362 rule No. 49.

([3864]) Appeal No. 41 of 60 s issued at the session of February 19, 1991 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 42 page No. 362 rule No. 49, Appeal No. 7042 of 55 s issued at the session of March 6, 1986 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 37 page No. 349 rule No. 72.

([3865]) Article 44 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

([3866]) Article 44 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

of the Court of Cassation in relation to that lawsuit, or it is also bound not to rule contrary to what was decided by the General Authority for Criminal Materials at the Court of Cassation.[3867]

If the trial court has acquitted the accused because the act is not punishable by law or forfeiture by the lapse of time and based on the prosecution's appeal, the Court of Cassation considers that the act is punishable by law or that it was not forfeited by the lapse of time and canceled the acquittal and returned the case to the trial court for consideration, this court - the Court of Repeat - may not rule again that the act is not punishable by law because the judgment of the Court of Cassation in this form has the force of the thing ruled.[3868]

The legislator has defined in Article 44 the legal issues that the trial court adheres to what the Court of Cassation has decided in two cases: the first is if the contested judgment was issued to accept a legal defense that prevents the proceeding of the lawsuit and the Court of Cassation overturned it and returned it to the court that issued it to consider the matter, and the second case is: The trial court may not rule in all cases contrary to what the General Authority for Criminal Materials at the Court of Cassation decided,.[3869]

The legal issue in this field means the issue that has been submitted to the Court of Cassation and expressed its opinion intentionally and visually, so that its judgment has acquired the force of the thing in which it is judged so that it refrains from the Court of Repeat when considering the lawsuit to prejudice this authenticity, and the legislator, even if the Supreme Constitutional Court is entrusted with the interpretation of the laws, but this does not confiscate the right of other judicial authorities to interpret the laws and impose their interpretation on the incident presented to them as long as no binding interpretation has been issued by the legislative authority or by the Constitutional Court on the text in question. The Supreme Court, in accordance with the conditions prescribed in its law regarding requests for interpretation, if the Court of Cassation, which is a court that is not overruled by a court and the interpretation of the laws required by its function, has dealt with the interpretation of the law applied in the fact of the lawsuit, it has thus decided a legal issue that has acquired the force of the thing adjudicated in this lawsuit, which was necessary for the Court of Cassation not to re-address this issue in any way after the Court of Cassation ruled on it or discussed the effects of the Court of Cassation's judgment in it because of the prejudice to the authority of its judgment in the lawsuit, and it must be limited Researching issues that do not affect this opposability.[3870]

4-The inadmissibility of appealing the judgments of the Court of Cassation

It is not permissible to appeal against the judgments of the Court of Cassation or the judgments of the Criminal Courts of the Cairo Court of Appeal, sitting in a consultation room issued in contesting the judgments of the Appealed Misdemeanors Court by any means of appeal unless one of the cases of review stipulated in the Criminal Procedure Law is available, whenever the court has overturned the contested judgment and dealt with the consideration of the matter.[3871]

This means that the Court of Cassation and the judgments of the Cairo Criminal Courts, which are held in a consultation room, are final and their judgments are irrevocable, and that the legislator has dispensed with the provision that it is prohibited to challenge the judgments of the ([3867]) Appeal No. 2279 of 53 S issued in the session of December 1, 1983 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 34 page No. 1030 rule No. 206.

---

([3868]) Appeal No. 499 of 37 S issued at the session of May 8, 1967 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 18 page No. 605 rule No. 116.

([3869]) Appeal No. 16525 of 88 S issued on July 6, 2019 (unpublished).

([3870]) Appeal No. 27375 for the year 73 S issued in the session of July 6, 2003 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 54 page No. 757 rule No. 101.

([3871]) Article 47 of the Law on Cases and Procedures of Appeal before the Court of Cassation.

Court of Cassation by other ordinary and extraordinary methods of appeal because it is not possible to conceive of the judgments of this court.[3872]

However, the Court of Cassation may revoke a judgment it issued in the event that the judgment in its ruling was based on the non-fulfillment of the legally prescribed appeal procedures and then prove - afterwards - that all those procedures had been fulfilled, but they were not presented in full to the court when it considered the appeal, for reasons not related to the will of the appellant.[3873]

25-1-4 Reconsideration

The request for reconsideration is an unusual way to appeal against final judgments to correct serious errors of fact. The problem of reconsideration lies in reconciling the due respect for final judgments that have the force of res judicata with the general sense of justice that requires the reform of judicial errors in which courts occur.

The appeal for reconsideration is based only on reasons related to the facts and aims to annul the unequivocal judgments that are contrary to justice, and this is based on new elements of proof, not on a reappraisal of the evidence that was previously presented, because of the waste of the principle of res judicata. Rather, the reform of these errors is based on new elements that were not revealed until after the issuance of the unequivocal judgment.

First: Provisions that may be reviewed

It is permissible to request a review of the final sentences issued in the articles of felonies and misdemeanors.[3874]

It is clear from the text of Article 441 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that three conditions are required in the judgment that may be challenged for reconsideration, which are as follows:.

1-The judgment should be final

What is meant is the judgment that has the force of res judicata, that is, the judgment that is not subject to appeal by opposition, appeal, or cassation. It is not permissible to reconsider the judgment if it is permissible to repair similar defects by challenging it by any other means, even if it is by way of cassation.

It is not required that the judgment be issued from the last degree as in the cassation, so it is permitted to reconsider the judgments whose appeal methods have been exhausted by missing their deadlines, or the final judgments issued by the Summary Court.

The Court of Cassation ruled that: “Although the judgment of the Criminal Court in the foregoing felony - in which the accused was convicted for forging the trust receipt and the reports of the challenge to the misdemeanor in question - is considered as new evidence and papers that did not exist at the time of the trial in the case in which the judgment was requested to be reviewed. However, these facts do not prove their effect or the innocence of the applicant, as long as the judgment issued in the aforementioned felony was issued in absentia and is still the subject of ([3872]) Appeal No. 31639 of 3Q issued at the session of 21 April 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66 Page 408 Rule No. 55, Appeal No. 8589 of 81Q issued at the session of 10 January 2015 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 66 Page No. 97 Rule No. 5, Appeal No. 7724 of 79Q issued at the session of 21 November 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 63 Page No. 761 Rule No. 135, Appeal No. 5 of 2010Q issued at the session of 19 March 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 55 Page No. 33 Rule No. 6, Appeal No. 1 of 2011Q issued at the session of 19 March 2012 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 55 Page No. 38 Rule No. 7.

---

([3873]) Appeal No. 31639 of the third year issued at the session of April 21, 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66 page No. 408 rule No. 55.

([3874]) Article 441 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

the request for re-procedures and has not yet been resolved by a final judgment and before re-procedures. Therefore, verifying the innocence of the applicant based on these facts requires an objective investigation that investigates the relationship between these matters and the innocence of the petitioner narrows it down at the time of this court - the Court of Cassation - and it is appropriate for the court that issued the judgment requested to be reviewed". [3875]

2-The judgment must be issued with a penalty

It is equal that the sentence imposed shall be pecuniary or deprivation of liberty, whatever its duration or type, even if it is covered by the stay of execution.

It is also permitted to appeal for reconsideration, even if the punishment has already been carried out, if it is not carried out due to its statute of limitations, or if a pardon is issued for the punishment.

It is not permitted to appeal against the reconsideration of the judgments issued in the ancillary civil lawsuit.

3-The judgment was issued in a felony or misdemeanor

This means that it is not permissible to appeal to reconsider the judgments issued in the violations, regardless of the penalty imposed, and the violations as they are legally defined as crimes punishable by a fine that does not exceed a maximum amount of one hundred pounds, and the lesson is to describe the incident as it was filed in the criminal case and not the nature of the judgment issued in it.[3876]

Second: Cases that may be reconsidered

The cases in which it is permissible to appeal by reviewing the Code of Criminal Procedure are mentioned exclusively, and it is not permissible to measure them.[3877]

The point in accepting the request for reconsideration is that the conditions of one of its cases are met at the time of its submission.[3878]

It is not enough to reconsider the claim that the court that issued the judgment was wrong in understanding the facts and assessing the evidence that was before it.[3879]

These cases are as follows:

Case 1

If the accused is convicted of murder, then the plaintiff finds his murder alive)[3880](.

This case assumes the issuance of a guilty verdict due to the death of the victim, whether as a result of a premeditated murder, a mistake, or a beating that led to death. The lesson is not to

---

([3875]) Appeal No. 13044 of 85 S issued on September 1, 2016 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 67, page No. 602, rule No. 72.

([3876]) Appeal No. 13857 of 70 BC issued at the session of November 20, 2000 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 51 page No. 761 rule No. 149.

([3877]) Appeal No. 18903 of 63 S issued at the session of September 20, 1995 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 46 page No. 930 rule No. 143.

([3878]) Appeal No. 18903 of 63 S issued at the session of September 20, 1995 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 46 page No. 930 rule No. 143, Appeal No. 613 of 53 S issued at the session of April 5, 1984 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 35 page No. 385 rule No. 84, Appeal No. 4054 of 31 S issued at the session of January 16, 1962 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 13 page No. 63 rule No. 16.

([3879]) Appeal No. 1868 of 34 S issued in the session of May 3, 1966 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 17 page No. 555 rule No. 100.

([3880]) Article 441 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

adapt the crime, and it is sufficient for the availability of that case that the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor that led to the death of the victim.

In order for the appeal to be accepted for reconsideration in this case, sufficient evidence must be available that the victim was alive at the time of the commission of the crime, even if he died thereafter, as evidenced by the invalidity of the contested judgment.

In this case, not only does the appearance of evidence require the presence of the plaintiff who killed him alive, but he must actually exist alive, out of respect for the authority of criminal judgments, which confirms that the legislator does not accept the potential evidence, but it requires the conclusive evidence in itself in proving the innocence of the convicted person or the loss of evidence of his guilt)[3881](.

Case 2

If a person is sentenced for an incident, then another person is sentenced for the same incident, and there is a contradiction between the two judgments so that the innocence of one of the convicts is inferred.[3882]

The scope of application of this case of reconsideration extends to all cases in which two convictions contradict each other, regardless of the circumstances in which the two contradictory judgments were issued as long as the conditions of this case are met, and the conditions of this case are met whenever the authority of one of the two judgments contradicts or wastes the authority of the other judgment. The basis of the conviction of each of the convict is not consistent with the basis of the conviction of the other, and the judgment of reason and logic does not justify the existence of the two judgments together. The application of this case results in the issuance of two final convictions against two different persons for one incident, from which the innocence of one of the convicts is inferred)[3883](.

The existence of that case requires that two different persons be sentenced, whether by one court or by two different courts, and that the two convictions be issued. This case is not available if the conviction is issued and it is ruled in another case for another defendant for the same incident, by the lapse of the criminal case by prescription, waiver, or death.[3884]

This case also requires that the two judgments be issued against two persons, but if the two judgments are issued against one person, there is no contradiction in the assessment of the facts that provides a petition for review, and if the second judgment is tainted by an error in the

---

([3881]) Appeal No. 1821 of 36 s issued at the session of January 31, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 18 page No. 142 rule No. 27, Appeal No. 1868 of 34 s issued at the session of May 3, 1966 and published in the second part of the Technical Office letter No. 17 page No. 555 rule No. 100.

([3882]) Article 441 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3883]) Appeal No. 43952 of 75 S issued at the session of November 13, 2005 (unpublished), Appeal No. 23 of 2003 S issued at the session of September 16, 2003 (unpublished), Appeal No. 5098 of 80 S issued at the session of October 20, 2010 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 61, page No. 589, rule No. 71, Appeal No. 23297 of 66 S issued at the session of January 9, 1997 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 48, page No. 59, rule No. 8, Appeal No. 1321 of 39 S issued at the session of October 13, 1969 and published in the third part of the Technical Office letter No. 20, page No. 1065, rule No. 209.

([3884]) The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The two judgments on which the applicant is based, one of them has ruled to convict him with a final judgment and the other has ruled to convict the accused .... By virtue of a final judgment as the sole perpetrator in August 1988 of the crime of stealing car No. ………………………………………… My angel Giza is a brand .. ... and owned by.. .... The result of each of these two provisions is that one person is the perpetrator and the conviction of each of the two persons carries the innocence of the other, and therefore the contradiction is considered available, and the request for reconsideration is included under the second case stipulated in Article 441 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and must be accepted] Appeal No. 23297 of 66 S issued at the session of January 9, 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 59 rule No. 8.

application of the law because it violates the authority of the criminal judgment, this is subject to cassation and is not subject to the request for review.[3885]

The basis for the application of this case is that the incident justifying the reconsideration of the lawsuit is new, that is, outside the context of the judgment that ruled to convict the petitioner - it foretells a contradiction between this judgment and another judgment that ruled to convict another so that the innocence of one of the two convicts can be inferred from it.

As for the facts that were mentioned in the context of one judgment that convicted the petitioner and another and raise a contradiction lawsuit in the context of this judgment, the way to correct them is to appeal the judgment and not to request a review of the lawsuit, as this is an unusual way allowed by law to correct serious errors in the final judgments that can only be corrected by this method.

If the contradiction lawsuit on which the petitioner bases the request for reconsideration of the lawsuit, has been merged into the judgment issued against him, which the petitioner appealed by way of cassation and ruled in this appeal to reject it on the merits. Therefore, the failure of the petitioner to take this lawsuit as a face to appeal against the judgment issued against him cannot be a reason for requesting a reconsideration of the lawsuit, as re-examination of the lawsuit is no more than another appeal against the same judgment, which is not permissible.[3886]

This case is also not available if one of the two judgments convicts the student and the other acquits another accused.[3887]

This situation is also not available if the two rulings acquit the same person, even if one of the rulings has ruled the confiscation and the other has not ruled it, because the seizures have already been confiscated before its issuance, which raises the contradiction.[3888]

It is also not permitted to appeal for reconsideration if only one judgment is issued for the incident, while another admits that he committed it after the judgment is issued, as long as no other conviction is issued, and this case does not apply if there is a contradiction in the reasons for the same judgment.

It is required that the subject matter of the two judgments be one incident, even if their legal descriptions differ, or the penalty imposed differs, and it is not sufficient to say that the condition of the unity of the incident is met if the other incident constitutes a circumstance in the first crime or an element in it.

Provided that the two judgments are issued against two different persons, there is no appeal for reconsideration if the two judgments are issued against one person for the same incident.

It is required that the two convicted persons be independent of each other, that is, they do not have a criminal contribution relationship to the same crime, meaning that they are not original perpetrators or one of them is an actor and the other is an accomplice or partners in one crime.

In both judgments, it is required that they have obtained the force of the res judicata. It is not permissible to appeal by reconsideration if one of the judgments is subject to appeal, whether by ordinary or extraordinary means of appeal.

([3885]) Appeal No. 1821 of 36 S issued at the session of January 31, 1967 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 18 page No. 142 rule No. 27.

([3886]) Appeal No. 6852 of 52 S issued on March 28, 1983 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 34 page No. 448 rule No. 91.

([3887]) Appeal No. 5828 of 52 S issued at the session of March 30, 1983 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 34 page No. 467 rule No. 95.

([3888]) Appeal No. 1321 of 39 S issued at the session of October 13, 1969 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 20 page No. 1065 rule No. 209.

It is also required that there be a contradiction between the two provisions, and what is meant by the contradiction is the absolute impossibility of the existence of the two provisions together, and it is required that the contradiction be in the operative part of the two provisions and not in their reasons. It is not sufficient for there to be a contradiction between the reasons for the two provisions as long as this does not go to the operative part, as if the reasons include evidence that the court did not take into account for a particular accused, while it is contradictory and what the ruling concluded about the same fact for the other accused. It is not enough for there to be a contradiction in proving the two provisions for certain sub-issues, if the exclusion of these issues does not affect the operative part, that is in the wise proof of the same fact and its reliance on two different persons at the same time.

The contradiction exists if the court confirms in both judgments that the crime was committed by only one accused, as this requires that the conviction of one of them exonerates the other.

Case 3

If a witness or expert is sentenced to punishment for perjury in accordance with the provisions of Chapter Six of Book Three of the Penal Code, or if he is sentenced to forgery of a paper submitted during the hearing of the lawsuit, and the testimony, expert report, or paper has an impact on the judgment.[3889]

Therefore, the availability of this case is required:

1- A final judgment shall be issued against one of the witnesses or experts in the contested lawsuit for reconsideration, and the translator shall take the expert's judgment in that case, for forgery of the testimony or the report, or the issuance of a final judgment for forgery of a paper submitted during the hearing of the lawsuit, and it is not sufficient for the availability of this case to simply file the lawsuit in these crimes or the issuance of a judgment that does not possess the force of the decreed thing, as long as the forgery has not been proven with certainty by a final judgment.[3890]

It is required for the availability of this case to prove the collapse of one of the evidence influencing the judgment that a guilty verdict is issued against the witness who heard in the case or the expert who submitted a report in it, or to rule the forgery of the paper submitted in the case. The guilty verdict must be for perjury or forgery, it must be final, as this condition can be said that the error of the contested verdict of reconsideration has been definitively proven, and that there is no place for proving the contrary, and therefore it is not sufficient for the availability of this case for the witness to admit his lie, or for the lawsuit to be filed against him without issuing a final judgment in which he dies during its consideration or for a reason such as a statute of limitations, in addition to the fact that the verdict of conviction of the witness or expert or forgery of the paper must be subsequent to the issuance of the contested verdict with a request for reconsideration, and that the testimony, expert's report or the paper have an impact on the verdict)[3891](.

It is not enough for the availability of this case to be dismissed by a witness before another court from what he has previously stated before the trial court without accompanying his dismissal, which resolves the matter itself and cuts in order of its impact on proving the innocence of the

---

([3889]) Article 441 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3890]) Appeal No. 45977 for the year 74 S issued at the session of November 21, 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 758, rule No. 115.

([3891]) Appeal No. 45977 of 74 s issued at the session of November 21, 2004 (unpublished), Appeal No. 45977 of 74 s issued at the session of November 21, 2004 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 55, page No. 758, rule No. 115, Appeal No. 18903 of 63 s issued at the session of September 20, 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 46, page No. 930, rule No. 143, Appeal No. 613 of 53 s issued at the session of April 5, 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 35, page No. 385, rule No. 84.

convicted person, which establishes a fair balance that does not excessive or neglect between the right of the convicted person and the interest of the community, which is harmed by prejudice without a compelling reason of the strength of the criminal matter, which must put an end to a dispute in which the judiciary has finally decided.[3892]

It is decided that the statements of a defendant are on the last as long as they are issued without an oath, they are not considered a certificate in the legal sense until it is true to say that what is done on the certificate is done on it. If the accused, after the court has taken his statements in the conviction of another accused, admits that his statements were not correct, it is not permissible to request the annulment of the conviction judgment on the grounds that the law has allowed the annulment of the judgment by seeking reconsideration if the prosecution witness is judged to have falsely testified in the case.)[3893](.

2. That the forged testimony, experience, or paper has an impact on the judgment, and the judgment does not need to be based on the forged evidence, but it is sufficient to have a clear impact in proving the crime and attributing it to the accused.

If the court did not rely on the forged evidence that it submitted because it was not convinced of it, there is no appeal for reconsideration.[3894]

That case is available if the court relies on forged evidence in addition to other evidence. Evidence in criminal matters is mutually reinforcing and complementary. If one of them falls, it is not possible to identify the effect of false evidence in the formation of the doctrine of the court.

3-The final judgment issued for forgery is required to be issued after the issuance of the contested judgment for reconsideration. If the witness or expert in the crime of forging the testimony or a judgment for forging the paper during the hearing of the case, the judgment shall not be affected by this evidence. If the judgment for forging the evidence was issued at any stage of the criminal litigation, whether before the judgment that was based on this evidence or after the issuance of this judgment and before it acquired the force of the judgment, the means of fixing this procedural error shall be by appealing this judgment, whether by ordinary or extraordinary means of appeal. If this judgment is not appealed despite the availability of this error, and the judgment becomes final, this shall correct all errors of the judgment, even if the matter relates to absolute invalidity related to public order.

Case 4

If the judgment is based on a judgment issued by a civil court or a family court, and this judgment is canceled.[3895]

([3892]) Appeal No. 794 of 2001 issued at the session of October 24, 2001 (unpublished), Appeal No. 45977 of 74 issued at the session of November 21, 2004 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 55, page No. 758, rule No. 115.

([3893]) Appeal No. 1833 of 10 S issued at the 9th session of December 1940 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 5P No. 1 Part No. 1 Page No. 297 Rule No. 163.

([3894]) In this regard, the Court of Cassation ruled that: [The court has the right to deduce its belief from any evidence presented to it, and there is nothing that prevents the trial court from taking the statements of the victim alone when it is satisfied and found in it what convinces it to commit the accused of the crime as long as the assessment of the witness's statements is independent of the trial court and it is not yet obligated to speak in its judgment except for the evidence that has an impact on the formation of its belief, and if it is clear from the judgment that it did not refer to the medical report in its blogs and did not rely on it from the evidence on which it relied in its conviction, then the ruling to falsify this report does not in itself lead to the proof of the innocence of the applicant and does not require the loss of evidence on her conviction or criminal liability as long as it did not have an impact on the judgment and therefore does not stand on its face to request reconsideration] Appeal No. 613 of 53 Q issued at the hearing of 5 April 1984 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 35 page 385 rule No. 84.

([3895]) Article 441 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The availability of this case requires that the contested judgment be issued for reconsideration based on another judgment issued by the family courts or the civil court, and then this judgment is canceled. Article 458 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates that: "Judgments issued by the family courts within the limits of their jurisdiction shall have the force of the judgment before the criminal courts in the matters on which the adjudication of the criminal case depends." This means that the criminal judge adheres to these provisions and may not violate them.

Article 457 of the Code of Criminal Procedure also stipulates that: "Judgments issued by civil courts shall not have the force of the thing sentenced before the criminal courts with regard to the occurrence of the crime and its attribution to the perpetrator."

The availability of that case of review requires that the judgment issued by the non-criminal court be canceled after the judgment issued by the criminal court has been relied upon to prove the occurrence of the crime or its attribution to the accused. The judgment issued by the non-criminal court must be final before the judgment issued by the criminal court acquires this description.

Case 5

If facts occur or appear after the judgment or if papers were submitted that were not known at the time of the trial, and these facts or papers would prove the innocence of the convict.[3896]

In order for the appeal to be reviewed in this case, it is required:

A- The emergence of new facts: The facts mean the elements of anecdotal or material evidence, including papers, and the legislator requests in those facts that they be new, in the sense that they are not known to the court before deciding on the lawsuit. The lesson is not the time of their occurrence, it may be available before or after the judgment, but the lesson is that they have not reached the knowledge of the court before the judgment.

The Court of Cassation stipulated that those facts should also be unknown to the accused before the issuance of the judgment. If he knew about them and yet did not adhere to them and did not convey them to the knowledge of the court, he refrained from challenging the judgment by reconsideration based on these facts.[3897]

An example of the new facts is the discovery that the convicted person had a mental impairment at the time of the commission of the crime that denies criminal responsibility for him, or if the accused was imprisoned at the time of the commission of the crime, or stolen items were found in the possession of the victim or a receipt was found for the return of the trust.[3898]

2-The effect of the new facts: It is not enough for this case to have the appearance of new facts that were unknown by the court. Rather, these facts are required to lead to proving the innocence of the convicted person, as if they would deny the occurrence of the crime, attribute it to the accused, remove the illegality of the act, or prove the existence of a reason for refraining from responsibility or punishment. The Court of Cassation has stipulated that in the new facts it is necessary to be conclusive in proving innocence, which establishes a fair balance that is not

---

([3896]) Article 441 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and see: Appeal No. 1991 of 38 S issued at the session of March 31, 1969 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 20 page No. 401 rule No. 87.

([3897]) Appeal No. 16244 of 85 S issued at the 10th session of May 2016 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 67, page No. 534, rule No. 59, Appeal No. 22551 of 59 S issued at the 20th session of February 1990 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 41, page No. 416, rule No. 66.

([3898]) Appeal No. 10237 of 78 s issued at the session of June 2, 2009 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 60, page No. 277, rule No. 37, Appeal No. 11767 of 64 s issued at the session of October 12, 1994 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 45, page No. 864, rule No. 134, Appeal No. 1522 of 45 s issued at the session of March 28, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 27, page No. 353, rule No. 75.

excessive between the right of the convicted person and the interest of society, which is harmed by prejudice without a compelling reason of the strength of the thing decided criminally.[3899]

If what the student raises does not lead to the proof of the student's innocence, this in itself does not constitute a request for reconsideration.[3900]

The explanatory memorandum of the law commenting on the fifth paragraph, which is the basis for the applicant's request, stated that "it stipulated a general picture stipulated in most modern laws, which is the case if facts occurred or appeared after the judgment or if papers were submitted that were not known at the time of the trial, and these facts or papers mentioned would prove the innocence of the convict.

The street derived this article from Article 443 of the French Code of Criminal Investigation, as amended by the law issued on June 8, 1895, which became the subject of Article 622 of the French Code of Criminal Procedure issued by Law No. 31 December 1957.

It is clear from the text of the Egyptian law and from what is stated in its explanatory memorandum and from the comparison between it and the text of the French law that the first four cases mentioned in the aforementioned article 441, which are disciplined cases collected by a specific criterion based on which the new fact justifying the review of the lawsuit is either based on the fact that the innocence of the convict is proven by the presence of the plaintiff who killed him alive or by the contradiction between two judgments so that the innocence of one of the convicts is inferred from it, or the collapse of one of the evidence affecting the conviction, such as the judgment of the witness or expert of the punishment prescribed for perjury or the judgment of forgery of a paper submitted in the lawsuit or the cancellation of the basis on which the judgment was based.

It is noteworthy that the Egyptian law was in the process of determining the cases in which it is permissible to request a review more stringent than the French law. While the first paragraph of Article 441 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates that "the plaintiff must be killed alive" to be considered a reconsideration, the French law authorizes only the appearance of papers that would find sufficient signs of his existence alive. The French text was before the Egyptian legislator at the time of the development of the Code of Criminal Procedure. However, it affected, out of respect for the authority of criminal provisions, not only requires the mere appearance of evidence of the existence of the plaintiff who killed him alive, but also necessitates his existence alive, which confirms that our existing legislation does not accept potential evidence, but rather requires conclusive evidence in itself in proving the innocence of the convicted person or the loss of evidence of his guilt.

Whereas it is unacceptable, and in the light of the foregoing, for the street to tighten in the four cases of Article 441 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to open the door wide in the fifth case, which generally absorbs what it provides.

Rather, it was intended in the light of the examples set out in the explanatory memorandum, which in themselves indicate the innocence of the convicted person or require the loss of evidence of his guilt or criminal liability.

In addition to the policy of legislation and the general rule that guided the street to its elements in the previous paragraphs, it must be a precautionary text in order to remedy what may escape from the images that are in line with them and do not go away from them, in which it may be impossible to establish evidence in the legally required manner, such as the death or dementia of the witness or the obsolescence of the criminal case before him or other similar cases, which is necessitated by not being satisfied with the abstract justice of a witness or an accused of what he has previously given before the trial court without his justice being accompanied by what is decided by himself The order shall be severed in order of its effect on proving the innocence of the convicted person, which establishes a fair balance between the right of the convicted person and the interest of the community, which is prejudiced by prejudice other than for a compelling reason, which is one of the cases of public order that affects the interest of society, and which requires an end to a dispute in which the judiciary has finally decided, which is recorded in Article 455 of the Code of Criminal Procedure when it stipulates that it is not permissible to refer to the criminal case after the final judgment based on the emergence of new evidence or new circumstances or based on Changing the legal description of the crime, so that the judicial ruling became the title of a truth that is stronger than the truth itself, which is not correct to undermine it by a mere indecisive lawsuit, and it may not be subject to bargaining between individuals.

---

([3899]) Appeal No. 22551 of 59 S issued at the session of February 20, 1990 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 41 page No. 416 rule No. 66, Appeal No. 1868 of 34 S issued at the session of May 3, 1966 and published in the second part of the technical office book No. 17 page No. 555 rule No. 100.

([3900]) Appeal No. 22551 of 59 S issued at the session of February 20, 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 page No. 416 rule No. 66.

Saying otherwise is a waste of the time and prestige of the judiciary and brings contradiction to its provisions, as long as the matter remains suspended by the will of the convicts whenever they resolve the renewal of the dispute and re-submit it to the judiciary.

Whereas the foregoing, and the law has stipulated that the facts that appear after the judgment and serve as a reason for the petition must be unknown to the court and the accused during the trial.[3901]

In this case, it is intended that those facts or papers themselves indicate the innocence of the convict or the need to forfeit evidence of his guilt or criminal liability.[3902]

The Court of Cassation ruled that: [The report of the Chief Forensic Physician - as mentioned above - revealed the fact that the victim did not have a permanent disability, which was unknown to the court and the accused during the court and did not appear until after the final judgment in the case, and this fact was decisive in itself in undermining the evidence on which the judgment was relied in proving the existence of the felony of the permanent disability that the applicant condemned and imposed its punishment as the most serious crimes based on it, as well as the impact that the emergence of this fact may have on the assessment of the compensation to which the victim is entitled as a plaintiff of the civil right, this justifies the acceptance of the applicant and the judiciary to cancel the judgment issued in felony No...... For the year...... With regard to the applicant and the person responsible for civil rights and referring the case to the court that issued the judgment for adjudication].[3903]

---

([3901]) Appeal No. 13196 of 76 s issued at the hearing of 16 October 2011 and published in Technical Office Book No. 62 Page 285 Rule No. 47, Appeal No. 11767 of 64 s issued at the hearing of 12 October 1994 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 45 Page 864 Rule No. 134, Appeal No. 1522 of 45 s issued at the hearing of 28 March 1976 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 27 Page 353 Rule No. 75, Appeal No. 637 of 40 s issued at the hearing of 3 May 1970 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 21 Page 646 Rule No. 153, Appeal No. 1821 of 36 s issued at the hearing of 31 January 1967 and published in Part I of Technical Office Book No. 18 Page 142 Rule No. 27, Appeal No. 1868 of 34 s issued at the hearing of 3 May 1966 and published in Part II of Technical Office Book No. 17 Page 555 Rule No. 100.

([3902]) Appeal No. 1267 of 72 S issued at the 6th session of May 2003, Appeal No. 1117 of 84 S issued at the 7th session of March 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66, page No. 284, rule No. 38, Appeal No. 4082 of 82 S issued at the 12th session of January 2013 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 64, page No. 86, rule No. 11, Appeal No. 12973 of 66 S issued at the 22nd session of October 1996 and published in part The first part of Technical Office Letter No. 47 Page No. 1080 Rule No. 155, Appeal No. 14669 of 59 S issued at the session of November 12, 1995 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 46 Page No. 1173 Rule No. 176, Appeal No. 22552 of 59 S issued at the session of April 23, 1990 and published in the first part of Technical Office Letter No. 41 Page No. 653 Rule No. 111, Appeal No. 637 of 40 S issued at the session of May 3, 1970 and published in the second part of Technical Office Letter No. 21 Page No. 646 Rule No. 153.

It also ruled that the appearance of the evidence of the defendant's mental impairment that he had at the time of committing the crime after the final trial, entails the acceptance of his request for reconsideration, even if this impairment has already been mentioned casually by the defendant, as long as he is sick of mind. The law does not give weight to his actions or accountability for his actions.[3904]

Third: Who has the right to request reconsideration

In the first four cases mentioned above, the right to request reconsideration is for both the Attorney General and the convict or his legal representative if he is incompetent or missing, or for his relatives or spouse after his death.[3905]

This means that it is not permissible for the plaintiff of the civil right or the person responsible for it to request reconsideration. The appeal goes to the judgment issued in the criminal lawsuit, and they are opponents in the civil lawsuit.

The legislator allowed the convict to submit the application himself or through his legal representative if he is incapacitated or missing. In the event of death, this right is transferred to his relatives or spouse, contrary to the general rules governing the lapse of the criminal case. The right to appeal the judgment issued in the criminal case is not transferred to the heirs. However, the legislator allowed the relatives of the deceased convict to appeal if one of the four cases is available. The legislator did not require that the applicant be one of the heirs, but it is sufficient that he be a relative of the convict and did not require a certain degree of kinship.

In the fifth case, the right to request reconsideration shall be to the Attorney General alone, whether on his own initiative or at the request of the concerned parties.[3906]

The convicted person or his legal representative if he is incapacitated or missing, or one of his relatives or spouse after his death, and the legislator took into account that the fifth case of the request for reconsideration is that the new facts have a certain force of proof, so he made the matter within the competence of the Attorney General to ensure the seriousness of the request.

Fourth: Submitting the application

An application for reconsideration may be submitted at any time, and the legislator did not require its submission within a certain period, and the right to submit it shall not be forfeited by the lapse of the period or the execution of the judgment.

In the first four cases of the request for reconsideration, if the applicant is other than the Public Prosecution, he must submit the request to the Attorney General with a petition indicating the judgment to be reconsidered, the face on which it is based, and accompanying it with the supporting documents.[3907]

([3903]) Appeal No. 22552 of 59 S issued at the session of 23 April 1990 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 41 page No. 653 rule No. 111.
([3904]) Appeal No. 1522 of 45 S issued on March 28, 1976 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 27 page No. 353 rule No. 75.
([3905]) Article 442 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3906]) Article 443 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3907]) Article 442 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The Public Prosecutor shall submit the request, whether submitted by him or by others, with the investigations that he has decided to conduct to the Court of Cassation with a report indicating his opinion and the reasons on which it is based.[3908]

The application must be submitted to the court in the three months following its submission.[3909]

However, exceeding this deadline does not result in the inadmissibility of the application because it is an organizational deadline whose violation does not entail any procedural penalty.[3910]

The Attorney General has no discretion in these cases to submit the request to the Court of Cassation. He may not refuse this, but he has discretion in conducting the investigations he deems necessary to clarify the request if he deems it necessary, and he attaches the result of the investigations to the request and the documents.[3911]

In the fifth case, the request is subject to the discretion of the Attorney General. He is not obligated to submit the request to the Court of Cassation, but he may conduct the necessary investigations to ascertain the seriousness of the request. He may reject it if it is found that it is not serious or does not meet the conditions of the fifth case set by the legislator. If he is convinced of its seriousness and considers that it has a place, he shall submit it, with the investigations that he has deemed necessary, to a committee formed by one of the judges of the Court of Cassation and two of the judges of the Court of Appeal, each of whom shall be appointed by the general assembly of the court to which he belongs.

The request must indicate the incident or the paper on which it is based.[3912]

The committee shall decide on the application after reviewing the papers and completing the investigation it deems appropriate and shall order its referral to the Court of Cassation if it deems it acceptable.[3913]

The appeal shall not be accepted in any way against the decision issued by the Public Prosecutor, or the order issued by the aforementioned committee to accept or not accept the request.[3914]

According to the above, the Court of Cassation may contact the request for reconsideration if it is submitted on the basis of any of the five paragraphs of Article 441 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, subject to its submission by the Public Prosecutor to the Court of Cassation within the period specified in the aforementioned article in the first four cases, or if it is submitted to the

---

([3908]) Article 442 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3909]) Article 442 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3910]) Appeal No. 23297 of 66 S issued at the session of January 9, 1997 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 59 rule No. 8.
([3911]) Appeal No. 45977 for the year 74 S issued at the session of November 21, 2004 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 758, rule No. 115.
([3912]) Article 443 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 45977 of 74 S issued at the session of 21 November 2004 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 55, page No. 758, rule No. 115, Appeal No. 18903 of 63 S issued at the session of 20 September 1995 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 46, page No. 930, rule No. 143, Appeal No. 168 of 32 S issued at the session of 20 February 1962 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 13, page No. 174, rule No. 48.
([3913]) Article 443 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3914]) Article No. 443 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Appeal No. 1377 of 22 S issued at the session of January 13, 1953 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 4, page No. 396, rule No. 153.

committee stipulated in Article 443 of the same law, and the committee accepts it and refers it to the court in the fifth case.[3915]

Fifth: Deposit of Guarantee

The Public Prosecutor shall not accept the request for reconsideration from the accused or his substitute in the four aforementioned cases unless the applicant deposits with the court treasury an amount of five pounds as bail, allocated to meet the fine imposed in the event that the request for reconsideration is not accepted, unless he has been exempted from his deposit by a decision of the Judicial Assistance Committee of the Court of Cassation.[3916]

If the applicant does not pay the bail or does not obtain a decision from the Legal Aid Committee to exempt him from it, the non-acceptance of his application shall be ruled.[3917]

Sixth: Request to Suspend the Execution of the Contested Judgment

The request for reconsideration shall not result in the suspension of the execution of the sentence unless it is issued by the death penalty.[3918]

Seventh: Notifying the litigants of the date of the session specified for considering the request

The Public Prosecution shall announce the litigants for the session that is determined to consider the application before the Court of Cassation at least three full days before it is held.[3919]

Eighth: Deciding on the request for reconsideration

The Court of Cassation shall decide on the application after hearing the statements of the Public Prosecution and the litigants, and after conducting what it deems necessary from the investigation itself or by[3920] its delegate.

If the convict dies and the request is not submitted by a relative or spouse, the court shall consider the lawsuit against the person it appoints to defend his memory, and he shall as far as possible be a relative.

In this case, it shall be ruled, if necessary, to erase what affects this memory.[3921]

If the Court of Cassation decides to accept the request, it shall cancel the judgment and acquit the accused if the innocence is apparent. Otherwise, the lawsuit shall be referred to the court that issued the judgment formed by other judges to decide on its subject matter unless it decides to do so itself.[3922]

([3915]) Appeal No. 31639 of 3Q issued at the session of 21 April 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66, page No. 408, rule No. 55, Appeal No. 18903 of 63Q issued at the session of 20 September 1995 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 46, page No. 930, rule No. 143.

([3916]) Article 444 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3917]) Appeal No. 4 of 76 s issued at the session of March 18, 2007 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 58, page No. 253, rule No. 51, Appeal No. 1821 of 36 s issued at the session of January 31, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 18, page No. 142, rule No. 27.

([3918]) Article 448 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3919]) Article 445 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3920]) Article 446 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3921]) Article 447 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3922]) Article 446 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

If the Court of Cassation considers that verifying the innocence of the student requires an objective investigation, it may return the case to the court that issued the judgment formed by other judges to decide on its subject matter in the light of new evidence that has emerged.[3923]

However, if it is not possible to retry, as in the case of the death or dementia of the convict or the lapse of the criminal lawsuit by the lapse of the period, the Court of Cassation shall consider the subject matter of the lawsuit and shall not cancel from the judgment except what appears to it to be its error.[3924]

If the Court of Cassation finds, after accepting the request for reconsideration, that the innocence is neither apparent nor probable through the face of the request on which it is based, it shall reject the request. This rejection shall not prevent the committee formed in accordance with Article 443 of the Criminal Procedure Law from accepting the request submitted by the Attorney General.[3925]

If the request for reconsideration is rejected, it may not be renewed based on the same facts on which it was based.[3926]

The applicant for reconsideration - if he is submitted by a person other than the Attorney General - in the first four cases of the application for reconsideration shall be sentenced to a fine not exceeding five pounds if his application is not accepted.[3927]

Every judgment of acquittal issued on the basis of reconsideration, at the expense of the government, must be published in the Official Gazette at the request of the Public Prosecution and in two newspapers appointed by the concerned party.[3928]

The cancellation of the contested judgment results in the forfeiture of the judgment for damages, and the obligation to return what has been implemented without prejudice to the rules of forfeiture of the right by the lapse of the period.[3929]

It is permitted to contest the judgments issued in the subject matter of the lawsuit based on review by a court other than the Court of Cassation in all the ways prescribed in the law.

The accused may not be sentenced to more severe punishment than the penalty previously imposed on him.[3930]

25.2 Within the Framework of International Covenants

Every accused person convicted of committing a criminal act has the right to resort to a higher court to review the conviction and punishment imposed on him.

25-2-1 Right to Appeal

Every accused person convicted of committing a criminal act has the right to resort to a higher court to review the conviction issued against him and the penalty imposed on him)[3931](.

([3923]) Appeal No. 10237 of 78 s issued at the session of June 2, 2009 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 60 page No. 277 rule No. 37, Appeal No. 23297 of 66 s issued at the session of January 9, 1997 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 59 rule No. 8.
([3924]) Article 446 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3925]) Appeal No. 13196 of 76 S issued at the hearing of 16 October 2011 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 62 page No. 285 rule No. 47.
([3926]) Article No. 452 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Appeal No. 4054 of 31 S issued at the session of January 16, 1962 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 13 page No. 63 rule No. 16.
([3927]) Article 449 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3928]) Article 450 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3929]) Article 451 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([3930]) Article 453 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Article 2 of the Seventh Protocol to the European Convention allows a narrower right of appeal.[3932]

The right to appeal is an essential component of a fair trial and aims to ensure that the conviction resulting from unfair errors, whether legal or procedural, or violations of the rights of the accused, does not become final. The UN Human Rights Committee has called on states that resort to military courts or special criminal courts to ensure that these courts respect fair trial guarantees, including the right to appeal.[3933]

The African Commission has found that violations of the African Charter have occurred in cases brought against Mauritania, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Sudan, when persons, including civilians, have been convicted by special or military courts, whose judgments have no appeal.[3934]

The Committee against Torture has raised concerns about a Chinese law under which those accused of revealing state secrets have no right to appeal their sentence before an independent[3935] court.

The right to review of conviction and sentence by a higher tribunal applies, by most standards, irrespective of the seriousness or characterization of the offence in national law.

The guarantees guaranteed by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights are not limited to serious crimes.[3936]

The Human Rights Committee has expressed concerns that persons convicted of minor criminal offences (misdemeanors) in Iceland can appeal to a higher court only if the Supreme Court allows this in exceptional circumstances.[3937]

Under most standards, persons convicted by any court, including customary (traditional) courts, of committing acts that are considered "criminal" crimes under international human rights law must be allowed to exercise their right to appeal their sentences.[3938]

However, under article 2 of the Seventh Protocol to the European Convention, the right of appeal may be limited to what is permitted by law if the criminal act is a "minor offence", provided that the person was initially tried before the highest court of the State, or if the person was convicted following an appeal against his acquittal. In determining whether a criminal act is

---

([3931]) Article 14 (5) of the International Covenant, Article 40 (2) (b) (v) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 18 (5) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 8(2) (h) of the American Convention, Article 16 (7) of the Arab Charter, Article 2(1) of the Seventh Protocol to the European Convention, Section N(10) (a) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, Article 81 (2) of the Rome Statute, Article 24 of the Statute of the Rwanda Tribunal, and Article 25 of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal; see Article 7(1) (a) of the African Charter.

([3932]) Inter-American Court: Pareto Leyva v. Venezuela, 88 § (2009); Herrera-Ulloa v. Costa Rica, §158 and§163 (2004).

([3933]) Resolution 2005/30 of the Commission on Human Rights, §8.

([3934]) African Commission: Malawi African Society et al. v. Mauritania (91/54 and other resolutions), Annual Report 13 §93 - § 94(2000), Center for Freedom of Expression v. Nigeria (206) / 97) Annual Report 13 12 § (1999), pen International, Constitutional Rights Project, International Rights Organization on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr., Civil Liberties Organization v. Nigeria (137) / 94, 139/94, 154/96 and 161/97), Annual Report 12 §91 - § 93(1998), Conscience Forum v. Sierra Leone (223) / 98), Annual Report 14 §15 - §17(2000), Ghazi Suleiman Legal Office v. Sudan (222) / 98 and 229/99) Annual Report 16 53 § (2003).

([3935]) Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture: China, UN Doc . 16 §(2008) CAT/C/CHN/CO/4.

([3936]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment §45 ,32, Tyrone v. Spain, 2/ §7 (2004) UN Doc. CCPR/C/82/D/1073/2002, Salgar de Montego v. Colombia (64) / 1979), (4/ §14 (1982).

Concluding [3937]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Iceland, UN Doc. §14 (2005) CCPR/CO/83/ISL.

[3938]See Human Rights Committee, General Comment §24 ,32, Concluding Observations, Rwanda, §17 (2009) UN Doc. CCPR/C/RWA/CO/3..

a "minor crime", the question of whether the maximum penalty for the crime can amount to deprivation of liberty remains one of the most important measures.[3939]

25-2-2 Reconsideration before a higher court

Convictions and sentences must be reviewed by a higher court. This right ensures that the judiciary examines the case in two stages, at a minimum.

The Human Rights Committee has made it clear that a State has the right of discretion in deciding which Supreme Court will review a case, and how. However, the State does not have the right to exercise diligence in deciding whether national law may provide for such a review.[3940]

In some countries, members of parliament or the government are tried by the highest courts of the land. But the right to appeal is violated, except according to Protocol VII of the European Convention, when a person is convicted by the highest court and there is no higher court to which he can appeal.[3941]

Regulations and laws requiring the convicted person to seek the leave of the higher court to appeal may remain consistent with international standards. The elements of this include the existence of a benchmarking procedure to deal with requests for permission submitted to a higher court, and available directly to the convicted person without depending on the approval of the authorities.[3942]

While the right to appeal does not require, under international law, that States legislate for the existence of more than one instance of appeal, if national legislation provides for more, the convicted person should have an effective opportunity to appeal at every stage.[3943]

25-2-3 Can the right to appeal be exercised in practice?

The duty of the State to guarantee the right to appeal requires not only the enactment of legislation allowing the review of the judgment by a higher court, but also the adoption of measures to ensure that this right can be sought and exercised in practice.[3944]

This requires, inter alia, a reasonable time to file an appeal, an opportunity to be informed of the facts of the trial hearings, the merits of the judgments (issued at first instance and any subsequent appeals), and the judgments issued from the appeal stage, within a reasonable period of time.

The requirement to limit the periods allocated to the appeal application would hinder the effective exercise of the right to appeal.[3945]

While providing the convicted person with the opportunity to be informed of the merits of the judgment, and the record of the proceedings of the trial sessions, remains of great importance in ([3939]) European Court: Zeisevs v. Latvia (65022) / 01), (2007) 55- § §53, Galstyan v. Armenia (26986) / 03), 124 § (2007), Goribka v. Ukraine (61406) / 00), §53- §55 (2005).

---

[3940]See Human Rights Committee, General Comment 32 §45.

([3941]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment §45 ,32; see Human Rights Committee: Gelazauskas v. Lithuania, 1998 / - 1/ §7 (2003) UN Doc. CCPR/C/77/D/836 6/7, Tyrone v. Spain, 2002/4/ §7 (2004) UN Doc. CCPR/C/82/D/1073; Barreto Leyva v. Venezuela, Inter-American Court § 588- § 591(2009).

([3942]) Human Rights Committee: Lumley v. Jamaica, UN Doc 3/ §7 (1999) CCPR/C/65/D/662/1995, Minin v. The Netherlands, UN Doc 3/ §8 (2010) CCPR/C/99/D/1797/2008; European Court: Galstian v. Armenia (26986/ 03), §125- § 127(2007), Goribka v. Ukraine (61406/ 00), §57- §62 (2005).

([3943]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment 32 §45, Henry v. Jamaica, . 4/ §8 (1991) UN Doc. CCPR/C/43/D/230/1987.

([3944]) Herrera-Ulloa v. Costa Rica, Inter-American Court §164 (2004).

[3945]See Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Barbados, UN Doc. §7 (2007) CCPR/C/BRB/CO/3.

order to be able to prepare his appeal and present it to the appellate body. Moreover, if the law allows an appeal to more than one court, the defense must, within a reasonable period of time, be able to see the merits of the judgments for each stage of the appeal.[3946]

Undue delay in allowing the appeal to proceed, or in issuing the appeal decision, would constitute a violation of the right to appeal.[3947]

The consequences of delays in the proceedings are not limited to the rights of the accused, but also affect the rights of the victims, including their right to an effective remedy and reparation. In a domestic violence case in which a man was convicted of killing his wife's mother, the European Court criticized the delay in the appeal procedures that led to the non-decision of the appeal after more than six months, despite the man's confession of his guilt.[3948]

25-2-4 Correct Review

Review before a higher court must be a proper review of the issues involved in the case.

The Supreme Court must be competent to review, whether in the sufficiency of evidence or in the legal aspects.[3949]

The Supreme Court should review the allegations raised against the convicted person in detail, examine the evidence presented at the trial and relied upon in the appeal, and rule on the sufficiency of the evidence on which the conviction was based.[3950]

Reviews conducted by some courts of cassation and conclusion, and limited to legal matters, may not be sufficient to fulfill this guarantee.[3951]

The Human Rights Committee concluded that limiting judicial review to legal aspects did not meet the requirements of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights for an adequate assessment of evidence and the conduct of[3952] trial proceedings.

Where the higher court limited its review to the question of whether the trial judge's evaluation of the evidence met the legal requirements, without reconsidering the sufficiency of this evidence (as he declared that he was not entitled to review the evidence), the Human Rights Committee concluded that the review did not meet the requirements of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR).[3953]

The African Commission found that a violation occurred when the Court of Appeal upheld the judgment of the judge of the Court of First Instance following the review of the case without considering the legal aspects and the facts, the Commission confirmed that the court that ([3946]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment 32 §49, Minin v. The Netherlands, 2/ §8 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/99/D/1797/2008, Lumley v. Jamaica, 5/ §7 (1999) UN Doc. CCPR/C/65/D/662/1995, Henry v. Jamaica, 4/ §8 (1991) UN Doc. CCPR/C/43/D/230/1987, Little v. Jamaica, 5/ §8 (1991) UN Doc. CCPR/C/43/D/283/1988; Hadji Anastasio v. Greece (12945) / 87), European Court §29- § 37(1992).

---

([3947]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment §49 ,32, Thomas v. Jamaica, 5/ §9 (1999) UN Doc. CCPR/C/65/D/662/1995, Mwamba v. Zambia, . 6/ §6 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/98/D/1520/2006.

([3948]) Opuz v. Turkey (33401) / 02), European Court (2009) §150- §151..

Section N (10[3949]) (a)(1) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §48.

([3950]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §48.

([3951]) Herrera-Ulloa v. Costa Rica, Inter-American Court (2004) §165- §167.

([3952]) Commission on Human Rights: Domukovsky et al. v. Georgia, UN Doc. CCPR/C/62/D/623/1995, 1995 / CCPR/C/62/D/624, 1995 / CCPR/C/62/D/626, 1995/1998 (CCPR/C/62/D/627) 11/ §18; see Human Rights Committee: Saidov v. Tajikistan / CCPR/5/ §6 (2004) C/81/D/964/2001, Gómez Vázquez v. Spain, UN Doc 1/ §11 (2000) CCPR/C/69/D/701/1996; see also Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism: Spain, UN Doc. A/HRC/10/3/Add. 2 §16- §17 (2008), 30 and 57; Gelazauskas v. Lithuania, Human Rights Commission, 1998/6/7-1/ §7 (2003) UN Doc. CCPR/C/77/D/836...

([3953]) Carpintero Ocalis v. Spain, Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc . 3/11-2/ §11 (2009) CCPR/C/96/D/1364/2005.

considered the appeal had to review objectively and impartially the legal aspects and facts presented to it, both.[3954]

The American Commission said that the courts of appeal, the guardian of justice, must examine not only the grounds on which the appeal is based, but also whether the procedures required by law have been taken into account at all stages of the proceedings by the judicial bodies.[3955]

The Human Rights Committee found a violation when the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal filed by an individual against his conviction without giving reasons or issuing a written version of the verdict.[3956]

25-2-5 Guarantees of a fair trial during appeals

The stages of appeal must witness the full observance of all fair trial rights; they are a component of criminal proceedings.[3957]

These include the right to adequate time and facilities for the preparation of an appeal petition, the right to counsel, the right to equality of arms between the defense and the prosecution (including notification of each other's submissions), the right to a hearing by a competent, independent, impartial and duly constituted court, and the right to a hearing and reasoning within a reasonable time.[3958]

The court conducting the review must be competent, independent, impartial and established by law.[3959]

As the principles of fair trial in Africa make clear, the fact that the Appellate Body includes a judge who participated in the consideration of the case in the lower court, or in the decision made by it, compromises its impartiality.[3960]

The right to appeal shall be violated if the Supreme Review Body is an executive body and not a court formed by law.[3961]

The general rule is that appeal proceedings are held openly and in public, and are attended by the parties to the dispute. This is an additional safeguard of justice in the interest of the accused, and is of great importance for maintaining public confidence in the justice system. However, holding the appeal hearing behind closed doors or in the absence of the accused does not always incriminate the proceedings or reduce their integrity as a whole.[3962]

According to the European Court, the lack of publicity of the appeal hearing does not necessarily constitute a violation, if, for example, the first trial hearings were held in public.[3963]

[3954](Malawi African Society et al. v. Mauritania (54) / 91, 61/91, 98/93, 167/97 to 196/97 and 210/98), African Commission, Annual Report 13 §94 (2000).

([3955]) Case 9850 (Argentina), American Commission (1990) at 74-76, s. 3 §18.

George [3956]Winston Reed v. Jamaica, Human Rights Commission, UN Doc . 3/ §14 (1994) 1989/CCPR/C/51/D/355.

([3957]) Belzec v. Poland (23103/ 93), ECt (i) §37 (1998).

([3958]) See General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §13 and§49; European Court: Hadji Anastasio v. Greece (12945) / 87), European Court §31- §37 (1992), Bilziuk v. Poland (23103) / 93), European Court §37 (1998) (3), Sakhnovsky v. Russia (21272) / 03 Grand Chamber §94- §109 (2010).

([3959]) Inter-European Court: Castello Petruzzi et al. v. Peru §161 (1999) ,(1999/52), Herrera-Ulloa v. Costa Rica, Inter-American Court §69- § 175(2004); Report on Terrorism of the Inter-American Commission, (2002) § 3/d §239.

Section A (5[3960]) (d) (iv) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

([3961]) African Commission: Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224) / 98) African Commission, Annual Report 14, 46 § (2000); Civil Rights Organization v. Nigeria (151) / 96) African Commission, Annual Report 13, 22 § (1999).

([3962]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §28; Thiers et al. v. San Marino (24954/ 94, 24971/ 94, 24972/ 94), European Court §92- §95 (2000).

([3963]) Putin v. Norway (16206) / 90), European Court §39 (1996)..

When considering appeals in the absence of the accused, the court examined the role of the prosecution, the cases that were considered, the effects on the accused's presentation of his case and on the protection of the interests of the defense, and the importance of the matters being decided.[3964]

Where the appeal considers questions of both law and fact, it usually requires that the hearing be public and the accused be present, especially if the appeal is in the process of making a decision of guilt or innocence.[3965]

The right to have counsel assigned to represent the accused on appeal may be subject to the same conditions that govern this right in the Trial Chamber. It must be considered in the interests of justice.

Factors relevant to the determination of whether the interests of justice require the assignment of counsel at the appeal stage include the maximum possible penalty and the complexity of the case, proceedings or legal matters.

The Principles of Legal Aid state that anyone charged with a criminal offence punishable by imprisonment or the death penalty is entitled to legal aid at all stages of criminal prosecution, including the stages of appeal. Moreover, a lawyer should be appointed when the interest of justice so requires, regardless of financial means.[3966]

The European Court ruled that the failure to appoint a lawyer at the final appeal stage of a sentence imposed on an accused to five years' imprisonment constituted a violation of the rights of the accused, since the accused was unable to approach the court with the required competence, in relation to legal matters, without the assistance of a lawyer.[3967]

The Human Rights Committee, in a case in which the sentenced person was not informed of the date of the appeal hearing or assigned a lawyer to represent them at the appeal stage, and did not attend the hearing despite their request to attend the appeal, considered that the rights of the appellant had been violated.[3968]

If the lawyer intends to waive the appeal or not to present his arguments before the Court of Appeal, the accused should be informed of this and given the opportunity to seek another lawyer to represent them.[3969]

The European Court held that the right of the accused to appeal was violated as the Court of Cassation decided to reject his appeal on the legal deficiencies of his trial, based on his escape. The said court also concluded that the right to legal aid had been violated because the Court of Appeal refused to allow the lawyer of the defendant of his choice to represent him before it when he decided not to appear himself before the court.[3970] ([3967]) Maxwell v. United Kingdom (18949) / 91), European Court §40- §41 (1994); see Bonner v. United Kingdom (18711) / 91), (1994) 44- § §43, Bakeli v. Germany (8398) / 78), §30- §41 (1983).

([3964]) European Court: Golubev v. Russia (26260) / 02), Decision (Inadmissibility) (2006) pp. 6-8, Belsiuk v. Poland (23103/ 93), European Court (. (ii) §37 (1998.

([3965]) European Court: Ekbatani v. Sweden (10563/ 83), 32 § (1988), Thiers et al. v. San Marino (24954/ 94, 24971 / 94, 24972/ 94), European Court §92- §102 (2000), Hamatov v. Azerbaijan, (9852/ 03, 13413 / 04), §140- §152 (2007).

([3966]) Principle 3 and see Guidelines 5 and 6 of the Principles of Legal Aid.

Lamly [3968]v. Jamaica, Human Rights Commission, / UN Doc. CCPR . 4/ §7 (1999) C/65/D/662/1995.

Sooklal [3969]v. Trinidad and Tobago, Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc . 10/ §4 (2001) CCPR/C/73/D/928/2000.

([3970]) Poitrimole v. France (14032) / 88), European Court (1993) §34- §39.

The right of access to assigned counsel, particularly in cases carrying the death penalty, extends to all stages of appeal. It also applies to requests for review based on legal arguments, although these procedures are not considered part of the appeal process.[3971]

25-2-6 Retrial based on discovery of new facts

Many countries, and international criminal tribunals, provide the opportunity to reopen criminal case files following a final verdict, if new facts are discovered that warrant reconsideration. This is not part of the appeal process.

In general, either the accused or the prosecution can request the reopening of the case due to the discovery of previously unknown reasons despite the due diligence of the summoning party, which could have been decisive in the course of the case.[3972]

Among additional evidence, the Appeals Chambers of the Rwanda and Yugoslavia Criminal Tribunals have acknowledged an incident that was examined during the trial and new information that was not considered in the context of the trial (whether or not it existed previously

The courts explained that what is decisive in this regard is whether the information is new, and whether it constitutes a decisive factor in the decision reached in the case.[3973]

The purpose of this procedure is to preserve the interest of justice and avoid aggravating the failure of justice.[3974]

It should provide legal assistance to persons seeking to be retried on the basis of such facts.[3975]

25-2-7 Reopening case files based on data reached by international human rights bodies

In order to ensure effective redress and reparation for violations of fair trial rights, as required by international standards, procedures should be established at the national level to ensure that cases can be reopened where a court or human rights body concludes that the rights of the accused have been violated.[3976]

The case should be reopened where the sentence handed down by the national court is found to have violated international human rights, such as the right to freedom of expression or to freedom of religion. The case should also be reopened when there is a risk that the fairness of the proceedings has been undermined by violations of the rights of the accused. Such cases include violations of the right to be tried by an independent and impartial tribunal; the right to adequate time and facilities for the preparation of the defense; and the right to legal assistance.

La [3971]Fendi v. Trinidad and Tobago, Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc 8/ §5 (1997) CCPR/C/61/D/554/1993; see Currie v. Jamaica, Commission on Human Rights, 1989/4/ §13 (1994) UN Doc. CCPR/C/50/D/377..

([3972]) Article 84/1 of the Rome Statute, Article 25 of the Statute of the Rwanda Tribunal, and Article 26 of the Statute of the Yugoslavia Tribunal.

Barayagwiza [3973]v. Prosecutor (ICTR-97-19-AR72), ICTR Appeals Chamber, Decision on Prosecutor's Application for Review or Reconsideration (31) March 2000) §41- §42; Prosecutor v. Dasko Tadić, (IT-94-1-R), ICTY Appeals Chamber, Decision on Application for Review (30) July 2002) §19- §20.

([3974]) Article 4(2) of the Seventh Protocol to the European Convention.

Guideline [3975]55 §11 (b) of the Principles of Legal Aid.

([3976]) Article 2(3) of the International Covenant, article 25 of the American Convention, article 7 of the African Charter, article 23 of the Arab Charter, and article 13 of the European Convention; see the basic principles of reparation, in particular principle 19.

It also includes cases where statements were extracted from the accused as a result of torture or other ill-treatment, and later adopted into evidence by the court.[3977]

Chapter Twenty-Six: Enforcement of Judgments

26.1 Under Egyptian Law

26.1.1 Executory Provisions

Sentences to a custodial sentence

It is not permitted to impose the penalties prescribed by law for any crime except by virtue of a judgment issued by a competent court.[3978]

The judgments issued by the criminal courts shall not be executed except when they have become final unless the law stipulates otherwise.[3979]

The intention of the judgment being final is not to be subject to objection or appeal, even if it is subject to cassation appeal.[3980]

The execution of the judgments issued in the criminal case at the request of the Public Prosecution shall be in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Law

As for the judgments issued in the civil lawsuit, their implementation shall be at the request of the civil rights plaintiff in accordance with what is stipulated in the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law.[3981]

This means that the execution of the judgments issued in the criminal case is the responsibility of the Public Prosecution alone. If it decides to suspend its execution and orders it, there is no censorship[3982] or punishment.

Accordingly, it is decided that the judicial officer may arrest the person against whom an enforceable sentence of a custodial sentence has been issued, in preparation for presenting him to the Public Prosecution as the authority responsible for the implementation of criminal judgments per the provisions of Articles 461 and 462 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.[3983]

Human [3977]Rights Committee, Polay Campos v. Peru, UN Doc §10 (1998) CCPR/C/61/D/577/1994, Semey v. Spain, UN Doc 3/ §9 (2003) CCPR/C/78/D/986/2001; Castello Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-American Court § 217- §221(1999) and 226 (13); Joseph Thomas v. Jamaica (12). 183 American Commission, Report 127/01 153 § (2001) (1); European Court: Okonch and Gonzalez v. Turkey (42775) / 98), 32 § (2003), Ginchil v. Turkey (53431) / 99), 27 § (2003), Somogyi v. Italy §86 (2004) ,(01/67972), Stoichkov v. Bulgaria (9808) / 02), (2005) §81; Recommendation No. 2 (R)2000 of the Council of Europe; International Court of Justice: LaGran Case (Germany v. United States of America), 125 § (2001), Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. United States of America), §131, § 138, § 140 and§ 143 (2004).

([3978]) Article 459 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3979]) Article 460 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

([3980]) Appeal No. 14203 of 74 S issued at the session of 19 December 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 5, Appeal No. 7370 of 79 S issued at the session of 2 October 2011 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 62 page No. 271 rule No. 44.

([3981]) Article 461 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3982]) Appeal No. 1748 of 36 S issued at the session of January 31, 1967 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 18, page No. 133, rule No. 25.

([3983]) Appeal No. 9405 of 80 S issued at the session of July 27, 2011.unpublished), Appeal No. 1078 of 80 S issued at the session of September 28, 2010.unpublished), Appeal No. 1985 of 78 S issued at the session of June 2, 2009.unpublished).

The Public Prosecution shall take the initiative to implement the enforceable judgments issued in the criminal case. It may, when necessary, use military force directly.[3984]

The law did not prescribe the implementation of the Public Prosecution of the provisions in a special form such as the issuance of a written order or the writing of a request to arrest the convict or the like.[3985]

As we have seen above, the legislator stipulated that the execution of the criminal judgment must be final and not subject to appeal by ordinary means of appeal, but it excluded the judgments issued for fine and expenses, so that these judgments are enforceable immediately, even with their appeal.

The legislator also exempted from the requirement that the executed judgment be final, the judgments issued for imprisonment in theft, or the judgments issued against an accused who is returning or has no fixed place of residence in Egypt, as well as in other cases if the judgment is issued for imprisonment, unless the accused provides a guarantee that if he does not appeal the judgment, he does not flee from its implementation upon the expiry of the appeal dates, and that if he appeals, he attends the session and does not flee from the implementation of the judgment issued. Every judgment issued for the punishment of imprisonment in these cases specifies the amount for which the bail must be submitted.

If the accused is remanded in custody, the court may order the provisional execution of the sentence.

The court may order a temporary stay of execution in the judgments issued for compensation to the civil rights plaintiff, even with an appeal.[3986]

The judgment shall be enforceable - even if it is subject to appeal - as long as it is issued by imprisonment in theft.[3987]

Accordingly, the judgments that must be implemented, even with the occurrence of their appeal, are the judgments in the presence and judgments issued in the opposition, as well as the judgments in absentia in which the date of the opposition has passed or the opposition has been ruled as if it had not been. As for the judgment that is subject to objection or that has been filed against an objection that has not yet been adjudicated, it is not enforceable. In the sense of the violation, this means that the judgment in absentia may not be executed if the date of the opposition has not started or has not yet expired, and it may not be implemented as well if it has been appealed against the opposition, and it remains suspended until the opposition is adjudicated.[3988]

If the punishment of imprisonment is carried out, all ancillary punishments imposed shall also be carried out, without the need to draw the attention of the defense. The ancillary punishments shall be applied with the original punishment when its provision is meted out.[3989]

([3984]) Article 462 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3985]) Appeal No. 897 of 27 S issued at the session of November 11, 1957 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 8 page No. 884 rule No. 240.

([3986]) Article 463 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3987]) Appeal No. 4409 of 83 S issued on November 6, 2013.unpublished).

([3988]) Appeal No. 14203 of 74 S issued at the session of 19 December 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 5, Appeal No. 2491 of 79 S issued at the session of 28 March 2011.unpublished), Appeal No. 7370 of 79 S issued at the session of 2 October 2011 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 62 page No. 271 rule No. 44.

([3989]) Article No. 464 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Appeal No. 2612 of 50 S issued at the session of April 6, 1981 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 32, page No. 334, rule No. 59.

Judgement of acquittal

The remanded accused shall be released immediately if the judgment is issued for acquittal, or if another penalty does not require imprisonment to be carried out, or if he orders a stay of execution of the sentence in the judgment, or if the accused has served the period of the sentenced sentence in remand detention.[3990]

Stay of Execution

The principle in criminal judgments is that they must be implemented.[3991]

However, the legislator suspended the execution of the judgments during the date set for the appeal and during the hearing of the appeal filed in that period.[3992]

Whereas an appeal by way of cassation does not entail a stay of execution unless the judgment is issued with the death penalty.[3993]

According to the above, the lapse of the appeal is a mandatory penalty imposed on the fugitive appellant if he does not apply for its implementation before the day of the hearing that was set for the consideration of the appeal, considering that the appeal by way of cassation only responds to a final judgment, and that the report thereon does not entail, in accordance with Article 469 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the suspension of the execution of the sentence of restriction of liberty imposed by the applicable sentences - which applies a fortiori to the appeal of the death sentence as it is a more severe punishment aimed at ending the life of the convicted person and depriving him of his liberty Certainly before execution - which is the same meaning learned from what was stated by the legislator in Article 471 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to instruct the Public Prosecution when the death sentence became final to place the convict in prison until the execution of the death sentence, it does not change that the legislator excluded the cases in which the death sentence was imposed, so Article 469 imposed a moratorium on the execution of the death penalty by cassation appeal, as this means that the legislator intended to postpone the execution of the death itself until the cassation order is settled in the appeal of the convict or the presentation of the Public Prosecution and the completion of its procedures, which requires that The person sentenced to death is under execution, whether he was imprisoned before the sentence or arrested after it, as the consideration of his appeal requires that he be under execution in one of the prisons prepared for that and to say otherwise for a conversation that walks away from him in the street. The legislator did not mean in any way to differ between those sentenced to death and others sentenced to a custodial sentence, so they may appeal in cassation - while they are at large - without the accused putting himself under execution and decides to forfeit the appeal of those sentenced to custodial penalties if they do not apply for execution.[3994]

([3990]) Article 465 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3991]) Appeal No. 629 of 29 S issued at the session of May 18, 1959 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 10 page No. 540 rule No. 119.

([3992]) Article 466 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3993]) Article 469 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3994]) Appeal No. 8528 of 88 S issued at the session of May 12, 2019.unpublished), Appeal No. 20562 of 83 S issued at the session of May 25, 2014 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 65, page No. 469, rule No. 54, Appeal No. 3027 of 80 S issued at the session of October 4, 2011 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 62, page No. 283, rule No. 46, Appeal No. 2152 of 80 S issued at the session of March 1, 2011.unpublished), Appeal No. 25172 of 66 S Issued at the hearing of 21 September 2006.unpublished), Appeal No. 17358 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 18 May 2006.unpublished), Appeal No. 36102 of 75 S issued at the hearing of 12 March 2006.unpublished), Appeal No. 6099 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 2 March 2006.unpublished), Appeal No. 12323 of 69 S issued at the hearing of 22 September 2005.unpublished), Appeal No. 12533 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 19 May 2005.unpublished), Appeal No. 12533 of 66 S issued at the hearing of 19 May 2005.unpublished), No. 31624 of 69 S issued at the hearing of March 17, 2005.unpublished), Appeal No. 3146 of 66 S issued at the hearing of March 3, 2005.unpublished), Appeal No. 958 of 66 S issued at the hearing of February 17, 2005.unpublished),

The law does not justify delaying the implementation of the final judgments to any extent other than on the pretext that the convicts find a way to appeal against the nullity, which makes it imperative to say that the street undoubtedly intended to make the methods of appeal granted to the accused mentioned in the law exclusively a limit to which the judgments must stop in order to ensure the proper functioning of justice and stability of the final conditions that the word of the judiciary ended.[3995]

Execution of judgments in absentia

The default judgment may be executed if the convicted person does not object to it within the time limit prescribed for the objection, which is within the ten days following his notification of the default judgment contrary to the time limit of the legal period, or from the day he learns that the notification has taken place if the announcement of the judgment has not been made to his person.

The court may, when ruling on the guarantees to the civil rights plaintiff, order temporary enforcement with the provision of a bail, even if the objection or appeal occurs in respect of all or part of the judgment amount, and it may exempt the convict from bail.[3996]

If the time limit for the objection is still valid or if the convicted person has objected to this judgment and his objection has not yet been decided, then this judgment - according to the concept of the violation - is not enforceable. However, the court may, at the request of the Public Prosecution, order the arrest and detention of the convicted person in absentia, even if the time limit for the objection is still open or with the opposition and not being decided if the absentia judgment was issued for a period of imprisonment of one month or more and the accused did not have a place of residence in Egypt or if a provisional detention order has been issued.[3997]

In the sense of the violation, this means that the default judgment may not be implemented if the deadline for the opposition has not yet begun or expired, and that it may not be implemented if it is challenged by the opposition, and it remains suspended until the opposition is adjudicated. The street has limited the implementation of the default judgment to the penalty in the event that the deadline for appealing it expires by the opposition without appealing it.[3998]

Appeal No. 24161 of 65 S issued at the hearing of February 3, 2005.unpublished), Appeal No. 5402 of 65 S issued at the hearing of April 20, 2004 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 55, page No. 427, rule No. 56, Appeal No. 19805 of 65 S issued at the hearing of May 17, 2004.unpublished), Appeal No. 17214 of 65 S issued at the hearing of April 15, 2004.unpublished), Appeal No. 21836 of 65 S issued at the hearing of March 15, 2004.unpublished), Appeal No. 40508 of 72 S issued at the hearing of January 1, 2004.unpublished), Appeal No. 9374 of 65 S issued at the hearing of November 6, 2003.unpublished), Appeal No. 20680 of 65 S issued at the hearing of November 5, 2003.unpublished) 2003.unpublished), Appeal No. 15820 of 63 S issued at the hearing of October 17, 2002.unpublished), Appeal No. 13640 of 63 S issued at the hearing of October 3, 2002.unpublished), Appeal No. 20398 of 65 S issued at the hearing of October 3, 2002.unpublished), Appeal No. 27940 of 64 S issued at the hearing of March 21, 2002.unpublished), Appeal No. 13648 of 64 S issued at the hearing of October 15, 2000, published in Technical Office Letter No. 51, page No. 628, rule No. 123, Appeal No. 12471 of 60 S issued in the session of October 18, 1998, published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 49, page No. 1103, rule No. 149, Appeal No. 3280 of 57 S issued in the session of December 25, 1988, published in Part II of Technical Office Letter No. 39, page No. 1364, rule No. 206, Appeal No. 2691 of 54 S issued in the session of November 12, 1985, published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 36, page No. 1005, rule No. 183, Appeal No. 6 of 45 s issued at the session of March 24, 1975 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 26 page No. 255 rule No. 59, Appeal No. 2059 of 37 s issued at the session of March 26, 1968 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 19 page No. 377 rule No. 72.

([3995]) Appeal No. 188 of 30 S issued at the hearing of April 26, 1960 and published in the second part of the book of the Technical Office No. 11 page No. 380 rule No. 77.

([3996]) Articles 398 and 467 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([3997]) Appeal No. 10956 of 85 S issued at the session of April 11, 2017.unpublished).

([3998]) Appeal No. 7370 of 79 S issued at the 2nd session of October 2011 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 62, page No. 271, rule No. 44, Appeal No. 2491 of 79 S issued at the 28th session of March 2011.unpublished), Appeal No. 4728

A dispute had arisen between the circuits of the Court of Cassation, and this was raised by the fact that some of those judgments allowed arrest under the default judgment away from the defendant's declaration or enforceability, based on the fact that the procedures are conducted on the apparent judgment and not on what may be revealed afterwards from the fact. The second believes that the judgment must be enforceable so that the arrest of the defendant is valid. Whereas, Article 460 of the Criminal Procedure Law stipulates that "the judgments issued by the criminal courts shall not be executed unless they become final unless the law stipulates otherwise." The meaning of the fact that the judgment is final in the application of the aforementioned article is that it shall not be subject to objection or appeal, even if it is subject to cassation. The exception mentioned in the inability of this article refers to the cases of expedited enforcement mentioned in Article 463 of the aforementioned law, which states: "The judgments issued for fines and expenses shall be immediately enforceable, even with the occurrence of their appeal, as well as the judgments issued for imprisonment for theft or against an accused returnee or who has no fixed place of residence in Egypt......" The judgments that the advanced text refers to their implementation, even with the occurrence of their appeal, are the judgments in presence and the judgments issued in opposition, as well as the judgments in absentia in which the date of the objection has expired or the opposition has been ruled as if it were not. The judgment that is subject to objection or in respect of which an objection has been filed that has not yet been adjudicated is not enforceable, and Article 467 of this Law stipulates in its first paragraph. However, "the default judgment may be executed if the convicted person does not object to it within the time limit set out in the first paragraph of Article 398." In the sense of the violation, this means that the default judgment may not be executed if the date of the objection has not yet begun or has not yet expired, and it may not be executed if it is challenged by the opposition, and its implementation remains suspended until the opposition is decided. The street has limited the implementation of the default judgment to the penalty in the event that the deadline for appealing it has expired by the opposition without appealing it, and it has added to that Also, Article 468 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in its first paragraph, states that "the court may, when sentencing in absentia to imprisonment for a period of one month or more if the accused does not have a specific place of residence in Egypt or if a provisional detention order is issued against him, order the arrest and detention of him at the request of the Public Prosecution." The street has introduced an exception to the original stipulating that the default judgment may not be executed during the time of the opposition and during its consideration, so it is permissible to implement it during this in two cases if the accused does not have a specific place of residence in Egypt or if a provisional detention order is issued against him. The first condition is that the judgment was issued with imprisonment for a period of one month or more, and the second is to order the court to implement it at the request of the Public Prosecution. This means that the default judgment in each of the two cases shall be executed as soon as it is issued, even if the date of the opposition has not yet expired or it is still pending before the competent court. The reason for the exception is the likelihood of the street to support the judgment, in addition to the fact that the suspension of its implementation - according to the general principle - may make it impossible to implement it if it is supported in the opposition because there is no place of residence for the accused in Egypt or because of the seriousness that the order foresees his pretrial detention. The street accordingly decided to implement it temporarily. Article 468 of the law referred to in its second paragraph added that "the accused shall be detained upon arrest in implementation of this order until he is sentenced to the opposition that he raises, or the prescribed deadline expires, and in no case may remain in detention for a period exceeding the sentenced period."

---

of 78 S issued at the 10th session of May 2009.unpublished), Appeal No. 13719 of 67 S issued at the 11th session of December 2006.unpublished).

Whereas, the first judgments issued by some criminal circuits violated this consideration and allowed the arrest of the accused under the default judgment, even if it was not enforceable, it became a duty to withdraw it.[3999]

The court may, when ruling in absentia for a period of one month or more, if the accused does not have a specific place of residence in Egypt, or if a provisional detention order is issued against him, order, at the request of the Public Prosecution, his arrest and detention.

The accused shall be detained upon his arrest in implementation of this order until he rules on the objection he raises, or the time limit prescribed for it lapses. It is not permitted in any case to remain in detention for a period exceeding the period ruled. All of this is unless the court to which the opposition is submitted sees his release before adjudicating it.[4000]

The Public Prosecution, which is the competent authority responsible for the implementation of the judgments issued by the criminal courts of the penalty, does not initiate their implementation unless they are final judgments that are "enforceable", and it is the one that is not subject to appeal by opposition or appeal - even if it is subject to cassation - whether to miss their deadlines or to decide on them. Exceptions to this are the cases of obligatory execution and temporary permissive execution stipulated in articles 463 and 468 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

This means that the court may, at the request of the Public Prosecution, order the arrest and detention of the convicted person in absentia, even if the date of the opposition is still open or with the opposition occurring and not being adjudicated if the default judgment was issued for a period of one month or more and the accused did not have a place of residence in Egypt or a pre-trial detention order was issued. Thus, the street introduced an exception to the original ruling that the default judgment may not be executed during the time of the opposition and during its consideration, so it allowed its implementation during this in two cases, and this means that the default judgment in each of these two cases shall be executed as soon as it is issued, even if the date of the opposition has not yet expired, or it is still pending before the competent court.[4001]

The reason for this exception is that the street is likely to support the judgment in addition to the fact that the suspension of its implementation - according to the general principle - may make it impossible to implement it if it is supported in the opposition because there is no place of residence for the accused in Egypt, or because of its seriousness, which is indicated by the order to remand him in custody, so the street decided accordingly to implement it temporarily.[4002]

([3999]) Appeal No. 14203 of 74 S issued at the session of 19 December 2012 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 56 page No. 5.

([4000]) Article 468 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4001]) Appeal No. 10956 of 85 S issued at the 11th session of April 2017.unpublished), Appeal No. 1817 of 82 S issued at the 6th session of March 2013.unpublished), Appeal No. 2491 of 79 S issued at the 28th session of March 2011.unpublished), Appeal No. 4728 of 78 S issued at the 10th session of May 2009.unpublished), Appeal No. 13719 of 67 S issued at the 11th session of December 2006.

([4002]) Appeal No. 7370 of 79 S issued on October 2, 2011 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 62 page No. 271 rule No. 44.

26.1.2 Execution of the Death Penalty

Duration of the execution of the judgment

When the death sentence becomes final, the lawsuit papers must be submitted immediately to the President of the Republic through the Minister of Justice, and the sentence shall be executed if there is no order for pardon or commutation of the sentence within fourteen days.[4003]

The death penalty may not be carried out on public holidays or holidays related to the religion of the convict.[4004]

Imprisonment of death row inmate

The person sentenced to death shall be placed in prison on the basis of an order issued by the Public Prosecution on the form decided by the Minister of Justice until the sentence is executed.[4005]

Relatives of the person sentenced to death may meet with him on the day appointed for the execution of the sentence, provided that this is far from the place of execution.

If the religion of the convict forces him to confess or other religious obligations before death, the necessary facilities must be made to enable one of the clerics to meet him.[4006]

Place of Execution of the Death Penalty

The death penalty shall be carried out inside the prison, or in another concealed place, upon a written request from the Attorney General indicating that the procedures prescribed by law have been fulfilled.[4007]

Procedures for the Execution of the Death Penal

The execution of the death penalty must be carried out in the presence of one of the deputy prosecutors, the prison warden, the prison doctor, or another doctor delegated by the Public Prosecution. It is not permitted for other than those mentioned to attend the execution except with special permission from the Public Prosecution. The convicted defendant must always be authorized to attend.

The verdict of the death sentence and the charge for which the convict was sentenced must be read at the place of execution with the hearing of the attendees. If the convicted person wishes to make statements, the deputy public prosecutor shall draw up a report of them.

Upon completion of the implementation, the Deputy Attorney General shall draw up a record of this, in which the doctor's certificate of death and the hour of its occurrence shall be recorded.[4008]

The government shall, at its expense, bury the body of a person sentenced to death, unless he has relatives who request to do so, and the burial must be without ceremony.[4009] moratorium on the death penalty

The execution of the death penalty for pregnant women shall be suspended until two months after[4010] its delivery.

(4003) Article 470 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4004) Article 475 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4005) Article 471 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and see: Appeal No. 8528 of 88 S issued on May 12, 2019.unpublished).
(4006) Article 472 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4007) Articles 470 and 473 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4008) Article 474 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4009) Article 477 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

26.1.3 Enforcement of custodial sentences

Places of enforcement of custodial sentences

Sentences issued for custodial sentences shall be executed in the prisons prepared for this purpose by virtue of an order issued by the Public Prosecution on the form decided by the Minister of Justice.[4011]

Any person sentenced to simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months may, in lieu of the execution of the custodial sentence, request his employment outside the prison, unless the judgment stipulates that he shall be deprived of this option.[4012]

Calculation of sentence and release of inmate

The period of the custodial sentence starts from the day of the arrest of the convict based on the enforceable judgment, taking into account its reduction by the period of pretrial detention and the period of arrest.[4013]

The day on which the execution begins shall be calculated from the sentence period, and the convict shall be released on the day following the day of the end of the sentence at the time specified for the release of the inmates. If the sentence of imprisonment imposed on the accused is twenty-four hours, its execution shall end on the day following his arrest at the time specified for the release of the inmates.[4014]

The period of detention is also deducted from the sentenced period. Article 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides for a general and absolute response to such a restriction, and therefore it is not permissible to say it. In addition, this statement involves a distinction that is unpalatable or acceptable in legal logic. As long as the nature of pretrial detention and detention combine with the nature of the sentenced punishment in that they are all restricted and deprived of freedom, and have continued without interval, this distinction has no face at all.[4015]

If the accused is acquitted of the crime for which he was remanded in custody, the period of imprisonment shall be deducted from the period sentenced in any other crime that he may have committed or investigated during remand in custody.[4016]

If the defendant is sentenced to multiple custodial sentences, the period of pre-trial detention shall be deducted from the lighter penalty first.[4017]

This means that the period of pretrial detention, arrest and detention must be deducted from the period of the custodial sentence, and that if a person is acquitted in the crime for which he was held in pretrial detention, the period of pretrial detention must be deducted from the period for which he was sentenced in any other crime, provided that the latter was committed during pretrial detention or was investigated with him during it.[4018]

([4010]) Article 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4011]) Article 478 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4012]) Article 479 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4013]) Article 482 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4014]) Article 480 and 481 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4015]) Administrative Judicial Court, Judgement No. 39027 of 62 S issued at the session of November 11, 2008, page No. 53, Judgement No. 34582 of 60 S issued at the session of February 27, 2007, page No. 452.
([4016]) Article 483 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4017]) Article 484 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4018]) Administrative Court, First Circuit, Judgement No. 54214 of 62 Q issued at the 26th session of May 2009.unpublished), Judgement No. 11329 of 61 Q issued at the 10th session of March 2009.unpublished), Judgement No. 15045 of 56 Q issued at the 13th session of July 2004.unpublished), Judgement No. 4473 of 55 Q issued at the 26th session of November 2002.unpublished).

In cases other than those specified in the law, the convicted inmate may not be released before he completes the period of[4019] punishment.

Postponement of the execution of the custodial sentence

If the convict of a custodial sentence is pregnant in the sixth month of pregnancy, the execution may be postponed until she gives birth and a period of two months has elapsed since the delivery. If the execution is seen on the convict or it appears during the execution that she is pregnant, she must be treated in the reform center as a pretrial detainee until she gives birth and a period of two months has elapsed since the delivery.[4020]

The execution of the sentence may also be postponed if the convict of a custodial sentence suffers from a disease that threatens his life by itself or because of[4021] the execution.

The postponement of the execution of the sentence shall be within the competence of the Public Prosecution, and it has nothing to do with the adjudication of the sentence because it is outside its jurisdiction as it is subsequent to the pronouncement of the sentence.[4022]

If the convict suffers from a mental disorder, the execution of the sentence shall be postponed until he is acquitted. The Public Prosecution may order his placement in one of the psychiatric shops, in which case the period he spends in this place shall be deducted from the period of the sentence imposed.[4023]

In addition, if the man and his wife are sentenced to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, even for different crimes, and they have not been imprisoned before, the execution of the punishment on one of them may be postponed until the other is released. That is, if they are sponsoring a child who has not exceeded fifteen full years, and they have a known place of residence in Egypt.[4024]

In all cases where it is permissible to postpone the execution of the sentence against the convicted person, the Public Prosecution may request him to provide a guarantee that he does not flee from execution upon the disappearance of the reason for the postponement, and the amount of the guarantee is estimated in the order issued for postponement, and it may also stipulate for postponing the execution the precautions it deems necessary to prevent the convicted person from escaping.[4025]

26-1-4 Implementation of financial penalties and physical coercion

Collection and Distribution of Judgment Amounts

When settling the amounts due to the government for the fine, what must be returned, compensation and expenses, the Public Prosecution must, before execution, notify the convict of the amount of these amounts, unless they are estimated in the judgment. The amounts due to the government may be collected by the methods prescribed in the Civil and Commercial

---

([4019]) Article 490 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4020]) Article 485 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4021]) Article 486 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and see: Appeal No. 5402 of 65 S issued at the session of April 20, 2004 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 55, page No. 427, rule No. 56, Appeal No. 11521 of 59 S issued at the session of June 7, 1992 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 43, page No. 600, rule No. 89, Appeal No. 2059 of 37 S issued at the session of March 26, 1968 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 19, page No. 377, rule No. 72.
([4022]) Appeal No. 27551 of 72 S issued in the session of January 15, 2008 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 59, page No. 61, rule No. 9.
([4023]) Article 487 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4024]) Article 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4025]) Article 489 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Procedures Law or by the administrative methods prescribed for the collection of princely funds.[4026]

If the fine, what must be returned, and the compensation and expenses are ruled together, and the convict's funds do not meet all of this, what is obtained from them must be distributed among the rights-holders in the following order:

Expenses due to the government.

Amounts due to the civil plaintiff.

Fine and what the government deserves in terms of restitution and compensation.[4027]

If a person is remanded in custody and is sentenced only to a fine, it must be reduced upon execution by five pounds for each day of the aforementioned imprisonment. If he is sentenced to imprisonment and a fine together, and the period he spent in pretrial detention exceeds the period of the sentenced detention, the fine shall be reduced by the said amount for each day of the aforementioned increase.[4028]

The judge of the summary court in the jurisdiction where the enforcement is taking place may grant the accused, in exceptional cases, at his request and after taking the opinion of the Public Prosecution, a deadline to pay the amounts due to the government, or to authorize him to pay them in installments, provided that the period does not exceed nine months. An order accepting or rejecting an application may not be challenged.

If the accused is late in paying an installment, the rest of the installments shall be settled. The judge may refer to the order issued by them, if there is a reason for that.[4029]

Physical Coercion

If the accused does not pay the amounts due to the government, the Public Prosecution shall issue an order of physical coercion. Physical coercion may be used to collect the amounts arising from the crime decided for the government against the perpetrator of the crime. Such coercion shall be by simple imprisonment and its duration shall be estimated as one day for every five pounds or less.

However, in the articles of violations, the period of coercion shall not exceed seven days for fines or seven days for expenses, refunds and compensation.

In the articles of misdemeanors and felonies, the period of coercion shall not exceed three months for fines and three months for expenses, refunds and compensation.[4030]

Therefore, the Court of Cassation ruled that in every judgment issued for the fine penalty, its amount must be determined in Egyptian currency, and this does not change that the fine imposed must be a relative fine or that the money on which the crime was committed must be foreign exchange allowed to be traded in the country, as the value of the fine must be estimated at the value of that foreign exchange in Egyptian currency at the date of the crime.[4031]

([4026]) Articles No. 505, 506 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and see: Appeal No. 276 of 59 S issued at the session of January 28, 1993 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 44 page No. 355 rule No. 65.

([4027]) Article 508 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4028]) Article 509 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4029]) Article 510 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4030]) Articles 507, 511 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4031]) Appeal No. 3717 of 65 S issued in the session of February 1, 1999 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 50 page No. 84 rule No. 17.

However, it is required for execution by physical coercion that the convicted person has reached the age of fifteen years at the time of committing the crime and that the judgment is not issued with a stay of execution.[4032]

Physical coercion may be postponed in cases where the implementation of custodial sentences may be postponed.[4033]

In the event of multiple judgments, and all of them were issued in violations, misdemeanors, or felonies, the execution shall be based on the total amounts adjudicated. In this case, the period of coercion may not exceed twice the maximum in misdemeanors and felonies, nor more than twenty-one days in violations.

However, if the crimes are of different types, the maximum limit prescribed for each of them shall be observed.

In any case, the period of coercion may not exceed six months for fines and six months for expenses, reimbursements and compensation.[4034]

If the sentenced crimes are different, the amounts paid or obtained by execution on the property of the convicted person shall be deducted first from the amounts sentenced in felonies, then in misdemeanors, and then in violations.[4035]

The execution of physical coercion shall be by an order issued by the Public Prosecution on the form decided by the Minister of Justice and shall commence at any time after the accused has been notified, and after he has served all the periods of custodial sentences imposed.[4036]

Physical coercion ends when the amount corresponding to the period spent by the convict in coercion is equal to the amount originally required, after deducting what the convict has paid or obtained from him by execution on his property.[4037]

However, the debt of the convict is not discharged from the expenses, what must be returned, and compensation by the implementation of physical coercion against him, and he is not discharged from the fine except by considering five pounds for each day. However, the misdemeanor court in whose jurisdiction the convict's place of residence is located may, if he does not implement the judgment issued to the non-government for compensation after warning him to pay, and in the event that it proves that he is able to pay, and orders him not to comply, to sentence him to physical coercion. The period of such coercion may not exceed three months, and nothing shall be deducted from the compensation for coercion in this case, and the lawsuit shall be filed by the convict in the usual ways.[4038]

The convict may request at any time from the Public Prosecution, before the issuance of the physical coercion order, to replace him with a manual or industrial work he performs. In that case, the convict shall work in this work free of charge for one of the government bodies or municipalities for a period of time equal to the period of coercion that should have been carried out on him. The types of works in which the convict may be employed and the administrative bodies that decide these works shall be determined by a decision issued by the competent minister.

([4032]) Article 512 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4033]) Article 513 of the Criminal Procedure Code, see above: postponement of the implementation of custodial sentences.
([4034]) Article 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4035]) Article 515 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4036]) Articles 505, 516 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4037]) Article 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4038]) Articles 518, 519 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It is not permitted to employ the convict outside the city in which he resides or his subordinate centre. It shall be taken into account in the work that he is required daily to be able to complete within six hours according to the condition of his structure.

The amounts due to the government shall be deducted from the fine, what must be returned, compensation and expenses for the work of the convict, considering five pounds for each day.[4039]

If the convict does not attend the place prepared for his occupation, is absent from his occupation, or does not complete the work imposed on him daily without an excuse that the administration authorities deem acceptable, he shall be sent to prison for execution under the physical coercion that was due to be carried out on him, and the days during which he has completed the work imposed on him shall be deducted from his period.

It must be carried out by physical coercion on the convict who chose work instead of coercion, if there is no work for which his occupation is beneficial.[4040]

26-1-5 Difficulty in implementation

The court competent to consider problems of implementation

Forms of execution shall be submitted by the convicted person to the Criminal Court in the judgment issued by it, and to the Court of Appeal Misdemeanors, otherwise, and jurisdiction shall be held for the court that is locally competent to consider the lawsuit in question in the implementation of the judgment issued therein.[4041]

Forms of execution are not considered an obituary of the judgment, but rather an obituary of the execution itself. Therefore, the jurisdiction of the ordinary judiciary to consider and decide on that problem requires that the judgment in question be issued by one of the courts of that authority. This means that the courts of the ordinary judiciary do not have jurisdiction to consider problems over judgments issued by state security courts or military courts.[4042]

This also means that the problem court may not address in its judiciary to invoke justifications for suspending the execution of the sentenced sentence based on matters related to the subject matter of the lawsuit, because it has thus exceeded its jurisdiction and wasted the authority of the judgment in which it was challenged.[4043]

However, in the event that a dispute arises from a non-accused regarding the funds required to be executed in the event that financial judgments are executed on the funds of the convicted

---

([4039]) Articles 520, 521, 523 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4040]) Article 522 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

([4041]) Article 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4042]) Appeal No. 2663 of 79 s issued at the session of February 13, 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67 page No. 216 rule No. 25, Appeal No. 9287 of 78 s issued at the session of November 4, 2015 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 66 page No. 725 rule No. 111, Appeal No. 22925 of 77 s issued at the session of May 16, 2010.unpublished), Appeal No. 15849 of 62 s issued at the session of May 2, 2010.unpublished) 2001 and published in Technical Office Letter No. 52 Page No. 472 Rule No. 82, Appeal No. 6811 of 58 S issued at the session of 29 April 1990 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 41 Page No. 659 Rule No. 112, Appeal No. 3256 of 55 S issued at the session of 3 October 1985 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 36 Page No. 820 Rule No. 145, Appeal No. 2405 of 50 S issued at the session of 25 March 1981 and published in Part I of Technical Office Letter No. 32 Page No. 283 Rule number 49.

([4043]) Appeal No. 1639 of 48 s issued at the session of January 28, 1979 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 30 page No. 179 rule No. 34, Appeal No. 1454 of 36 s issued at the session of March 14, 1967 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 18 page No. 422 rule No. 79.

person, the matter shall be referred to the civil court in accordance with what is stipulated in the Code of Procedure.[4044]

This means that the jurisdiction to consider the problem in the implementation of criminal judgments is held either by the criminal court or by the civil court, as the case may be, under the conditions prescribed by law.[4045]

The judgments that the civil court has the competence to consider the problems in their implementation shall mean the judgments issued by fine or what must be returned or compensation and expenses that are intended to be collected by execution on the funds of the convict by civil means in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Procedure. If a dispute arises from a person other than the accused regarding the funds to be seized, the matter shall be submitted to the civil court in accordance with what is prescribed in the Code of Procedure. As for the criminal judgments issued by closing, removing, demolishing, confiscating, returning the thing to its origin, publishing the judgment, or withdrawing the license, they do not fall within the scope of financial judgments within the meaning of Article 527 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, they do not impose a monetary penalty, but rather they are judgments of criminal penalties intended to erase the appearance caused by the crime and implement the judgment issued by it. The jurisdiction to consider the problem in the implementation of those judgments of the criminal court that issued the judgment, as the problem relates to the judgment itself in terms of its content or enforceability.[4046]

Therefore, it is stipulated in the forms that its cause must have occurred after the issuance of this judgment, but if its cause occurred before its issuance, it shall have been included in the defenses in the lawsuit and it became impossible for the convict to challenge it, whether he has paid it in the lawsuit or he has not paid it.[4047]

Procedures for Consideration of Problems

The dispute shall be submitted to the court by the Public Prosecution as a matter of urgency, and the concerned parties shall be notified of the session specified for its consideration, and the court shall decide on it in the consultation room after hearing the Public Prosecution and the concerned parties. The court may conduct investigations that it deems necessary, and in all cases it may order a stay of execution until the dispute is resolved.

The Public Prosecution may, when necessary and before submitting the dispute to the Court, temporarily suspend the execution of the judgment.

If there is a dispute in the personality of the convict, it shall be decided in the manner and conditions prescribed in the consideration of the problems.[4048]

([4044]) Article 527 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4045]) Appeal No. 1076 of 35 S issued at the session of December 21, 1965 and published in the third part of the book of the Technical Office No. 16 page No. 950 rule No. 181.

([4046]) Appeal No. 492 of 79 S issued at the session of April 20, 2011 and published in the Technical Office's letter No. 62, page No. 548, rule No. 92, Appeal No. 98 of 22 S issued at the session of June 14, 1956 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 7, page No. 718, rule No. 100.

([4047]) Appeal No. 168 of 32 S issued at the session of February 20, 1962 and published in the first part of the book of the Technical Office No. 13 page No. 174 rule No. 48.

([4048]) Articles 525, 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

26-1-6 Forfeiture of the penalty by the lapse of time and the death of the convict

Lapse of Punishment

First: The duration of the sentence

The penalty imposed for a felony shall be forfeited by the lapse of twenty Gregorian years, except for the death penalty, which shall be forfeited by the lapse of thirty years.

The penalty imposed for a misdemeanor shall be forfeited by the lapse of five years.

The penalty imposed for a violation shall be forfeited by the lapse of two years.[4049]

It is clear from this that as long as the lawsuit has been filed before the Criminal Court for an incident that is considered a felony by law, the judgment issued in absentia must be subject to the period of forfeiture prescribed for the penalty in the felony articles, which is twenty years, regardless of whether the penalty imposed is a felony or a misdemeanor penalty.[4050]

The period of forfeiture of the penalty begins from the time the judgment becomes final, unless the penalty is sentenced in absentia by the criminal court in a felony. The period starts from the day the judgment is issued.[4051]

This means that the period of forfeiture of the penalty begins from the date the contested judgment becomes final. This is because the criminal lawsuit expires only with the judgment in which the methods of appeal are exhausted. Therefore, it is inconceivable that the period of limitation of the penalty begins before the expiry of the criminal lawsuit with the issuance of a final judgment in it.[4052]

Second: The interruption of the period of forfeiture of

The period of arrest of the convict shall be interrupted by a penalty restricting freedom and by every enforcement action taken against him or that comes to his knowledge. The period shall also be interrupted in matters other than violations, if the convict commits in its course a crime of the type for which he is convicted or similar to it.[4053]

([4049]) Article 528 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4050]) Appeal No. 3678 of 74 S issued at the 6th session of March 2013 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 64, page No. 322, rule No. 38, Appeal No. 13608 of 75 S issued at the 11th session of October 2012 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 63, page No. 496, rule No. 84, Appeal No. 47899 of 74 S issued at the 18th session of September 2012 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 63, page No. 389, rule No. 64, Appeal No. 10334 of 80 s issued at the session of March 1, 2012 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 63, page No. 230, rule No. 34, appeal No. 19242 of 72 s issued at the session of February 14, 2010 and published in the Technical Office letter No. 61, page No. 125, rule No. 17, appeal No. 22509 of 65 s issued at the session of January 18, 1998 and published in the first part of the Technical Office letter No. 49, page No. 100, rule No. 15, appeal No. 8325 of 60 s issued at the session of February 8, 1993 and published in the first part of the letter Technical Office No. 44 Page 166 Rule No. 19, Appeal No. 6019 of 59 S issued at the session of April 4, 1991 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 42 Page 585 Rule No. 85, Appeal No. 1046 of 42 S issued at the session of April 22, 1973 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's letter No. 24 Page 538 Rule No. 111, Appeal No. 807 of 23 S issued at the session of July 9, 1953 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 4 Page 1160 Rule No. 389.

([4051]) Article 529 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4052]) Appeal No. 21103 of 67 s issued at the session of March 20, 2007 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 58 page No. 256 rule No. 52, Appeal No. 62597 of 59 s issued at the session of March 4, 1997 and published in the first part of the letter of the Technical Office No. 48 page No. 276 rule No. 39.

([4053]) Articles No. 530, 531 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and see: Appeal No. 12548 of 72 S issued at the session of December 3, 2009 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 60, page No. 513, rule No. 66.

Third: Suspension of the validity of the period of forfeiture of the penalty

The validity of the period shall be suspended by any impediment that prevents the commencement of enforcement, whether legal or material, and the presence of the convict abroad shall be considered an impediment that stops the validity of the period.[4054]

Fourth: The impact of the forfeiture of the penalty

It is not permitted for a person sentenced to death, life imprisonment, or aggravated death in a felony of murder, attempted murder, or beating resulting in death to reside after the lapse of his sentence by the lapse of the period in the district or governorate in which the crime was committed, unless he is licensed in that director or governor. If he violates this, he shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year.

The director or the governor may order the revocation of the licence if he deems it necessary.

The convict shall be assigned to take for him, within a period of ten days, a place of residence outside the directorate general or the governorate. If the convict violates this, he shall be punished by the preceding punishment.

In all the aforementioned cases, the Minister of Interior may designate a place of residence for the convict. This shall be followed by the provisions on police surveillance.[4055]

The effect of this omission is limited to the fact that it only prevents the execution of that penalty and the sentence remains considered to be valid as a basis for the availability of the aggravating circumstance, unless the convict is rehabilitated as a judge or by law.[4056]

The provisions prescribed for the lapse of the period in the Civil Code shall be followed with regard to compensation, what must be refunded, and the expenses awarded. However, it is not permissible to implement by physical coercion after the lapse of the prescribed period for forfeiture of the penalty.[4057]

Death of the convict

If the convict dies after a final judgment, financial penalties, compensation, refunds and expenses in his estate shall be implemented.[4058]

Chapter Twenty-Seven: The Right to Compensation for Mistake in the Administration of Justice

27-1 Within the Framework of Egyptian Law

The fifth paragraph of Article 54 of the Constitution stipulates that: «... The law shall regulate the provisions of pretrial detention, its duration, its causes, and the cases of entitlement to compensation that the state is obligated to pay for pretrial detention, or for the execution of a sentence for which a final judgment has been issued to annul the sentence executed under it...".

(4054) Article 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4055) Article 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4056) Arab Republic of Egypt - Court of Cassation - Criminal
[Appeal No. 1396 - of the year 36 - Date of the session 19/12/1966 - Technical Office 17 Part No. 3 - Page No. 1264 - Rule No. 242] - [Reject].
(4057) Article 534 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(4058) Article 535 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The Code of Criminal Procedure also stipulates that: "The Public Prosecution shall publish every final judgment acquitting the person previously detained on remand, as well as every order issued that there is no reason to file a criminal case before him in two widely circulated daily newspapers at the expense of the government. In both cases, the publication shall be at the request of the Public Prosecution, the accused or one of his heirs and with the approval of the Public Prosecution in the event that an order is issued that there is no reason to file a lawsuit.

The state shall ensure the right to the principle of material compensation for pretrial detention in the two cases referred to in the previous paragraph in accordance with the rules and procedures issued by a special law[4059].

The Constitution and the law urged the state to work to ensure the right to the principle of material compensation for pretrial detention in the event of a final judgment acquitting the person previously held in pretrial detention, as well as compensation for pretrial detention in the event of an order not to file a criminal case against the accused. However, the Code of Criminal Procedure only published the judgment or order in two widely circulated daily newspapers at the expense of the government at the request of the Public Prosecution, the accused, or one of his heirs. The Code of Criminal Procedure referred to the definition of rules and procedures that approve the principle of compensation to a special law, but so far that law has not been issued.

In an old judgment of the Court of Cassation, which recognized the right to compensation for the detention of a person without guilt and without a legitimate justification, it ruled that if the administrative officers, in order to prevent the commission of crimes, were to take the necessary measures and means, they must refrain from means that restrict the freedom of individuals, unless there is a legitimate justification required by the circumstances. The legitimate justification is considered available when the employee is performing his job and what he has done or performed is inevitably necessary to carry out its tasks of preventing serious harm that threatens the system and security, as this measure is the only means to prevent this harm. The Court of Cassation has the right to control the existence of this ground and its non-existence.[4060]

The Supreme Administrative Court ruled that it is not permissible to compensate for the actions of the judicial authority as a general principle except in cases that reach the severity of the defect in the judicial ruling that it is non-existent. However, if the judgment was issued by a properly constituted body, it is not permissible to compensate for it as a judicial act, even if this judgment involved a violation in the application of the law that the Supreme Court showed when considering the appeal against this judgment. Egyptian law does not allow requesting compensation except through a litigation lawsuit, which is a personal lawsuit directed primarily to the judge who issued the judgment if it is proven that he committed a serious professional error in the judgment that led to harming the plaintiff.[4061]

It is clear from this judgment that the court has limited the right to compensation for the actions of the judicial authority in a specific case, namely, that the seriousness of the defect in the judicial judgment is non-existent, and in application of this, if the judgment is issued by a properly constituted body, it is not permissible to compensate for it.

It is also clear from the previous judgment that it is not permissible to claim compensation in the event of annulment of the judgment after appealing against it if that judgment involves a violation of the application of the law.

([4059]) Article 312 bis of the Criminal Procedure Law.
([4060]) Appeal No. 18 of 3S issued at the session of March 22, 1934 and published in the first part of the first book of the set of legal rules, page No. 335, rule No. 170.
([4061]) Supreme Administrative Court, Appeal No. 11884 of 48 K issued on December 12, 2009 and published in the book of the Technical Office No. 55 page No. 158 rule No. 15.

As for the decisions issued by the Public Prosecution restricting the freedom of the accused, such as the decisions issued to ban travel, the Administrative Court recognized its jurisdiction to consider at the time of the implementation of those decisions, as the court ruled that as long as no law was issued regulating the cases, conditions and procedures through which the Public Prosecution exercises the powers to ban travel, its exercise of this power is based on the fact that it is an authentic division of the divisions of the executive authority, and then - when exercising this power - it is an administrative authority whose work is subject to legitimacy control, and is not in the exercise of its jurisdiction regulated by the laws issued by the legislative authority, and accordingly the statement of the administration authority that we are in the process of an act of the judicial authority, is outside the control of the legitimacy judge, has no basis.[4062]

Whereas the Constitution has made the right to movement one of the natural rights and personal freedoms that it has protected, and granted it immunity from attack, it has permitted the restriction of this freedom if this is necessitated by the need to investigate and maintain the security of society, and the ban on movement was issued by the competent court or by the Public Prosecution.[4063]

27-1-1 Rehabilitation

Rehabilitation is intended to erase the criminal effects of the conviction so that the convict takes his status in society as any citizen who has not been convicted of a criminal sentence. The rehabilitation system aims to mitigate the social effects of criminal judgments, in which the record of precedents may stand as an obstacle against the convict in making his normal way to earn his pension. Therefore, the law requires rehabilitation to erase all criminal effects of the judgment, and rehabilitation is the right of the convict if its conditions are met.[4064]

First: Rehabilitation at the request of the convict

Rehabilitation is the right of the convict if his conditions are met. It is permitted to rehabilitate every convict in a felony or misdemeanor, and a judgment to that effect shall be issued by the criminal court to which the convict's place of residence belongs, at his request. This means that the request for judicial rehabilitation is entrusted with the status of the convicted person in a felony or misdemeanor, regardless of the sentence imposed, whether it is a felony or a misdemeanor, and it does not matter whether it is a punishment restricting freedom or just a financial penalty, as well as it does not matter what type of felony or misdemeanor. All felonies and misdemeanors are equal in this regard.[4065]

1. Cases in which rehabilitation is possible

It is permitted to rehabilitate every convict in a felony or misdemeanor, and the judgment to that effect shall be issued by the criminal court to which the convict's place of residence belongs, at his request.[4066]

2. Conditions for rehabilitation

To be rehabilitated:

([4062]) Administrative Court of Justice, Judgement No. 593 of 55 S issued at the session of March 13, 2001 (unpublished).
([4063]) Administrative Court of Justice, Judgement No. 593 of 55 S issued at the session of March 13, 2001 (unpublished).
([4064]) Appeal No. 20914 of 83 S issued at the 6th session of January 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 47, rule No. 5, Appeal No. 54557 of 73 S issued at the 14th session of June 2010 (unpublished).
([4065]) Appeal No. 20914 of 83 S issued at the 6th session of January 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 47, rule No. 5, Appeal No. 54557 of 73 S issued at the 14th session of June 2010 (unpublished).
([4066]) Article 536 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

First: The penalty must have been fully implemented, pardoned or forfeited by the passage of the period.

Second: A period of six years has elapsed from the date of the execution of the penalty or the issuance of a pardon if it is a felony penalty, or three years if it is a misdemeanor penalty. These periods are doubled in the two cases of ruling for recidivism and forfeiture of the penalty by the passage of the period

The period starts from the day on which the probation period ends, if the convict has been placed under police supervision after the expiry of the original sentence.

If the convict has been released under condition, the period shall not start except from the date scheduled for the expiry of the sentence or from the date on which the release under condition becomes final.[4067]

The request for judicial rehabilitation is based on the status of the convicted person in a felony or misdemeanor, regardless of the sentence imposed, whether it is a felony or misdemeanor penalty, and it does not matter whether it is a punishment restricting freedom or just a financial penalty, as well as it does not matter what type of felony or misdemeanor. All felonies and misdemeanors are equally in this regard, and it is decided that the lesson in the availability of the conditions for rehabilitation of the sentenced punishment is whether it is a felony or misdemeanor penalty regardless of the description of the crime for which the punishment was imposed.[4068]

Third: The convict shall pay all fines, restitution, compensation or expenses imposed on him. The court may waive this if the convict proves that he is in no condition to pay.

If the convicted person is not present with the compensation, restitution, or expenses, or refuses to accept them, the convicted person shall deposit them in accordance with what is prescribed in the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law. It is permitted for him to recover it if five years have elapsed and the convict has not requested it.

If the convict has been sentenced jointly, it is sufficient for him to pay the amount of what belongs to him personally in the debt. Where necessary, the court shall determine the share to be paid by him)[4069]

Fourth: In the event of a verdict for a crime of bankruptcy, the applicant must prove that he has obtained a judgment for his commercial rehabilitation.[4070]

Fifth: If the student has been issued several judgments, he shall not be rehabilitated unless the previous conditions are met for each of them, taking into account in the calculation of the period to be attributed to the latest judgments.[4071]

([4067]) Articles Nos. 537 and 538 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and see: Appeal No. 1219 of 51 s issued at the session of 21 November 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 32, page No. 951, rule No. 164, Appeal No. 553 of 41 s issued at the session of 14 November 1971 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 22, page No. 643, rule No. 155, Appeal No. 915 of 39 s issued at the session of 17 November 1969 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 20, page No. 1277, rule No. 259.

([4068]) Appeal No. 20914 of 83 S issued at the session of January 6, 2016 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 67, page No. 47, rule No. 5.

([4069]) Article 539 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4070]) Article 540 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4071]) Article 541 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

3- Submitting a request for rehabilitation

The application for rehabilitation shall be submitted with a petition to the Public Prosecution, and it must include the data necessary to identify the personality of the applicant, and indicate in it the date of the judgment issued against him and the places where he has resided since then.[4072]

4-The Public Prosecution conducts an investigation on the request

The Public Prosecution shall conduct an investigation into the application to ascertain the date of the student's residence in each place from the time of his sentence and the duration of that residence, and to determine his behavior and means of subsistence. In general, it shall investigate all the information it deems necessary and include the investigation in the application and submit it to the court in the three months following its submission of a report in which its opinion is recorded. The reasons on which it is based shall be indicated, and the application shall be accompanied by:

(1) A copy of the judgment issued to the student.

(2) A certificate of his antecedents.

(3) A report on his behavior while in prison[4073]

5- Procedures for considering and ruling on the application

The court shall consider and decide on the application in the counseling chamber. It may hear the statements of the Public Prosecution and the applicant, and it may complete all the information it deems necessary.

The student's notice of attendance shall be at least eight days before the session.

An appeal against the judgment shall not be accepted except by way of cassation for an error in the application of the law or its interpretation. The conditions and dates prescribed for appeal by way of cassation shall be followed in the appeal.

The court shall rule on rehabilitation, if its conditions are met, and if it considers that the student's behavior since the issuance of the judgment calls for confidence in evaluating himself.[4074]

The Public Prosecution sends a copy of the rehabilitated judgment to the court from which the sentence was issued to mark it on its sidelines, and orders that it be marked in the register of precedents.[4075]

It is not permissible to rehabilitate the convict except once.[4076]

([4072]) Article 542 of the Criminal Procedure Law.
([4073]) Article 543 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4074]) Article 545 of the Criminal Procedure Law
The Court of Cassation ruled that: [It is established that although the trial court may rely in its doctrine on investigations as being supportive of the evidence it has provided, it is not suitable alone to be evidence in itself or a specific presumption of the fact to be proven in the judgment. Whereas, it was evident from the minutes of the hearing of the request for rehabilitation that the appellant's defense argued that the appellant works in a company and that he is of good conduct, and it was evident from the contested judgment that he limited his statement of the facts of the request for rehabilitation and evidence of the lack of conditions for rehabilitation to what he received from the statement of Major ...... That his investigations indicated that "the accused is in contact with the outlaws and that he is of bad conduct in the region" without indicating the content of the rehabilitation request or presenting the defense of the existing appellant that he works in a company and that he is of good conduct and verifies the fulfillment of the conditions specified by the law or not, and the verdict of the investigations was taken as basic evidence to reject the rehabilitation request, then the minor of the statement is corrupt inference, and he must revoke it and return without the need to discuss the rest of the other aspects of the appeal] Appeal No. 10306 of 79 BC issued at the session of 16 January 2010 and published in the letter of the Technical Office No. 61, page No. 32, rule No. 4.
([4075]) Article 546 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In the event that the request for rehabilitation is rejected due to the conduct of the convict, it may not be renewed until after the lapse of two years. In other cases, it may be renewed when the necessary conditions are met.[4077]

6. Revocation of the rehabilitative judgment

The judgment issued for rehabilitation may be annulled in the following cases:

First: If it appears that the convicted person has been issued other judgments of which the court was not aware;

Second: Or if he is sentenced after rehabilitation for a crime that occurred before him.

The judgment in this case shall be issued by the court that ruled for rehabilitation at the request of the Public Prosecution.[4078]

Second: De jure rehabilitation

Rehabilitation by Force of Law

Consideration shall be restored by virtue of the law if the convicted person does not, within the following periods, receive a sentence in a felony or misdemeanor for which a record is kept with the precedents:

(i) In the case of a person sentenced to a felony or misdemeanour penalty for the crime of theft, concealment of stolen objects, fraud, breach of trust, forgery, or attempt in these crimes and in the crimes stipulated in articles 355, 356, 367, and 368 of the Penal Code, when the punishment has been carried out, pardoned, or forfeited by the lapse of a period of twelve years.

(Second) For the convict of a misdemeanor penalty in other than what has been mentioned when the sentence has been carried out or pardoned for six years, unless the judgment has considered the convict to be a recidivist or the punishment has lapsed by the lapse of the period, the period shall be twelve years.[4079]

([4076]) Article 547 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4077]) Article 548 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4078]) Article 549 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
([4079]) Article 550 of the Criminal Procedure Code
Article 355 of the Penal Code stipulates that: "Whoever wilfully kills an animal from riding, dragging, carrying or from any type of livestock or causes it great harm shall be punished by imprisonment with labor. (ii) Any person who has poisoned any of the animals mentioned in the preceding paragraph or any fish found in a river, canal, creek, swamp or basin. The offenders may be kept under police observation for at least one year and at most two years. Any attempt to commit the aforementioned crimes shall be punishable by imprisonment with labor for a period not exceeding one year or a fine not exceeding two hundred Egyptian pounds. "
Article 356 stipulates that: "If the crimes stipulated in the preceding article are committed at night, the penalty shall be rigorous imprisonment or imprisonment from three to seven years."
Article 367 of the Penal Code also stipulates that: “Imprisonment with labor shall be punished by:
(i) Whoever cuts or destroys an unharvested plant or a tree that grows a plant, planted, or other plant.
(ii) Whoever destroys a sown cover or broadcasts in a cover of hashish or a harmful plant.
(iii) Whoever uproots one or more trees or any other plants or cuts or peels them to kill them and whoever damages a bait in a tree.
It is permissible to keep the two sides under police observation for a period of at least one year and at most two years. "
Article 368 of the Penal Code stipulates that: "If the crimes stipulated in the first and second paragraphs of the previous article are committed at night by at least three persons or by one or two persons and at least one of them is carrying a weapon, the penalty shall be rigorous imprisonment or imprisonment from three to seven years."
See: Appeal No. 1884 of 40 S issued at the 8th session of March 1971 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 22 page No. 225 rule No. 55, Appeal No. 2003 of 38 S issued at the 30th session of December 1968 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 19 page No. 1144 rule No. 235, Appeal No. 1679 of 28 S issued at the 17th session of February 1959 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's letter No. 10 page No. 209 rule No. 46.

If the convict has been sentenced to several judgments, he shall not be rehabilitated by virtue of the law unless the conditions prescribed for rehabilitation are met for each of them, taking into account in the calculation of the period its attribution to the most recent judgments.[4080]

The period specified for the removal of the effect of the judgment and its rehabilitation shall not be interrupted except by the issuance of a subsequent judgment and not by mere indictment.[4081]

The origin in the calculation of the advanced period is from the date of the expiry of the penalty in the precedent and the attribution of its end to the date of the judgment in the incident subject of the trial and there is no lesson in this regard on the date of the issuance of the judgment of the penalty in the precedent.[4082]

Third: The Impact of Rehabilitation

The rehabilitation results in the erasure of the conviction for the future and the removal of all the consequent incapacity and deprivation of rights and other criminal effects.[4083]

While the decision to rehabilitate entails the erasure of the conviction for the future and the removal of all the consequent lack of capacity, deprivation of rights and other criminal effects, it cannot entail the erasure of the crime in itself because what actually happened has become a reality, and the reality is indelible, and if its effects can be removed by act or law, its meanings and connotations may remain to be predicted.[4084]

However, rehabilitation may not be invoked against third parties with regard to the rights that result from a conviction, especially with regard to restitution and compensation.[4085]

27.2 Within the Framework of International Covenants

Anyone convicted as a result of a miscarriage of justice has the right to reparation.

27-2-1 Right to Compensation for Judicial Errors

Under international standards, victims of a failure of justice are compensated for the harm they have suffered in special circumstances.[4086]

([4080]) Article 551 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Appeal No. 2003 of 38 S issued at the session of December 30, 1968 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's letter No. 19 page No. 1144 rule No. 235.

([4081]) Arab Republic of Egypt - Court of Cassation - Criminal

[Appeal No. 65 - of the year 43 - Date of the session 11/3/1973 - Technical Office 24 Part No. 1 - Page No. 315 - Rule No. 68] - [Cassation and correction of the civil lawsuit]

Arab Republic of Egypt - Court of Cassation - Criminal

[Appeal No. 348 - of the year 42 - Date of the session 4/6/1972 - Technical Office 23 Part No. 2 - Page No. 873 - Rule No. 196] - [Reject].

([4082]) Arab Republic of Egypt - Court of Cassation - Criminal

[Appeal No. 1719 - of the year 50 - Date of the session 25/1/1981 - Technical Office 32 Part No. 1 - Page No. 71 - Rule No. 10] - [Cassation of the judgment and referral].

([4083]) Article No. 552 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Appeal No. 1719 of 50 S issued at the session of January 25, 1981 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 32, page No. 71, rule No. 10, Appeal No. 682 of 43 S issued at the session of October 22, 1973 and published in the third part of the Technical Office's book No. 24, page No. 879, rule No. 182, Appeal No. 65 of 43 S issued at the session of March 11, 1973 and published in the first part of the Technical Office's book No. 24, page No. 315, rule No. 68, Appeal No. 348 of 42 S issued at the session of June 4, 1972 and published in the second part of the Technical Office's book No. 23, page No. 873, rule No. 196.

([4084]) Appeal No. 2 of 39 s issued at the session of October 13, 1969 and published in the third part of the technical office book No. 20 page No. 999 rule No. 2, Appeal No. 10 of 30 s issued at the session of January 23, 1961 and published in the first part of the technical office book No. 12 page No. 9 rule No. 1.

([4085]) Article 553 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

([4086]) Article 14 (6) of the International Covenant, Article 18 (6) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 10 of the American Convention, Article 3 of Protocol 7 to the European Convention, Section N(10) (c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa, and Article 85 (2) of the Rome Statute.

This right is separate from the right to compensation for unlawful detention, as well as the right to reparation for violations of other human rights, including fair trial rights

With the exception of Article 10 of the American Convention, international standards use similar language.

Legal aid should be provided to individuals seeking compensation on these grounds if they do not have a lawyer of their choice or cannot afford to pay for a lawyer.[4087]

27-2-2 Who are the persons eligible to receive compensation for a miscarriage of justice?

In order to be eligible to receive compensation for a failure of justice, a person must meet the following conditions:[4088].

Have been convicted of a criminal offense by a final decision. Including minor misdemeanors

A conviction is considered final when there is no longer any scope for judicial review or appeal, either due to the exhaustion of all remedies, or as a result of the lapse of time limits;[4089]

that they have been punished as a result of his conviction. The punishment may be a sentence of imprisonment or any other type of punishment. The legitimate detention spent by the accused prior to the trial does not constitute among the penalties;[4090]

under all criteria except the American Convention), have been pardoned or have had a conviction overturned on the basis of new, or newly discovered facts, showing that an error in the administration of justice has occurred, provided that the failure to discover information in a timely manner was not due in whole or in part to the accused.

The State bears the burden of proving that this is due to the accused himself.[4091]

The European Court has held that where the basis for the annulment of the final judgment is a re-evaluation of the evidence, and not the appearance or discovery of new evidence following the issuance of the final judgment, the requirement to pay compensation does not apply to the case.[4092]

The Human Rights Committee has clarified that article 14 of the International Covenant does not require the payment of compensation if a person is granted a special amnesty on humanitarian or other grounds, including fairness, without being related to a failure of justice.[4093]

Moreover, the Committee pointed out that compensation is not due if the basis for revoking the conviction is based on the fact that the person's trial lacked justice, not on the discovery of new facts showing that a failure of justice has occurred.[4094]

Article 10 of the American Convention does not require that a failure of justice be based on the appearance of new facts or the discovery of facts that were not known.

Guideline [4087]11 §55 (b) of the Principles of Legal Aid.

([4088]) Article 14 (6) of the International Covenant, Article 18 (6) of the Migrant Workers Convention, Article 3 of Protocol 7 to the European Convention, and Section N(10) (c) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.

[4089]See, e.g., Explanatory Report to Protocol 7 to the European Convention, §22; Irving v. Australia, Human Rights Commission, / UN Doc. CCPR . 4/8-3/ §8 (2002) C/74/D/880/1999.

([4090]) W. J. H. v The Nedtherlands Human Rights Committee, UN Doc 3/ §6 § (1992) CCPR/C/45/D/408/1990 and 4/3.

([4091]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §53.

([4092]) Matveyev v. Russia (26601/ 02), European Court (2008) §39 - §45.

([4093]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §53.

[4094]Irving v. Australia, Human Rights Commission, / UN Doc. CCPR . 4/8-3/ §8 (2002) C/74/D/880/1999.

Most international standards do not oblige the state to pay any compensation if the charge is dropped, if the court of first instance acquits the accused, or if a higher court acquits him on appeal. Due to the absence of a final conviction.[4095]

However, some national judicial systems require compensation to be paid to victims in such circumstances.

In addition, the Arab Charter guarantees the right to compensation to any person who is proven innocent on the basis of a final judgment. The Rome Statute grants the International Criminal Court the right to diligence in granting compensation when it finds that a gross and apparent failure of justice has occurred, following the acquittal of the accused in accordance with a final judgment or a stay of the trial proceedings based on an error in the administration of justice.[4096]

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Migrant Workers Convention, the American Convention and the European Convention do not require the court to find a person innocent - only that a failure of justice has occurred.[4097]

States should enact laws that provide compensation to victims of a failure of justice.[4098]

Such laws should normally regulate the procedure for awarding compensation and may determine the amount to be paid. However, States are not exempt from the duty to pay reparations for miscarriages of justice if there are no laws or procedures regulating this.

The European Court concluded that compensation should be paid to those who have suffered injustice for non-material damages, including suffering, anxiety and discomfort, in addition to material losses.[4099]

If the failure of justice results from a violation of human rights, reparation for the harm suffered by the person requires other forms of redress, including rehabilitation, rehabilitation, satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition.[4100]

Chapter Twenty-Eight: Rights to a Fair Trial during a State of Emergency

28.1 Within the framework of international covenants

Some human rights are absolute, and may never be restricted, in any way. However, under the terms of some international human rights treaties, certain fair trial rights may be temporarily relaxed (suspended) in some urgent emergencies.

(4095) Human Rights Committee: General Comment W. J. H. v The, §53 ,32 Nedtherlands, Commission on Human Rights, 1990 / UN Doc. CCPR/C/45/D/408 . 3/ §6 (1992).

(4096) Principle 19 (2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 85 (3) of the Rome Statute.

(4097) See Hammern v. Norway (30287) / 96), European Court (2003) §49- §47, and accompanying opinion, Dumont v. Canada, Human Rights Committee, . 24-1/ §22 §(2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/98/D/1467/2006.

(4098) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §52.

(4099) Boghossian and Baghdasarian v. Armenia (22999) / 06), European Court, §49- §52 (2012).

(4100) Principles 18-23 of the Basic Principles on Reparation for Injuries, see General Comment 31 of the Human Rights Committee, §16.

However, there are many fair trial rights that cannot be derogated from, even temporarily, in states of emergency, although some human rights treaties do not explicitly exclude these rights from derogation.

28-2-1 Fair trial rights during states of emergency

Certain human rights guaranteed in international human rights treaties, such as the right not to be subjected to torture or other ill-treatment, may not be suspended under any circumstances, or at any time.

However, the International Covenant on Human Rights, the American Convention, the Arab Charter and the European Convention allow States to mitigate their commitment to certain human rights guarantees (cessation or restriction) in precisely defined cases, provided that such mitigation does not exceed the period required by the situation.[4101]

Each of these agreements sets out contexts in which the suspension of rights is permitted, a range of rights that are not subject to derogation, and procedural conditions for such derogation.

While the International Covenant, the American Convention, the Arab Charter or the European Convention do not explicitly list all fair trial rights among the non-derogable rights, the Human Rights Committee and the jurisprudence of the Inter-American Court have made it clear that a large number of fair trial guarantees are non-derogable.

For example, the Human Rights Committee has clarified that respect for the rule of law and the principle of legality require that the basic requirements of a fair trial must be respected at all times.[4102]

Moreover, the Human Rights Committee has affirmed that procedures in all cases in which death sentences may be imposed, including during states of emergency, must be consistent with the provisions of the International Covenant, including articles 14 and 15 of the Covenant.[4103]

Since derogation measures may not be inconsistent with the State's other obligations under international law, they must be consistent with the State's (other) treaty obligations, the provisions of international humanitarian law and the rules of customary international law.

The African Charter and some specialized human rights treaties - including the Convention on the Rights of the Child, CEDAW, the Convention against Torture, the Convention on Enforced Disappearances, the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Migrant Workers Convention - do not allow any derogation from any of the guarantees they provide, in any circumstances.[4104]

All these treaties enshrine guarantees related to the rights of suspects, accused or convicted in criminal cases.[4105]

([4101]) Advisory Opinion 87 / OC-8of the Inter-American Court, (1987) §18; Juan Carlos Abella v. Argentina (11). 37), American Commission (1997) §168 - §170

Human Rights Committee General Comment 29, §3- §4.

([4102]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §16.

([4103]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §15.

African [4104]Commission: Article 19 v. Eritrea, (275) / 2003), Annual Report 22 87 § § (2007) and 98, National Commission on Human Rights and Freedoms v. Chad (74) / 92), §21 (1995), Goode v. Botswana (313) / 05), Annual Report 29 §175 (2010).

([4105]) Furthermore, the following provisions of the Protocols to the European Convention contain non-derogable provisions: article 4(3) of Protocol 7 (non-derogability of the prohibition on double jeopardy); article 3 of Protocol 6 (non-derogability of the provisions of the Protocol relating to the abolition of the death penalty); and article 2 of Protocol 13 (non-derogability of the prohibition on the death penalty in all circumstances).

A wide range of non-treaty international human rights standards also guarantee fair trial rights, notably the Universal Declaration, the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, and the Standard Minimum Rules. It does not recognize the possibility of resorting to lower standards in times of emergency.

The principles of fair trial in Africa expressly state that "it shall not be invoked… under any circumstances, whatever its nature, to justify any impairment of the right to a fair trial".[4106]

States often infringe on fair trial rights in times of national crisis. The proclamation of a state of emergency remains, generally and exceptionally, the prerogative of the executive, which often has the power to proclaim the emergency and the consequent orders and regulations, sometimes without returning to the usual assets and means.

New criminal laws are often enacted, bringing with them new restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression, assembly and association. While powers of arrest and detention are also often expanded, periods of detention in the custody of the authority are extended for longer periods, special courts are established and summary procedures become the dominant feature of trials.[4107]

28-2-2 Non-observance of rights

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the American Convention, the Arab Charter and the European Convention define the contexts in which rights may be restricted or suspended, the range of varying rights, none of which may be expressly restricted under the treaty, and the procedural conditions for derogation.[4108]

These provisions allow States to derogate from certain safeguards in narrow circumstances, provided that the situation so requires, and to the extent required by the concrete situation.[4109]

Such mitigating measures shall not extinguish such rights in consequence of the order. Moreover, any right or aspect of that right that is not specifically suspended shall remain in force.[4110]

Measures restricting the right shall not discriminate between persons on the basis of race, color, sex, language, religion or social origin[4111].

Although the provision on restriction of rights in the European Convention does not contain a clause on non-discrimination explicitly, the European Court confirmed that the United Kingdom's decision to restrict rights in a way that it concluded was related to national security and not to immigration measures discriminated against foreign nationals, and therefore lacked proportionality since citizens are equal to non-citizens in being a source of threat in the concrete case.[4112]

([4106]) Section R of the Principles of the Right to a Fair Trial in Africa.

[4107]See, for example, Opinion No. 23/2008 of the Working Group on Enforced Disappearances (Rastanawi v. Syrian Arab Republic), 2010 (UN Doc. A/HRC/13/Add. 1) pp. 25- §17- §12 ,27; see Concluding Observations of the Committee against Torture: Peru, 44 / UN Doc. A/53 (1998) pp. 21 - §202 ,22, Cameroon, UN Doc. CAT/C/CAM/CO/4 §25 (2010); Special Rapporteur on Torture, Sri Lanka, UN Doc (2009) A/HRC/7/3/Add. 6 §41 - §46,§84,§91 - §92,§94.

([4108]) Article 4 of the International Covenant, Article 27 of the American Convention, Article 4 of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 of the European Convention.

([4109]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §3- §4.

([4110]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §4.

([4111]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (1) of the American Convention, and Article 4(1) of the Arab Charter.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 29, §8.

[4112](A et al. v. United Kingdom, (3455) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court § 186- §190 (2009).

A State, when declaring a state of emergency, remains bound by the rule of law, including those obligations in international law that may not be derogated from, or that it has not derogated from.[4113]

Any temporary restrictions on rights must be consistent with the State's other obligations under international treaties and customary law, including the provisions of international humanitarian law.[4114]

In order to ensure respect for the rule of law and human rights, both the declaration of a state of emergency and emergency measures shall be subject to judicial supervision. Such supervision should ensure that the emergency declaration, measures and methods of implementation are consistent with national and international law.[4115]

The purpose of any restriction of rights should be to restore normalcy in which human rights are fully respected. However, governments often ignore the strict limits that domestic and international laws restrict by declaring a state of emergency, procedural formalities and the permissible scope of emergency powers, depriving people of their rights, including those related to a fair trial, under the guise of allegations of threats to national security.[4116]

The procedural conditions for restricting rights and those related to content.described below) aim to determine the scope, extent and content of restrictions that may be imposed on rights in states of emergency.[4117]

First: Procedural Requirements

Provisions of human rights treaties that permit derogation include important procedural requirements.

The requirement that a state of emergency be officially declared ensures that the public in the state is notified of the intention of the government and is intended to ensure the principle of legality and the rule of law, and to prevent arbitrariness.[4118]

The State that decides to restrict rights must notify other States parties to the relevant treaty (through the depositary of the treaty) of the restriction decision, and this must include information on the restriction measures imposed.[4119]

The Human Rights Committee, the Inter-American Court, the Inter-American Commission, the Arab Commission for Human Rights and the European Court, charged with reviewing the implementation of the International Covenant, the American Convention, the Arab Charter and

---

General [4113]Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, § §2 and 9; Advisory Opinion OC-8/87 of the Inter-American Court, 24 § (1987); see Legal Consequences of the Construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice (2004), including §89 - §113, in particular 106; see Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Israel, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/ISR. §3 (2010) CO/3.

([4114]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (1) of the American Convention, Article 4(1) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (1) of the European Convention.

Special [4115]Rapporteur on Emergencies, / UN Doc. E/CN. 4 §151 (1997) Sub. 2/1997/19; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 271 / §16- §19 (2008) UN Doc. A/613; see Principle B(5) of the Paris Standard on Minimum Rules for Human Rights in a State of Emergency.

([4116]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §1 and§3; Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, 207/2007) UN Doc. A/62) §34 - §35; Inter-American Court, Advisory Opinion No. 87-OC-8(1987), §20.

([4117]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §5.

([4118]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, and Article 4(1) of the Arab Charter.

See Principles 42 and 42 of the Syracuse Principles.

([4119]) Article 4(3) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (3) of the American Convention, Article 4(3) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (3) of the European Convention.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 29, §17.

the European Convention, respectively, review the necessity and proportionality of the restriction decision and the interim measures adopted.[4120]

Second: Fulfilling international obligations

Any temporary restrictions imposed on the rights recognized in the International Covenant, the American Convention, the Arab Charter and the European Convention must be consistent with the other obligations of the State concerned under international law, including international humanitarian law and customary international law.[4121]

This means that:

obligations imposed by other non-derogable or non-derogable human rights treaties must be respected;

Non-derogable obligations under customary human rights law, including fair trial obligations, must take precedence over any treaty provision allowing for derogation of rights;

When the provisions of international humanitarian law apply - that is, during international armed conflicts, occupation and non-international armed conflicts - the fair trial guarantees guaranteed by law also remain in force.[4122]

28-2-3 Is there an emergency?

International law does not permit the declaration of a state of emergency unless the nation is exposed to a serious exceptional threat, such as the use of force from within or without in a manner that threatens its existence or territorial integrity.

Each treaty permitting derogation of rights establishes the context of derogation of rights. The International Covenant, the Arab Charter and the European Convention allow derogation from rights in times of public emergency that threaten the life of the nation.[4123]

The European Convention links the permissibility of restricting rights, in addition, to “times of war” specifically.[4124]

The American Convention allows the State party to take measures that limit its obligations under the Convention “in times of war, public danger, or other emergency situations that threaten the independence or security of the State”.[4125]

The European Court has clarified that the phrase “a public emergency that threatens the life of the nation” refers to “a state of crisis or an exceptional emergency affecting the entire population and posing a threat to the governing life of the society that constitutes the state”.[4126]

The European Court said that countries have a "wide margin of appreciation" while deciding whether there is an emergency that threatens the life of the nation.[4127]

[4120]See General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, § § 17 and 2-6; European Court: Ireland v. United Kingdom (5310) / 71), (Lawless, §207 (1978) §40 (1961) ,(57/332) v Ireland)No. 3; see Greek case: Denmark, Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands v. Greece (3321 / 67 , 3322/67, 3323/67, 67/3344), European Commission Decision §43- §46 (1969).

([4121]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (1) of the American Convention, Article 4(1) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (1) of the European Convention.

([4122]) Legal Consequences of the Construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice (2004), including §89- §113, in particular §106.

([4123]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, Article 4(1) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 of the European Convention.

([4124]) Article 15 of the European Convention.

([4125]) Article 27 (1) of the American Convention.

([4126]) European Court: 57/332 Lawless v Ireland)No. 3), (1961) Law, §28, A et al. v. United Kingdom (2455) / 05), Grand Chamber §176 (2009); see Principle 39 of the Syracuse Principles.

However, the European Court, like the Human Rights Committee and the Inter-American Court and Commission, assesses for itself whether a declaration of a state of emergency makes sense, and whether restriction measures are necessary and proportionate.

While the European Commission declared that a state of public emergency, in order to permit the restriction of rights, must be actual or imminent; its effects must cover the entire nation; pose a definite threat to the continuity of life governing society; and be so exceptional as to render the natural measures and restrictions permitted by the European Convention manifestly ineffective.[4128]

Many countries have declared states of emergency to respond to violence, sometimes in the face of acts of violence described as “terrorism.” It is noteworthy that the human rights courts, including the European Court and the Inter-American Court, did not object to the characterization of such situations as emergencies in Northern Ireland, Turkey or Peru; but they concluded in cases filed, for example, against Turkey and Peru that the restriction measures taken did not meet the requirement of necessity and proportionality, strictly, to address the emergency.[4129]

The Council of Europe Guidelines on Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism, adopted following the 11 September 2001 attacks on the United States and reflecting the case law of the European Court, include the possibility of mitigating the obligations imposed by the European Convention and the elements of such mitigation, when acts of terrorism occur “in the event of war or other public emergency that threatens the life of the nation”.[4130]

However, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called on member states of the Council not to restrict their obligations in the European Convention in the context of their fight against terrorism.[4131]

The only member state of the Council of Europe that did so following the attacks on the United States of America in 2001 is the United Kingdom.[4132]

An emergency, by definition, is a temporary legal response to a threat.[4133]

Any permanent emergency is a verbal anomaly. Unfortunately, the state of emergency sometimes becomes a permanent state eventually, as it is never lifted, is repeatedly renewed, or its special measures are enshrined in laws after the end of the state of emergency.[4134]

Rather than focusing on the temporary nature of the restriction measures per se, the European Court has always focused on the proportionality of these measures, subjecting them to regular ([4127]) European Court: Ireland v. United Kingdom (5310) / 71), (1978) §207, Brannigan and McBride v. United Kingdom (14553/ 89 and 14554 / 89), §43 (1993), A et al. v. United Kingdom, (3455) / 05, Grand Chamber. §173 (2005).

---

([4128]) Greek case: Denmark, Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands v. Greece (67/3321 , 67/3322 , 67/3323, 67/3344), European Commission Decision (1969) §113.

([4129]) Brannigan and McBride v. United Kingdom (14553 / 89 and 14554/ 89), European Court §41- §47 (1993).

Aksoy v. Turkey (21987/ 93), European Court § §68-70 (1996).

Castillo Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-European Court (1999) §109

Aksoy v. Turkey (21987) / 93), European Court (- §71 § (1996) 84; Castello Petrozzi et al. v. Peru, Inter-European Court (1999) §110 - §112.

([4130]) Guideline 15 of the Council of Europe Guidelines on Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism.

Resolution [4131]1271 of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, §9 and§12 (5) (2002).

([4132]) See A et al. v. United Kingdom, (3455) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §180 (2009).

([4133]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §2; Resolution 65/211 of the United Nations General Assembly, §5.

Concluding [4134]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Syria, / UN Doc. CCPR §6 (2005) CO/84/SYR; see A et al. v. United Kingdom, (3455) / 05, Grand Chamber of the European Court §178 (2009).

review, in terms of their scope, duration and mechanisms, to assess the necessity of their continuation.[4135]

28.2.4 Necessity and proportionality

Any suspension of rights to a fair trial, and the measures adopted (suspension measures), must be a compelling reason for the case.[4136]

This principle of proportionality requires that obligations be mitigated to a reasonable extent in light of the exigencies of the emergency arising from a threat to the life of the nation. It also entails reconsidering the necessity of this easing at regular intervals, by the legislative and executive authorities, with the aim of ending the restrictions imposed as soon as possible.[4137]

Temporary restriction of rights and accompanying measures must not include any discrimination, or lead to discrimination, on grounds such as race, color, sex, language, religion or social origin.[4138]

The degree of interference with the restriction of rights and the scope of any measure of restriction (both in terms of the geographical area to which it applies and in terms of the duration of its application) must be "reasonably proportional to what is actually necessary to respond to an emergency that threatens the life of the nation".[4139]

The requirement of proportionality may require the imposition of a state of emergency to be limited to a specific part of the country.[4140]

The Inter-American Court has emphasized that any action that exceeds the required limit specifically required by the situation is not considered legitimate, regardless of the existence of the state of emergency.[4141]

The European Court pointed out that, in order for a restriction measure to be considered necessary and lawful, it must be clear that the use of any other less severe measures, such as permissible restrictions on the rights enshrined in the Convention, cannot protect public safety, public health or public order. Moreover, this measure should be more likely to contribute to solving the problem. The court reviews the nature of the rights that are adversely affected by the restriction of rights, as well as the circumstances that led to the declaration of the state of emergency and its duration.[4142]

[4135](A et al. v. United Kingdom, (3455) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §178 (2009).

([4136]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (1) of the American Convention, Article 4(1) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (1) of the European Convention.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §6.

Concluding [4137]observations of the Human Rights Committee: Algeria, UN Doc §14 (2007) CCPR/C/DZA/CO/3, Israel, / UN Doc. CCPR/C/ISR §7 (2010) CO/3; Guideline 15 (3) of the Council of Europe Guidelines on Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism (2002); Report - CDL AD(2010)022, Council of Europe Venice Commission on Counter-Terrorism and Human Rights, §17.

([4138]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (1) of the American Convention, and Article 4(1) of the Arab Charter.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §8.

([4139]) M. Nowak, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: A Commentary on the Provisions of the Covenant, Second Revised Edition, Engel, 2005, pp. 97- §27- §25 ,98; Human Rights Committee General Comment 29, §4; see A et al. v. United Kingdom, (3455) / 05, Grand Chamber of the European Court (2009) §184; Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Israel, UN Doc. §7 (2010) CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3.

([4140]) Sakik et al. v. Turkey (23878) / 94), European Court (1997) §36 - §39.

([4141]) Advisory Opinion 87/OC-8of the Inter-American Court, §38 (1987).

([4142]) See European Court:) 57/332) Lawless v Ireland)No. 3), (1961) Law, §36- §35, A et al. v. United Kingdom (2455) / 05), Grand Chamber 173 § § (2009), 176, 178 and 182 - 184; Joint Report of the UN Mechanisms on Guantánamo Bay Detainees, / UN Doc. E. §13 (2006) CN. 4/2006/120.

The European Court also considered that the adoption of a measure to restrict fair trial rights allowing detention for seven days before the detainee is brought before a judge, justified by the UK government on the basis of the "priority need to bring terrorists to justice", may guarantee sufficient safeguards to protect against ill-treatment. These guarantees included allowing the detained person to contact a lawyer within 48 hours, being examined by a doctor, the right to challenge the legality of the detention, to notify a third person of the detention, and to review the legislation under which the measure was approved periodically.[4143]

However, the European Court considered the guarantees contained in the measures restricting rights in Turkey to be insufficient in the face of ill-treatment. In one case I examined, an individual was detained for at least 14 days on terrorism-related charges without being brought before a judge. The man, who was tortured, was held incommunicado without a realistic possibility of being brought before a court to challenge the legality of his detention.[4144]

The European Court also said that other measures to restrict rights taken in the UK had been disproportionate and discriminatory. The measures allowed the indefinite detention of foreign nationals without trial if the executive issued warrants against them suspected of being terrorists and posing a threat to national security, without applying these measures to citizens of the United Kingdom.[4145]

28-2-5 Rights that may never be restricted

The International Covenant on Civil Rights, the American Convention and the European Convention each contain a variety of non-derogable rights.[4146](.

In addition to the non-derogable rights explicitly included in these treaties, the Human Rights Committee and the Inter-American Court have made it clear that there are other non-derogable rights and obligations under human rights law, including some fair trial rights and their accompanying rights.[4147]

The Human Rights Committee has stressed that respect for the rule of law and the principle of legality require that the basic requirements of a fair trial must be respected at all times, including during states of emergency.[4148]

The following fair trial rights, and their concomitant rights, are recognized and specifically defined as non-derogable under human rights law, as the treaty itself or the responsible authority referred to indicates. This is an area of international human rights law that is constantly evolving, and therefore this regulation should not be considered exhaustive or closed. (The regulation does not include several rights guaranteed by international humanitarian law)

The prohibition on torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[4149]

([4143]) Brannigan and McBride v. United Kingdom (14553 / 89 and 14554 / 89), EC 55 § § (1993) and 61-66. (In this case, Amnesty International made a third-party contribution to the court, arguing that the remaining safeguards were insufficient to protect detainees from torture or ill-treatment in the first 48 hours of incommunicado detention.).

([4144]) Aksoy v. Turkey (21987) / 93), European Court (1996) §84- §83; see European Court: Demir et al. v. Turkey, (21380) / 93 , §45- §44 (1998) (93/21383, 93/21381 and 49 - 58), Shin v. Turkey §29- §27 (2003) ,(98/41478).

[4145](A et al. v. United Kingdom, (3455) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court §176- §190(2009).

([4146]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, Article 6 of the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant, Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, Article 15 (2) of the European Convention, Article 4(3) of Protocol 7 to the European Convention, and Article 2 of Protocol 13 to the European Convention.

([4147]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §15; Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion 87/1987 (OC-8), Advisory Opinion 87 / OC-9 . (1987).

Human [4148]Rights Committee General Comment 29, §16; Human Rights Committee General Comment 32, §6.

([4149]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, Article 2(2) of the Convention against Torture, Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (2) of the European Convention.

This includes the prohibition on the use of evidence obtained as a result of such treatment in judicial proceedings, with the exception of proceedings against alleged perpetrators of torture or other ill-treatment.[4150]

Prolonged incommunicado detention and corporal punishment are both in violation of the prohibition on torture and other ill-treatment and are therefore prohibited at all times.[4151]

The right of persons deprived of their liberty to humane treatment.[4152]

The prohibition on enforced disappearance.[4153]

Prohibition on arbitrary arrest or detention, including detention that is not recognized.[4154]

The right to recognition before the law (ensuring the right to seek justice before the courts.[4155]

The right to seek a challenge to the legality of detention before a court.[4156]

Although this right is not among the non-derogable rights listed in Article 15 of the European Convention, the European Court has pointed out in its decisions in cases considered in the context of states of emergency that it is an important safeguard against ill-treatment, and that procedural guarantees must be provided to the detained person, including sufficient information to make an effective appeal against the allegations raised against him.[4157]

The right of a person to have his case examined by an independent, impartial and competent court.[4158]

The Human Rights Committee has clarified that only a court of law may try and convict a person on a criminal charge, even in states of emergency.[4159]

([4150]) General Comment 32 of the Human Rights Committee, §6.

Working [4151]Group on Enforced Disappearances, UN Doc §76 (2004) E/CN. 4/2005/6; see The Treatment ,Rodley and Pollard Oxford University, 3rd edition ,of Prisoners under International Law . pp486-488, 492-493 ,2009 ,Press
Among other documents, see Special Rapporteur on Torture:UN Doc §28- §18 (2005) UN Doc. A/60/316، §37 (2009) A/HRC/10-44.

([4152]) Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, and Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter.
Human Rights Committee General Comment 29, §13 (a).

([4153]) Article 1(2) of the Convention on Enforced Disappearances, and Article 10 of the American Convention on Enforced Disappearances.
Joint Study of UN Mechanisms on Secret Detention, . UN Doc. A/HRC/13/42(2010) §50.

([4154]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §11, General Comment 24 §8; deliberation No. 9 of the Working Group on Enforced Disappearances, UN Doc . (2012) A/HRC/22/44.

([4155]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, and Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter.

([4156]) Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, Article 10 of the American Convention on Enforced Disappearances, and Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter; see section M(5) (e) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.
General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §16; Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion 87 / §42 § (1987) ,OC-8, 27 and 29, Neira Alegreia et al. v. Peru, §84- §77 (1995) and 91 (2), Castello Petruzzi et al. v. Peru, §88- §184 (1999); Subcommittee on Prevention: Honduras, §282 UN Doc. CAT/OP/HND/1 (b); see A et al. v. United Kingdom (05/2455), Grand Chamber of the European Court § 217- §216 (2009); see also Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, UN Doc. A/HRC/74 §68- §67 (2008) and 82 (a).

([4157]) European Court: Brannigan and McBride v. United Kingdom (89/14553 and 14554/ 89), §55- §56 (1993) and 62-64, Aksoy v. Turkey §82- §84 (1996) ,(93/21987).
A et al. v. United Kingdom (2455) / 05), Grand Chamber of the European Court § 186- §190 (2009).

([4158]) Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter; see Article 27 (2) of the American Convention.
Human Rights Committee: General Comment 32 §19, González del Río v. Peru, 1987 / §5 (1992) UN Doc. CCPR/C/46/D/263 (1); Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion 87 / §27- §30 (1987) ,OC-8, Reverón Trujillo v. Venezuela, 68 § (2009).

([4159]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §16.

Article 13 of the Arab Charter, which does not allow for the restriction of fair trial rights, guarantees trial before independent, impartial and competent courts with "adequate guarantees."

The right to a public trial, in all cases, except in exceptional cases required by the interests of justice.[4160]

It is required that the definition of crimes and penalties be clear and precise; the prohibition of retroactive application of criminal laws (including the imposition of a heavier penalty than that applicable at the time of the crime); and the right to benefit from a lighter penalty.[4161]

The duty to separate persons detained pending trial from those who have been convicted, and to treat them according to their status as unconvicted persons.[4162]

The right to the presumption of innocence)[4163](.

The right to legal aid for those who do not have sufficient financial resources.[4164]

Prohibition of collective punishment.[4165]

The principle that the primary purpose of punishment in which one is deprived of his freedom is reform and rehabilitation.[4166]

Prohibition to prosecute a person for the same crime twice.[4167]

Judicial guarantees, such as subpoenas and interim measures of protection, aimed at protecting non-derogable rights.[4168]

The Inter-American Court has made it clear that judicial decisions on reparations necessary to protect non-derogable rights "vary according to the rights at stake." However, judges must, in all cases, be independent and impartial and have the authority to rule on the legality of emergency measures.[4169]

The principles of established procedures should also be applied.[4170]

The right to effective judicial remedies for violations of other human rights.[4171]

The Human Rights Committee has made it clear that this right is implicit in the totality of the provisions of the International Covenant, and that States must provide effective and accessible

---

([4160]) Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter.
([4161]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant; Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (2) of the European Convention.
General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §7; Scopola v. Italy (No. 2) (10249) / 03), Grand Chamber of the European Court §109- §108 (2009, (recognized as included in Article 7 of the European Convention).
([4162]) Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, and Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter.
([4163]) Human Rights Committee: General Comment 29 §16, General Comment 32 §8.
([4164]) Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter.
([4165]) Article 27 (2) of the American Convention.
Human Rights Committee General Comment 29, §11.
([4166]) Article 27 (2) of the American Convention.
([4167]) Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 4(3) of Protocol 7 to the European Convention.
([4168]) Article 27 (2) of the American Convention; see Article 10 of the American Convention on Enforced Disappearances, and Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter; see Section M(5) (e) of the Principles of Fair Trial in Africa.
Human Rights Committee: General Comment §16 ,29, General Comment §6 ,32; Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion §41- §23 (1987) ,87/OC-9.
([4169]) Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion 87/1987) ,OC-8) . §30- §28.
([4170]) Inter-American Court: Advisory Opinion 87/1987) ,OC-9) §39- §38 and 41 (3).
([4171]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §14; Advisory Opinion 87/OC-9 of the Inter-American Court, §23- §41 (1987).

remedies to persons who claim that their rights - either non-derogable or derogated from in the light of a derogation measure - have been violated.[4172]

Such remedies should provide an opportunity for national courts to examine allegations regarding the legality of emergency measures and alleged violations of the rights of individuals that have resulted from the implementation of such measures.

With regard to the right of persons who have been arrested or detained to be brought promptly before a judge, the Human Rights Committee has indicated that it is non-derogable.[4173]

The jurisprudence of the European Court suggests that it may be permissible to delay slightly in bringing a detained person before a court during states of emergency, but this delay should not be prolonged. The court rules that there must be sufficient safeguards against abuse, such as the right to contact a lawyer, to see a doctor, to contact the family, and the right to obtain a subpoena before a judge.[4174]

The right of individuals who are proven innocent by a final decision to compensation.[4175]

First: Non-derogable rights in death penalty cases

The right to life and related guarantees, and the prohibition of torture and other ill-treatment, are non-derogable.[4176]

The non-derogability of the right to life means that proceedings against persons accused of capital offences must strictly adhere to international standards, including during states of emergency. The Human Rights Committee has declared that actions taken in the context of capital cases, including during states of emergency, must be consistent with the provisions of the International Covenant, including articles 14 and 15.[4177]

Imposition of the death penalty following proceedings that do not meet the requirements of international standards is a violation of the right to life.[4178]

Furthermore:

States parties to Protocol 13 to the European Convention may not impose the death penalty at any time, including during states of emergency.[4179]

States parties to the Second Protocol to the International Covenant, the Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights, or Protocol 6 to the European Convention may not impose the death penalty in states of emergency - except in times of war - where the death

---

([4172]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §14; see Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Gabon, (2000) UN Doc. CCPR/CO/70/GAB) §10.

([4173]) Commission on Human Rights: 40 / UN Doc. A/49, Vol. 1, (1994) Supplement 11, p. §2 ,119 (also quoted in footnote 9 to the Human Rights Committee's General Comment 29); see Concluding Observations of the Human Rights Committee: Israel, §7 (2010) UN Doc. CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3, Thailand, / UN Doc. CCPR/CO/84. §13 (2000) THA.

([4174]) European Court: Brannigan and McBride v. United Kingdom (89/14553 and 14554/ 89), §61- §66 (1993), Aksoy v. Turkey §83- §84 (1996) ,(93/21987).

([4175]) Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter.

([4176]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (2) of the American Convention, Article 4(2) of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (2) of the European Convention.

([4177]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §16 §and 15.

See [4178]Articles 4(2) and 6(2) of the International Covenant, and Article 27 (2) of the American Convention.

Human Rights Committee: General Comment §15 ,29, General Comment 32, §6; Öcalan v. Turkey (46221/ 99), Grand Chamber of the European Court (2005) §166- §165; see Al-Saadoun and Al-Mafdhi v. United Kingdom (61498/ 08), European Court §120- §115 (2010).

([4179]) Article 2 of Protocol 13 to the European Convention.

penalty may be imposed only after conviction for a serious crime of a military nature, based on impartial procedures.[4180]

The death penalty may never be imposed on a person who was not yet 18 years old at the time of the offence. Under the American Convention, punishment may not be imposed on a person over the age of seventy and such prohibitions may not be restricted in any way.[4181]

It is also not permissible to restrict the ban on the execution of pregnant women.[4182]

Second: International Humanitarian Law

Fair trial rights are guaranteed under international humanitarian law. At a minimum, these rights are non-derogable in international human rights law as "other obligations under international law" in situations to which they apply: i.e. during international armed conflicts, occupation, and internal (non-international) armed conflicts.[4183]

The Human Rights Committee has confirmed that it does not find any justification for restricting the elements of the right to a fair trial explicitly guaranteed in international humanitarian law during other states of emergency.[4184]

([4180]) Article 6(2) of the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant, article 2 of the Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights to Abolish the Death Penalty, and articles 2 and 3 of Protocol 6 to the European Convention.

For the exception to apply, States parties to Protocol II to the ICCPR and to the Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights to Abolish the Death Penalty must have registered a reservation or made a reservation declaration to the treaty (respectively) at the time of ratification or accession.

([4181]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, Article 37 (a) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and Article 27 (2) of the American Convention.

Human Rights Committee General Comment 24, §8; Michael Dominguez v. United States (12). 285), U.S. Commission, Report 62 / §84 and§85 ,02.

([4182]) Article 4(2) of the International Covenant, and Article 27 (2) of the American Convention.

([4183]) Article 4(1) of the International Covenant, Article 27 (1) of the American Convention, Article 4/1 of the Arab Charter, and Article 15 (1)of the European Convention.

([4184]) General Comment 29 of the Human Rights Committee, §16.

Conclusion

In the previous guide, we presented the guarantees of a fair trial and explained the rights of the accused in the pre-trial stage, as well as his rights during the trial. We enumerated those rights and their constitutional and legal basis, as well as the sources of that right in international charters. Through this guide, we hope to help judges adhere to fair trial standards that guarantee the accused all the guarantees stipulated in the Constitution and Egyptian law.

We also hope that the Egyptian legislator will review the legislation regulating the criminal trial, in order to take into account the rights granted by the international covenants to the accused, so that our hope, which is justice, will be realized, with what it means of not being biased in the trial of any human being for any matter, as it is a basic social rule for the continuation of human life with each other, as it is the reason for the coexistence of all human beings with different sects in one society.